My abandonment in the Divine Fiat continues, but my poor existence goes on very often amid the bitternesses of the privations of my sweet Jesus; and while I long for Him, reaching the point of feeling life missing in me - because He is my life, nor do I know any other life or other pleasure but Jesus - then, if He comes for a little, while I feel myself coming to life again, ah! that breath of life that He gives me He embitters, because He tells me nothing other than the great chastisements which Divine Justice keeps prepared - how all the elements will put themselves against man; the water, the fire, the wind, the rocks, the mountains, will change into deadly weapons, and strong earthquakes will make many cities and people disappear - and in all nations; not even our own will be spared. And then, the revolutions in which they are and will be engulfed; and the wars that are about to break out - it seems that almost all will be caught in the net which they themselves are preparing. But He says this with such bitterness, and then He leaves me without my usual pains which He used to communicate to me.

So, while I was embittered, I continued my acts in the Divine Volition, and my sweet Jesus, making Himself seen, told me: "My daughter, rise - come into my operating Will. My Will is immense, but in Its immensity there is not one point in which It does not exercise special and distinct acts toward mankind. And even though my Will is one - one is Its immensity, one is Its act - however, in Its immensity It holds the order of all the effects which come out as acts from one single act, to pour themselves out toward each creature, who receives them according to her dispositions. If she is disposed to loving Me, she receives the effects of the love that my operating Will is pouring; if disposed to being good, she receives the effects of Its operating goodness; if disposed to becoming holy, she receives the effects of Its sanctity. So, according to their dispositions, the immensity of my Fiat pours Itself - Its different effects which convert for them into acts - over each creature; and one who is not disposed receives nothing, even though my Divine Will is always there as operating over each one of them. And since they do not want to receive the good It wants to give them, my Justice converts these goods that the creature rejects into chastisements. This is the reason why my Divine Will is as though on the lookout from within the elements, to see whether they are disposed to receive the good of Its continuous operating; and in seeing Itself rejected, tired, It arms the elements against them. Therefore, unforeseen chastisements and new phenomena are about to happen; the earth, with its almost continuous tremor, warns man to come to his senses, otherwise he will sink under his own steps because it can no longer sustain him. The evils that are about to happen are grave, otherwise I would not have suspended you often from your usual state of victim.

Now, the creature who enters into my Divine Will lets not one act escape her; she runs to each operating act of It, adores Its acts, thanks them, loves them, and everywhere honors the Supreme Volition. She keeps them company, and in her littleness she would want to secure all of Its acts with her little love. So, only one who lives in It can defend the rights of a Will so holy. Therefore, always in my Will do I want you; and you - never want to go out of It."

The reason why God is not known and loved: because they think that He is the God far away from creatures, while He is the Inseparable One. How the Divine Will draws the soul, and she draws the Divine Fiat into herself.

I was doing my round in the Creation, to follow the acts that the Divine Fiat does in the created things; and as I arrived at Eden, it seemed to me that my lovable Jesus was waiting for me to be able to communicate to me the love, the goodness, the sanctity, the power and everything He did in creating man, pouring all of Himself into him, to the point of filling him completely with Himself and with His divine qualities – but so much, to the point of overflowing outside, giving him the task, as the highest honor for man, to avail himself of His Love, Goodness, Sanctity and Power in order to carry out his life in the very goods of the One who had created him. I felt as though soaked with the divine qualities, and my sweet Jesus told me: “My daughter, man was created to be inseparable from God; and if He is not known and loved, it is precisely because they think that God is the Being far away from man, as if we had nothing to do – either he with Us, or God with him. To believe Him far away causes God to be dispersed from man, and everything I had in creating him, Our very divine qualities, remain weakened, suffocated and, for many, as if they had no life; while Our Divinity is not far away, but close – even more, inside of man, and in all his acts We are actors and spectators. Therefore, Our sorrow is great in seeing that the creatures consider Us and believe that We are far away from them, and therefore they neither know Us nor love Us. To think of Us as far away is the deadly iron that kills the love of the creature toward the Creator; distance breaks any friendship. Who can ever think of loving, of knowing and of hoping from a faraway Being? No one. And We are forced to repeat: ‘We are with them - inside of them, and it seems that they do not know Us; and while their love, their will, by not loving Us, are far away from Us, they say that We are far away from them.’ And this is the reason for which some, who have read my intimacies with you, have reached the point of doubting – it is precisely this: because they think that I am the faraway God, and being far away, so many intimacies between you and Me could not take place.

Now, my daughter, do you want to know who makes God be felt alive in the heart of the creature? My Will reigning in her. In fact, not giving life to the human will, my Fiat makes her feel, vividly, Its Love, Its Power, Its Goodness and Sanctity that run in all the acts of the creature. For her there isn’t the faraway God, but the God who is close and primary Life of her life and of all her acts. Therefore, the living in my Divine Will maintains the vigor of all the goods that We gave to man in creating him, and makes of him the throne of God and His glory, where He dominates and reigns.”

After this, I continued to follow everything which, admirable and sublime, the Divine Fiat has done in Creation; and I said to myself: ‘I want to enter into the sun in order to find the Divine Will operating in its light, so as to give to It all the beauty, the purity, the holiness, the power, which a human will operating in Its light can contain. I want to enter into the azure heavens in order to embrace It and give It my will operating in the vastness of the heavens, in the multiplicity of the stars, to give It the glory, the love of a heaven, and many profound acts of adoration for as many as are the stars.’ And so I followed all created things. But while I was doing this, a thought told me: ‘Created things do not have reason, they are veils which hide that Fiat which, with Its divine reason, more than if they had reason, dominates them with Its power, maintains the perfect balance, and adores, loves, glorifies Itself by Itself.’ But while I was thinking of this, my beloved Jesus, making Himself seen, clasped me in His arms and, all tenderness, told me: “My little daughter of my Divine Volition, my Will is one, and even though It has the bilocating virtue - It bilocates at each instant, in each thing, in each act, in such a way that all can have It as act and life of their own - however, It never loses Its unity, It is always one, and with Its one strength It maintains, wherever It reigns, the union, the harmony, the order, the communication, the inseparability, and holds everything enclosed within Itself inside one single act. The act is one, my Will is one, but It extends everywhere, leaving not even one atom of the things created without Its operating and vivifying Life. Ah! yes, they are just veils that hide It. My Will veils Itself with light, and extending in the sun, It keeps molding the creatures with Its light, It embraces them, It kisses them, It warms them, It loves them. It extends in the heavens, and makes Itself all eyes for as many as are the stars, in order to watch them; and their meek twinkling are silent voices, as if very softly It called the creatures to the Celestial Fatherland. It pours Itself into the air, and filling it completely, It makes Itself their breath, and blowing over them, It makes Itself be breathed and gives them life. In all created things It runs toward the creatures to give them many distinct effects, to offer them Its love, the life, the preservation; yet one is the act, one is the Will that fills Heaven and earth.

Now, my daughter, one who does my Will and lives in It, when she does her acts, draws into herself all the acts of my Fiat, which It has done and continues to do; and my Will draws the creature and her act into Its act. So, by virtue of Its one Will, It draws her into the heavens, into the sun, into the air - in everything. And do you know what happens then? No longer does one single Divine Reason and Will fill Heaven and earth, but another reason and will, human, which, dissolving within the Divine Reason and Will, remains – one can say – as the veil of the created things, but a veil that has reason and will, though sacrificed and identified with the Divine Reason and Will. And then it happens that my Fiat is no longer alone in loving, honoring and glorifying Itself in the created things, but there is another will, human, that loves It, adores It, glorifies It, as heavens, as sun, as air. In sum, it is present everywhere and in each distinct thing in which my Will reigns. So, just as my Divine Will draws the human will into Itself and into Its acts, to make Itself be loved, adored and glorified with Its own love, adoration and glory, in the same way, the creature who wants to live but of my Will draws into herself all the acts done by It, and it makes itself be loved and sanctified, as a Divine Will knows how to love and sanctify, which extends Its Heaven, forms Its Sun – in sum, It continues Its divine art, just as It started it and is continuing it in the Creation. Do you see, then, what it means to do my Divine Will? And not doing It means to lose Its Heaven, Its Sun, Its air, Its seas of grace, Its divine art. Therefore, always in It do I want to find the daughter of my Divine Will.”

Triumphs on the part of the Divine Will when the creature lets herself be worked by the Divine Fiat. Exchanges of triumphs on both sides.

My flight in the Divine Volition continues; it seems to me that I call It, because life would be missing in me without It. The life of good, the life of love, the life of the light, the life of peace, would be missing in me; and my human will, seeing itself alone, would assault me and would give life to my passions in me. This is why I fear so much that even for just one instant it may remain without the Fiat operating in me, because, It being present, my will remains crouched down and does not dare to move before a Will so holy and so powerful. Therefore I call It, and It gives me Its hand to take me into Its acts, that I may follow It and keep It company. And since It created everything for love of creatures, when It feels her close and identified, It takes such delight, that It feels as though repaid for the many things It issued from Its creative hands.

So, while I was following the acts of the Divine Will done in Creation, my sweet Jesus, making Himself seen and looking at me, told me: “My daughter, how sweet it is for Me to look at a soul who lets herself be worked by my Divine Will. A triumph takes place from one side to the other: my Will invests the intelligence of the creature, and she lets herself be invested. In sum, they form an accord on both sides; and then my Will forms Its triumph over each thought of the creature, and she acquires and makes a triumph of the many divine thoughts within her mind. So, my Divine Will triumphs by giving and taking possession of it; the soul triumphs by wanting it and receiving it. So, if she looks, if she speaks, if she palpitates, if she operates and walks, those are all triumphs of my Will over the creature; and she triumphs and takes possession of many divine acts. Amid these exchanges of triumphs and possessions, such joy and happiness is formed on both sides, that you cannot comprehend them all. In fact, you must know that when good, the triumph, the possession, is done between two – then does it bring joy and happiness. Isolated good has made no one happy; as it sees itself alone, it loses all the beauty of happiness. Therefore my Divine Will keeps searching for Its creature in order to form Its triumphs, to be able to form, together with her, Its joys, Its happinesses, on the face of the earth.”

Accusations, calumnies, condemnation. How, for God, wanting costs more than having the power. Effects of the wanted Divine Will, and effects of the permissive Divine Will. Round of chastisements that He will do across all nations.

It has been some time since I wrote, because my poor heart, swollen with intense bitternesses, to the point of engulfing me completely in the gigantic and stormy waves of sorrow and profound humiliations, did not have the strength to put on paper one page – the most sorrowful of my existence down here. In the heat of my sorrow, I repeated more than once the saying of Our Lord: ‘I looked for a consoler amid so many pains, and I did not find one; a friend who would speak a word in my defense, and there was none.’ Even more, the one who should have sustained me and given me a breath of courage, I felt as changed, as if he were my cruelest enemy. Ah! yes, I can indeed repeat with my sweet Jesus: ‘A pack of dogs surrounded me to tear me to pieces and devour me.’ I believe that the Heavens have cried over my hard lot, as has my sweet Jesus cried with me many times. Oh! how true it is that only Jesus remains amid sorrow and humiliations. The creatures can be around when everything smiles at us and brings us glory and honor; but when the setback happens, they flee and leave the poor victim alone and abandoned. Oh! my Highest Good, Jesus, do not leave me alone in a period so sorrowful of my life – either You remain with Me, or You take me with You. I feel drowned, my strength fails me. O please! help me! help me, Oh Jesus! And then, what torments me the most are the very struggles that I have to go through with my sweet Jesus; because of the printing of the Divine Will, they accuse me at the Holy Office of things which I do not know – either where they stay, or where they are, and which are as far from me as Heaven from the earth. I have lived in bed for forty-six years; it can be said that I am a poor one buried alive; the earth I do not know, nor do I remember ever having any love of interest. My sweet Jesus has always watched over my heart, and has kept it in full detachment – may the Lord be always thanked. They have also maligned at the Holy Office the coming of the priest, who comes to call me to obedience in the state of my sufferings. Therefore impositions and prohibitions.

So, here opens a struggle with my beloved Jesus; I pray Him to free me or to do everything Himself – that is, making me fall into pains and freeing me when He pleases. And Jesus, all goodness, was saying: “My daughter, but do you think that I cannot do it? I can! - but I do not want to. To Me, wanting costs more than having the power. For Me, the power is nothing; in one instant I can make heaven and earth, in another instant I can destroy it, so great is the strength of my power. But destroying an act of my Will – neither do I want it, nor can I; I would destroy the order of the acts of my Will which, from eternity, are established by the Divinity; I would go against my Wisdom, against my own designs, against my Love. I would not act as God, but as man, who easily changes depending on whether things are to his liking or dis-liking, and whether it pleases him. I am the Immutable One, and I do not mutate in the designs and acts which my Holy Divine Will has established to do, and with highest wisdom. And then, I would not act as God; only because they wanted to accuse you of awful calumnies, making use of their authority and wicked perfidy to the point of getting to the Holy Office (because one gets there when an evil reaches the excess and no other authority can remedy it – and from this alone shows their highest perfidy), I should change my designs and the ways which for so many years I have had over you? Oh! if you knew what sorrow they gave to my Heart, such that, unable to bear the torment, I am forced to strike all those who have contributed to such an awful accusation. And do not think that I will do it on this very day; in time and circumstance my Justice is arming Its arm against them. No one – no one will be spared; the sorrow they gave Me is too great.”

And I: “My Love, if You let me fall⁸⁹ and do not help me to free myself, what shall I do? You do not want to change your ways which You have had over me, and if the authorities who want otherwise do not want to surrender to what You want, what shall I do? At least, assure me that You take me to Heaven - and You, I and they will all remain content. Don’t You see in what a maze they put me; I am the accused one, the condemned one, as if I had become the most wicked creature that exists upon earth; and a curse hangs over my poor existence. Jesus! Jesus! help me, do not abandon me, do not leave me alone. If all have been so barbarous as to leave me, You will not do this to me; isn't it true, Oh Jesus?' And my sorrow was so great that I poured out in most bitter crying.

And Jesus too, pouring Himself out in crying, told me: "Good daughter, courage, you must know that my Divine Will acts in two ways – in the wanted way and in the permissive way. When It acts in the wanted way, those are designs that It accomplishes, sanctities that It forms; and the creature who receives this wanted act of my Will receives it equipped with light, with grace, with help. Nothing must be lacking to this fortunate creature in order to fulfill this act wanted by my Will. On the other hand, when It acts in the permissive way, and this happens when the creatures, with the free willing of the will which they have, try to bind the hands of the Omnipotent One – as in this that they want from you, wanting to change things in their own way, and not as I, with so much love and for the good of all, have disposed up to this day; and they force Me to act in a permissive way - and my permissive Will, by justice and chastisement, is blinding, such that who knows where they go to hurl themselves. Therefore, I will act with my permissive Will. Since they do not want it in the way wanted by Me, I will keep you suspended from the state of victim, and my Justice, not finding Its prop, will pour Itself out freely against the people. I am doing the first round across all nations, so much so, that very often I suspend you from the state of victim because I see you too embittered because of Me and because of what they want, and of so much perfidy that they have had against you; and in seeing you so embittered, I don't have the heart to cast you into your usual state of pains, which you, with so much love, received; and I, with even greater love, communicated to you. Therefore I move forward; but if you knew my sorrow.... And in my sorrow I keep repeating: 'Human ingratitude, how horrendous you are.' And I am about to start the second round of chastisements across all nations, repeating earthquakes, mortalities, unforeseen phenomena, evils of every kind, such as to strike terror and fright. The chastisements will swoop down like thick fog over the peoples, and many will remain naked and starving; and when I have completed the second round, I will do the third, and where the chastisements will rage more, there will the wars and revolutions be more fierce.

My daughter, what I recommend to you - patience. O please! do not give Me the sorrow that your will be opposed to Mine. Remember how many graces I have given you - how much love have I not had for you in order to win your will, to make it my own. If you want to make Me content, assure Me that you will never – never do your will."

And I, while I assure Jesus that I never want to do my will, the present circumstances are so many, that I live with a continuous fear that poisons me continuously – that I might incur in the great disgrace of not doing always the Divine Will. My God, what pain, what torment for my poor heart. More so, because of my inconstant state, as I spend days without falling into the state of sufferings, and then I am tortured that Jesus has left me - I will no longer have the good of seeing Him; and in my sorrow I keep repeating: 'Good-bye O Jesus, we will no longer see each other – everything is over.' And I cry over the One who was for me more than my own life; and I go through two or three days in these tortures. And when I am persuaded that I will no longer fall into that state of pains, then Jesus, all of a sudden, surprises me and makes me fall into sufferings; and then I am tortured: what shall I do in order to obey? So, in one way or another I feel such sadness and bitterness, that I myself do not know how I can continue to live; and in my sorrow I hope that my sweet Jesus will have pity on me and will take His poor exiled one into His Celestial Fatherland. Only, I pray You, Oh Jesus, to put an end to this storm; with your power, command that it be calmed, and giving light to those who have provoked it, may they know the evil they have done, that they may use it in order to sanctify themselves.

In Voluntate Dei! Deo Gratias

February 13, 1931

One who lives in the Divine Will lives in the center of Its light, while one who does not live in It lives in the circumference of Its light. How God finds His prop. How the Creation is mute, while the creature is speaking creation. The echo of God in the creature. God, by manifesting His truths, leaves rest and continues His work.

My Life, my most sweet Jesus, O please! come to my help, do not abandon me; with the power of your Most Holy Will invest my poor soul and put out of me everything that troubles me and tortures me. O please! let the new sun of peace and love rise in me again, otherwise I feel no more strength to continue to make the sacrifice of writing; my hand is already shaking and the pen does not flow on the paper. My Love, if You do not help me, if You do not remove from me your Justice, which justly knocks me down in the painful state I find myself in, I feel it is impossible for me to write even one word. Therefore, help me, and I will strive as much as I can to obey the one who commands me to write everything that You have told me on your Most Holy Will; and since these are past things, I will make, all together, a little mention of each thing that regards your Divine Will.

So, while I was feeling oppressed and all full of intense bitternesses, my sweet Jesus, making Himself seen and sustaining me in His arms, told me: “My daughter, courage, think that a Divine Will reigns in you, which is the source of perennial happiness and joy. So, your bitternesses and oppressions form the clouds around the Sun of my Will, which prevent Its rays from shining in all your being; and while It wants to render you happy, It feels the happiness It wants to give you being rejected by your bitternesses. And even though you possess a Divine Will at your disposal, by virtue of your bitternesses you feel the rain that oppresses you, that fills your soul up to the brim. In fact, you must know that one who lives in my Will lives in the center of the sphere of the Divine Sun, and can say: ‘The Sun is all mine.’ On the other hand, one who does not live in It lives in the circumference of the light which the Divine Sun spreads everywhere, because my Will, with Its immensity, can neither deny Itself to anyone, nor does It want to deny Itself; It is like the sun, which is forced to give light to all, even if not all of them wanted it. And why this? Only because it is light, and the nature of light is to give itself to all – to those who do not want it and to those who want it. But, what great difference exists between one who lives in the center of my Divine Sun and one who lives in Its circumference. The first one possesses the properties of the light and all of its goods, which are infinite; the light keeps her defended from all evils; so, sin cannot have life in this light; and if bitternesses arise, they are like clouds, which cannot have perennial life – a little breeze of my Will is enough to put to flight the thickest clouds, and the soul finds herself sunken within the center of Its Sun which she possesses. More so, since the bitternesses of one who lives in my Will are always because of Me, and I can say that I am embittered together with you; and if I see you crying, I cry along, because my very Will renders Me inseparable from one who lives in It, and I feel her pains more than if they were my own. Even more, my very Will which resides in the soul calls my Humanity into one who suffers, to make It repeat Its Life living on earth; and - oh! the divine prodigies that take place; the new currents that open between Heaven and earth, because of the new Life of pains that Jesus has in His creature. And my Heart, while It is human, is Divine - It possesses the sweetest tendernesses; the attractive and powerful tendernesses of my Heart are such and so many, that as I see one who loves Me suffer, my most tender Love melts my Heart and pours Itself completely over the pains and over the heart of my beloved creature. Therefore, I am with you in suffering, and I do two offices - of Actor of pains, and Spectator – to enjoy the fruits of my pains which I keep unfolding within her. Therefore, for one who lives in my Divine Will, I am Sun and center of her life; so, we are inseparable; I feel her life palpitating in Me, and she feels my Life palpitating in her inmost soul. On the other hand, one who lives in the circumference of the light which the Sun of my Divine Will spreads everywhere, is not the owner of the light, because true ownership is said to be so when a good resides within oneself; and the good inside no one can take away from us – either in life, or after death. On the other hand, the good outside is subject to danger, nor does it have the power to keep us safe; and the soul suffers weaknesses, inconstancy, passions that torment her, and reaches the point of feeling as though far away from her Creator. Therefore, always in my Will do I want you, to let Me continue my Life upon earth.”

Then, I was continuing my little acts of adorations, of love, of blessings in the Divine Fiat for my Creator; and as I emitted my acts, the Divine Volition extended them everywhere and in every place where the Divine Will was present, which is such that there is not one point in which It is not present. And my always lovable Jesus added: “Dearest daughter of my Will, you must know that my Volition knows not how to do acts by half, but complete ones, and with such fullness as to be able to say: ‘Wherever there is my Will there is my act.’ And Our Divinity, seeing the adoration, the love of Its creature laid within Our Divine Will, finds Its prop within Its immensity, at whatever point It wants to lean. So, We feel Our profound adoration which the creature has placed for Us in Our Will, and We lean upon it and We rest; We feel that she loves Us everywhere, and We lean within her love; and so with her praises and blessings. So, the creature in Our Will becomes Our prop and Our rest; and there is nothing that delights Us more than finding Our rest in Our creature – symbol of the rest which We took after having created the whole Creation.

Furthermore, Our Divine Will is present everywhere, and Heaven and earth, and everything, are filled with It up to the brim. So, all are veils that hide It, but mute veils; and if in their muteness they eloquently speak of their Creator, it is not them, but my very Divine Will, hidden in the created things, speaks by way of signs, as if It did not have speech. It speaks in the sun by way of signs of light and of heat; in the wind, giving penetrating and ruling signs; in the air It gives mute signs, such as to make Itself breath of all creatures. Oh! if the sun, the wind, the air and all other created things had the good of the word, how many things they would say to their Creator. But, who is the speaking work of the Supreme Being? It is the creature. In creating her, We loved her so much, that We gave her the great good of the word. Our Will wanted to make Itself word of the creature, It wanted to leave the muteness of created things, and forming in her the organ of the voice, It formed the word so as to be able to speak. Therefore, the voice of the creatures is speaking veil in which my Will speaks eloquently, wisely; and since the creature does not say or do always the same thing - as the created things, which never change their action; they are always at their place, doing that same action which God wants from them – therefore my Will maintains the continuous attitude of the multiplicity of the ways which are in the creature. So, it can be said that It speaks not only in the voice, but It renders Itself speaking in the works, in the steps, in the mind and in the heart of creatures. But what is not Our sorrow in seeing this speaking creation making use of the great good of the word to offend Us; making use of the gift to offend the giver and prevent the great prodigy that I can make, of graces, of love, of divine knowledges, of the sanctity which I can form in the speaking work of the creature? But for one who lives in my Will, I am voice that speaks, and – oh! how many things I keep manifesting to her; I am in continuous motion and attitude, I enjoy the full freedom to do and say surprising things, and I perform the prodigy of my Will speaking, loving and operating in the creature. Therefore, give Me full freedom, and you will see what my Will can do in you.”

Then, I was thinking about all that my sweet Jesus had told me; and my beloved Good repeated: “My daughter, the substance of Our Divine Being is an immensity of most pure Light, which produces an immensity of Love. This Light possesses all goods, all joys, interminable happiness, indescribable beauties. This Light invests everything, sees everything, encloses everything; for It, there is neither present nor future, but one single act, always in act, which produces such multiplicity of effects as to fill Heaven and earth. Now, the immensity of Love, which this, Our Light, produces, makes Us love Our Being and everything that comes out of Us, with such love as to render Us true and perfect Lovers.

So, We can do nothing other than love and give love and ask for love. Now, for one who lives in Our Will, Our Light and Our Love echo in the creature and transform her into light and love. Now, what happiness Ours is in forming Our types and models from the work of Our creative hands! Therefore, be attentive, and let your life be formed of nothing other than light and love if you want to make your dear Jesus content.”

Then, I was doing as much as I could to abandon myself completely in the Divine Will, and I was thinking of the many truths which blessed Jesus had manifested to me on His Holy Volition. Each truth embraced the infinite and contained so much light as to fill Heaven and earth; and I felt the strength of the light and the weight of the infinite which, invading me completely with an unspeakable love, invited me to love them and to make them my own by putting them into practice. But while my mind was wandering within so much light, my sweet Jesus told me: “My daughter, Our work toward the creature started with Creation; and Our work is in the word, because, containing Our creative strength, it speaks and creates, it speaks and forms the most beautiful and marvelous works. In fact, with the work of six Fiats that We pronounced, the whole great machine of the universe was formed, including man, who was to inhabit it and be the king of Our so many works. Then, after having ordered everything, Our Love called Us to rest; but rest does not mean completion of the work - it means pause in order to resume the work again. Now, do you want to know when We resume Our work again? Each time We manifest a truth We resume the work of Creation. So, all that was said in the Old Testament were resumptions of the work; my coming upon earth was nothing other than resuming the work for love of creatures; my doctrine, the many truths uttered by my mouth, pointed out in clear notes my intense work for the creatures. And just as in Creation Our Divine Being rested, so with my death and resurrection I wanted to rest, also to give the time to make the fruit of my work bear fruit in the midst of creatures. But this was always rest, not the completion of the work; Our work until the end of the centuries will always be alternation of work and rest, of rest and work. See, then, good daughter, what a long work I had to do with you by manifesting to you so many truths on my Divine Will. And since the thing that most interests Our Supreme Being is to make It known, I held nothing back for a work so long, though I have often taken small breaks of rest in order to give you the time to receive my work, and to prepare you for other surprises of the work of my creative word. Therefore, be attentive to preserve and not to lose anything of the work of my word, which contains an infinite value that is enough to save and sanctify an entire world.”

Fiat!!!

February 15, 1931

How the Divine Life has need of nourishments in order to grow in the creature. The creature, with her love, forms in God Himself His Divine Life. How Divine Love possesses the seed of generating continuous life.

My abandonment in the Divine Fiat continues, though I live in the nightmare of intense bitternesses, of continuous tears, and I am forced to live from the unhealthy air of agitations, which take away from me the beautiful serene day of peace, always enjoyed by me. I am resigned, I kiss the hand that strikes me, but I feel, vividly, the fire that burns me, of the many storms that are unloading themselves over my poor existence. My Jesus, help me, do not abandon me. O please! give me peace, that peace which You so much wanted me to possess. And even though Jesus often tears the veils of the thick clouds that surround me by speaking a few little words to me, afterwards, however, I return, a little cheered, to my restless state.

So, my sweet Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My good daughter, courage, and do not fear that I might abandon you; I feel my Life in you, and if I abandoned you, this Life of Mine in you would remain without food to make It grow, without light to make It happy; the real cortege of my Divine Life which I Myself have formed in you would be missing. In fact, you must know that my Life within Myself has need of nothing - neither of growing, nor is It subject to decreasing; but my Life that I keep forming in the creature, in order to make It grow, has need of divine nourishments to make It grow, in such a way that little by little my Divine Life may fill all the creature. Therefore, I cannot leave you; and while it seems that I leave you, and it seems that everything is over between you and Me, all of a sudden I come back to my little daughter to feed you the food of my Will. In fact, you must know that my Will is light, and the soul who lives in It is administered the properties of light; and while she operates, her works fill themselves with light - but so much, as to overflow outside, in such a way that they appear to be done within the properties of the light of her Creator. If she loves, the properties of divine love fill the love of the creature; if she adores, the properties of the divine adoration fill the adoration of the creature. In sum, there is not one act that the creature does which the divine properties do not fill. In my Will, what is human ceases – it remains nullified, and the creature has always something to take; the divine properties are at her disposal. Oh! if all knew what it means to live in my Divine Will, the great good that comes to them – and in the most simple way.”

Then, I continued my abandonment in the Divine Fiat, and unable to do anything else, I kept saying my little ‘I love You’ in the divine acts. Not only this, but I was saying to myself: ‘My Jesus, my Love, may my ‘I love You’ flow in your heartbeat, in your breath, on your tongue, in your voice, and even in the smallest particles of your adorable Person.’ But while I was doing this, my dear Life, making Himself seen, made me place my ‘I love You’ in His Heart, inside and outside of His whole Divine Person. And He enjoyed it so much, that He incited me to repeat as many ‘I love You’s’ as I could, so as to be able to find the well-liked ‘I love You’ in His whole Being. And then, clasping me to Himself, He told me: “My daughter, love is life, and when this love comes out of the soul who lives in my Will, it has the virtue of forming in God Himself the life of love. And since the substance of the Divine Life is love, the creature, with her love, forms in God another Divine Life, and We feel inside of Our very Selves Our Life formed by the creature. This Life which, with her love, united to Our Will – because it is Our Will that administers to her the power, such that the creature can reach the point of forming the very Divine Life, all of love, within God – this Life is the triumph of God and the triumph of the creature. And in act of triumph We take this Divine Life which the creature has formed within Our very Selves, and We give It for the good of all creatures as the precious gift that the little daughter of Our Will gives to all; and We anxiously await her to come with her love to form more Divine Lives within Our Supreme Being. My daughter, Our Love is not sterile; on the contrary, It has the seed of generating continuous life; so, as you were saying ‘I love You’ in my heartbeat, in my breath, so I generated another heartbeat, another breath - and so with all the rest, in such a way that I felt within Myself the new generation of your ‘I love You’ that formed the new Life of my Love; and – oh! how happy I felt, thinking that my daughter was forming for Me, inside of Me, my very Life within Me, all of love. If you knew how moving is this act of the creature, which with her love gives God to God.... Oh! how it enraptures Us; and feeling enraptured, We give more love, to have the contentment of making her repeat Our new Lives of Love. Therefore, love, love very much, and you will make your sweet Jesus happier.”

Impositions, most bitter tears. Jesus consoles her by assuring her that He concedes to her the grace of not letting her fall into sufferings. How only voluntary suffering constitutes the true victim.

I am going through most bitter days; my poor existence goes on under the nightmare of a tragedy. My Jesus, help me! do not abandon me! You who have always been so good with me, and have sustained me with so much love in the struggles of my life, O please! do not leave me now that the struggles are more terrible and fierce. O please! my Love, show your Power. See, oh! Jesus, they are not demons that fight against me, for with a sign of the cross I would make them flee who knows where; but they are the superiors, whom You alone can put in their place. I am the poor condemned one, and I myself do not know what I have done. Oh! how sorrowful is my story. They told me that they want to put me under another priest authorized by the Bishop, who will call doctors and will do all those tests that he wants, leaving me abandoned by everyone else, at the mercy of this one. At such announcement I burst into tears, unable to stop crying - my eyes had become fountains; I spent the whole night crying, and I prayed Jesus to give me strength and to put an end to such great storm. 'See', I said, 'my Love, it has been two months and more of continuous struggles – struggles with creatures, struggles with You, that You would not let me fall into sufferings; and, oh! how much it costs me to fight with my Jesus – but not because I do not want to suffer, but because those who are above me want it so. But now I can bear no more, and only then will I stop crying, when You tell me that You concede to me to free me from the bother I give to the priest – the war is all because of this.' And I cried and cried, with such bitterness that I felt my blood being poisoned in my veins; so much so, that I often felt as though without life, without breath; but however I felt, so I continued to cry and sob.

Then, while I was in a sea of tears, my sweet Jesus clasped me to Himself, in His arms, and with a tender voice, as if He too wanted to cry, told me: "My good daughter, do not cry any more, my Heart can bear no more; your tears have descended deep into the depth of It, and I feel your bitterness so vividly that I feel It burst. My daughter, courage, you know that I have loved you very, very much, and now this love does violence to Me to make you content. If until now I have kept you suspended from the state of sufferings for a few days in order to make them comprehend that my Will was to continue to keep you as I have kept you for as many as forty-six years, however, now that they want to get you with your back to the wall, they put me in the condition of making use of my permissive Will⁹⁰, not wanted, of suspending you from the state of victim. Therefore, do not fear, from now on I will no longer communicate to you my pains, I will no longer lay Myself within you in a way that you would remain stiffened and without motion; so, you will remain free without having need of anyone. Be assured, daughter - until they calm down and for as long as they do not want you to fall into sufferings, I will not do it again. Now, you must know that the state of sufferings in which I used to put you regarded my Humanity, which wanted to continue Its life of pains in you. Now the most important thing is left to you – my Will. Do you give Me your word that you will live always in It? That you will be the sacrificed one, the victim of my Will? That, letting It dominate within you, you will not surrender a single act of life to your will? Assure Me, good daughter, that you will neglect nothing of what I have taught you to do, and will continue what you have done until now in my Fiat. This is the culminating point of your Jesus over you – placing the rights of my Will in safety in your soul. Therefore, hurry, tell Me that you will make Me content."

And I: 'My Jesus, I promise, I swear, I want it – to follow what You have taught me; but You must not leave me, because with You I can do anything, but without You I am good at nothing.' And Jesus continued, saying: "Do not fear, I do not leave you. Know that I love you, and if I have induced Myself to concede that you would not fall into the state of sufferings, it was nothing other than a great, intense, excessive love toward you. In seeing you crying so much, my Love conquered my Will, and put a stop for now; but know that the scourges will rain down like pouring rain. They deserve it; when they do not want the victims the way it pleases Me and in the way wanted by Me, they justly deserve to be struck severely. And do not think that I will do it on this very day, but let a little time pass, and then you will see and hear what my Justice has in store.

So I spent the first day free, without struggling with my Jesus, because since He had assured me that He would not let me fall into sufferings, I no longer felt myself being incited, pushed to accept to submit myself to the pains that Jesus wanted to give me. But while the struggle had ceased, such a fear had remained in me, that my beloved Jesus might surprise me all of a sudden. And in order to calm me, He told me: "Good daughter, do not fear, your Jesus told you this and that's enough. I am not a creature who can fail to keep the word; I am God, and when I speak I do not change. I told you that until they calm down and fix things, I will not let you fall⁹¹, and so it shall be; and even if the world went upside down, because my Justice wants to punish creatures, I will not change my word. In fact, you must know that there is nothing that placates Justice more, and that reaches the point of changing the greatest chastisements into deeds of graces, than voluntary suffering; and it is not those who suffer out of necessity, because of illness or misfortune, that can be called true victims - the whole world is full of these sufferings – but those who, voluntarily, offer themselves to suffer what I want and in the way I want. These are the victims that resemble Me; my suffering was all voluntary, they could give Me not one pain, even the slightest, had I not wanted it so. This is why, when I had to make you fall into sufferings, I almost always asked you whether you voluntarily accepted – so as to have your voluntary suffering, not forced. A suffering that is forced or out of necessity is nothing great before God; what enamors, enraptures, and reaches the point of binding God Himself, is the voluntary suffering. If you knew how my Heart was wounded when you would put yourself in my hands like a little lamb, so that I might bind you and do to you whatever I wanted.... I deprived you of motion, I petrified you, I can say that I made you feel mortal pains; and you would let Me do it. And this was nothing; the strongest tie was that you could not go out of that state of pains in which your Sacrificator, Jesus, had put you, if my minister would not come to call you to obedience. This is what constituted you true victim; no sick person, not even the very prisoners, are denied motion and seeking help in extreme needs. Only for you had my Love prepared the greatest cross, because great things I wanted and want to make of you; the greater are my designs, the more singular the cross It forms; and I can say that there has never been in the world a cross similar to that which, with so much love, your Jesus had prepared for you. Therefore, my sorrow is indescribable in seeing Myself opposed by creatures, as much authority as they might have, in the ways that I want to have with souls. They want to dictate to Me the laws, as if they knew more than I do. Therefore my sorrow is great, and my Justice wants to punish those who have been the cause of such a great sorrow for Me.”

How offering the sacrifice of the Saints doubles the glory. The Divine Will has the resurrective virtue. One who does the Divine Will acquires the rights to the divine goods.

I was continuing my acts in the Divine Will, and I kept offering the sacrifices that the Saints of the Old Testament did, those of my Celestial Mama, all the sacrifices of my beloved Jesus, and so on with all the rest. The Divine Will placed them all in order for me, before my mind, and I kept offering them as the most beautiful homage to my Creator. But while I was doing this, my sweet Jesus, moving in my interior, told me: “My daughter, there is not one thing suffered and done by all the Saints of the history of the world, in which my Will has not had Its part, making Itself actor and concurrent with strength, with help, with support for that sacrifice or work that they did. Now, the soul, by offering them to God as homage of glory, calls back the memory of that sacrifice and work, and my Divine Will recognizes that which, from Its own, It placed in those acts, and It gives the virtue of doubling the glory of that sacrifice, for God and for the one who had the good of sacrificing and operating in order to fulfill the Divine Will. True good never ceases, either in Heaven or on earth; it is enough for a creature to remember it and offer it, that the glory in Heaven is renewed and the effects of that good descend upon earth for the good of creatures. Therefore, the life of true good is not subject to dying. In fact, who is the life of my Church? Who nourishes Her and acts as Her Teacher, if not the brief course of my Life down here? I can say that it is my pains that sustain Her, it is my doctrines that instruct Her, it is the Sacraments that nourish Her. So, all the good that I did did not die, but remained with the fullness of life – and life that vivifies, preserves, nourishes and grows continuously, and gives itself to whomever wants it. And as the creature remembers, she already places herself in relationship with my goods; and as she keeps offering them, they redouble, to give themselves to her; and I feel the glory of what I did for love of creatures being redoubled. More so, since one who operates Divine Will acquires the resurrective virtue. As the soul keeps doing her acts, her offerings in It, my Fiat runs to place in them the seed of light; and Its light possesses the virtue of rising in each instant and act. It seems like the sun, which rises for each little plant, for each flower. In fact, it does not give the same thing to all; as if it were rising for each one, it gives one effect to the little plant, one color to the flower - and distinct colors, one from the other. Such are the acts done in my Divine Will; they expose themselves to the rays of my Divine Sun, and receive from It the seed of light, which makes rise in each act of creature such varieties of beauties and distinct colors – and one act calls for another to rise. So, one who lives in my Will, with the resurrective seed of my light, gives Me always new things, and is always in act of rising again continuously in the love, in the glory and in the very Life of her Creator.”

Then, I continued my acts in the Divine Will; I wanted to embrace everything in order to place in each created thing my adoration, my love, my gratitude to the One who had loved me so much and had created so many things for love of me. And my sweet Jesus added: “Good daughter, for one who lives in my Divine Will and operates in It, the love of my Fiat is so great in seeing the littleness of the creature going around in all created things to place in them her little acts, to say that she not only loves this Divine Will, but wants to recognize all Its acts as many pledges of love. Love makes more love arise, and my Will gives the rights to the soul in the divine goods. So, each act that the creature does is a right that she acquires in the properties of her Creator. It happens that, by right, she feels herself being loved by the Supreme Being, because she has placed her love in the Eternal Love and has acquired the right to be loved. The love of the creature and the Divine Love have fused together and, on both sides, they feel the right to love each other. By right she enjoys the light of the sun; by right she breathes the air, drinks the water, feeds herself with the fruits of the earth; and so with all the rest. And, oh! the great difference of one who takes, with rights, the divine goods. This one can be called a daughter, while the others can be called servants; and the creature with these rights gives Us the love of Our child, love of disinterest, love that says true love. Therefore, live always in my Will, that you may feel within yourself, and enjoy, all the Love of the Divine Paternity.”

How only Jesus was the author of her state of sufferings, and because they forced Him to, He has permitted a pause. How in God there is absolute rest; outside of God, work.

I continue to live amid the bitternesses of my present state. The thought that blessed Jesus is making scourges pour down, and that the peoples remain naked and starving, tortures me. And to think that my beloved and highest Good, Jesus, has remained alone in His suffering, and I am no longer together with Him in His pains, oh! how it torments me! It seems to me that Jesus is all attention over me so as not to let me fall into sufferings as before. Even more, He hides all the pains within Himself, to leave me free. And in seeing me afflicted, it seems to me that His intense love makes Him put His pains aside to pay attention to my affliction; and He says to me: “Good daughter, my daughter, courage, your Jesus still loves you - in nothing has my love for you decreased; and this, because it was not you who refused Me the suffering – no, my daughter would never have done this. They forced you to; and I, in order to give you peace and to make them see that it was really I that kept you in that state of suffering for so many years - it was neither illness nor any other natural cause, but my Paternal Goodness that wanted to have one who would make up for my pains on earth; and these, for the good of all. And now that they have forced you, and have forced Me also with their impositions, I made it cease completely, giving you a break. This says in clear notes that only your Jesus was the author of your state; but I cannot hide my sorrow – it is so great that I can say that in the whole history of the world I have never received a similar sorrow from creatures. My Heart is so grieved and gashed by this sorrow, that I am forced to hide from you the deep gash, so as not to embitter you more. And then, to see the indifference of some, and you know who they are, as if they had done nothing to Me, increases my sorrow, and they force my Justice to continue to pour the scourges. And I will continue, my daughter, to pour the chastisements; I told you this before – that if even just one month would pass, of my keeping you suspended from your state of suffering, they will hear and see how many chastisements will pour down over the face of the earth. And while my Justice does Its course, we will occupy ourselves together with my Divine Will – I, making It known to you; and you, receiving the good of Its knowledges; because each knowledge brings the growth of the Life of my Will in you, and for each act of yours done in the new knowledge, my Fiat gains more ground in your soul and extends more Its Kingdom in it. More so, since creatures have no power to enter into my Divine Will to disturb us and dictate to us the law; therefore we are free to do whatever we want – we have absolute freedom. Therefore, be attentive to continue to cross Its interminable seas.”

Then, while He was saying this, I felt my little intelligence being transported into an abyss of inaccessible light. This light concealed all the joys, all the beauties; in appearance, it seemed to be light, but looking inside, there was no good which it did not possess. And my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, Our Divine Being is most pure light – light which contains everything, fills everything, sees everything, does everything; light, such that no one can arrive at seeing where Our boundaries reach - its height and depth. The creature gets lost within Our light because she does not find its shore, its port, in order to get out. And if the creature takes from this light of Ours, it is just little drops that serve her to fill herself completely with light, to the point of overflowing outside. But Our light does not decrease because the creature has taken from Our own, but is replaced instantly by the resurrective virtue of Our light. So, Our Supreme Being is always at one level in perfect balance. We can give as much as We want if We find souls who want to take from Our own - without losing anything. Even more, if We find one who wants to take, We set to work. In fact, you must know that, within Us, there is perfect rest, nor do We have anything to do – there is nothing to remove or to place; Our happiness is full and complete, Our joys are always new. Our Will, as acting in Us, gives Us the perfect rest of the beatitudes of Our Divine Being, which has no beginning and will have no end. So, this abyss of light that you see contains an abyss of joy, of power, of beauty, of love, and so on; and We, while delighting, rest in them, because only when nothing is lacking and there is nothing to add - then can it be called true and absolute rest. On the other hand, outside of Our Divinity, Our work comes out into the field, and this field is the creatures. Our very divine qualities, which inside of Us give Us rest, outside of Ourselves give Us to work; and now We make Our Will work for the good of creatures. That Divine Fiat, which We put out in the field in Creation, from which all things came out, never desists from Its work – It works incessantly: It works by preserving everything; It works for It wants to be known, for It wants to reign; It works in issuing more souls to the light of the world, and forms Its admirable designs to carry out Its work and to have the occasion to always work; It works in withdrawing souls into the bosom of eternity. We can call Our Divine Will the All-doer that never spares continuous work, even for the good of those who do not recognize It. Our Love works, Our Mercy, Our Power works, and also Our Justice works for the good of creatures, otherwise Our Supreme Being would not be a balanced and perfect Being, but would show weaknesses if Our Justice were put aside, leaving It aside when there is all the reason for It to do Its punishing course. See, then, Our work is the creatures, because having issued them from within Our ardor of love, Our Love leads Us to work in order to always – always love them; because, if Our work ceased, love would cease, and Creation would resolve into nothing.”

The first Love of God toward man was externized in Creation. Love complete in the creation of man.

My abandonment in the Divine Fiat continues; and since I was doing my acts in It to be able to unite myself to Its acts, all Creation lined up before my mind, and in Its mute language It was saying that the Divine Volition had loved me as many more times, for as many more things as It had created, and that now it was my turn to love It in each created thing, in order to requite It with as many acts of love of mine, so that Its Love and mine would not be isolated, but would keep each other sweet company. Now, in the meantime, my sweet Jesus came out from the depth of my soul, for He seemed so sunken inside of it, that it was not given to me to see Him; and He told me: “My daughter, Our Love toward the creature was ab aeterno. Inside of Us We loved her always, but outside of Us Our first Love was externized in Creation. As Our Fiat kept pronouncing Itself and, step by step, created the heavens, the sun and so forth, so It kept externizing, in each created thing, almost step by step, Our Love contained even from Eternity for love of creatures. But, you know, my daughter, one love calls for another: having externized Itself in the creation of the universe, and having experienced how refreshing, how sweet is the outpouring of love, and how, only by externizing it, it pours itself out and one feels how sweet it is to love – so, Our Love, having begun to externize Itself, would give Itself no more peace if It would not create the one because of whom It had started to externize Its love, as though scattering it in all created things. Therefore It overflowed strongly within Us, wanting to make a complete act of love, calling him from nothing, to give him being and create in him Our very Life of Love. If We would not create in him the Life of Love in order to be loved back, there was no reason, either divine or human, to externize so much love toward man. If We loved him so much, it was reasonable and rightful that he would love Us; but, having nothing of his own, it was befitting for Our Wisdom to create, Ourselves, the Life of Love in order to be loved back by the creature.

But, hear my daughter, the excess of Our Love. Before creating him, We were not content with having externized Our Love in the Creation, but It reached such extent, that in putting out Our qualities from Our Divine Being, We put out seas of Power and We loved him in Our Power; seas of Sanctity, of Beauty, of Love, and so forth – and We loved him in Our Sanctity, in Our Beauty, in Our Love. And these seas were to serve to invest man, so that he would find, in all Our qualities, the echo of Our powerful Love, and would love Us with powerful love, with holy love, and with love of enrapturing beauty. Therefore, when these seas of Our divine qualities were put out of Ourselves, We created man, enriching him with Our qualities, for as much as he could contain, so that he too would have an act that could echo within Our Power, within Our Love, within Our Goodness, to be able to love Us with Our same qualities. We wanted man, not a servant, but a son; not poor, but rich; not outside of Our goods, but inside of Our inheritance; and as the confirmation of this, We gave him Our very Will as life and as law. This is the reason why We love the creature so much – because she has from Our own, and not to love one’s things is outside of nature and against reason.”

The heavens and the whole Creation symbolize the celestial hierarchy. How an act of pure love is formed.

I felt my poor mind immersed in the interminable light of the Divine Will. So, I tried to follow Its acts done in Creation, and I was saying to myself: ‘I would like to be heavens to be able to extend myself in everyone and everywhere, and in all points and over everyone, my love, my adoration, my glory toward my Creator. I would like to be sun, and have so much light as to fill heaven and earth, and convert everything into light and, in this light, have my continuous cry: ‘I love You, I love You.’ But while my mind was speaking nonsense, my sweet and highest Good, Jesus, making Himself seen, told me: “My daughter, all Creation symbolizes God, the order of the diversity of Saints and of souls. Its harmony, the union that all Creation possesses, the order, the inseparability, symbolizes the celestial hierarchy with its Creator at the head of it. Look at the heavens that extend everywhere and have all created things under their azure vault, ruling over all, in such a way that no one can escape their sight and their rule. Oh! how they symbolize God, who everywhere extends His dominion and no one can escape His sight. While these heavens enclose everything, however, a great diversity appears in the created things; some are as though immediate to the heavens - and these are the stars, which, though from down below they appear as small, up above are so great, and with such variety of colors and beauty, and have a symphony in their vertiginous race with all Creation, as to form one of the most beautiful musics; their motion and sound, so sweet and vibrant, that it cannot be compared to any of the most beautiful musics of down here. These stars seem to live of heaven, so much are they identified with it – symbol of the souls who will live of Divine Will: they will be so immediate to and identified with God, as to receive all the varieties of the divine qualities, and live of them in such a way as to form the most beautiful ornament to the Heaven of their Creator.

Keep looking, my daughter; under these heavens, but as though detached from them, between heaven and earth appears the sun, a sphere placed for the benefit of the earth; its light descends down below and rises up high, as though wanting to embrace heaven and earth. Therefore it can be said that its light, touching the heavens, lives of heaven – symbol of those souls chosen by God to make graces descend from Heaven, and make them descend upon earth in order to call it back to live in the Divine Will. And the first is my Celestial Mama, unique as the sun which extends its wings of light; and this light rises up high, descends down below, to reunite God and man, to reconcile him and lead him, by means of its light, to his Creator. The stars seem to live on their own, united with the Divine Heaven, while the sun lives of God, but gives itself to all, and its mission is to do good to all. Such is the Sovereign Queen. But this Sun will not be alone; many other little suns will rise, which will draw light from this great Sun, and these will be those few who will have the mission of making my Divine Will known. Then, the low level of the earth, the sea, the plants, the flowers, the trees, the mountains, the flowery forests, symbolize the Saints, the good souls and all those who enter into the harbor of salvation. But see the great difference: the heavens, the stars, the sun, have no need of the earth; on the contrary, they give much to the earth - they give it life, they sustain it. Not only this, but all the things created by Us that up high are always at their place, they never change, they neither increase nor decrease, because they have such fullness as to have need of nothing. On the other hand, the earth, the plants, the sea and so forth, are mutable - now they make a beautiful appearance, and now they reach the point of disappearing completely. They have need of everything – of water, of light, of heat, of the seed in order to reproduce. What difference – the created things which are up high can give, and have need only of God in order to be preserved; while the earth has need not only of God, but of everything; and if the human hand did not work it, it would remain sterile, without doing anything at all of great good. Such is the difference: one who lives of my Will feels only the need of God in order to live of His Life; while one who does not have His Life as beginning keeps begging support and help from all; and when he does not find them, he remains like earth, which is incapable of producing much good at all. Therefore, let my Divine Will alone be the life and the beginning of all your acts, if you want to feel only the need for your Jesus. You will find Me always ready – I, more yearning to give it to you, than you to receive it; while the help of creatures are given with difficulty and reluctantly, so much so, that the one who receives them feels the bitterness of the help that is given to him by the creature. My helps, instead, bring joy and happiness.”

Then, I was continuing my 'I love You' in the Divine Fiat, and was thinking to myself: ‘But, is my love pure?’ And my beloved Jesus added: “My daughter, in order for you to be able to give Me a pure love, a glance to your interior says everything: if your heart palpitates, yearns for, desires only my love; if your hands operate only for love of Me; if your feet walk only out of love; if your will wants only my love; if your intelligence seeks always the way to love Me; your 'I love You' with the word – do you know what it does? It gathers all together the whole complex of the love that you have inside yourself, and makes it one, and forms an act of pure and complete love for your Jesus. So, your word does nothing other than externize its extension of the love that you have inside yourself. But if inside not everything is love, since the pure fount is missing inside, there can be neither pure nor complete love.”

To feel one's will is one thing, to want it is another. The most beautiful rest that the Divine Will wants to give. Triple acts in the act of the creature.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues, but the circumstances in which I currently find myself are such and so many, that my poor human will would want to as though pop out from all sides of my being, to have some act of life, and I feel all the enormous weight; I feel myself being pressed, crushed, under my human will. Oh! how true it is that it is the cruelest tyrant. My Jesus, help me, do not abandon me, do not leave me at the mercy of my will. If You want, You can; put it under the sweet empire of your Divine Will. And my beloved Jesus, making Himself seen and heard, told me: "My daughter, courage, do not worry so much; to feel the weight of one's will says nothing; it is a pain more painful than all other pains, and if you had wanted it, it would no longer be pain, but the pain would change into satisfaction. To feel is one thing, to want is another; so, banish the thought that you always commit sins because you feel your will. Therefore, do not fear, I am watching you, and when I see that it wants life in your things, I give you the pain so as to make it die of pain. So, trust your Jesus, because what harms you the most is the lack of trust. Ah! it is always this that causes souls to be restless, even when I keep them clasped in my arms. And then, this pain of feeling the weight of the human will, oh! how much did your Jesus feel it, more vividly, as it lasted my whole life. Therefore, mine and yours – let us unite them together, and let us offer them for the triumph of my Will in souls.

So, put everything aside and come to rest in my Divine Will. My Will, with all love, awaits you in the center of my Heart in order to love you, and the most beautiful love that It wants to give you is rest in the pains that you suffer. Oh! how sweet, refreshing, it is to see Our daughter, whom We love and who loves Us, rest. And while she rests, It wants to pour upon you the celestial dew of the light of my Divine Will. My Will, in the unity of Its light, does always one act, nor does It ever cease doing it; and only when it is not subject to interruption - then can an act be called complete. This act never interrupted says everything, embraces, loves all; from its height, in which this act never says enough, it casts an infinity of effects, which make it hold Heaven and earth as though in its power, and it communicates to creatures the celestial dew of the effects of its sanctity, of its love and of its divine life. But these effects convert for the creature into acts, in such a way that she feels within herself the act of the divine life, of light, of sanctity, of love; and the creature who lives in my Will forms in it her life, her nourishment, and grows under the rain of the celestial dew of the single act of her Creator. And these effects, changed into acts in the creature, form her little sun which, with its little reflections, says: 'Love, glory, continuous honor, to the One who created me.' So, the Divine Sun and the sun formed by my Divine Will in the creature meet continuously, they wound each other; the little sun is transformed into the immense Sun of the Eternal One, and they form life together, loving each other with love reciprocal and never interrupted. This continuous love inebriates and puts to sleep the human volition, and gives the most beautiful rest to the creature."

After this, I continued my acts in the Divine Will, and I comprehended how, when we dispose ourselves to do an act, the Divine Volition, before we do the act, places in it Its prime act, to give the life of the act in the creature. And my sweet Jesus added: "My daughter, in each act of the creature there is a triple act: first, the Creative Strength forms the act; the creature, over the act of the Creative Strength, forms the act of her operating love, which is nourished by the Creative Strength; and according to the intensity of the love of the creature, its proximity, the good, the value that her act contains, so does it receive more or less nourishment of the act of the Creative Strength. In fact, there is no taste and delight for God more beautiful and pleasing, than nourishing the acts of the creature; and this, because in seeing something of Our own in the human act, We feel We are the Masters, recognized by them; We feel them as Our children – not the children far away, but close; even more, identified with Us, surrounding Us like a crown as many children of Ours, who justly want from Our own. And We, with all love, gladly give Our nourishment to their acts; more so since, nourished by Us, they will grow as noble children, worthy of their Celestial Father. Now, after the act of the Creative Strength and the act of the operating love of the creature, follows the act of the love of completion.

Each act could not be called complete, nor be given the just value, if one comma, one point, one shade, were missing, whatever it might be; if a work is not complete, not only can one not give it value, but one cannot earn honor and glory. So, after the operating love, the love of gratitude arises, of thanksgiving, and of giving to God that which is of God: the creature has received from God the first act of her operating; she has continued it with her operating love, but, nourished by God, she completes it with a greater love, by giving to God that which from God had its origin. Here is the final point, and the most beautiful shade of the act of the creature, to which God Himself deigns to give His divine appreciation, and feels honored and glorified by the little gift received. And by virtue of this, He gives more occasions to let the creature do more acts, so as to keep her always close and in continuous correspondence.”

Humiliations, bearers of glory. Tendernesses of the Heart of Jesus. A hard heart is capable of all evils. Invitation to take the crumbs of the divine goods.

I am, again, in the nightmare of my usual sufferings. After a one month break, I am back at the start. I felt as though emptied of all pains; my sweet Jesus no longer made me become stiffened, nor did He render me immobile and without motion. I felt as if my life was ending in remaining without motion and stiffened; yet I lived, but from a life that was choked, without the slightest control over myself, waiting with a patience which only Jesus could give me for the one who was to call me to obedience, to give me motion and let me come out of the abyss I was in. So, seeing myself free, as much as I loved to share the pains together with Jesus, yet I felt my nature triumphant; more so, since I had no longer need of anyone. So, in finding myself bound again, hampered inside the previous abyss, my poor nature feels such reluctance, that if my beloved Jesus does not help me, does not fortify me, does not attract me with special graces, I don't know what I would do so as not to fall into that state of sufferings. Ah! my Jesus, help me; You who have sustained me for so many years in a state so painful. O please! if You want me to continue, continue sustaining me Yourself, and use your mercy toward this poor sinner, that I may not oppose your Most Holy Will.

Then, while I was amid reluctances and fear of being surprised by my usual sufferings, my adorable Jesus, making Himself seen in great suffering, told me: “My daughter, what is the matter? You no longer want to suffer together with Me? How can this be? You want to leave Me alone? You want to take away from Me the rights that you have given Me many times – that I might do with you whatever I want? Good daughter, do not give Me this sorrow; abandon yourself in my arms and let Me do what I want.” And I: ‘My Love, forgive me, You know the struggles I find myself in, and what profound humiliations I have been cast into. If things were as before - when did I ever refuse You anything? Therefore, mind, and think, oh Jesus, of what You are doing to me, and into what a maze You cast me if You let me fall into my usual sufferings. And if I say to You ‘Fiat’, the effort I make is so great, that I feel myself dying. Jesus! Jesus! help me.’

And Jesus: “My good daughter, do not fear, humiliation is bearer of glory; over the contempt of creatures arises the divine appreciation, and their abandonment is the call of the faithful company of your Jesus; therefore, let Me do. If you knew how Divine Justice is armed, you would not be opposed; on the contrary, you would pray Me to make you suffer so as to spare, in part, your brothers. More regions will be devastated, and misery is at the doors of cities and of nations. My Heart feels such tenderness in seeing to what a state of desolation and of confusion the earth will be reduced; and this tenderness of mine, so sensitive toward creatures, is offended by the hardness of the human heart. Oh! how intolerable to Me is the hardness of the human heart; much more so before Mine, which is all loving tenderness and goodness toward them. A hard heart is capable of all evils and reaches such extent as to make a mockery of the pains of others, and it changes the tendernesses of my Heart toward it into sorrows and deep wounds. The most beautiful prerogative of my Heart is tenderness; all the fibers, the affections, the desires, the love, the heartbeats of my Heart, have tenderness as their origin. So, my fibers are tender, my affections and desires are most tender, my love and heartbeats are so tender as to reach the point of melting my Heart out of tenderness; and this tender love makes Me arrive at loving the creatures so much, that I am content with suffering Myself rather than seeing them suffer. A love, when it is not tender, is like a food without condiment, like a beauty that is aged, incapable of attracting anyone to make itself loved; it is like a flower without fragrance, like a dry fruit without humor and sweetness. A love that is hard, without tenderness, is unacceptable and would have no virtue of making itself loved by anyone. Therefore, my Heart suffers so much in seeing the hardness of creatures, that they reach the point of changing my graces into scourges.”

After this, I found myself prey to a supreme force, which it was not given to me to be able to resist in my painful state; and even though I felt great reluctance, I tried to abandon myself in the Divine Will, my only refuge. And Jesus, to give me strength, made Himself seen for a little while and told me: “My daughter, in creating man, Our Divinity issued from Ourselves Sanctity, Love, Goodness, Beauty, and so forth, which were to serve man to make himself holy, good, beautiful, and to give Us love for love. Now, Our divine goods have not been taken completely by him, and so they are waiting for one who would take them. Therefore, come into Our goods, come to take the crumbs of Sanctity, of Love, of Goodness, the crumbs of Beauty, of Strength. I say crumbs in comparison with those which you will leave out, because Our goods are immense, and what the creature can take can be called crumbs compared to what she leaves out; but, for her, they fill her so much as to overflow outside. Only then is Our Love content - when It sees the creature loved in Our goods, filled to the brim. Now, these crumbs form many different foods, one more beautiful than the other, which she takes from Our celestial table, and she nourishes herself abundantly from these divine foods; and since one gives of that food which one takes, so, in giving Us her acts - of one who has nourished herself of these divine crumbs which give of sanctity, of beauty, of strength, of love, and has filled herself with such beauty, We immediately recognize that it is food of Our crumbs that she gives Us in her acts, and – oh! how content We remain, that the creature gives Us her acts that give of what is divine; We feel Our fragrances, We touch Our Sanctity and Goodness, and feel requited for the crumbs We gave her.”

How what the creature has, of most preciousness, is the will. Power of the voluntary pains. The prop. How the little flame is lit in the soul, and how it is nourished.

My abandonment continues in the Holy Volition; but, though abandoned, I feel vividly my reluctances in falling into the state of my usual sufferings; and these reluctances are caused by the struggles and by the impositions that are over me. So, in the bitterness of my soul, I was saying to my sweet Jesus: ‘My Love, You want to make me fall into sufferings? Go ahead; but, from myself, I don’t want to put my will in. You will do it Yourself, I will be happy; but from myself I don’t want to put anything.’ And Jesus, all afflicted, told me: “My daughter, what am I to do with your pains without your will? I do not know what to do with them, nor will they be able to serve Me to disarm Divine Justice, or to placate my just indignation; because what the creature has, of most beauty and preciousness, is the will. The will is gold; everything else of her are superficial things, things without substance, and the very pains are without value. On the other hand, if the gold thread of the spontaneous will flows in the pains, it has the virtue of changing them into most pure gold, worthy of He who suffered everything voluntarily, and even death itself for love of creatures. If I wanted pains without will, there is such an abundance of them in the world, that I could take as much as I want; but since the gold thread of their will is missing, they are not for Me, they do not attract Me, they do not wound my Heart, nor do I find in them the echo of my voluntary pains; therefore they do not have the virtue of changing the scourges into grace. So, the pains without will are empty inside, without fullness of grace, without beauty, without power over my Divine Heart. A quarter of an hour of voluntary pains is enough to make up for and surpass all the most atrocious pains that exist in the world; because these are in the human order, while voluntary ones are in the divine order. And besides, from the little daughter of my Will I would never accept her pains without the spontaneity of her will; it was the will that rendered you beautiful and graceful in my eyes; that opened the currents of my manifestations on my Divine Will; and that, with a magnetic force, drew Me to make my visits so often to your soul. Your will, sacrificed voluntarily for love of Me, was my smile, my amusement, and had the virtue of changing my sorrows into joys. Therefore, I will rather content Myself with keeping the pains only for Myself - rather than making you suffer without the spontaneous acceptance of your will. Oh! how you would degrade yourself, and would go down to the low level of the children of the human will, losing the noble title, the precious characteristic of daughter of my Will. In my Will there is no forcing; in fact, no one forced It in creating the heavens, the sun, the earth and man himself, but It acted voluntarily without anyone saying anything to It, for love of creatures; yet It knew how much It was going to suffer because of them. So I want for one who wants to live of my Will; force⁹² is of the human nature, force is impotence, is mutability; force is the true character of the human will. Therefore, be attentive, good daughter; let us not change things, and do not want to give this sorrow to my Heart, too embittered.”

And I, in my bitterness, said: ‘My Jesus, yet, those who are above me tell me: “How can this ever be possible - that because of four or five people who wanted to do evil, He would send so many chastisements? Rather, Our Lord is right that the sins are many, and therefore the scourges”, and many other things that they say, and that You know.’ And Jesus, all goodness, added: “My daughter, how they deceive themselves; it is not because of the sin of the four or five who, with so much perfidy, have reached the point of calumnies. These will be punished individually. But it is the prop that they have taken away from me. Your sufferings served Me as prop; once the prop is taken away from Me, my Justice finds no one who sustains It, and remaining without a place to lean on, It made continuous and terrible scourges pour down during the time in which you have been free of your usual pains. But if the prop had been there, even if it had happened, it would have been a tenth, or a fifth. More so, since this prop was formed of voluntary pains and was wanted by Me, and in voluntary pains enters a Divine Strength. I could say that I Myself, in your pains, made Myself prop in order to sustain my Justice. Now, not having your pains, I lack the material in order to form the prop, and therefore my Justice remains free to do what It wants. From this they should comprehend the great good I have done to all and to the entire world in keeping you for so many years in the state of voluntary pains. Therefore, if you don’t want my Justice to continue to shake the earth, do not deny Me your voluntary pains; and I will help you. Do not fear, let Me do.”

After this, I abandoned all of myself in the Divine Fiat, with the fear that I might deny something to Jesus, and that I might fail to do always the Divine Will. This fear tears my soul and makes me restless, and only in the presence of Jesus do I feel myself the peacemaker of long ago; but as soon as I lose sight of Him, I return under the storm of worries, of fears and reluctances. And my sweet Jesus, to cheer me, added: “Good daughter, courage, be cheered, do not lose heart. Do you want to know how the light of my Divine Will is formed in your soul? The repeated desires are like many blowings of breaths which, blowing over your soul, call the little flame, the little drops of light, to light up inside of it; and the more intensely you desire, the more it blows to nourish the little flame and enlarge it more. If the blow ceases, there is the danger that the little flame will be extinguished. So, in order to form and light the little flame, true and incessant desires are needed; and in order to mature and enlarge the light, love is needed, which contains the seed of light. In vain would you blow with your desires if the inflammable material were missing over your repeated blows. But who places this little flame in safety, in such a way as to render it everlasting, with no danger of being extinguished? The acts done in my Divine Will. They take the material for lighting the little flame of Our eternal light, which is not subject to being extinguished, and they keep it always alive and always growing. And the human will, before this light, eclipses itself and becomes blind; and seeing itself blind, it no longer feels the right to act, and it gives peace to the poor creature. Therefore, do not fear, I Myself will help you to blow; we will blow together, so the little flame will be more beautiful and more refulgent.”

The ‘I love You’ is thunder, the Divine Will is Heaven, our humanity is earth. The pains of the Heart of Jesus. Exchange of life. The Divine Will, origin, means and end.

My abandonment in the arms of the Most Holy Supreme Will continues; and even though I feel myself under the thick clouds of inexpressible bitternesses, which take away from me the beauty of the divine light, and if I feel it, it is behind these clouds – yet, as I say my ‘I love You’ and do my acts in the Fiat, the thunder is formed; and unleashing the lightning, it rips the clouds open, and through those rips the refulgent light enters into my soul and brings me the light of the truth that Jesus wants to manifest to His little creature. It seems to me that the more I repeat my ‘I love You’, the more often I thunder and lightning; and these lightnings, piercing the clouds, wound my highest Good, Jesus, who, wounded, sends me His light as herald of His little visit to His embittered daughter.

So, while I was in this state, my beloved Jesus came in a pitiful and afflicted state; His arms were broken from the grave offenses received; and throwing Himself into my arms, He asked me for help in so many pains. I was unable to resist, and while clasping Him in my arms, I felt His pains being communicated to me – but so many, as to feel myself dying; so I fell into the abyss of my painful state. Fiat!... Fiat!... But the thought of being able to relieve Jesus with my little pains gave me peace. And although Jesus had left me alone in the pains, later He came back and told me: “My daughter, true love can do nothing, nor can it suffer, if it does not share it with one who loves Me. How sweet is the company of dear ones in the pains. Their company mitigates my pains, and I feel as if they were giving life back to Me; and to feel life being given back to Me by dint of pains is the greatest love that I find in the creature; and I give her my life again in exchange. So, the love is so great, that they exchange the gift of life, one for the other. But do you know who drew Me into your arms to ask you for help in my pains? The continuous thundering of your ‘I love You’, which, making bolts of lightning, drew Me to come to throw Myself into your arms to ask you for relief.

Moreover, you must know that my Divine Will is Heaven, your humanity is earth. Now, as you keep doing your acts in It, you take Heaven; and the more acts you do, the more room you take in this Heaven of my Fiat; and while you take Heaven, my Will takes your earth, and Heaven and earth are fused together and remain dissolved, one within the other.”

After this, I continued my abandonment in the Divine Fiat, and blessed Jesus came back with His Heart open, from which blood was pouring; and in that Divine Heart one could see all the pains of Jesus, which He suffered in all the parts of His Divine Person, all centered in the Heart. Even more, in It was the place and the origin of all His pains which, spreading through all of His Most Holy Humanity, rose back like many rivulets into His Most Holy Heart, bringing to It the torment that His whole Divine Person suffered. And Jesus added: “My daughter, how much I suffer. Look at this Heart of Mine – how many wounds, how many sorrows, how many pains It hides. It is the refuge of all pains; there is no sorrow, nor spasm, nor offense, which does not pour into this Heart of Mine. My pains are so many, that unable to bear the bitterness, I keep looking for one who wants to accept a few little particles of these pains, to have a sigh of relief. And when I find her, I keep her so dear to Me, that I cannot leave her ever again, nor do I feel lonely any more; I have someone whom I can make comprehend my pains, to whom I can confide my secrets, and in whom I can pour my flames of love that consume Me. This is why I often ask you to accept part of my pains – because they are many; and if I don’t go to my children to ask for relief, to whom should I go? I would remain like a father without children, who either has no offspring, or his ungrateful children have abandoned him. Ah! no, no, you will not abandon Me. Isn’t it true, my daughter?”

And I: ‘My Jesus, I will never abandon You, but You will give me grace, You will help me in my present conditions – and You know how painful they are. My Jesus, help me; and I too say to you from the heart: ‘O please! do not abandon me, do not leave me alone. Oh! how vividly I feel the need of You. Help me! help me!’ And Jesus, assuming a sweeter appearance, took my poor soul in His hands, and in the depth of it He wrote: “I place my Divine Will in this creature, as origin, means and end.” And then He repeated: “My daughter, I place my Divine Will in your soul as origin of life, from which all your acts will descend, as though from one single point; and diffusing in all your being, in the soul and in the body, they will make you feel the palpitating life of my Divine Will in you, which will hide within Itself, as though inside a sacrarium, all your acts as continuation from Its divine origin. Now, by having my Divine Will as origin, you will remain fully ordered in your Creator, and will recognize that every origin comes from God, and will give Us the glory and the requital of love of all created things, which have come out of Our creative hands. By doing this, you will embrace the work of Creation, of which We were the origin, the life and the preservation.

From the origin you will pass to the means. You must know that man, by withdrawing from Our Divine Will, denied the origin and disordered himself; and he remained vacillating, without support, without strength. At each step, He felt himself pushed to fall, as though feeling the ground missing under his feet, and Heaven, over his head, in act unloading Itself upon him in a fierce storm. Now, a means was needed in order to firm up the earth and make Heaven smile – and here is my coming upon earth, as means to reunite Heaven and earth, God and man. So, to one who has my Divine Will as origin, the means is revealed, and she will embrace the whole work of Redemption, and will give Me the requital of love and the glory of all the pains that I suffered in order to redeem man. Now, if there is the origin and the means, there must be the end. The end of man is Heaven, and for one who has my Divine Will as origin, all of her acts flow into Heaven, as the end which her soul must reach, and as the origin of her beatitude which will have no end. And if you have my Divine Will as end, you will give Me the glory and the requital of love for having prepared a Celestial Fatherland for creatures, as their happy dwelling. Therefore, be attentive, my daughter, and I seal in your soul my Divine Will as origin, means and end, which will be for you life, the safe guide, the support, and will lead you in Its arms to the Celestial Fatherland.”

Courage is of resolute souls. Six Angels with Jesus at the head of them. How the acts done in the Divine Will are pledges of infinite value, eternal bonds, chains not subject to breaking.

My life continues under the empire of the Eternal Fiat, which envelopes me, inside and outside of me, and makes me feel Its infinite weight; and I, like atom, remain enveloped by this infinity that has no limits, and as much as I love It and long for It, I feel vividly the pain of my human will, crushed and almost dying under the empire of a Divine Will, immense and eternal. My Jesus, help me, and give me strength in the painful state I find myself in. My poor heart bleeds and seeks a refuge in so many pains – You alone, my Jesus, can help me. O please! help me, do not abandon me.... And while my poor soul was pouring itself out in sorrow, my sweet Jesus made Himself seen in my interior – crucified, with six Angels, three on the right and three on the left of His adorable Person. Each of these Angels held a crown in his hands, studded with most refulgent gems, in act of offering them to Our Lord.

I remained surprised in seeing this, and my beloved Jesus told me: “Courage, my daughter – courage is of souls resolute to do good. They are imperturbable under any storm; and while they hear the roaring of the thunders and lightnings to the point of trembling, and remain under the pouring rain that pours over them, they use the water to be washed and come out more beautiful; and heedless of the storm, they are more than ever resolute and courageous in not moving from the good they have started. Discouragement is of irresolute souls, which never arrive at accomplishing a good. Courage sets the way, courage puts to flight any storm, courage is the bread of the strong, courage is the warlike one that knows how to win any battle. Therefore, good daughter, courage, do not fear. And besides, what do you fear? I gave you six Angels for your custody; each of them has the task to guide you through the interminable ways of my Eternal Volition, so that you may requite with your acts, with your love, what the Divine Will did by pronouncing six Fiats in Creation. So, each Angel is entrusted one Fiat and what came out of this Fiat, to call you to requite each of these Fiats, even with the sacrifice of your life. These Angels gather your acts and form with them a crown, and, prostrate, they offer it to the Divinity as requital for what Our Divine Will did, so that It may be known and form Its Kingdom upon earth. But this is not all; I Myself am at the head of these Angels, guiding you and watching over you in everything, and forming in you the very acts and that love which is needed so that you may have sufficient love to be able to requite so many great works of Our Supreme Volition. Therefore, do not stop, you have much to do - you have to follow Me who never stops; you have to follow the Angels, because they want to fulfill their task entrusted to them; you have to fulfill your mission of daughter of the Divine Will.”

After this, I was feeling concerned, and, fearing, I thought to myself: ‘The circumstances of my life are most painful, so much so, that often times I feel myself succumbing under so long a storm, which gives no sign of ending. On the contrary, it often seems to rage more, and if Our Lord does not give me help and superabundant grace, my weakness is so great, that I feel as if I wanted to go out of the Divine Will; and if, may it never be, this happens – poor me, everything will be lost.’ But while I was thinking this, my adorable Jesus, extending His arms toward me in act of sustaining me, told me: “My daughter, you must know that the acts done in my Divine Will are everlasting and inseparable from God, and they leave the continuous memory that the soul had the good of operating together with a Divine Will, and that God had the creature with Himself to let her operate with His own Divine Will. This happy, operative and holy memory makes us always keep our eyes over each other - God and the soul; in such a way that we remain unforgettable - one to the other; so much so, that if the creature had the misfortune of going out of Our Will, she will go wandering, she will wander far, but will feel the eye of her God over her, calling her sweetly, and her own eye toward the One who is watching her continuously. And even if she goes wandering, she feels the irresistible need, the strong chains that pull her into the arms of her Creator.

This happened to Adam, because the beginning of his life was lived in my Divine Will. Even though he sinned, was cast out of Eden, went wandering for all his life – yet, was he perhaps lost? Ah no! because he felt over himself the power of Our Will in which he had operated; he felt Our eye watching him and drawing his eye to watch Us, as well as the dear memory that the first fruits of his acts had had life in Our Will. You cannot comprehend all the good and what it means to operate in Our Will. By operating in It, the soul acquires as many pledges of infinite value for as many acts as she does in Our Fiat; and these pledges remain in God Himself, because the creature does not have the capacity or the place in which to keep them, so great is the value they contain. And can you ever think that while We have these pledges of infinite value of the creature, We would permit that she to whom these pledges so precious belong, be lost? Ah no! no!... Therefore, do not fear, the acts done in Our Will are eternal bonds, chains not subject to breaking. And suppose you went out of Our Divine Will – which will not be: you can go out, but your acts remain, nor can they go out, because they were done in Our house, and the creature has her rights for as long as she remains in Our house – that is, in Our Will. As soon as she goes out of It, she loses her rights; however, these acts will have such power as to call back the one who was their possessor. Therefore, do not want to trouble the peace of your heart; abandon yourself in Me, and do not fear.”

How God, in operating, requires the acts of the creatures as the little ground on which to place His works. Who forms the breath, the heartbeat, of Creation. The works of God, bearers of life.

I was continuing my acts in the Divine Fiat – oh! how I would love that nothing would escape me of what It has done, both in Creation and in Redemption, to be able to compete with my little incessant ‘I love You, I adore You, I thank You, I bless You, and I pray You that the Kingdom of the Divine Will come upon earth’. But while I was thinking of this, my lovable Jesus told me: “My daughter, even though Our divine operating superabounds - but so much, that the creature cannot arrive at taking all the superabundance of the goods that We put in Our creative works – yet, in order to operate We always require the little operating of the creature; and according to ‘the more or the less’ of her operating, so We dispose ‘the more or the less’ of the goods that We want to give in the work We want to do for the good of creatures. In fact, their operating serves Us as little ground or space on which to place Our goods. If a ground or space is small, We can place little; if it is large, We can place more; and if We want to place more, she will be incapable of taking and of comprehending what We have given her. See, then, how necessary is the little operating of the creature so that Our works may have life in the midst of the human generations; more so since, as the creature begins her little acts, her prayers, her sacrifices in order to obtain the good that We want to give her, she places herself in communication with her Creator, she opens a sort of correspondence, and all her acts are nothing other than little letters that she sends to Him, in which she now prays, now cries, and now offers Him her own life, to move Him to give the good that We want to give her. This disposes the creature to receive it, and God to give it. If it were not so, the way would be missing, and all communications would be closed; the knowledge of the One who wants to give the gift would be missing, and it would be like giving and exposing Our gifts to hostile people, who are neither loved by Us, nor lovers of Us - which cannot be; while, when We want to do a work, We always elect someone who loves Us and whom We love, because love is the seed, the substance, the life of Our works; and when love is missing, the respiration, the heartbeat of a work are missing, and the gift received is not appreciated, and by not appreciating it, there is the danger for it to die at birth. Here, then, the necessity of your acts and of the sacrifice even of your life in order to make my Divine Will known and to make It reign. There is no greater work than this, and this is why I want your repeated acts, your incessant prayers and your prolonged sacrifice of a life buried alive; this is nothing other than the spacious ground on which to place such a great good. Each act of yours is a little letter that you send to Us; and We, in reading it, say: ‘Ah! yes, there is someone who wants Our Will upon earth, and who wants to give her own life in order to make It reign!’ With this, We dispose things, the graces, the events, in order to fill your little ground, and We wait for you to expand it more in order to place the great gift of the Kingdom of Our Will.

This happened in Redemption; I waited for so long to descend from Heaven to earth in order to give the chosen people sufficient time to prepare, with their acts, prayers and sacrifices, the little ground on which I could place the fruits of Redemption, which were so superabundant, that creatures are yet to take everything; and if they had done more, I would have given more. And if I had wanted to give more without even a comma, a dot of their acts, it would have been for them like an illegible book whose language is unknown; like a treasury as though without key, such that one does not know what is inside. In fact, the act of the creature is the eye that reads and the key that opens in order to take my gifts. And besides, to give without the gift given being known – it would have been a sorrow, and unworthy of Our Wisdom. Therefore, be attentive in following my Divine Will; the more you will follow It, the more you will recognize It, and the more superabundant It will be in giving Its goods.”

After this, I was continuing my round in Creation, to unite myself to the acts done by the Divine Will in It; and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, the breath, the heartbeat, the blood circulation of Creation is Our Love, adoration and glory. We placed in It what We are in Ourselves; Our nature is most pure Love, and Our Sanctity is so great, that what this Love produces are nothing other than profound adoration and perennial glory to Our Divine Being. So, in putting out the Creation, We had to put what We possess, nor could We put things that did not belong to Us; therefore, the heartbeat of Creation is Love, and as It palpitates, It pearls It with new Love which, giving It the race of the circulation, repeats incessantly: ‘Adoration and glory to Our Creator.’ Now, if the creature goes around in the created things, placing her love, she places her own and takes Our Love, and makes new Love arise, to wait for her again in order to receive, and to give Its⁹³ Love. So, an exchange takes place, and a contest between the created things and the creature, which, uniting together, give love, adoration, glory to Our Supreme Being. Therefore, if you want to love, think that all created things have Our mandate to give you love, as long as they receive yours. In this way, the feast of Our Love will be maintained in Heaven and on earth, and you will feel the happiness of Our Love; and the breath of love, the heartbeat of the adoration, will be substituted in you; and perennial glory to your Creator will circulate in your blood.

Now, you must know that Our works are full of life; Our Creative Strength has the virtue of placing the vital seed in all the works We do, and of communicating it to the creatures who make use of them. Creation is packed with Our creative works; Redemption is an immense field of Our actions done so that they might bring to creatures the life and the good that they contain. So, We are surrounded by the magnificence of Our works, but We have the sorrow that these works are not taken, and many of them are not even known by creatures, and therefore are as though dead for them. In fact, they bring life and produce fruits of life for as much use as they make of them; and to keep so many vital works exposed, so many properties of Ours without producing the fruits they contain; and, even more, to see the creatures poor, weak and without the life of true good, grieves Us so much, that you cannot comprehend into what condition of sorrow creatures put Us. We find Ourselves in the condition of a father who, having many children, prepares lunch, and while he prepares it, he is all in feast, thinking that his children will not be starving, but will eat of his own. Then he sets the table, he arranges the plates with the variety of the foods he has prepared; then he calls the children, that they might come and enjoy the nice foods he has prepared. But the children do not listen to the voice of the father, and the lunch is left there without anyone touching it. What is not the sorrow of this father in seeing that his children do not sit at his table and do not nourish themselves with the foods he has prepared! The mere looking at the table, filled with foods, causes him sorrow. Such are We in seeing that the creatures do not care about the many works We have done with so much love for them. Therefore, the more you will take of Our own, the more divine life you will receive; you will make Us more content, and will heal Our deep wound of human ingratitude.”

Power of the word of Jesus. How the repeated acts are like juice for the plants. Forced pains lose freshness. Jesus wants to be free in the soul.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues. Its sweet empire attracts my poor will, and even though very often it would want to as though enter the field to make its way, given the painful circumstances I find myself in, yet, the Omnipotent Fiat, with the irresistible strength of Its light, fixes Itself upon the night of my will and prevents my step; and forming Its day of light in my soul, It draws me to do my little acts in Its Divine Volition. And I was thinking to myself: ‘Why does Jesus have so much interest that I do not neglect my repeated acts in His adorable Will?’ And Jesus, all tenderness and goodness, told me: “My daughter, because all the acts that you do in your interior are acts taught and formed by Me; so, they are my acts, and I do not want you to remain behind, without uniting yourself together with Me in order to follow them. In fact, you must know that when I do a crafting in the soul, when I speak and teach, your Jesus has such power as to convert the good, taught and operated in the creature, into her nature; and good in nature cannot be destroyed. It would be as if you had the eye given to you by God as property of your nature, and you would not make use of it in order to look; or voice, hands, feet, and you would not make use of them in order to speak, to operate and walk. Would you not be worthy of condemnation? Now, just as I give gifts in nature to the body, in the same way, when I speak, my creative word has the power to give to the soul, as though in nature, the gift which I intend to give with my word. In fact, one Fiat of Mine can enclose a heaven, a sun, an incessant prayer as gift, with which my Fiat has the power to convert these gifts as though into the soul's nature. So, what you do in your interior are gifts in nature, which my word has formed in you. Therefore, you will be attentive not to keep my gifts as useless; I placed them in you so that, with these repeated acts in my Will, we may together impetrate the great gift that my Divine Will come to reign upon earth. More so, good daughter, since the repeated acts are like juice for the plant. If the plant has no juice, it withers and cannot produce either flowers or fruits; the juice is like the vital blood of the plant which, circulating in it, preserves it, makes it grow, and makes it produce the most beautiful and tasty fruits, such as to form the glory and the profit of the farmer. But this juice does not form on its own in the plant; it is the farmer that must be attentive to water it and cultivate it – and not once, but always, giving it, as though in nature, sufficient juice so that the poor plant may find the daily nourishment in order to vegetate and grow, to be able to give its fruits to the one who cultivates it. But if the farmer is slothful, the plant loses the juice and dies.

See, then, what the repeated acts are: they are the blood of the soul, the nourishment, the preservation and the growth of my gifts. And I, as Celestial Farmer, never cease watering you; so, there is no danger that I might be slothful. But you must receive this vital juice; and only then do you receive it, when you repeat the acts in my Will in the depth of your soul. Then you open your mouth, and I, watering you, give you blood in your soul, so as to give you divine warmth, celestial nourishment; and adding for you more words of mine, I preserve you and I increase my gifts. Oh! if the plant had reason and refused to be watered by the farmer, what would be the lot of the poor plant? The lot of losing life! And what sorrow for the poor farmer? Therefore, to repeat the acts is to want life, it is to take the nourishment. To repeat is to love and appreciate, and satisfy the yearnings and make your Celestial Farmer content, who, with so much love, has worked in the field of your soul. And as I hear you repeat your acts, whether together with Me or on your own, you give Me the fruits of my work, and I feel loved back and repaid for the many gifts I have given you; and I dispose Myself to give you greater gifts. Therefore, be attentive, and let your constancy be the winning strength that conquers and dominates your Jesus.”

After this, I felt as if I was about to fall into my usual state of suffering; and given the present impositions, I felt reluctant to accept. My poor nature trembled, and I felt like saying, with my sweet Jesus: ‘Father, if it be possible, let this chalice pass from me; yet, not my will, but Yours be done’. And my beloved Jesus added: “My daughter, I do not want in you forced pains, but voluntary, because forced pains lose the freshness, the beauty and the sweet enchantment of the likeness of the pains of your Jesus, which were all suffered voluntarily by Me. And they are like those withered flowers, like those unripe fruits, which the sight disdain to look at, and the mouth cannot swallow, so great is the insipidness and the hardness of those fruits. You must know that when I elect a soul, I form in her my residence, and in my house I want to be free to do what I want, and to be as I please; nor do I want any restriction on the part of the creature - I want absolute freedom. Otherwise, I would render Myself unhappy and hampered in my way of acting. It would be the greatest misfortune, even for the poorest one, not to enjoy freedom in his little hovel; and I would incur the misfortune of a poor person who, having formed with great love a residence for himself, once he has furnished it and placed it in order, enters it in order to live in it; but, to his greatest sorrow, impositions and restrictions are made upon him. He is told: ‘In this room you cannot sleep; in this you cannot receive; through this other one you cannot pass.’ In sum, he cannot be there as he wants, nor do what he wants. So, poor one, he feels unhappy, because he has lost his freedom, and he is regretful of the sacrifices he made, of having built this residence. So I am: how many works, how many sacrifices, how many graces have I not poured in order to render a creature my residence! And when I take possession of it, more than anything I love and want freedom in my house; and when I find now reluctances, now restrictions, instead of the residence adapting itself to Me, it is I who must adapt Myself to it, therefore I cannot carry out my Life, nor my divine ways; and it is not given to Me to fulfill the purpose for which, with so much love, I chose this residence. Therefore, I want freedom; and if you want to make Me happy, leave Me free to do what I want.”

One who wants to receive must give. Ways that Jesus has. The divine gifts, bearers of peace. How the Divine Will has the fermenting virtue. What good a fulfilled act of Divine Will encloses.

I am always in the dear inheritance of the Divine Will. Wherever I turn my mind, my step, I find It as ruling Queen who, with Her sweet empire, wants to reign over my poor soul; and with the most eloquent, gentle and powerful voice, says to me, swooning with love, such as to be able to convert the whole entire world into fire: “As Queen I await you in each of my works, that you may come to form and extend your little divine kingdom in my own works. Look at Me – I am Queen, and one who is Queen has the power to give to Her children whatever She wants. More so, since my Kingdom is universal, my power is without limits; and, as Queen, I love to not be alone in my Kingdom, but I want the cortege, the company of my children, and to share with them my universal empire. Therefore, let your way be my works which, like many signs, will direct you to making many encounters with your Celestial Queen, who awaits you to give you Her gifts as the sure pledge of Her Kingdom.”

Then, while my mind was wandering in the immense light of the Divine Will, my always lovable Jesus told me: “My daughter, one who wants to receive must give. Giving disposes the creature to receive, and God to give. Many times also your Jesus has this way: when I want something from the creature, I give; and if I want great sacrifices, I give much, so that, in looking at the much I have given, she will feel ashamed and will not have the courage to deny Me the sacrifice I ask of her. To give is to almost bind the person who receives; it is to draw his attention, his love. To give is to appreciate, to give is hope, to give is to make the memory of the giver arise in the heart. And how many times people who did not know each other become friends by means of a gift? Now, in the divine order, the giver is always God, who acts as first in sending His gifts to the creature. But if she does not move to give something to her Creator, be it even her little love, her gratitude, a small sacrifice – because if We gave, it was because We wanted – no more gifts are sent by Us, because by not giving Us anything, she has closed the correspondence and has broken the beautiful friendship which Our gift was to make arise.

Now, my daughter, to give and to receive are first and indispensable acts which, in clear notes, indicate that We love the creature and that she loves Us. But this is not enough – one must know how to receive by converting the good received into one’s nature, by eating it and masticating it thoroughly, in such a way as to convert the gift into the soul’s blood. This is Our purpose in giving Our gifts – wanting to see the gift We gave converted into her nature, because then are Our gifts not in danger, and We dispose Ourselves to give greater gifts; and the creature, having converted it into her nature, places Our gift in safety, becomes the possessor of it, and will feel within herself the good, the fount, and the good received converted into her nature. And since Our gifts are bearers of peace, of happiness, of invincible strength, of celestial air, she will feel within herself the nature of peace, of happiness, of divine strength, which will form in her the air of Heaven. This is the reason why, when I give you the great gift of my word, then I remain silent; it is because I am waiting for you to nourish yourself and masticate my word well, in such a way as to see in you, changed into your nature, that which I have told you. And when I see this, then I feel the irresistible need of love to speak to you again, because one gift of mine calls for another, nor can they remain alone, and I have always something to give – always something to say and to do with one who converts my gifts into her nature.”

After this, I was thinking about the Divine Will – how it seemed difficult to me that Its Kingdom might come. And my beloved Jesus added: “My daughter, just as the yeast has the virtue of fermenting the bread, so is my Will the fermentator of the acts of the creature. As she calls my Divine Will into her acts, they remain fermented by It, and form the bread of the Kingdom of my Will. Now, in order to make much bread, the yeast is not enough, but it takes much flour; it takes someone who must do these acts of uniting flour and yeast; it takes water, bond of union to be able to knead flour and yeast, so that the yeast may communicate the fermenting virtue, and the flour may receive it. Then it takes the fire, to cook this bread, to form it as nourishing and digestible bread. Now, does it not take more time, more acts, to form it, rather than to eat it? The sacrifice is in forming it; as for eating it, it is done quickly, and one feels the taste of the sacrifice. So, my daughter, the yeast of my Divine Fiat, which has only the virtue of fermenting your acts, emptying them of the human will in order to convert them into bread of Divine Will, is not enough, but it takes a continuation of acts, of sacrifices – and for a long time, in such a way that my Will, with Its fermenting virtue, will ferment all these acts so as to form much bread and keep it prepared and in store for the children of Its Kingdom. When everything will be formed, what is left is to dispose the events; and this is easier, and is done quickly, because it is in Our power to move the secondary causes in order to do what We want. Did I not do likewise for Redemption? My long thirty years of my hidden life were like the yeast in which all my acts were fermented, to form and ferment the great good of Redemption. The short life of my public life and my Passion was my fermented bread that my Divine Will formed and fermented in my acts which, like bread, I broke for all and gave to eat, so that all might receive the bread of the redeemed ones, to acquire the necessary strengths to put themselves in safety. Therefore, give yourself no concern; think of doing your duty and letting not one of your acts escape in which you do not put the yeast of my Divine Will, so that your being may remain fermented by It; and I will think of all the rest.”

Then, I continued thinking: ‘But, what does Jesus get from this poor state of mine, and why does He have so much interest that I fall into my usual sufferings, with so much trouble and bother that He causes me to give to others, such that I could call this my martyrdom? Oh! how hard it is having to deal with creatures, feeling the need of them out of pure necessity – this humiliates me so much, that I remain as though annihilated in my own nothingness.’ By while I was thinking of this and other things, my sweet Jesus told me: “My daughter, do you want to know what I get? My Divine Will fulfilled – and this is everything for Me. One fulfilled act of mine, of my Will, encloses all the heavens, the sun, the earth, and even Myself. There is no love which I do not find, goods which it does not possess, glory which it does not give Me; everything remains centralized in one fulfilled act of my Will. And the happy creature that fulfills it can say to Me: ‘I have given You everything, even Yourself – I have nothing more to give You.’ In fact, my Divine Will encloses everything; there is not one thing or good that might escape It; therefore, by fulfilling It in what I want, the creature finds that which my Will is in Itself; and I can say: ‘By giving you the grace of letting you do a fulfilled act of It, I gave you everything.’ Even more, by fulfilling It, my pains rise, my steps, my words, my works are doubled and put themselves in motion to give themselves to creatures, because my Divine Will, operating also in the creature, puts all Our works in motion to make them rise to new life. And you tell me: what do I get? My daughter, think of doing It, and make it so that your life may be a continued act of my Will.”

The Divine Will, confirmer of the acts of the creature. Ardor of divine love in creating man. Touches of the divine qualities.

I am always at the start in my dear inheritance of the Divine Fiat. It seems to me that It whispers to my ear: “As it was in the beginning, I shall always be, world without end. You too, if you remain in my Divine Will, will be always equal to yourself, you will never change action, you will always do my Will. And the variety of your actions you will be able to call ‘effects’ of that first and single act of It, which flows in your acts to make them one, and which has the virtue of producing, like sun, the beautiful rainbow of the variety of colors as the effect of its light, without changing its one act of always giving light.” What happiness is felt in the soul, in being able to say: ‘I do always the Divine Will.’

Now, I felt my little and poor intelligence absorbed in the light of the Divine Will, and I felt within me the one and powerful strength of It, and Its innumerable effects and the variety of them. Forming a circle around me and investing me, they were bearers of joy, of peace, of strength, of goodness, of love, of sanctity, of indescribable beauty. These effects were like many kisses of life that were given to my soul, and I remained their possessor. I was left amazed by this, and my always lovable Jesus told me: “My daughter, all the acts done by the creature in the Divine Will are confirmed by God as divine acts, and this confirmation forms the life of the same acts, and they are sealed with the divine seal as everlasting acts, always new, fresh, and of an enchanting beauty. The acts done by the creature in my Will I could call ‘new creation’ that I make in the creature. As she keeps doing her act in It, my Fiat asserts Itself with Its creative strength, and forms in it Its act, and, by right, It confirms it.

It happens as it happened in Creation; since the creative strength of my Will ran in creating many things, they remained immutable, without ever changing. Have the heavens, the stars, the sun, perhaps changed? Not at all – as they were created, so they are, because wherever my Will places Its creative strength, there remains the perennial life of Its own act; and as It confirms, it can never change. See, then, what it means to do and live in my Divine Will: to be under the empire of a creative and confirming strength, which places all the acts of the creature in safety, rendering them immutable. So, by living in my Will she will remain confirmed in the good that she does, in the sanctity that she wants, in the knowledge that she possesses, in the triumph of the sacrifice.

Our Divinity, of Our own spontaneous Will, is under the empire of a love that runs irresistibly, for it wants to give to the creature; so much so, that in creating man, he was created in Our ardor of love by the touches of Our divine qualities. Our Divine Being, being pure spirit, had neither hands nor feet; Our qualities served Us as hands in order to form man, and pouring over him like a mighty torrent, We molded him and, touching him, We infused in him the effects of Our supreme qualities. These touches have remained in man, and this is why certain beautiful qualities of goodness, of ingenuity, of intelligence and so forth, can be seen in him. They are the virtue of Our divine touches which, continuing to mold man, produce their effects; they are Our pledges of love with which We kneaded him, which, even though he does not remember and perhaps does not even know Us, continue their perennial office of loving him. And since, when one touches an object or a person, the one who touches feels the impression of the person touched, just as Our touches of the divine qualities remained in man, so did the impression of having touched him remain in Our supreme qualities. So, We feel him within Us – how not to love him? Therefore, whatever man might do, We go toward him with new devices of love, and with Our pleasant refrain of loving him always.”

Scenes from Eden. Fall of man. The Queen of Heaven crushing the head of the infernal serpent. How the words of Jesus have the communicative virtue. How He speaks of the doubts and difficulties.

I was continuing my acts in the Divine Volition, and uniting myself to the acts which It did in Creation, in order to give It the homage, the love, the adoration for each thing created for love of creatures. My poor mind brought itself into Eden, in the act of the fall of man, as the infernal serpent, with his cunning and lie, induced Eve to withdraw from the Will of her Creator; and Eve, with her enticing manners, induced Adam to fall into the same sin. Now, while I was thinking about this, my beloved Jesus told me: “My daughter, my Love was not extinguished because of the fall of man, but became more ignited; and even though my Justice justly punished him and condemned him, my Love, kissing my Justice, without delay promised the future Redeemer, and said to the deceitful serpent, with the empire of my Power: ‘You have made use of a woman to snatch man from my Divine Will, and I, by means of another woman, who will have in Her power the Power of my Fiat, will knock down your pride, and with Her immaculate foot, She will crush your head.’ These words burned the infernal serpent more than hell itself, and he stored so much rage in his heart, that he could no longer stay still – he would do nothing but go round and round the earth, to discover She who was to crush his head – not in order to let it be crushed, but so as to be able, with his infernal arts, with his diabolical tricks, to make fall She who was to defeat him, debilitate him and bind him in the dark abysses. So, for four thousand years he kept always wandering; and when he would see women who were more virtuous and good, he would arm his battle, he would tempt them in every way, and only then would he leave them, when he would be assured, by means of some weakness or defects, that they were not the One through whom he was to be defeated. And he would continue his wandering.

Then came, indeed, the Celestial Creature who crushed his head, and the enemy felt such power in Her, that it knocked him down, and he did not have the strength to go near Her. This consumed him with rage, and he employed all his infernal weapons to fight Her. But – no! He would try to go near Her, he would feel himself being worn down, his legs being broken, and would be forced to draw back; and from afar he would spy on Her admirable virtues, Her power and sanctity. And I, in order to confound him and make him doubtful, would let him see the Celestial Sovereign, Her human things, like taking food, crying, sleeping and other things; and he would persuade himself that it was not She, because, being so powerful and holy, She was not to be subject to the natural needs of life. But then he would go back to doubts, and wanted to return to assault – but in vain. My Will is power that debilitates all evils and all the infernal powers; It is light that makes Itself known by all, and wherever It reigns, It makes Its power felt, which not even the very demons can get themselves to deny. Therefore, the Queen of Heaven was, and is, the terror of all hell.

Now the infernal serpent feels over his head my immediate word spoken to him in Eden – my irrevocable condemnation that a woman would crush his head. Therefore he knows that, by his head being crushed, his kingdom on earth will be overturned, he will lose his prestige, and all the evil he did in Eden by means of a woman will be made up for by another woman. And even though the Queen of Heaven debilitated him, crushed his head, and I Myself bound him to the cross, therefore he is no longer free to do what he wants, however, those who by disgrace draw near him, he slaughters. More so, since he sees that the human will is not subdued by the Divine, and Its Kingdom is not formed yet; he fears that another woman might get to finish burning his temples, so that the divine condemnation, over his head, crushed by the foot of the Immaculate Queen, may have its fulfillment. In fact, he knows that, when I speak, my word has the communicative virtue to other creatures. Therefore, as he was assured that She whom he feared was the Most Holy Virgin, and being unable to fight Her any more, he resumed his round. He is all eye and as though on the lookout to see whether another woman might have the task from God to make the Divine Will known in order to make It reign; and having seen you write so much about my Fiat, at the mere doubt that this might be it, he roused the whole of hell against you. This is the cause of everything you have suffered, as he made use of wicked men, having them make up calumnies and things that do not exist. Then, in seeing you cry so much, they were persuaded that you are not one who can cause them the ruin which they so much fear for their diabolical kingdom.

This is what regards the Queen of Heaven, on the part of the infernal serpent; now I want to tell you what regards the part of creatures toward Her.

My daughter, the Celestial Creature was poor, Her natural qualities were apparently common, nothing extraordinary appeared on the outside. She takes a poor artisan as Her spouse, who earns his daily bread with his humble work. Suppose that it had become known before, to the great ones of the world, to the doctors and the priests, that She was the Mother of the Word – that She was the One who was the Mother of the future Messiah; they would have waged a fierce war against Her – no one would have believed Her. They would have said: ‘Is it possible that there have not been, and that there aren’t women in Israel, such that this poor one was to be the Mother of the Eternal Word? There has been a

Judith, an Esther, and many others.’ So, no one would have believed Her, and they would have put countless doubts and difficulties. If they put doubts on my Divine Person, not believing that I was the longed-for Messiah; and many reach the point of still not believing that I descended upon earth, in spite of the fact that I made many miracles, such as to induce the most incredulous to believe Me - ah! when hardness, obstinacy, enter into the hearts, they render themselves incapable of receiving any good; the truths, the very miracles, are for them as though dead and without life - well then, much more so for the Celestial Mama, as nothing miraculous appeared in Her exterior.

Now, my daughter, listen to me; the most serious doubts, the gravest difficulties that they found in your writings are precisely these: that I told you that I was calling you to live in the Kingdom of my Divine Will, giving you the special and unique mission to make It known, so that, as I Myself said in the ‘Our Father’, and the Holy Church says still now, ‘Thy Kingdom come’ – that is, your Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven. It does not say in the ‘Our Father’ that this Kingdom is on earth, but it says: ‘Come’; and I would not have composed a prayer if I were not to obtain its effects. Therefore, in order to reach this, was I not to elect another woman, whom the infernal serpent so much fears; and as he, by means of the first woman, ruined the human kind to Me, I, to confound him, make use of another woman to make up for the ruin he caused, and make the good which he tried to destroy, arise for all?

Here, then, the necessity of the preparations, of the graces, of my visits and communications. This sounded bad to those who have read; therefore doubts and difficulties - that it cannot be possible that among so many other great Saints, no one has lived in the Kingdom of my Will. So, it is She⁹⁴ alone that is preferred to all; and when they have read that I was placing you near the Sovereign Queen, so that, She having lived in the Kingdom of my Divine Fiat, you might imitate Her, wanting to make of you a copy that resembles Her; and I placed you in Her hands, that She might guide you, assist you, protect you, so that you might imitate Her in everything - this seemed so absurd to them; and sinisterly misinterpreting the sense, they spoke as if I had told you that you were as though another Queen. How much nonsense – I did not say that you are like the Celestial Queen, but that I want you similar to Her, just as I have said to many other souls dear to Me that I wanted them similar to Me; but with this they would not become God like Me. And then, since the Celestial Lady is the true Queen of the Kingdom of my Will, it is Her task to help and teach the fortunate creatures who want to enter, to live in It. By this, they show as if I did not have the power to elect whom I want, and when I want. But, after all, time will say everything, and just as they cannot deny that the Virgin of Nazareth is my Mama, so will they not be able to deny that I have elected you for the sole purpose of making my Will known, and that, through you, I will obtain that the ‘Thy Kingdom come’ may have Its fulfillment. It is certain that creatures are an instrument in my hands, and I do not look at who that be, but I look at whether my Divine Will has decided to operate by means of this instrument. And this is enough for Me to fulfill my highest designs; and of the doubts and difficulties of creatures I make use, in due time, to confound them and humiliate them. But I do not stop, and I move forward in the work that I want to do by means of the creature. Therefore, you too – follow Me and do not draw back. Besides, it shows from their way of thinking that they have calculated only your person, but have not calculated what my Divine Will can do, and what It knows how to do, and when It decides to operate in one creature in order to fulfill Its greatest designs in the midst of the human generations, It lets no one dictate to It the law – neither who it must be, nor the time, nor the way, nor the place – but It acts in an absolute way. Nor does it pay heed to certain short minds, which are unable to elevate themselves in the divine and supernatural order, or to bow their forehead to the incomprehensible works of their Creator; and while they want to reason with their own human reason, they lose the divine reason, and remain confounded and incredulous.’

⁹⁴ the Sovereign Queen

May 27, 1931

The life of good does not die, and is defense of all creatures. A prolonged good gives assurance to God and the soul.

My poor mind was swimming in the immense sea of the Eternal Fiat; and I was flowing in it like a little rivulet, and in my littleness I wanted to embrace Its immensity so as to fill myself completely with a Will so holy, to be able to have the contentment of being able to say: ‘My little being is nothing other than one single act of Divine Will. My little rivulet is full, inside and out, of that Will which fills Heaven and earth. Oh! Holy Volition, You be the Life, the Actor and the Spectator of all my acts, so that, all of them rising again in You, they may be the call of all the acts of creatures, to make them rise again in your Fiat, so that Its Kingdom may extend in all creatures.’ But while I was doing this, the thought told me: ‘What is the good that I do by calling the acts of creatures to rise again in the Divine Will?’ And my lovable Jesus told me: “My daughter, good is not subject to dying, and as the life of good rises, it places itself as defense of all creatures; and if the creatures who are disposed take that good, they not only remain defended, but take the life of that good; and the good rises and forms as many other lives for as many creatures who take it. And for those who are not disposed, it remains always as their defense, waiting for them to dispose themselves. The acts done in my Will acquire the seed of life, and just as the light, though one, has the virtue of giving light to any eye that wants the good of the light in order to make it its own, the same for the littlest acts done in my Divine Will: since It is immense and envelops all, the littlest act becomes light and defense of all; not only this, but it requites its Creator of the love, glory and adoration which, by right, He expects and demands from creatures. The acts done in my Will have always something prodigious, and, of their own, they say: ‘We are the defense of all; we remain between Heaven and earth to defend the creatures, and with our light, we are light of every mind; we are the defenders of our Creator by repairing Him with our perennial acts for the offenses that rise from the earth.’

And then, good is always good. Do you think that everything I did while being on earth has all been taken by creatures? Not at all – how much of it is still left. But, with this, one cannot say that it is not good. Centuries and centuries will pass, and the time will come in which all the good I did will have life in the midst of creatures; what is not taken today, other creatures may take tomorrow, in other epochs. Therefore, the true life of good does tire of waiting; and with an air of triumph they say: ‘We are not subject to dying, therefore, with certainty, the time will come in which we will give our fruits, which will make many other lives that resemble us rise again.’ Do you think that, because you do not see any effect of all your acts in Our Divine Fiat, there will be nothing good? Not at all. Today it seems so, but wait for the times, and they will tell the great good that will come. Therefore, continue and do not draw back. In fact, you must know that the prolixity of good is alone the most certain proof, which assures God and the soul of the state she is in. A prolonged state of patience in the sufferings and painful encounters of life, a repeated prayer without ever tiring of repeating it, a faithfulness, constancy and sameness of manners in all circumstances, form a sufficient ground, watered by the blood of one’s own heart, in which God feels called by all the acts of the creature as though by many assurances that He can fulfill His greatest designs; and the creature herself feels in the prolixity of her acts the dominion of herself and the assurance that she will not waver. The good of one day says nothing; a good that is today-yes and tomorrow-no says weakness and volubility – all fruits of the human will. An inconstant good says that that good, that virtue, is not the creature’s own property, and therefore, not being in her power, good changes into evil, and the virtue into vice. See, then, how in order for the soul to be sure that she possesses a good, a virtue, she must feel within herself the life of that virtue, and with iron constancy of years and years, and for her whole life, she must exercise herself in that good. And God feels assured to place His own and operate great things in the constancy of the creature.

This I did with the Queen of Heaven; I wanted the prolixity of fifteen years of life, pure, holy and all of Divine Will, in order to descend from Heaven to earth into Her virginal womb. I could have done it before, but I did not want to; first I wanted Her acts of assurance, and the prolixity of Her holy life, almost to give Her the right to be my Mama, and for my infinite wisdom to have reason for having operated unheard-of prodigies in Her. And is this perhaps not the cause – the long prolixity of the long sufferings, for I wanted to be sure about you, and not with words, but with facts - was it perhaps not the cause of my many visits and of the many truths I have manifested to you in the prolixity of your sacrificed life? I can say that I made Myself seen and I spoke to you from the center of the stake of your sacrifice. And when I hear you say: ‘Is it possible, my Jesus, that my exile be so long? How can You not have pity on me?’ – do you know what I say: ‘Ah! my daughter does not know well the secret that a prolonged sacrifice contains.’ And the longer it is, the greater are Our designs to be fulfilled. Therefore, trust Me, and let Me do.”

The happiness of Jesus is to find His creature in the Divine Will. God plunges Himself into the creature, and the creature into God. The tiny little house of Nazareth.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues, and my poor mind pauses now at one point, now at another, as though wanting to take rest in each effect of the Divine Will. In fact, though Its act is one, Its effects are innumerable, so much so, that I never arrive at finding them all – much less at comprehending them; and therefore, seeing that it is not given to me to embrace them all, being too little, I pause in one of Its effects, to enjoy it and rest. And my sweet Jesus, who takes so much pleasure in finding me in His adorable Will, pausing in order to breathe It as life, told me: “My daughter, how sweet it is for Me to find you in my Divine Will – and not like those creatures who are in It by force, by necessity, and because they cannot do without It; and while they are in It, they do not know It, nor do they love It or appreciate It. But in finding you, I find you voluntarily; you know It and love It, and you reach the point of finding your sweet rest. I feel so drawn toward you; more so, since the very power of my Will imposes itself on your Jesus, to reveal Myself; and I am unable to deny anything to her, because I could say that the only happiness that comes to Me from the earth is to find the creature in my Divine Will; and when I find her, I want to repay her for the happiness that she gives Me – first, by rendering her happy; and then, by preparing her and disposing her to do an act in my Will. I prepare the space for it, because the greatness, the sanctity, the power that an act done in It contains, is so great, that the creature could not contain it if I did not give her the capacity. Therefore, one who lives in my Will is inseparable from Me, because while she has done one act, I must prepare her for the next act; more so, since I never leave the creature at one point, but I make her always grow, until I am able to say: ‘I have no more to give her; I am content for I have given her everything.’ In fact, you must know that every time the creature does an act in my Divine Will, she plunges herself into It, and God plunges Himself into the creature. So, in plunging into each other, God communicates His new act never interrupted, and the human will remains at the mercy of the Divine Will and feels new love, new power, new freshness, with all the divine refreshments, in such a way that in each act she feels herself being reborn again in the Divine Life. Without losing what she has received in the other acts, she acquires and incorporates into herself the new life that has been communicated to her; so much so, that she feels herself growing, being nourished, with a new growth and with new foods. So, one who lives in Our Will acquires ever new knowledges of her Creator, and the new knowledge brings her the current of the continuous new act that God possesses. Don’t you see the heavens, the stars, the sun? Do you perhaps see any change in them? Or, after so many centuries, are they not always fresh, beautiful, new, as they were created? And why? Because they are under the empire of the creative strength of Our Fiat, which created them and remained in them as perennial life. Therefore, the permanence of my Will in the creature produces, with its dominating empire, new life of patience, of prayer, of peace, of sacrifice and of infinite joys. That which my Will is, so It wants to render one who lives in It.”

Then, I continued to think about the Divine Volition; and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, when my Divine Will emits an act, It never draws it back; on the contrary, It makes Itself perennial life of Its act. The very Creation says this, by doing continuously those acts which my Will placed in It in creating It. Created things can be called the repeaters of the acts of my Divine Will. The heavens are always stretched out, they never withdraw from any point; and by remaining always stretched out, they always do repeated acts of Divine Will. The sun always gives light, and is all busy performing the innumerable acts of Divine Will that were entrusted to it in its light; and as it gives color and fragrance to each flower, multiple sweetness and taste to the fruits, development to the plants, light and heat to each creature, and many other acts that it does, so many acts of Divine Will does it keep performing. It seems to do its course with all ruling majesty in performing so many acts entrusted to it – true symbol of the majestic and ruling way of my Will. The sea, as it murmurs, the water, as it gives itself to creatures, the earth, as it becomes green and produces plants and flowers – so many multiple acts of my Will do they perform. My Will is the motor of everything and keeps all Creation in act of doing Its Will; and this is why they are all happy, they never lose their place of honor, nor are they subject to dying – because my Will operating in created things gives them perennial life. Only the creature, the one who was to make the greatest display in doing a continued act of my Will, is the only one that goes out of the motor of It, and reaches the point of placing herself against a Will so holy. What sorrow! And what an account will she not have to give Me?”

My sweet Jesus remained silent, and, withdrawing, He left me in the light of His Will; and – oh! how many things I comprehended. But who can say them all? More so, since in It one speaks with celestial terms, and in finding myself inside myself I must adapt the celestial terms to the human; and fearing I might make a mess, I content myself with moving forward, hoping that, if Jesus wants it, He will adapt Himself to speaking with the terms of the low world.

After this, I continued my acts in the Divine Fiat, and my poor mind paused in the little house of Nazareth, where the Queen of Heaven, the Celestial King Jesus, and Saint Joseph, were in possession of and lived in the Kingdom of the Divine Will. So, this Kingdom is not foreign to the earth; the house of Nazareth, the little family that lived in It, belonged to this Kingdom and kept It in full force. But while I was thinking about this, my great King Jesus told me: “My daughter, indeed the Kingdom of my Divine Will has existed upon earth, and therefore there is the sure hope that It will return again to Its full force. Our house of Nazareth was Its true Kingdom; however, We were without peoples. Now, you must know that each creature is a Kingdom; therefore, one who lets the Divine Will reign within herself can be called a little Kingdom of the Supreme Fiat. So, she is a tiny little house of Nazareth that We have upon earth; and, though little, since Our Will is in her, reigning, Heaven is not closed for her; she observes the same laws of the Celestial Fatherland, she loves with the same love, feeds herself with the foods from up there, and is incorporated into the Kingdom of Our interminable regions. Now, in order to form the great Kingdom of Our Will upon earth, first We will make the many tiny little houses of Nazareth – that is, the souls who will want to know It in order to let It reign within themselves. I Myself, and the Sovereign Queen, will be at the head of these tiny little houses, because, We having been the first to possess this Kingdom on earth, it is Our right, which We will not surrender to anyone, to be the directors of them. Then, with these tiny little houses, repeaters of Our house of Nazareth, We will form many little states of Ours, many provinces, which, after they have been formed well, and ordered like many little Kingdoms of Our Will, will fuse together and will form one single Kingdom and one great people. Therefore, in order to have Our greatest works, Our way of acting is to begin, first alone, one on one with one single creature; when We have formed this one, We make her a channel in order to enclose in Our work two or three more creatures; then We expand, forming a small group, and then We expand it so much as to take the whole entire world. Our works begin in the isolation of God and the soul, and end by continuing their life in the midst of entire peoples. And when there is the beginning of a work of Ours, it is the sure sign that it will not die at birth; at the most, it may live hidden for some time, but then it will go out and will have its perennial life. Therefore, always forward do I want you in my Divine Will.”

How it is necessary to make friends in the good times. Sorrow of Jesus because of the abandonment of the Apostles. The human will, prison of the creature.

I am always in the sea of the Supreme Volition. Oh! how many beautiful things are found in It; there are all the acts of Jesus as though in act; there are those of the Sovereign Lady; there are those of our Celestial Father, which He has done and which He will do. It is a sea, not divided, but one, interminable – It is everything. In this sea there are no dangers, nor fears of falling, because the happy creature that enters into It lays down her guises and takes on the divine guises. So, while I was in this sea, my sweet Jesus made present to me when, in His Passion, the Apostles dispersed themselves, they ran away from Him, leaving Him alone and abandoned in the midst of the enemies. And my Highest Good, Jesus, told me: “My daughter, the greatest sorrow that I had in my Passion, the nail that most pierced my Heart, was the abandonment and the dispersion of my Apostles. I had not a friendly eye in which I could reflect my gaze. The abandonment, the offenses, the indifference of friends, surpass – oh! how much – all the sorrows, and even the death that enemies can give. I knew that the Apostles were to give Me this nail, and would cravenly run away from Me; but I paid no attention to this, because, my daughter, one who wants to do a work must not pay attention to his own pains – on the contrary, he must make friends in the good times, when everything smiles around him, and he sows triumphs and prodigies at each step; not only this, but he communicates the miraculous power to those who become his friends and disciples. Then everyone boasts of being a friend of one who is surrounded with glory and honor; everyone hopes, and as many friends and disciples as one wants, so many one has, because the glory, the triumphs, the good times, are powerful magnets that draw the creatures to follow the triumpher. Who wants to follow and be a friend or disciple of a poor one who is slandered, humiliated and despised? No one; on the contrary, they feel fear and horror to get close, and reach the point of denying the one whom they were friends with before, as Saint Peter did with Me. Therefore, it is useless to hope for friends when the poor creature finds herself under the nightmare of humiliations, scorns and calumnies. So, one must make friends when Heaven smiles at us and fortune would want to put us on a throne, if we want that the good, the works that are wanted, may have life and continuation in other creatures. By my making friends when I was sowing miracles and triumphs - such that they reached the point of believing that I was to be their King on earth, and therefore, having been my disciples, they were to occupy the first places before Me - even though they abandoned Me in my Passion, when my Resurrection sounded my full triumph, the Apostles changed their mind, they reunited among themselves and, as triumphers, they followed my doctrine, my Life, and formed the nascent Church. Had I paid attention to the fact that they would run away from Me, not making them my disciples in the time of my triumphs, I would not have had anyone who would speak of Me after my death, who would make Me known. Therefore, the good times, the glory, are necessary, and it is also necessary to receive piercing nails and to have patience in suffering them, in order to have the materials in my greatest works, so that they may have life in the midst of creatures.

Now, has this not been a wholeness, a resemblance, of my Life, in your painful state of humiliation, of calumnies and scorns that you have gone through? I felt in you the nail of the abandonment and dispersion of my Apostles being repeated to Me, in seeing those who had been so keen to assist you disperse themselves from you, and with the will of abandoning you. And in seeing you abandoned, I saw you all alone in my arms, with the nail of the abandonment of those who were to sustain you; and in my sorrow I said: ‘Bad world, how well you know how to repeat the scenes of my Passion in my children.’ And I offered your bitterness for the triumph of my Will and for the help of those who should make It known. Therefore, courage in the painful circumstances of life. However, know that your Jesus will never abandon you - I don’t know how to do these things; my Love is not voluble by nature, but firm and constant, and what I say with my mouth comes out from the life of my Heart. Creatures, instead – they say one thing and feel another in their hearts; they mix many human ends also in making friends, and this is why they change according to the circumstances. So, the dispersion of those who seemed to want to lay down their lives in the good times, and who cravenly run away in the time of humiliations and scorns – they are all effects of the human will. The human will is the true prison of the creature, and is clever in the art of being able to form many small rooms - but all without windows, because it is not skilled at forming openings in order to receive the good of light. Therefore, passions, weaknesses, fear, excessive worries, inconstancy, are as many dark rooms of its prison, and she remains now hampered in one, now in another; and fear makes her fear and move away from the one is laying down his life for love of her. On the other hand, one in whom my Will reigns lives in my royal palace, in which there is so much light, that the pains, the humiliations, the calumnies, are nothing other than stairs of triumphs and of glory, and completion of great and divine works. So, instead of running away from the poor martyr who has been cast into dust by the human perversity, she draws closer to him, waiting with patience for the hour of the new triumph. Oh! if my Will had reigned fully in the Apostles, with certainty they would not have run away in an hour in which I felt the need of their presence, of their faithfulness in my so many pains. In the midst of enemies who wanted to devour Me, I wanted my faithful ones close to Me, because there is no greater comfort than having a friend close in time of bitternesses. I would have seen in my dear Apostles, close to Me, the fruits of my pains, and – oh! how many sweet memories would have arisen in my Heart, which would have been balm for Me in my intense bitternesses. My Divine Will, with Its light, would have prevented their step from running away, and therefore they would have drawn closer around Me. But since they lived in the dark prison of the human will, their mind was obscured, the heart became cold, fear invaded them – in one moment they forgot about all the good they had received from Me. And not only did they run away from Me, but they dispersed themselves from one another – all effects of the human will, which does not know how to maintain union, and knows only how to disperse in one day the good that one has done in many years, with many sacrifices. Therefore, may your only fear be that of not doing my Will.”

Pleasure of God when one remembers what He did in Creation. The repeated acts form the nourishment of the soul. How one begins on earth and completes in Heaven.

I feel the powerful force of the Divine Fiat that calls me into It to follow Its acts. So, my little intelligence paused in Eden, in the act of the creation of man. What a solemn act! After having created all things as preparation, to celebrate the one for whom He had created all Creation as royal palace in which man was to live with all sumptuousness and comfort, such that he was to lack nothing.... It is enough to say that it was a royal palace formed by our Celestial Father, by the Power of His Divine Fiat. So, while I was thinking of this, my sweet Jesus told me: “Blessed daughter, the sweetest memory, which I am most immensely pleased with, is when the creature remembers my Love in Creation – in a special way, that of man. Our Love poured Its own self out more than a mother when she gives birth to her dear child. Our Love ran - ran to enclose him within Itself, so that everywhere, inside and outside of himself, he might find the prop of Our Love that says to him: ‘I love you, I love you.’ The sweet sound of Our Love whispers to his ear, palpitates in his heart, resounds strong and ardent kisses on his lips, tight embraces to carry him in Our paternal arms, as triumph of Our Love which, at any cost, wants to love the creature. So, there is nothing sweeter, dearer, more pleasing, than reminding Us of with how much love We created man and all things. Our pleasure is so great, that to the fortunate creature who comes before Our Adorable Majesty to remind Us of this Love of Ours, so great, We redouble Our loving bonds with her, We give her new graces, new light, and We call her the repeater of Our feast, because in Creation everything was feast for Us and for all. And the creature, by reminding Us of what We did in Creation, puts in feast Our Love, Our Power, Our creative Wisdom which, with such great inimitable mastery, had created the whole universe; ...and then the mastery in creating man, that surpasses everything. So, all Our divine qualities make feast, and looking at the creature, by whose memory and whose little requital of love they were put in feast, they compete among themselves, and one redoubles for her the love, one the goodness, one the sanctity; in sum, each of Our divine qualities wants to give of its own, to repeat with her what We did in Creation. Therefore, repeat often the sweet memory of Our insuperable Love that We had in Creation; it was a creature of Ours, an image of Ours, a child of Ours that We issued to the light, and this is why We made such great display of love, and in hearing it being reminded to Us, We feel like loving him more. So, the whole Creation is nothing other than a display of Our loving Will toward the creature; and in Its loving display, It keeps repeating: ‘Fiat, Fiat’, to pearl all Creation with Its display of love. More so, since each act, word, thought, done in Our Divine Will, form the nourishment of the soul. Nourishment preserves life, it makes it grow, and maintains for it the necessary strength to be able to form sufficient nourishments so as not to remain on an empty stomach. So, the continued acts are nothing other than foods that are prepared from one day to the next, so as to always have something with which to nourish oneself. If no acts are done, she will have no food; so, the poor creature will have nothing with which to satisfy her hunger, therefore the life of the good, holy and divine acts will die in her. If then the acts are not continued, but every now and then, she will have scarce nourishments; and when food is not sufficient, the life of good grows as weak, and weakness makes one lose the taste and the appetite for nourishing oneself. On the other hand, when the acts are continued, each act has its exercise – one makes itself food, one water, one fire in order to cook them, one condiment to make itself be enjoyed, in such a way as to whet the appetite. In sum, the repeated acts are nothing other than divine cousine, forming the celestial dining for the creature. And, oh! how beautiful it is to see the creature who, with the continuation of her acts in Our Fiat, prepares for herself divine nourishments, and feeds herself with the foods of her Celestial Fatherland. In fact, you must know that one holy thought calls for another, one word, one good act, calls for another; and one serves the other in order to be nourished - and nourishment forms life.”

Then, I continued to think of the Divine Will, and of the great good that one receives by living all abandoned in Its arms. And my sweet Jesus added: “Good daughter, the great good of living of a Divine Volition is amazing and almost incomprehensible for the human creature. You must know that everything good, holy, that is done in my Divine Will is nothing other than seeds that germinate in the field of the soul, placing as though many seeds of divine light, which set a beginning that will have no end. In fact, everything that is done in my Divine Will is sown, germinates, grows in an admirable way on earth, while one is living, but the completion will be formed in Heaven; the final development, the variety of the beauties, the shades, the most beautiful and striking tints, will be given to her in the Celestial Fatherland. So, each act done on earth will be like taking more room in Heaven, one additional right, and an advanced possession of the celestial dwelling. For each additional act that she has done, the creature will bring with herself new beatitudes, new joys, communicated to her by my Will. My Divine Fiat never says ‘enough’ to the creature; It wants to make her grow in sanctity, in grace, in beauty, unto her last breath of life down here, and therefore It reserves for Itself to give the final brush stroke and completion, as Its full triumph, in the celestial regions. Therefore, in my Will there are no stops; and the circumstances of life – now of pains, now of humiliations, and now of glory – form the runs, in order to always run in It, to give It free field to let It sow new divine seeds in the creature, which the Divine Fiat will take charge of cultivating and making grow in an admirable way, and of giving them completion in the celestial glory. Therefore, in Heaven nothing begins, but everything begins on earth – and Heaven completes.”

Jesus prays. The necessity to possess a good in order to be able to communicate it to others. The little lights form an intertwining with the great light of the Divine Will.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues, though under the nightmare of the privations of my sweet Jesus. Poor heart of mine, how tortured it is – fatigued, for it cannot find the One who makes it breathe His celestial air, and palpitate the life of His very heartbeat. My Jesus, my Life, did You Yourself not use to tell me that You wanted me to live and breathe your divine air, and to form my life in your own heartbeat, so that mine might be dissolved in yours, and live of your heartbeat, and therefore of your love, of your pains and of the whole of Yourself?

But while my poor heart poured itself out because of the pain of the privation of my beloved Jesus, I felt Him move sensibly in my interior, and, with clear voice, His words resounded to my hearing, saying with unspeakable tenderness: “Holy Father, I pray You for my children and for all those whom You have given Me, and whom I recognize as mine. In these arms of mine do I clasp them to Myself, that they may remain defended and safe from the storm that they are arming against my Church.” Then He added: “My daughter, how many voltes-face there will be, how many masks will unmask themselves. I could no longer bear their hypocrisy, my Justice was filled with so many pretenses, and therefore they could no longer keep the mask that covered them. Therefore, pray together with Me, that those who must serve my glory may remain safe, and those who want to strike my Church, confounded.”

Then He became silent, and my poor mind saw many gloomy and tragic things; and while I was praying, my Highest Good, Jesus, repeated: “My daughter, in order to communicate a good to others it is necessary to possess the fullness of the same good. In fact, by possessing it, one knows its effects, the substance, the practice of how that good is acquired, therefore he will have the virtue of being able to infuse it in others, of knowing how to tell its beauties, the prerogatives, the fruits which that good produces. But if the soul has acquired just a sip of a good, of a virtue, and wants to start teaching it to others, she will not know in depth the fullness of that virtue, therefore she will not be able to re-tell its great good, nor to give the practice of how to acquire it. So, she will make the impression of a child who, having learned just the vowels, wants to act as a teacher to others. Poor child, he will act as a teacher for mockery, because he will not be able to go forward into other teachings. This is why the true Saints have first filled themselves with love, with divine knowledges, with invincible patience, and other things; and when they have filled themselves so much, to the point of no longer being able to contain it within themselves, the outpouring of the good which they possessed that came out, they communicated to the peoples; and their word was fire, was light, and they taught, not in a superficial way, but in a practical and substantial way, the good which they possessed. This is the reason why many want to act as teachers, and they do no good – because sufficient food is lacking in them. How can they nourish others?”

Then, after this, I abandoned all of myself in the Supreme Fiat, and my poor mind wandered within It, and I remained as though enraptured in seeing, before me, the Divine Being and an interminable light, disposed as many innumerable rays coming out from the center of It. These rays were very often intertwined with little lights, which were bound to the interminable rays of the Adorable Majesty, and which seemed to be a birth from the same light, and nourished themselves with light, to be formed as life of light and grow as God wanted them. What enchantment is the Divine Height – Its Presence enraptures; the eye is lost in Its immensity, and Its beauty, the multiplicity of Its infinite joys, is so great, that they seem to fall down, more than pouring rain, from Its Divine Being. So, one feels oneself being struck dumb, and therefore one can say little or nothing. Then, while I was all immersed in what was present to my mind, my beloved Jesus told me: “Daughter of my Divine Volition, look – this immense light is nothing other than the emanation of Our Will from the center of Our Divine Being. As We pronounced the Fiat, It extended to form each created thing with Its creative strength; and so that nothing might go out from inside Its light, It kept within Itself what It issued from Our creative hands. So, those intertwining with the rays of Our light that you see, are nothing other than all created things: some of them are as though in custody within Our light, so that they may not suffer any change; others, and these are the creatures who live in Our Will, are not only in custody, but in act of receiving continuously from God, in order to grow, to nourish themselves with light, and form with their little lights an intertwining with the very Divine Volition, so as to let It operate in the little light. So, these little lights give the field to Our Divine Fiat to render It continuously operating in them. It seems that they give Us something to do, and they let Us continue the work which, with so much love, We started in Creation. And when the creature gives Us the occasion to continue Our work, giving Us freedom to operate within her little light, We are so pleased with her, that We render the little light operating together with Our work, and We do not feel isolated on the part of creatures, but We enjoy the beauty of her company, and she enjoys Our own. Therefore, by living of Divine Will you never leave Us alone, and you will have the great good of enjoying Our company.”

How the Creation manifests the Divine Paternity, and how God feels Himself Father of those who recognize Him in His works.

I was doing my round in the Creation, to follow the acts done in It by the Divine Will. It seemed to me that in each created thing the Adorable Will was present as noble Queen, as center of life, to make in each thing Its sweet encounter with the creatures; but only those who recognized It in each created thing received this encounter. In this happy encounter the correspondences open on both sides; they celebrate together, and the Divine Will gives and the creature receives. But while my mind wandered by going around in the created things, my Highest Good, Jesus, told me: “My daughter, all Creation manifests the Divine Paternity, the Power, the Love, the harmony of the One who created It. But do you know of whom do We feel Ourselves Father? Of one who remembers and recognizes all Creation as property of her Creator, who, wanting to manifest His Paternity toward the creatures, created so many beautiful things for love of them. So, one who recognizes them in order to requite Him by loving Him and thanking Him, draws closer around her Celestial Father as a daughter who recognizes His goods, and that, if He created them, it means that He wants His daughter to possess His possessions within the possessions of her Father. If you knew what Our joy and happiness is in feeling Ourselves Father, and in seeing Our children close around Us by means of Our created things. So, the creature, by remembering and recognizing what God has done for her, loves Us as her Father, as We love her as Our daughter; We feel that Our Paternity is not a sterile Paternity, but fecund. In the same way, with one who remembers and recognizes what I did and suffered in my Life and Passion, I feel Myself Redeemer, and I give her to possess the goods of Redemption. So, my pains, my works, my steps, line up around the happy creature in order to help her, sanctify her, and make her feel, within herself, the effects of all my Life. And with one who recognizes what Our Love has done and can do in the order of grace, I feel Myself passionate Lover, and I give her the possession of my Love, in such a way that she will feel such love for Me as to be unable to live without loving Me. And since true love is in always doing my Will, I make of her a prodigy of my Love and of my Will.

What sorrow would it not be for a father to have children and not to see them around Himself so as to love one another and enjoy the fruit of his inmost being? And if these children did not possess the goods of their father, would it not be an even greater sorrow? Such is Our Divinity; We extended Our Paternity in an infinite way in all Creation; as Father, We are all eyes over Our children, that they may lack nothing; Our arms feel the extreme need of love to clasp man to Our bosom so as to give him love and receive love. And when We see the creature running to Us, wanting Our embraces - oh! how happy We feel that Our Paternity is recognized and can carry out the office of Father for Our children. Our generation is almost innumerable, yet, a few children surround Us; all others are far from Us – far with the heart, with the will; far from Our likeness. And in Our sorrow, in seeing the few children around Us, We say: ‘And the other children – where are they? How can they not feel the need to have a Celestial Father, to receive Our paternal caresses, to possess Our goods?’

Therefore, be attentive; recognize Our goods, Our works, and you will feel Our Paternity in the heavens, studded with stars which, in their meek twinkling, call you daughter and attest to you the love of your Father. Our Paternity extends in the sun which, with its vibrant light, calls you daughter and says to you: ‘Recognize in my light the great gift of your Father, who loves you so much, that He wants you to be the possessor of this light.’ Our Paternity extends everywhere: in the water you drink, in the food you take, in the varieties of the beauties of all nature. They have a common voice, all calling you daughter of the great Celestial Father, and, as a daughter of His, they want to be possessed by you. Now, what would be Our contentment if, in all things created by Us, at Our tender voice calling you daughter, We heard your voice calling Us Father, and saying to Us: ‘This is a gift of my Father. Oh! how He loves me – and I want to love Him very, very much’.”

How the greatest grace that God gave to man in Creation was for him to be able to do his acts in the Divine Will. How this Kingdom exists, and lived humanities have possessed It.

I was thinking about the Holy Divine Volition: ‘How can Its Kingdom ever come upon earth? Given the tempestuous times that threaten storms, and the sad conditions of the human generations, it seems impossible. And it seems to me that the indifference and lack of disposition of those who at least are said to be good, increase the impossibility, for they have no interest in making known a Will so holy, and His Will that wants to give the great grace of wanting to reign in the midst of creatures. How can a good ever have life if it is not known?’ But while I was thinking of this, my lovable Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My daughter, that which is impossible in the human views – everything, is possible to God. You must know that the greatest grace that We gave to man in his creation was that he could enter into Our Divine Will, to be able to emit his human acts; and since the human will was small and the Divine great, It therefore had the virtue of absorbing the small into the great, and of changing the human into Divine Will. So, at the beginning of his creation, Adam entered into the order of Our Divine Will, and in It he did many of his acts; and while by withdrawing from Our Divine Will he went out from inside of It, his human acts, operated in Our Will, remained as pledge and right for man, and as beginning and foundation of a Divine Kingdom which he acquired. In the Divine Will, whatever is done in It is indelible; God Himself cannot delete a single act done by the creature in the Supreme Fiat. Now, since Adam was the first man to be created, it came as a consequence that, he being as though the root, the trunk of all the human generations, they would inherit, almost like branches, what the root and the trunk of the tree of man possessed. And just as all creatures, as though by nature, inherit the seed of original sin, so do they inherit his first acts done in Our Will, which constitute the beginning and the right of the Kingdom of Our Divine Will for creatures.

To confirm this, came the humanity of the Immaculate Virgin, to operate and to follow the acts of Adam, in order to fulfill, whole and entire, the Kingdom of the Divine Will, to be the first heiress of a Kingdom so holy, and to give to Her dear children the rights for them to possess It. And to complete all this, came my Humanity which, by nature, possessed the Divine Will that Adam and the Sovereign Queen possessed by grace, in order to confirm with the seal of Its acts this Kingdom of the Divine Will. So, this Kingdom exists in reality, because living humanities have formed their acts in It, as the necessary materials in order to form this Kingdom, to give to other humanities the right to possess It. And in order to further confirm It, I taught the ‘Our Father’, so that, with prayer, they might dispose themselves and acquire the rights to receive It, and God might feel as though the duty to give It. By teaching the ‘Our Father’, I Myself placed in their hands the right to receive It, and I committed Myself to giving a Kingdom so holy; and every time the creature recites the ‘Our Father’, she acquires a sort of right to enter into this Kingdom – first, because it is the prayer taught by Me, which contains the value of my prayer; second, because the love of Our Divinity toward the creatures is so great, that We pay attention to everything, We notice everything, even the littlest acts, the holy desires, the little prayers, to requite them with great graces. We can say that they are pretexts, occasions that We keep looking for, to say to her: ‘You have done this, and We give you this. You have done the small, and We give you the great.’ Therefore, the Kingdom exists, and if I have spoken to you so much about my Divine Will, those have been nothing other than the preparations of many centuries of my Church – the prayers, the sacrifices and the continuous recitation of the ‘Our Father’ – that have inclined Our goodness to choose a creature in order to manifest to her the many knowledges of Our Will, Its great prodigies. In this way I bound my Will to the creatures, giving them new pledges of Its Kingdom. And as you listened and tried to model yourself after my teachings that I gave you, so I formed new bonds, to bind the creatures in my Will.

You must know that I am the God of all, and when I do a good, I never do it isolated – I do it for all, unless someone who does not want to take, does not take. And when a creature corresponds to Me, I look at her, not as one alone, but as belonging to the whole human family, and therefore the good of one is communicated to the others. Now, if the Kingdom exists - lived humanities have possessed It and lived life in It, my Will wants to reign in the midst of creatures, my very knowledges say it in clear notes – how, then, can you think that it is impossible for this Kingdom to come? To Me everything is possible; I will make use of the very storms and of new events in order to prepare those who must occupy themselves with making my Will known. The storms serve to purify the bad air, and also to get rid of noxious things. Therefore, I will dispose everything; I know how to do everything, I have the times at my disposal. So, let your Jesus do it, and you will see how my Will will be known and fulfilled.”

How the Divine Will has the virtue of converting the good that the creature does into her nature. The return of the works to her Creator. How the Creation has a determined act, while the creature a growing act.

I was doing my round in the Divine Will to follow Its acts, and I arrived at the point in which the Celestial Baby was in Egypt, and the Celestial Mama, rocking Him, tried to make Him fall asleep, and at the same time She was occupied, with Her maternal hands, in making a little garment for the Divine Infant. And I, uniting myself with His Mama, made my ‘I love You’ to Jesus flow between Her fingers and in the thread that was flowing, so as to form and weave the little garment together with my ‘I love You’; and upon the foot of the Queen that was swinging the cradle, I put my own, so that I too might rock Jesus and do for Him what His Mama was doing. And while I was doing this, the Celestial Baby, between vigil and sleep, was saying: ‘My two mamas...’. So, remembering this, which is written in the 24th volume⁹⁵, I thought to myself: ‘But, is my dear Jesus still repeating the sweet words: “My two mamas”? After such a terrible storm which, like devastating hail, struck my poor soul, who knows how many defects I have committed; Jesus must no longer feel that tender love of saying, so sweetly: “My two mamas”.’ But while I was thinking of this, my lovable Jesus told me: “My daughter, if you have not ceased repeating, uniting yourself with our Celestial Mama, rocking Me, placing your ‘I love You’ for Me in what She was doing, could I cease saying: ‘My two mamas’? Then I would be below you in loving you, while I never let Myself be surpassed by the love of the creature. Not only this, but you must know that everything that the creature does in my Will has the virtue of converting that good which she does into her nature; and true good in nature is never lost, nor are there strains in repeating it as many times as one wants. Do you perhaps strain yourself in order to breathe, to palpitate? Because it is in your nature; even more, if you do not want to do it, you must emit a strain - but a strain that, perhaps, if you can get yourself to do it, will cost you your life. And this is the greatest prodigy of my Will: to convert the prayer, the love, the sanctity, Its knowledges, into one’s nature. And when I see that the creature has given herself prey to my Will, but so much, that my Will was able to change the divine goods into her nature, my words resound in the soul with my creative power and give the maternity as her nature. And how can I not repeat: ‘My two mamas’? When I speak, what I say is in reality. Is it perhaps not true that my Mama is Mother to Me according to the order of nature, and is also Mother to Me in the divine order, by virtue of the Divine Will that She possessed? Had She not possessed my Will, She could not have been Mother to Me, either in the human order, or in the divine order. Oh! how many things It knows how to do in one who lets herself be dominated by It. It knows how to make the divine order descend into the human, and It converts the divine order into one's nature, and It makes of her such portents as to astonish Heaven and earth. Therefore, let yourself be dominated by my Will, and I will make my sweet word resound in you: 'My dear mama whom my Fiat keeps for Me on earth'."

After this, I was following the Divine Fiat in the Creation, and was saying to myself: 'I want to enter into the sun in order to empty it of the love that God placed in it for love of creatures, and on the wings of its light bring it back to my Creator as requital of my love. I want to empty the wind, to bring back to Him the requital of the mighty love, of the moaning, ruling love, that it may rule over the Divine Heart and snatch from It the Kingdom of the Divine Will upon earth. I want to empty the heavens of the love they contain, to bring back to Him the love that never ends, that never says 'enough', so as to take Him from all sides and bring Him the requital of loving Him everywhere and in everyone.' But who can say all my nonsense that I spoke in each created thing? I would be too long, therefore I won't go any further. So, while I was doing this, my sweet Jesus told me: "Daughter of my Will, how pleasing to Me is the soul who enters into my Will to find in It all my works, and flying from one created thing to another, with her small capacity she makes her calculations, to find out what dose of love, of goodness, of power, of beauty, and more, I placed in each created thing. And since for one who is in my Will what is mine is hers, she embraces them all and brings them back into my womb and around Me, as requital of her love; and I feel, being returned to Me, the love that We issued in creating the whole Creation; the goodness, the power, the beauty with which We strewed all Creation. And in Our emphasis of love, We say: 'The daughter of Our Will returns to Us Our works, Our love, Our goodness, and more; and while she returns them to Us, she leaves them at their place.' And We feel, being repeated to Us, the glory, the happiness as if We were again putting out the whole Creation.

Now, you must know that in creating the whole universe, the variety of many manifold things, We placed a determined act, an 'enough' to each thing, in such a way that they cannot surpass any limit from the way in which they were created. However, even though it was a determined act and they cannot go any further, it was yet a full act; so much so, that creatures are unable, nor do they have the capacity, to take all the good that each created thing contains. This is so true that, who can say: 'I can take all the light of the sun'? 'The heavens are not enough for me over my head'? 'All the waters are not enough for me to quench my thirst'? 'The earth is not sufficient under my feet'? And so with many other things. And this, because as Our Divinity does an act, creates things, Our Love, the superabundance We possess, is so great, that We put in display, luxury, pomp. Of none of Our works can it be said that it is poor; they all make display – some of luxury of light, some make pomp of beauty, some of variety of colors, and more. They seem to be saying, in their mute language: 'Our Creator is immensely rich, beautiful, powerful, wise, and therefore all of us, as worthy works of Him, make display of luxury in the office given to us by God.

Now, my daughter, it was not so in creating man; in him was placed, not a determined act, but an act ever growing. Our Love did not want to say an 'enough' to man; it would have been like hampering Our Love, arresting Our ardor. No, no - Our 'enough' did not pronounce itself in the creation of man; it did not put a limit, but an act ever growing, leaving it almost to his liking where he wanted to reach, and Our growing act at his disposal, so that Our display of love would not have a limit, but could make pomp of luxury, of grace, of sanctity, of beauty, of goodness, and more – as much as he pleased. We bound Our growing act to his free will, so that it might have no hindrance to displaying as much luxury as it could. And so that this growing act of Ours might have in man all possible and imaginable helps, We gave him also Our Will at his disposal, so that It could maintain for him, at Its own expense, all the luxury he wanted, and the superabundance of the goods of his Creator.

Our Love did not have the heart to say ‘enough’ to man: ‘Our son, up to here you can reach.’ No, no – it would have been as if a father wanted to say to his son: ‘Up to such and such day you will sit at my table; and then – enough.’ This would not be love of paternity, but of mastership. That a son may put a limit in receiving the alimony of his father – this could be; but that a father would say to him: ‘You will remain on an empty stomach’ – this he will never do. Such is Our goodness; We will never say ‘enough’ to the creature; Our growing act will serve her as continuous nourishments to always grow and preserve herself. And if, ungrateful, she does not make use of Our growing act, great gift given by her Creator, We will have the sorrow of seeing Our dear child on an empty stomach, poor, and Our act hampered and without life; and Our ardor of love will change into ardor of sorrow. So, if you want Our growing act to have life in you, never go out of Our Divine Will, which will be jealous of making you always, always grow.”

The book of the Fiat in the depth of the soul. The book of the Fiat in Creation. How the Divine Will keeps all creatures under the rain of Its continuous act.

My poor mind seems to be able to do nothing other than think about the Divine Will. In each thing that I see, it keeps looking for Its Life; and as the interior does this, on the outside it finds nothing other than that Divine Fiat that so much loves it and wants love. I feel the need to find It in all things, in order to breathe It, to feel Its heartbeat of light which, like blood, circulates in my soul and constitutes itself primary life of my poor being. And where I am unable to find It, I feel I lack a continuous heartbeat, a breath of air, to facilitate the Life of the Divine Will in my soul. And I was praying Jesus to teach me how to find It in all things, so that Its perennial Life would never be lacking in me. And my highest Good, Jesus, with all goodness, told me: “My daughter, one who does my Will and lives in It forms in her soul the book of the Divine Fiat. But this book must be full, not empty or with only a few pages written; if it is not full, she will soon finish reading it, and having nothing to read, she will occupy herself with something else, and therefore the Life of my Divine Will will be interrupted and as though broken in the creature. On the other hand, if it is full, she will have always something to read; and if it seems that it ends, I will add other pages more sublime, so that she may never lack the life, the knowledge ever new, and the substantial nourishment of my Divine Volition. So, the interior must be like many pages in order to form this book: page the intelligence, page the will and the memory, page the desire, the affection, the heartbeat, page the word, which must be able to repeat what it read, otherwise it will remain like a book that will do good to no one, while for one who forms a book the first purpose is to propagate it. So, the whole interior must be written with pages of my Divine Will, and this book must be so full, that she must be unable to find anything else to read but my Will alone. Now, when the soul has her interior book full, she will know very well the external book of the Divine Will. All of Creation is nothing other than a book of It; each created thing is a page that forms an immense book, and of many volumes. So, having formed her interior book and read it thoroughly, she will be able to read very well the external book of all Creation, and in all things she will find my Divine Will in act of giving her Its Life, Its lessons, most high and sublime, and Its delicious and holy food. It will happen to one who has formed in her interior this book of the Divine Fiat, and has read it thoroughly, as to someone who has possessed a book, has read it over and over again, has studied well the most difficult things, has smoothed out all difficulties, elucidated the most obscure points, in such a way that he has consumed his life over that book. If a person from outside brought to him another similar book, he will most certainly be able to read it, and will recognize in that one his own book. More so, since my Divine Will has enclosed the creature within Its most holy circle, and has placed in the depth of the soul the book of Its Fiat, and in Creation It has repeated Its divine book, in such a way that one echoes within the other, and they understand each other in an admirable way. Here is why it is necessary to recognize the book of the Divine Fiat in the depth of one’s soul, read it thoroughly to make of it perennial life; and in this way one will easily be able to read the beautiful pages and the great book of my Will of all Creation.”

After this, I continued my acts in the Divine Will, and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, my Divine Volition has Its continuous act that never ceases to pour Its continuous act upon all creatures, and to invest them with Its continuous act of light, of sanctity, of beauty, of love, of help, of power, of happiness. Its love is so great that one act does not wait for another and, like a torrent, more than pouring rain, they pour themselves over all creatures. This continuous act is recognized and received by all the inhabitants of the Celestial Fatherland, in such a way as to form the ever new surprise of ineffable joys and of happiness without end. It can be said that it forms the life and substance of the beatitude of all the Blessed. Now, since my Divine Will possesses this continuous act by nature, It cannot, nor does It want to change regime; just as It gives this continuous act of good in Heaven, so does It give it to all Creation, and to all creatures and to each one, because all receive life from this, Its continuous act – if it ceased, the life of all would cease. At the most, there can be changes of effects, because it acts according to the dispositions of each one, and therefore Its same continuous act produces for some one effect, for some another; and there are some who, unfortunately, while being under the rain of this continuous act of light, of sanctity, of beauty and more, remain not even wet, nor illuminated, nor holy, nor beautiful, and convert within themselves the continuous act of good into darkness, into passion, and maybe even into sin. But in spite of all this, my Will never ceases Its continuous act of pouring Its divine goods over all, because It finds Itself in the condition of the sun which, even if human beings, or trees, plants or flowers, would not want to receive its light, which could communicate the many admirable effects that its continuous act of light contains – that is, sweetness, flavor, the beautiful iris of all colors – would continue its act of always giving light. But if the sun had reason, it would cry with tears of burning light for the sorrow of seeing in the great wheel of its light all the goods which in reality it gives, but are not received. My Divine Will is more than sun; It keeps everyone and everything enveloped within Its infinite light; Its nature is of always wanting to give - and in fact It gives; if everyone took, everyone would be holy, the world would change into happiness. But, with highest sorrow, Its goods are not received, but rather, rejected into Its very light. Yet, It does not stop; with tender and insuperable love It continues Its continuous act of giving what Its light possesses.”

Motion is sign of life. The passport in order to enter into the Kingdom of the Divine Will; the language and the citizen of It. The peacemaker between God and the creatures.

I was continuing my acts in the Divine Will, and was thinking to myself: ‘How can one know whether the Divine Fiat reigns in the creature and in my poor soul, or the good that It reigns in it or not?’ But while I was thinking of this, my sweet Jesus told me: “Motion is the sign of life – where there is no motion there cannot be life. So, to know whether the creature possesses my Will is if in her inmost soul she feels my Will alone as prime motion of everything that goes on within her. In fact, my Will being prime motion, wherever It reigns It will make Its prime divine motion felt, upon which will hang all the internal and external acts, as though from the center of the prime motion of my Divine Will. Therefore, It will be the prime motion, the password, the commandant, the ruler, in such a way that each act will be in waiting to receive the prime motion in order to move and operate. So, if the creature feels in her acts the prime motion of my Will, it is the sign that It reigns in her soul; but if, on the contrary, she feels in her prime motion the human end, her own pleasure, natural satisfactions, the taste for pleasing creatures, my Will will not only not reign, but from Queen It will act as her servant, serving her in her acts, because there is no act that the creature can do if my Divine Will does not concur in it, either dominating her or serving her.

Now, you must know, my daughter, that the passport in order to enter into my Kingdom is the resolute will of never doing one's own will, even at the cost of one's life and any sacrifice. This resolute act, but true, is like the signature that one puts on the passport in order to set off in the Kingdom of my Divine Will; and while the creature signs in order to set off, God signs in order to receive her. This latter signature will have so much value, that the whole of Heaven will go to meet her in order to receive her into the Kingdom of the Divine Fiat in which they live; and they will be all eyes over this creature who, from the earth, holds as life and as Kingdom that same Will which they hold in Heaven. But the passport is not enough; one must study the language, the ways, the customs of this Divine Kingdom – and these are the knowledges, the prerogatives, the beauties, the value that my Will contains. Otherwise, one would be like a stranger; he would neither take love, nor be loved. If he does not sacrifice in making of it a study in order to be able to speak with that same language, and does not adapt himself to the customs of those who live in this Kingdom so holy, he will live isolated, because, not understanding him, they will shun him; and isolation makes no one happy. In addition to this, one must pass from the study to the practice of what was learned; and after a length of practice, at last, he is declared a citizen of the Kingdom of my Divine Will, and then will he enjoy all the happinesses which are in a Kingdom so holy; even more, they will be his own properties, and he will acquire the right to live in It as in his own Fatherland.”

After this, He added: “My daughter, one who lives in my Will becomes the peacemaker between God and the creatures. All of her acts, words, steps, her prayers, her little sacrifices, are like many bonds of peace between Heaven and earth; they are like peacemaking weapons, as she fights her Creator with weapons of peace and of love in order to disarm Him and render Him favorable, and change the scourges into mercy. And just as the human will formed the war, to wage war against the One who had created it - not only this, but it broke the accord, the order and the peace – so my Will, with the strength of Its Omnipotence, reigning in the creature, converts what the creature does into bonds of accord, of order, of peace and of love. So, from her comes out as though a little white cloud which, surging, spreads and rises up to the divine throne; and bursting into as many voices for as many acts as she has done, it says: ‘Great God, peace I bring to You from the earth; and You – give me your peace, to bring it as bond of peace between You and the human generation.’ This little cloud ascends and descends, descends and ascends, and does the office of peacemaker between Heaven and earth.”

Beneficial rain. Continuous creation of the Divine Will; internal and external order of It. The creature is carried in Its arms.

I was feeling all immersed in the Fiat. Its air is so sweet, refreshing, that one feels oneself being reborn at each instant to new life. But what does one breathe in this air of the Divine Will? One breathes air of light, of love, of sweetness, of fortitude, of divine knowledges and so forth, in such a way as to feel oneself renewed to new life. This beneficial and balsamic air, as it is breathed, makes the Divine Life grow in the creature; and just as when one breathes the air, with the breath it is enclosed inside, and by repeating the breath it is put outside, because the strength of the air is so great, that one can keep inside only as much as is necessary in order to live – the surplus must be put out with the same breath. But what does one put out? That which she has received after she has filled herself: love, light, goodness she has breathed in; love, light, goodness she gives back.

But while my poor mind wandered in this divine air, my sweet Jesus told me: “My daughter, all the good acts that the creature does in my Divine Will rise to God, because It has the Divine Power to draw up, into the Celestial Fatherland, that which is done in Its Volition; and then, with Its same Power, It makes them fall back like beneficial rain over the same creature, in such a way that if the creature loves, blesses, adores, thanks, praises, God requites her with new rain of love, of blessings, rain of thanksgivings, because He felt Himself being loved and thanked by the creature, and bursting into rain of praises, He praises her before the whole Celestial Court. Oh! how Our Divine Goodness awaits the adoration, the pleasant 'I love You' of the creature, to be able to give to Our Love the vent of being able to say to her: 'Daughter, I love you.' Therefore, there is not one act that the creature does for Us, for which Our tenderness, all paternal, does not give to her multiplied requital."

Then, I continued my acts in the Divine Fiat, and my beloved Jesus added: "My daughter, the creature is carried in the arms of my Divine Will, and Its love is so great that It keeps all Creation around her, as if, in act, It were always, always creating It to give her pleasure and render her happy, and say to her: 'My Creative Strength maintains all this machine of the universe; if It withdrew, the sun would disappear as if by magic, the heavens and all the other things would resolve into nothing, just as from nothing they came out. So, my Creative Power keeps on creating It continuously, and can say in all reality: 'It is precisely for you that I am creating the sun, so that your life, your journey, may be strewn with light. For you the azure heavens, so that your eye may wander afar and delight in their extension. I am creating everything for you; I maintain everything in order because I love you.' My Divine Will makes Itsself life in act of all things, It sustains them and preserves them, It places them around the creature to make her feel, from all things and from all sides, Its unmovable Life, Its immutable Strength, Its invincible Love. It can be said that It clasps her everywhere as triumph of Its Love. And It maintains not only the external order and all things in act, as if It were creating them, but It maintains internally, with Its Creative Strength, the whole internal order of the creature. So, It is always in act of creating the heartbeat, the breath, the motion, the blood circulation, the intelligence, the memory, the will. It runs as life in the heartbeat, in the breath - in everything; It sustains and preserves, without ever withdrawing from the soul and from the body. Yet, this Supreme Will of Mine is everything, does everything, and is not recognized, but rather, forgotten. It could say as I said to the Apostles: 'I have been with you for so long, and you still do not know Me.' Many things are made known which do not form the life of the creature; and of my Will, which forms the life and is continuous act of life – otherwise she could not live – nothing is made known. Therefore, my daughter, be attentive, recognize It in you and outside of you – in everything, more than your own life, and you will feel admirable things, Its continuous act that loves you with untiring love, and only because It loves you, It gives you life."

Fecundity of light. The Creation, feast of God and of the creature. The Divine Will, regime and rule.

I am back in the arms of the Divine Fiat; it seems to me that Its immense light flows like sea around me, and as I do my acts of love, of adoration, of thanksgiving, I take from within this light the love that the Divine Will possesses. However, I take of it as much as I can take, because, as creature, it is not given to me to take it all, so immense it is; and I have neither the capacity nor the space in which to enclose this interminable love. But, still, I fill myself completely, in such a way that, though I am creature, my love toward the One who created me is full and whole, and so is my adoration. In fact, the acts done in the Divine Will must possess such fullness, that the creature must be able to say: 'My being has melted completely into love, into adoration - I have nothing left.' And the Creator must be able to say: "All the love that she could give Me, she gave to Me – she has kept nothing for herself." But as I was doing my little acts in this sea, little waves were forming, which, unloading themselves into my intelligence, changed into light of knowledge on the Divine Will. And my always lovable Jesus told me: "My daughter, one who lives in my Divine Will is always dealing with light – never with darkness. And since light is fecund, it gives birth in the soul to the truths it possesses. The virtue of light is marvelous and miraculous; and while, by looking at it, one sees nothing but light, inside it possesses the fullness of goods. But it communicates these goods not to one who only looks at it, but to one who lets himself be touched, molded, clasped, kissed with its ardent kisses. As it touches, it purifies; as it molds, it transforms; as it clasps, so it encloses its light in the soul; and with its fecundity, which can never remain idle, its work is incessant, it communicates the beautiful iris of the divine colors and beauties; and with its kisses it infuses the most beautiful truths and the ineffable secrets of its Creator. Living in the light of my Divine Will and not being aware of the divine things, of Our secrets, not feeling the fecundating virtue of this light, would be as if God wanted to live separate life from His creature. But the one purpose for which We want Our Will to be also that of the creature was precisely that We want to live life together, and permanent, with her. So, it would be absurd - living in my Will and not feeling the fecundity of Its goods that this light possesses, which is that of making the creature live of God Himself.”

Then He added: “My daughter, here is why in Creation there were so many preparations, as preparatory to one of the greatest solemn feasts, which Our Divinity wanted to solemnize with the creature, from the very beginning of her existence. What did We not prepare so that this feast might be one of the most solemn? Heavens studded with stars, sun radiant with light, refreshing winds, seas, enchanting flowerings and fruits with the variety of so many flavors and sweetnesses. After having prepared everything, We created man, that he might celebrate, and We together with him. It was right that the Owner of the feast, who had prepared it with so much love, would be present and enjoy together; more so, since the substance of a feast is formed by the company of the guests that are wanted at the feast. And so that this feast between Us and man might never be interrupted, We gave him Our very Will, which ruled Our Divine Being, so that one might be the regime and the rule between God and the creature. So, as man withdrew from Our Will, he lost Our regime and Our rule, and We stopped celebrating on both sides. So, as you do your acts in It and you remind Us of everything that We did in Creation to set up Our feast for the creature, We feel that Our Fiat is your regime and your rule; this binds Us and clasps Us again, and forms for Us the new feast, and makes Us repeat that of Creation.”

And I: ‘My beloved Jesus, however more I want to live in your Will and die rather than not do your Most Holy Will, yet I feel myself bad, dirty – how can I repeat for You this feast?’ And Jesus continued: “Our love for one who is determined to live in It and do It always is so great, that It makes Itself brush of light; and painting with Its touch of light and heat, It purifies the creature of any stain, that she may not be ashamed of Our adorable Presence; and It places her, with all trust and love, to celebrate together with Us. Therefore, let yourself be touched up by my Divine Will, even at the cost of suffering any pain, and It will take care of everything.”

The great evil of one who does not do the Divine Will. Most interesting example of Adam.

My abandonment continues in the Holy Divine Volition, and I comprehended the great good that my little soul felt in living at the mercy of a Will so holy. It has such jealousy, It loves her so much, It takes charge of everything, even of the littlest things of this creature; so much so, that It seems to say: “Nobody touch her, and woe to those who would dare to.” So I was thinking: ‘It loves me so much; and I – have I ever had the great misfortune of opposing a Will so lovable and adorable? I strongly doubt, especially in this last period of my existence, in what I have gone through, that there haven’t been some fractures between me and the Divine Will.’ And while my poor mind was gloomed by the sad doubt, my sweet Jesus, unable to bear seeing me anguished, all goodness, told me: “My good daughter, courage, banish from your mind any doubt and anguish, because these debilitate you and cause you to break the flight toward that Will that loves you so much. It is true that there have been reflections, fears, lacks of full abandonment, in such a way that you felt the weight of your will, as if it wanted to come out into the field to do its course; and it rendered you like a fussy little girl, who fears everything, is afraid of everything – and so much, that very often she cries; and I held you tightly in my arms to sustain you, and more than ever I watched over your will, to keep it safe.

Therefore, daughter, true fractures between my Divine Will and yours there have not been; and if – may this never be – it had been so, Heaven forbid, my daughter, you would have incurred into the same misfortune of Adam. By how many preparations was his existence not preceded – Our Love gave Itself no respite, to put out the most: heavens and sun, flourishing garden, and many other things – all preparatory acts, as the outpouring of Our works for love of this man. And in creating him, Our Divine Life poured out into him, making Itself permanent life of him, in such a way that he felt Us inside as perennial life, and he felt Us outside in Our works, created for love of him. Our Love was so great, that It made Itself revealer of Our Divine Being in the interior of man, because It had established Our permanent Life in him, and revealer on the outside, in such a way that each created thing was a revelation of Our Love that It made to him. More so since, in Creation, both Our Life and all created things were given to man in a permanent way, not at intervals. A good that is today-yes and tomorrow-no is a broken love, and the nature of Our Love does not adapt itself to an interrupted love; Our Love is eternal and never says ‘enough’. So, as Adam broke off with Our Divine Will, he gambled away all Creation, and also Our Life in him. The offense of withdrawing from Our Divine Will is so great, that We put aside all Our preparations, the great good that We have put out, and We withdraw from man; and with Us the whole Creation remains offended. So, as Adam formed the fracture with Our Will, the heavens, the stars, the sun, were offended; the air that he breathed, the sea, the earth that he trod – all felt offended, because my Divine Will is like heartbeat and blood circulation of all created things, therefore all felt the sorrow of the fracture with the human will, feeling themselves being touched in the heartbeat from which they received life and preservation. Now, if - may this never be – there had been a fracture of will between yours and Mine, I would have put aside my many preparations, made in your soul, my many graces that were poured, and I would have withdrawn, placing Myself aside. If you continue to feel Me, it is a sign that my Will is there firm in you, and yours is at its place.

If you knew what it means not to do my Divine Will! The creature dares to prevent and to make die that motion that never ceases, and to give death to the holy acts which my Divine Will has established to perform in the creature. It wants to give Divine Life, and while It is about to give It, if the human will does not receive It and is opposed, it makes itself knife to kill and suffocate this Divine Life in its soul. Not doing my Will seems to be nothing, while it is all the evil of the creature; it is the greatest offense to Our Supreme Majesty. Therefore, be attentive, and let your abandonment in It be continuous.”

Each act done in the Divine Will forms the nourishment to make the Divine Life grow in the creature. The greatest gift that God gives: the truth.

I am always there, in the center of the Divine Fiat, though under the nightmare of the privation of my sweet Jesus. Oh! how painful it is to feel, escaping from oneself, that Jesus who loves me and whom I love, and while He forms my life of strength, of love, of light, His Life of love, of strength and of light escapes from within my life. Oh! God, what pain – to feel life, while the true Life is not there. What torture, what torment. Oh! how I feel like repeating: ‘There is no sorrow similar to my sorrow. Heavens and earth – cry with me, and, all of you - implore for me the return of that Jesus who loves me and whom I love.’ So I abandoned myself more than ever in that Divine Fiat which no one can take away from me – not even Jesus Himself. If He hides, He makes some little escapes from me, but His Divine Will never leaves me, It is always with me, and my poor mind goes around everything that the Divine Fiat has done and does for love of us. And since I was thinking about Its great love in creating us, my beloved Jesus, coming out from His hiding place, told me: “My daughter, the creation of man was the center in which Our Divinity centralized all the goods that were to arise in the creature. We placed in him Divine Life and Divine Will, human life and human will. The human life was to serve Us as dwelling, and the two wills, fused together, were to live life in common, with highest accord – even more, the human will was to take from Ours in order to form its acts, and Ours was to be in continuous act of giving of Its own, so that the human will would remain modeled and fully molded in the Divine Will. Now, there is no life, whether human, spiritual or Divine, which does not need nourishment in order to grow, to be fortified, to be embellished and to be happy. More so, since We placed Our Divine Life in man; because he was incapable of receiving all the fullness of Our Divine Being, We placed in him as much as he could contain of Our Life, giving him the freedom to make It grow as much as he could and wanted.

Therefore, Our Life in man, in order to grow, had need of nourishment. Here is the necessity to place a Divine Will in him; Our Divine Life would not have adapted Itself to nourishments of human will. And therefore, all the acts of the creature done by virtue of Our Divine Will, and in It, would serve to nourish and make grow Our Divine Life in her, in such a way that, as she would gradually keep doing her acts in Our Fiat, now she would take Our Love and would nourish Us, now she would take Our strength, now Our infinite sweetness, now Our divine joys to nourish Us. What order, what harmony We placed in creating man between him and Us – to the extent of asking for Our own nourishments through him; not because We needed it – no, but in order to maintain the ardor of love, the correspondence, the inseparable union between him and Us. And while he would occupy himself with Us, We would occupy Ourselves with nourishing him, and with preserving Our dear dwelling - not only this, but giving him other more beautiful gifts, to render him happier, love him more, and make Ourselves be loved more.

But do you want to know what Our most beautiful gifts are, which We give to the creature? Manifesting to her a knowledge of Our Supreme Being, a truth that belongs to Us, a secret of Ours, is the most beautiful gift that We give to her. Each of these gifts is one more bond that We place between her and Us; each truth of Ours is a property that We place in her soul. And therefore, in the soul in whom Our Will reigns, We find Our divine nourishments, Our properties, for as much as is possible for creature, and Our dwelling; so, We find Ourselves in Our home, in Our center, in the midst of Our properties. See, then, what it means to let Our Will reign, and the great good of making Our truths known to you; each of Our knowledges brings its own distinct gift: one brings its light, one the strength, one the goodness, one the wisdom, one the love, and so forth. Each of them binds the creature to God in a special way, and God to her. Therefore, know how to correspond to the many gifts that your Jesus has given you, and live always in Our Will.”

Ugliness of the human nature without the Divine Will; beauty of one who lives in It. The smile of Heaven upon the earth.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues. I feel Its enrapturing force sweetly imposing itself on me – but without forcing me, because It does not like things that are forced; they are not for It, they are things that do not belong to It. Therefore, It is all eyes so that all my acts may receive the Life of the Divine Will and become as if they were Its own acts; and it seems to me that each of my acts done in Its adorable Will is a victory that It wins over the littleness of my will. So, I was thinking to myself: ‘How ugly the human nature is without the Divine.’ And my sweet Jesus told me: “My daughter, ugly is the human nature that lives without my Will, because it was created by the Supreme Being to live united together with the Divine Fiat. So, by living without It, a shift takes place in the human nature; in this shift, the order, the strength, the love, the light, the sanctity, the very reason, are shifted. All of these beautiful qualities are present in the creature, because they were placed by God as within a sacrament; but they are present outside of their place – all in disorder; and since they are out of place, one is against the other: passions fight sanctity, weakness fights strength, human love fights the Divine, the creature the Creator, and so forth. The human nature without the Divine Will transforms itself into ugly, it turns upside down, and in its disorder it wages war against its Creator. It happens as with the soul and the body, which were created by God to live life together: if the body wanted to live separate life from the soul, would it not have the sad lot of undergoing such transformation as to no longer be recognized from what it was? As Our Divinity created man, Our infinite Wisdom concurred with It, which, as the Artisan and the Expert that possesses the whole science of the art of being able to create, in Our All-Seeingness saw that, in order for this man to be Our honor and a work worthy of Our creative hands, and Our glory and also his, he was to be formed as body and soul; and We gave charge to Our Will as primary life of the soul and of the body. So, what the soul is to the body, Our Will was to be for both one and the other. Therefore, the creature was created, and had in her beginning, body, soul, human will and Divine Will – all together, which were to live life in common, with highest accord. And Our Will, which held the primacy, was to make Itself nourisher and preserver and dominator of this creature.

So, if without Our Divine Will the human nature is ugliness, united with Ours it is of a rare and enchanting beauty. In its creation, the seed of light was placed in it by Us, and Our Fiat, more than most tender mother, extends with Its wings of light over this seed, and caresses it, delights it, kisses it, nourishes it, makes it grow, and communicates to it, with Its heat and light, all the varieties of the divine beauties. And the human nature receives the participation, remains under the mighty and continuous influence of a Strength, of a Sanctity, of a Love fully Divine, and it grows beautiful, lovable and admirable to all. Therefore, the human nature, the way it was created by Us, is not ugly, but beautiful, nor do We know how to do ugly things; but it can render itself ugly by not keeping to the ways in which it was created and wanted by Us. See, then, how necessary it is that creatures do and live in Our Will – because It enters the first act of their creation. So, once this is destroyed, she remains disfigured and without true life. All created things were created with two and even with three elements together. The sun possesses light and heat; if the light wanted to live isolated without heat, it would be sterile light, without fecundity; and if the heat wanted to isolate itself from the light, it would turn into darkness – and here it is, disfigured, the most beautiful sphere that forms the enchantment of the whole universe, and with its light dominates and does good to all. The earth is formed of the elements of earth and water; if the earth wanted to do without water, it would become dust, and would not form the solid pavement on which man could raise buildings and walk with firm step – everything would vacillate under his feet. But this is not enough; if the earth did not want to receive the seed into its bosom, it would not form the beautiful flowerings, the abundance of fruits. So, earth, water and seed must live together – one must be life of the other; they must remain united together in the way in which they had the beginning of their creation; otherwise, the earth would strike terror and would remain without the life of the good assigned to it by God, which it was to do to creatures. All things were not created as isolated, and all the good is in their maintaining themselves as they were created by God. And then, also with sciences: if a person wanted to learn how to read and did not want to learn the vowels, and then the union of the consonants, which are the beginning, the foundation, the substance from which the sciences derive, could he ever learn how to read? Never. He could drive himself crazy on the books, but as for learning – never. See, then, the strict necessity of sticking to the way in which things were formed at the beginning of their existence, if they do not want to turn from beautiful into ugly, from good into evil, from life into death. Now, what good can the creature hope for, if she does not live united with Our Divine Will, in which the beginning of her creation was established? Oh! if all would comprehend this, how attentive they would be to let themselves be dominated, nourished, raised by my Will, which, being the beginning of their existence, would form in them all that is beautiful, good and holy, and the great fortune of life down here, and then the great glory of their life up there.”

After this, I continued my acts in the Divine Will, and it seemed to me that these acts done in It had the virtue of uniting Heaven and earth, and of drawing all the celestial inhabitants to look at the creature that was letting herself be invested by the Divine Volition to give It the field of action in her acts. And my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, there is nothing more beautiful, holier, more gracious, and that possesses an enrapturing force and virtue, than a soul who lets herself be dominated by my Divine Will. She is the smile of Heaven and of the earth; each act of hers forms a rapture for her Creator, who feels the sweet force of His Will in the creature, and sweetly lets Himself be enraptured. And all the Blessed feel that, from the earth, there is someone who enraptures the Will of Heaven, to make It her own and to live in common with them. Oh! how they feel twice as happy in seeing that also on earth reigns that Fiat which, while It beatifies them and forms their supreme happiness, reigns at one point of the earth, operating and triumphant. Therefore, at that point of the earth appears a nimbus of Heaven, a Divine Will operating, a smile of the Celestial Fatherland, which draws the attention of the whole of Heaven on that point, to keep it defended and to enjoy that smile which the Divine Will forms in that creature. In fact, the Saints are inseparable from all the acts of It, and they enjoy and take part in them according to their merits. More so, since the acts done in my Divine Will are as many chains of love that flow between Heaven and earth, and they love all, without putting anyone aside; and because she loves all, she is well-liked by all. Therefore, my daughter, be attentive; fly – run always in my Divine Will, that you may form the smile of Heaven upon earth. It is beautiful to see Heaven smile, but since happiness and the smile are Its own properties, it is the earth that renders itself more beautiful, more attractive, for the celestial smile that my Divine Will forms in the creature is not a property of its own.”

Divine messengers that bring the good news to the Celestial Fatherland. How the Divine Will is not content with only words, but wants to do deeds.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues, and I try as much as I can to unite my little acts to those of the Divine Will, so as to form a single one with Its acts, almost to be able to say: ‘Whatever You do, I do. I plunge myself into your light in order to extend myself together with You, and in this way I can embrace and love all with your own Will.’ But while I was doing this, my beloved Jesus told me: “My daughter, the acts done in my Divine Will have such virtue and power as to transform themselves into divine messengers, which set out from the earth for the vault of the Heavens. And since these messengers set out from within my Divine Will, but are sent by a creature who operates and lives in It, they bring with themselves free entrance into Our Celestial Fatherland, and bring the happy news that the earth wants the Kingdom of Our Will, because a little exiled one lives and operates in It, and does nothing but make use of that same Will that reigns in Heaven in order to ask that It may descend to reign upon earth as It reigns in Heaven. These messengers of light - how many secrets do they not hide! Already on its own, the light of Our Divine Will is the secretary of all things, divine and human, and it knows how to keep the true secret; and while in appearance one sees light, inside this light it hides all secrets and all things – no one can escape it. This light contains the great secret of the whole history of Creation, and it confides its secrets only to one who wants to live in its light. In fact, the light has the virtue of disposing the creature to live and to comprehend its divine secrets, and, if needed, it will dispose her to lay down her life so that it may give life to its intimate secrets and to the purpose of Creation, which was only that Our Will would reign on earth as It does in Heaven. Therefore, my daughter, if you remain attentive to live always of my Will, It will entrust to you all the secrets of the history of Creation, It will make in your soul the deposit of all Its joys and Its intimate sorrows, and, as to Its own secretary, with Its vibrating light, transforming Itself into brush, It will paint in you the sun, the heavens, the stars, the sea, the beautiful flowerings. In fact, when It speaks, It is not content with only words; to Its inextinguishable love and to Its interminable light words are not enough, but It wants to do deeds; and therefore, with Its creative virtue, while It entrusts Its secrets, It speaks and forms the new creation in the creature. It is not content with telling Its secrets, but It wants to do the works that Its secrets contain. Therefore, in the creature who lives in my Will, new heavens, suns more refulgent than the very Creation, will be seen. In fact, you must know that my Will has a yearning, an ardent desire, of wanting to always operate; but It keeps looking for one who wants to listen to It, and who wants to receive Its creative virtue, so as not to expose Its works to uselessness. And in order to be sure, It keeps looking for Its own Will in the soul; and, in finding It, It finds Its works secured by Its same Divine Fiat; therefore It spares Itself in nothing, and there It does the most beautiful works and the greatest prodigies. Oh! Power of my Omnipotent Will – if all knew You, loved You and let You reign, the earth would turn into Heaven.”

How God wants the creature with Himself in order to give her the surprise of new gifts. The love, the order, the inseparability of all created things, and how the creature is bound to them.

I was doing my acts in the Divine Volition, praying It to invest all my being, so that heartbeats, breaths, words, prayers, might come out of me as many repeated acts of Divine Will. Oh! how I would love to be a continued act of It, to be able to say: ‘I have in my power all your acts, your very love, and therefore I do what You do, and I am not less than You in loving You.’ It seems to me that true love cannot restrict itself, but it wants to expand so much as to want the infinite love in its power. And since it is not given to the creature to be able to embrace it, she turns to the Divine Will in order to have it, and plunging herself into It, she says with highest contentment: ‘I love with infinite love.’

But while my little intelligence was wandering in the Divine Fiat, my always lovable Jesus told me: “My daughter, one who contents himself with the little love that the creature possesses is not of the nature of true love; more so, since the little love is subject to extinguishing, and in contenting oneself, the necessary source comes to be missing, which gives the life in nourishing the flame of true love. This is why, my daughter, Our Paternal Goodness, in creating man, gave him all the freedom to be able to come to Us as many times as he wanted; no limit was set – on the contrary, in order to encourage him more to come to Us very often, We told him in advance that each time he would come he would be given the beautiful surprise of a new gift. For Our inextinguishable Love it would have been a sorrow if It did not have always something to give to Its children; even more, It anxiously awaits for their coming to give them now a surprise, now another, of gifts one more beautiful than the other. Our Love wants to banquet together with the creature and is happy with preparing the banquet at Its own expense, so as to have the occasion to always give. It acts just like a father who wants the crown of his children around him – not in order to receive, but to give and prepare feasts and banquets, so as to amuse himself together with his children. What sorrow would it be for a loving father, if the children did not go or he had nothing to give them? For Our Paternal Goodness there is no danger that We might have nothing to give him; but there is the danger that the children would not come – and Our Love raves for It wants to give. And in order to be more sure on where the creature must put Our gifts, It wants to find in her Our Divine Will, which will preserve the infinite value of Our gifts, and the creature will no longer feel small in her love, in her prayers, in her acts, but together with Our Will she will feel that an infinite vein flows within her, in such a way that everything becomes infinite for her: love, prayers, acts and everything. Therefore, she will feel within herself the contentment that she is not less than Us in loving Us, because she has a Divine Volition in her power, and It runs in her acts.”

Then, I continued my round in the acts that the Omnipotent Fiat had done in Creation, in order to love, honor and thank what It had done in It; and I comprehended the order, the union, the inseparability that all created things possess – and this, only because a Divine Will dominates them. So, the whole Creation can be called a single continuous act of Supreme Will, and since one is the Will that reigns, It maintains the peace, the order, the love, the inseparability among all created things. Otherwise, if there were not one Will alone to dominate them, but more than one, there would not be true union among them; on the contrary, the heavens would wage war against the sun, the sun against the earth, the earth against the sea, and so forth. They would imitate men, who do not let themselves be dominated by one single Supreme Volition, and there isn't true union among them, but one is against the other. My Jesus, my Love, oh! how I wish to be one single act of your Will, to be at peace with all, and possess the union, the inseparability of the heavens, of the sun, of everything; and You would find in me the love that You placed in the heavens, in the sun, in everything. And my sweet Jesus added: "My daughter, all things created by Us possess the unitive force and the bond of inseparability. Our Divine Fiat, as much as It is able to do things that are distinct among themselves, in such a way that one created thing cannot say: 'I am like another' – the heavens cannot say that they are sun, the sun cannot say that it is sea – however, It does not know how to do things that are isolated and separate from other another. It likes union so much, that It puts them in the condition that one cannot separate from the other; and while they are distinct and each one does its office, yet, in the motion, in the going around that they do, the union and the order that they have is so great, that one is the motion, one is the incessant round that they do. But why does my Fiat make them move and go around continuously? To give them the race of love toward the One who created them; and to make them run toward the creatures, so as to let them exercise their office of offering the love of their Creator, since for the creatures were they created. Now, the creature possesses the bond of all created things and goes around together with them; and here is how, if you breathe, it is the air that allows you to breathe, to palpitate, and your blood to circulate in your veins. Now, the air gives you the breath, the heartbeat, and then it takes it to give it back to you again; and while it incessantly gives and takes your breath, it goes around – it runs together with all created things; and your breath goes around – it runs together with the air. Your eye, by filling itself with light, runs within the sun; your feet run together with the earth. But do you know who has the great good of feeling, vividly, the force, the union, the order, the inseparability of all created things, and the race of her whole being toward her Creator? One who lets herself be dominated, and possesses the Life of my Will. My Will has changed nothing of the way in which all things originated; but rather, it is the creature that changed things by not doing my Will. But one who does It, and lets herself be dominated, holds her place of honor as she was created by God, and therefore We find her in the sun, in the heavens, in the sea, together with the union of all created things. And – oh! how beautiful it is to find, together with all things created by Us, she, only for love of whom were they made by Us."

Roll-call of all the works come out of the Fiat. The palpitating life of the creature in It. Protections, speaking voice, assailers.

My poor mind, going around in the acts done by the Divine Will, keeps tracing everything It has done, in order to recognize them, love them, appreciate them, and then offer them as the most beautiful homage to the same Divine Will, as fruits worthy of Its works. But while I was doing this, my sweet Jesus told me: "My daughter, how pleasing it is to my Heart, and how sweet it sounds to my hearing, your tracing everything that my Divine Will has done, in order to recognize it, love it and give it to Us as the most beautiful homage of the love that We had for creatures, in creating so many things for love of them. By tracing them, your soul rings the bell to as though roll-call all the works come out of the Divine Fiat, to say to Us: 'How many beautiful things You have created for me, to give them to me as gifts and pledges of your Love. And I, making them my own, give them back to You as gifts and pledges of my love for You.' So, We feel the palpitating life of the creature in Our works, her little love flowing within Ours, and the purpose of Creation realized. To know Our works, and the purpose for which they were made, is the point of support of the creature, in which she finds a Divine Will in her power; and it is Our pretext for giving her other surprises of new gifts and graces."

And I: 'My Love, a thought afflicts me – I fear I may lack the continuation of my acts in your Divine Will, and as I would interrupt the sound of my bell, You, offended by me, might put me aside, and will not give me any more grace to make me live in your Will.’ And Jesus added: “My daughter, do not fear; you must know that one step gives life to another step, one good is life and support of another good, one act calls to life another act; and even evil, sin, is life of other evils and of other sins. Things never remain isolated, but almost always have their sequence. Good is like the seed, which possesses the generative virtue; as long as one has the patience to sow it into the bosom of the earth, it will produce ten – twenty percent. The same for the creature; if she has patience and remains attentive to enclose in her soul the seed of the good that she has done, she will have the generation, the multiplicity - one hundredfold, of the good acts that she has done. And if you knew what it means to do a good act! Each act is a protection that she acquires, and a voice speaking before Our Throne of the one who has done a good. For each additional act of good, so many more defenders does the creature have for her defense; and if the circumstances of life cause her to find herself in such constraints and trials, that it seems that she might want to vacillate and fall, the good acts that she has done take on the appearance of assailers, and they assail Us, so that the one who has loved Us and has had a sequence of many good acts may not vacillate; and they run around the creature as supporters, that she may not give up in the trial. And suppose that there had been a succession of acts done in Our Will - oh! then in each act there is a divine value and virtue defending the creature. We see in each of her acts Our Will as though engaged, therefore We Ourselves make Ourselves defenders and supporters of the one who has given life in her acts to Our Divine Fiat. Can We perhaps deny anything to Ourselves? Or disregard Our Will operating in the creature? No, no. Therefore, do not fear, but rather, abandon yourself like a little newborn in Our arms, that you may feel Our support and the protection of your very acts. Do you think that a repeated, continued good is nothing? It is divine properties that one acquires, it is armies that are formed, that make one conquer the Celestial Fatherland. It happens to one who has continued many good acts as to someone who has acquired many properties; if he has a setback, it won’t be able to do him much harm, because the many properties will fill the void of the setback that he suffered. But if someone else has acquired little, or possesses nothing, a small setback is enough to leave him destitute, of the most squalid misery. Such is to do much good, or little or nothing. This is why I always repeat to you, be attentive, be faithful to Me, and let your flight in my Will be continuous.”

After this, He added: “My daughter, you must know that when you keep disposing yourself to do your acts in my Divine Will, my Will remains conceived in your act; and as you do it, you give It the field to form Its Life in the act that you do. Not only this; your new acts serve as nourishment to those already done. In fact, since my Divine Will is life, once It has been enclosed in the acts of the creature, It feels the need of air, of breath, of heartbeat, of nourishment. Here is the necessity of the new acts, because these serve to maintain Its divine air, Its continuous breathing, Its uninterrupted heartbeat, and the nourishment in order to grow my very Will in the creature. See, then, the great necessity of the continuation of the acts in order to let It live and reign in the creature; otherwise, my Will would be uncomfortable without Its full triumph in all her acts.”

True love forms the stake on which to consume oneself in order to make the Beloved live again.
The day of Jesus in the Eucharist.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues; and while I was doing my acts, I thought to myself: ‘But, is it really true that my sweet Jesus likes the continuity of my little acts?’ And Jesus, making Himself heard, told me: “My daughter, a broken love can never give of heroism, because by not being continuous, it forms many voids in the creature, which produce weakness, coldness, and are almost in act of extinguishing the little flame that was lit. And therefore it takes away from her the fortitude of love, which, with its light, makes one comprehend who it is that one loves, and with its heat it maintains the flame lit which produces the heroism of true love; so much so, that she feels happy to give her life for the Beloved. A continuous love has the virtue of generating in the soul of the creature the One whom she always loves; and this generation is formed in the center of her continuous love. See, then, what an incessant love means: to form for oneself the stake on which to consume and burn oneself, to be able to form, in that stake, the Life of your beloved Jesus. One can say: 'In the continuous love I consume my life to make live again He whom I incessantly love.' Oh! had I not always loved the creature, and if I did not love her with a love that never says 'enough', I would never have descended from Heaven to earth to give her my Life with so many pains and heroism for love of her. It was my continuous love that, like sweet chain, drew Me and made Me do the heroic act of laying down my Life in order to purchase hers. A continuous love can reach anything, it can do anything, it facilitates everything, and it knows how to convert everything into love. On the other hand, a broken love can be called love of circumstances, interested love, craven love, which can reach the point, if the circumstances change, of denying and maybe even despising the One whom it loved. More so, since only the continuous acts form life in the creature; as she forms her act, in her very act arises the light, the love, the sanctity, the grace, according to the act that she does. Therefore, an interrupted love and good cannot be called either true love, or true life, or true good."

Then He added with a more tender tone: "My daughter, if you want your Jesus to accomplish in you His loving designs, let your love and your acts be continuous in my Will. In fact, when my Will finds continuity, It finds Its way of divine acting, and remains engaged in the perennial act of the creature; and It hastens to do what It has established for her, finding, by virtue of her incessant acts, the space, the necessary preparations and the very life in which It can form Its admirable designs and accomplish Its most beautiful works. More so, since each act done in my Will is one more re-tying that is formed between the Divine Will and the human; it is one more step that she takes in the sea of the Fiat, it is a greater right that the soul acquires."

After this, I continued to pray before the Tabernacle of love, and in my interior I said to myself: 'What do You do, my Love, in this prison of love?' And Jesus, all goodness, told me: "My daughter, do you want to know what I do? I do my day. You must know that my whole life, spent down here, I enclose within one day. My day begins by being conceived and being born; the veils of the sacramental accidents serve Me as swaddling clothes for my tender age. And when, because of human ingratitude, they leave Me alone and try to offend Me, I do my exile, left with only the company of some loving soul who, like a second mother, cannot detach herself from Me and keeps Me faithful company. From the exile I move on to Nazareth, doing my hidden life in the company of those few good who surround Me. And continuing my day, as creatures draw near to receive Me, I do my public life, repeating my evangelical scenes, offering to each one my teachings, the helps, the comforts that are necessary for them; I act as Father, as Teacher, as Doctor, and, if needed, also as Judge. So, I spend my day waiting for all and doing good to all. And – oh! how many times I have to remain alone, without a heart that would palpitate near Me. I feel a desert around Me, and I remain alone – alone praying; I feel the loneliness of my days that I spent in the desert down here; and – oh! how painful it is for Me! I, who am heartbeat for all in each heart; jealous, I guard everyone – feeling isolated and abandoned. But my day does not end with the sole abandonment; there is not one day in which ungrateful souls do not offend Me and receive Me sacrilegiously, and make Me complete my day with my Passion and my death on the Cross. Ah! sacrilege is the most ruthless death that I receive in this Sacrament of love. So, in this Tabernacle I do my day by carrying out everything I carried out in the thirty-three years of my mortal life. And just as in everything I did and do, the prime purpose, the prime act of life, is the Will of my Father - that It be done on earth as It is in Heaven - so in this little Host I do nothing other than implore that one be my Will with my children. And I call you in this Divine Will, in which you find my whole life in act; and you, by following it, ruminating it and offering it, unite yourself with Me in my Eucharistic day, to obtain that my Will be known and reign upon earth. And so you too will be able to say: 'I do my day together with Jesus'."

Admirable effects of the light of the Divine Will. How Heaven opens Itself over operative souls. How our acts are like many blowings of breath that make good mature.

My poor mind seems to be able to do nothing other than wander in the Divine Fiat, and – oh! how painful it is for me when, even just for brief instants, I am gloomed by some shadow or thought which is not all Will of God. Oh! then I feel my happiness breaking; the current of light, of peace, breaking. Alas! I feel the weight of my unhappy will. On the other hand, if nothing which is not Will of God enters into me, I feel happy, I live in the immensity of Its light; even more, I cannot even see where this light ends, which forms in me the celestial dwelling of perennial peace. Oh! Power of the Supreme Will – You who know how to change the human into divine, ugliness into beauty, pains into joys, should they even remain pains - do not leave me for one instant, let your arms of light hold me so tightly, that all other things, dispelled by your light, may not dare to molest me and to break my happiness.

But while I was thinking of this, my sweet Jesus, as though wanting to approve and confirm what I was thinking, told me: “My daughter, how beautiful is my Divine Will, isn’t It? Ah! It alone is the bearer of true happiness and of the greatest fortune to the poor creature, who, by doing her will, does nothing other than break her own happiness, break the current of the light, and change her fortune into the greatest misfortune. And as the creature disposes herself to do my Will, so It keeps rehabilitating her in the lost goods, because the substance of my Divine Will is light, and everything It does can be called effects of this light. So, for one who lets herself be dominated by It, one will be the act, but as the substance of light which it possesses, she will feel its many effects, which it will produce as the effect of its light - the works, the steps, the word, the thoughts, the heartbeat of my Will in the creature. Therefore she can say: ‘I am a single act of Supreme Will – everything else is nothing other than the effects of its light.’ The effects of this light are admirable; they take on all resemblances, all forms – of works, of steps, of words, of pains, of prayers, of tears, but all animated by the light, forming such variety of beauties, that your Jesus remains enraptured. Just like the sun, which animates everything with its light, but does not destroy or change things; rather, it places from its own and communicates the variety of colors, the diversity of sweetnesses, making them acquire a virtue and a beauty which they did not possess. So my Divine Will is – without destroying anything of what the creature does; on the contrary, It animates them with Its light, It embellishes them, and communicates to them Its Divine Power.”

After this, I continued my abandonment in the Divine Fiat by following Its acts; and my beloved Jesus added: “My daughter, each good comes out of God matured, and this maturation is formed between God and the soul. See, by doing your acts, you expose yourself to the rays of the Divine Sun, and as you undergo the heat and the light, your acts do not remain arid, insipid, but matured; and you, together with them, remain matured in the love, in the divine knowledges, in everything you do. And I, seeing you matured in those acts, prepare in Me other love to give you, and other truths to tell you; and since of everything that comes out of Me nothing is sterile, but everything is fecund and well-matured in the living flame of my Love, you receive the virtue of forming new maturations in yourself. This is why many times I am waiting for the completion of your acts, to give you the surprise of letting you know other truths. These, like many blowings of light and of heat, finish maturing in your soul the goods and the truths that your Jesus has communicated to you. See, then, the necessity of your acts in order to dispose yourself to receive other knowledges on my Divine Fiat, and to let me find in you the continuation of your acts in order to render them mature. Otherwise, what could I do? I would remain like sun which, while it goes through the earth, finds neither a flower to color, nor a fruit to mature; so, all the admirable effects that the sun contains would remain within its light – the earth would receive nothing. Therefore, Heaven opens Itself over operative souls – the miraculous force of the light of my Divine Volition; not over idle souls, but over those who work, who sacrifice, who love, who have always something to do for Me. Even more, you must know that the beatitudes of Heaven pour themselves over the earth and go to place themselves in the soul who lives and operates in my

Will, because they do not want to leave her without the celestial joys and happinesses while she forms a single Will with Heaven. However, while the Blessed swim in the divine joys, they acquire nothing of merit; on the other hand, with the pilgrim soul, they not only make her happy, but add the merit, because for one who does my Will upon earth everything is meritorious – the word, the prayer, the breath and even the joys convert into merit and into new gains.”

How the Divine Will forms the day in the act of the creature; and how, by doing her will, she forms the ways out, the doleful steps, the night of the vigils.

I was continuing my acts in the Divine Volition, and I prayed my Highest Good, Jesus, to make the Sun of the Divine Will rise in each of my acts, so that I might give Him, in each of my acts, the love, the homage, the glory as if I were forming for Him, in each act of mine, a day of divine light, of love, of profound adoration, communicated to me, into my act, by His own Will. Oh! how I would like to say, in each of my acts, whether big or small: ‘I make a day for Jesus, to love Him more.’ But while I was thinking of this, my beloved Jesus, repeating His usual little visit to my soul, told me: “My daughter, my Divine Will is the true day for the creature. But in order to form this day It wants to be called in her act, because, as It is called, so It encloses Itself in the act, to make Its divine day arise. It has the virtue of changing the act, the word, the step, the joys and the pains into most splendid and enchanting days. So, my Divine Will is waiting, as the creature rises from her night rest, to be called in order to form Its day of action in her. And since It is most pure light, It does not adapt Itself to working in the dark act of the human will, but with Its light It changes the act into daylight, and forms in it Its splendid day filled with heroic and divine actions, with such order and beauty, worthy only of Its vivifying and operative virtue. It can be said that It is waiting behind the doors of the act of the creature, just like the sun behind the windows of the rooms, such that, even though outside there is much light, the rooms are in the dark because the doors have not yet been opened to it. The same for my Divine Will: even though It is light that fills everything, the human act is always dark if my Will is not called to rise in it. Therefore, call It to rise in each of your acts if you want It to form in you Its beautiful day, and I may find in you, and in each of your acts, my days of love that surround Me with joy and with delights, which will make Me repeat: ‘My delight is to be with the children of my Divine Will.’ I will spend my days happy in you - not in the unhappy night of your human will, but in the full dwelling of my light and of the perennial peace of my Celestial Fatherland. Ah! yes, I will repeat: ‘I am happy in this creature. I hear in her the echo of my day spent down here on earth, and the echo of my day that I do in my prison in the Sacrament of love, all packed with my Divine Will. So, if you want to render Me happy, let Me find in you the operating virtue of my Divine Will, which knows how to form for Me my beautiful days of most refulgent light, all strewn with ineffable joys and with celestial happiness.

More so, since the creature, from the very beginning of her creation, was placed by God in the happy and peaceful day of Our Divine Will. Inside and outside of her, everything was light – even more, full midday. Inside her heart, before her eyes, above her head, and even under her steps, she could see and feel the palpitating Life of my Holy Volition, which, while It kept her immersed in the fullness of light and of happiness, It closed for her all the ways and the steps of human unhappinesses. And the creature, by doing her human will, formed for herself the outlets, the unhappy ways, the doleful steps, the thick darkness, in which she herself formed her own unhappiness, the tortures, the pain, the oppressing night – not of rest, but of vigils of passions, of agitations and of torments; and this, in my very Divine Will. And this, because, since the creature was made only by It, and to live of It and in It, there is no place for her, either on earth or in Heaven, or even in hell, outside of my Divine Fiat. So, one who tries to live in my Divine Will closes these outlets; each of her acts in It suppresses the unhappy ways that she has formed, makes the doleful steps disappear, suffocates the night, makes rest arise and puts an end to all her evils. Even more, my own Divine Will, as It sees that she wants to live in It, caresses her, puts her in feast, and helps her to suppress the outlets; It closes the doors to her evils, because We neither want, nor do We love for the creature to be unhappy – it dishonors Us and forms her sorrow and Ours. Therefore, We want to see her happy - and of Our own happiness. Oh! how painful it is for Our Paternal Heart to possess immense riches, infinite joys, and to see Our children in Our own House - that is, in Our own Will – poor, starving and unhappy.”

Growth of the creature before the Divine Majesty. The living in the Divine Will is gift that God will give to the creature.

I was doing my round in the Divine Will in order to follow Its many acts done for love of us; and as I arrived at Eden, I paused in that act in which God created man. What solemn moments, what ardor of love! So, that act can be called a most pure, complete, substantial, never interrupted act of divine love. Therefore, man was formed, had his origin, was born, in the Love of his Creator; it was right that he should grow as though kneaded and breathed upon, like a little flame, by the breath of the One who so much loved him. But while I was thinking of this, my most sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: “My daughter, the creation of man was nothing other than an outpouring of Our Love – but so great, that he could not receive it all within himself, not having the capacity to be able to enclose in his interior an act of the One who was issuing him to the light. So, Our act remained inside and outside of him, that it might serve him as nourishment in order to grow before the One who with so much love had created him, and who so much loved him. And since it was not only Our Love that poured out in creating man, but all of Our divine qualities, therefore the power, the goodness, the wisdom, the beauty, and so forth, poured out. So, Our Love was not content with loving him, but pouring out all of Our divine qualities, It left the table always prepared and at man’s disposal, so that, each time he wanted to, he could come to sit at this celestial table to nourish himself with Our Goodness, Power, Beauty, Love and Wisdom, and so grow before Us with Our same divine qualities, with the model of Our likeness. And each time he would come into Our presence to take Our sips of Our divine qualities, We would rock him on Our knees to let him take rest, and let him digest what he had taken, so that he might again nourish himself of Our divine outpourings to form his complete growth of goodness, of power, of sanctity, of beauty, as Our Love desired and Our Will wanted. When We do a work, Our Love is so great, that We give and prepare everything, so that nothing may be lacking to Our creative work. We do complete works, never by half; and if it seems that something is missing, it is the part of the creature, who does not take everything that We have put out for her good and for Our glory.”

Then, I continued to think about the Divine Will, and my beloved Jesus added: “My daughter, the living in my Will is a gift that We give to the creature – great gift that surpasses in value, in sanctity, in beauty and in happiness all other gifts, in an infinite and unreachable way. When We give this gift so great, We do nothing other than open the doors to make her the possessor of Our divine possessions - the place in which passions, dangers, have no more life; nor can any enemy harm her or do her evil. This gift confirms the creature in good, in love, in the very Life of her Creator; and the Creator remains confirmed in the creature; therefore, the inseparability takes place between one and the other. With this gift the creature will feel her lot changed: from poor to rich, from ill to perfectly healed, from unhappy, she will feel that all things change for her into happiness. To live in Our Will as gift greatly differs from doing It; the first is prize, and Our decision to win the creature, with an invincible and irresistible force; to fill the human will with Our own in a sensible way, in a way that she will touch with her own hand, and with clarity, the great good that comes to her, such that only someone who is insane would flee from such a great good. In fact, for as long as the soul is a pilgrim one, the doors do not close behind the gift, but remain open, so that, freely, not being forced, she may live in Our gift; more so, since Our Will will not give this gift by necessity, but because It loves her, and It is fully her own. On the other hand, to do Our Will is not prize, but duty and necessity, to which, willingly or unwillingly, she must submit; and the things that are done out of duty and out of necessity, if they can be shunned, are shunned, because in them does not enter the spontaneous love that makes one love and recognize Our Will as worthy of being loved and known. The necessity hides Its good, which It contains, and makes one feel the weight of the sacrifice and of the duty. On the other hand, the living in Our Will is not sacrifice, but conquest; it is not duty, but love. She feels, in Our gift, her own self dissolved within it, and she loves It not only as Our Will, but also because It is exclusively hers; and by not giving It the first place, the regime, the dominion, she would not love herself.

Now, my daughter, this is what We want to give to creatures – Our Will as gift, because by looking at It and possessing It as one’s own thing, it will be easy to let It form Its Kingdom. This gift was given to man in Eden, and, ungrateful, he rejected it back to Us. But We did not change Our Will - We keep It reserved, and what one rejects, with more surprising graces We keep prepared to give it to others. Nor do We care about the time, because centuries for Us are like one single point. However, great preparations are needed on the part of creatures – to know the great good of the gift in order to long for it. But the time will come when Our Will will be possessed as gift by the creature.”

How doubts, fears, are wounds to love. The Divine Will is one single act. The greatest of marvels. The night and the day of the soul.

I felt oppressed because of the privations of my sweet Jesus – piercing nail, which no one can remove or soothe, to give a little relief to such a great martyrdom. Only His return, His lovable presence, can destroy, as if by magic, the nail and the pain, and it makes the purest joys arise, which only Jesus knows how to give with His lovable presence. So, I did nothing but abandon myself in the arms of the Divine Will, praying It to unveil for me the One whom I so much longed for. And while I was doing this, my lovable Jesus, like flash, lightened my poor soul and told me: “Good daughter, courage, you oppress yourself too much; and your oppression causes you to reduce yourself to the extremes, and casts you into the sad doubt that your Jesus does not love you and that maybe He will no longer come to you. No, no, I do not want this doubt. Oppressions, doubts, fears, are wounds to my Love and debilitate your love for Me, depriving you of the surge and the flight to run always toward Me in order to love Me. And once the continuous current of love toward Me is broken, you remain like a poor infirm one, and I no longer find the powerful magnet of your continuous love that draws Me to you. Now, you must know how all the acts of my Divine Will, which are innumerable, reduce themselves all to one single point and act. This is the greatest marvel of Our Supreme Being – to form, to possess, to see all possible and imaginable acts in one single act. In the same way, all the acts done by the creature in Our Will reduce themselves to one single act. Now, in order to have the virtue of enclosing all acts within one single act, she must form and possess within herself the continuous love, my perennial Will, which will give origin to all the acts and will make them start from within the virtue of one single act. See, then, all the acts you have done in my Will have unified together in one single act, and they form your cortege, your support, your strength, your light that never goes off; and they love you so much that, making themselves arms, they keep you as the dear apple of my Fiat’s eye, because in It were they formed and received life. Therefore, do not oppress yourself; enjoy the fruits of my Volition, and if you see that I delay my coming, wait for Me with patient love, and when you least expect it, I will surprise you and will make my usual little visit, and I will be happy to find you in my own Will, always in act of loving Me.”

After this, He added: “My daughter, Our Divine Being is great, immense, powerful, etc.; this does not cause much marvel, because all of these divine qualities of Ours are by nature, and form the whole entirety of Our Supreme Being. So, by nature We are immense in the Power, immense in the Love, in the Beauty, in the Wisdom, in the Mercy, and so forth; and since We are immense in all things, everything that comes out of Us remains in the nets of Our immense divine qualities. Now, what causes the greatest of marvels is to see the soul who lives in Our Divine Will, who encloses in her little act the powerful and immense act of her Creator; to see, as though lined up in the little acts of the finite being, the immense Love, the immense Wisdom, the infinite Beauty, the boundless Mercy, the interminable Sanctity of the One who created her. The little enclosing the great is more marvelous than the great enclosing the little. For Our greatness it is easy to embrace everything, to enclose everyone, nor does it take any art or industry, because from Our immensity no one can escape Us. But for the little to enclose the great, it takes an art of its own, a divine industry, which only Our Power and Our great Love can form in the creature - if We do not place of Our own, on her own she could not do it. Therefore, the living in Our Divine Fiat is the marvel of marvels, it is the greatest of prodigies. The soul renders herself so striking and artful, that it is an enchantment to see her. It can be said that in each little act of hers concurs a miracle of Ours, otherwise the little enclosing the great could not happen; and Our Goodness is such that It takes greatest delight, and waits with so much love for the creature to give It the occasion to let It perform this divine art of continuous miracles. Therefore, may you take to heart the living in Our Will more than anything; in this way you will be more content, and We, more content than you; and you will be, in Our creative hands, Our field of action and Our continuous work. If you knew how much We like Our work in the souls who live in Our Will, you would be more attentive never to go out of It.”

Then, I continued my abandonment in the Fiat, though accompanied by a sadness, because of so many afflicting things that crowd my poor mind, which it is not necessary to say on paper. Certain intimate secrets – it is right only for Jesus and Him alone to know. And my beloved Jesus repeated, with a most tender tone: “My daughter, you must know that just as nature has the night and the day, so the soul has her night, the dawn, the daybreak, the full midday and her sunset. The night calls for the day, and the day for the night; it can be said that they call for each other. Now, the night of the soul is my privation, but for one who lives in my Will these are precious nights – not of slothful rest, of restless sleep – no, no, but night of operative rest, of peaceful sleep. In fact, as she sees the night coming, she abandons herself in my arms, to lean her tired head upon my Divine Heart, and to hear my heartbeats so as to draw new love during her sleep, and say to Me while sleeping: ‘I love You, I love You, oh! my Jesus.’ The sleep of one who loves Me and lives in my Will is like the sleep of a little girl who, as she feels her eyes closing for sleep, half-asleep calls: ‘Mama, mama’, for she wants her arms and her maternal breast in order to sleep; so much so, that as soon as the tiny little one wakes up, the first word is ‘mama’, the first smile, the first gaze is for her mama. Such is the soul who lives in my Will; she is the tiny little girl who, as the night comes, looks for the One whom she loves, to draw new strength and new love in order to love Me more. And – oh! how beautiful it is to see her seeking, desiring, longing for Jesus in her sleep. This seeking, desiring and longing call for the dawn, form the daybreak, and make the full day arise, which calls for the Sun – and I rise and form the course of the day and its full midday. But you know, my daughter, that here on earth things alternate; only in Heaven it is always full daylight, because my presence is perennial amid the Blessed. So, as you see that I am about to leave you – but do you know where I stay? Inside of you. After having instructed your soul, giving you my lessons before the light of my presence, so that you might comprehend them well and they might serve you as food and as work during the day, I withdraw and form the sunset; and, hidden within you during the short night, I make Myself actor and spectator of all your acts. And while for you it seems nighttime, for Me it is the most beautiful rest, since, after I have spoken to you, I take rest in my own word, and the acts that you do serve Me as lullabies, as refreshment, as defense and as sweet cooling for my ardors of love. Therefore, let Me do; I know when the night or the day are necessary for you and for Me, in your soul. What I want is perennial peace in you, that I may carry out what I want. If you are not at peace, I feel molested in my work, and with difficulty, not with ease, I go along carrying out my designs.”

The Divine Will, depositary of all the acts of all the Saints. How God and the creature hold hands. Which ones are the acts lost from the purpose of our Creator.

My poor mind turns around the Sun of the Supreme Fiat, and I find It surrounded by all the works, sacrifices, pains, heroism, that all the Saints, ancient and new, have done; those of the Queen of Heaven, as well as that which blessed Jesus has done for love of us. The Divine Will preserves everything; It having been the prime actor of all the good acts of creatures, It keeps them jealously, It holds them in deposit within Itself, and It uses them to glorify Itself and to glorify those who did them. And I, seeing that everything belonged to the Will of God - since It is also mine, everything was mine; and going around in each act, I offered them as mine to glorify more the Eternal Volition, and to impetrate the coming of Its Kingdom upon earth. But while I was doing this, my always lovable Jesus, surprising me, told me: "My daughter, listen to the admirable secrets of my Will: if the creature wants to find everything that, beautiful, good and holy, has been done in the whole history of the world, by Me, by the Celestial Mama and by all the Saints, she must enter into the Divine Will - in It everything is found in act. As you were paying attention to each act, remembering it, offering it, the Saint who had done that act, that sacrifice, felt called by the pilgrim soul, and saw his act palpitating again on earth, and therefore, doubled, the glory to his Creator and to himself; and you, who were offering it, covered by the celestial dew of the good of that holy act. And according to the purpose, noble and high, with which it is offered, the more intense and great is the glory and the good it produces. How many riches does my Will possess! There are all my acts, those of the Sovereign Queen, which are all in waiting to be called, remembered, offered by the creature in order to duplicate the good for the benefit of creatures, and to give Us double glory. They want to be remembered, called, in order to palpitate as new life in the midst of creatures; but because of lack of attention, there are some that die, some that struggle out of weakness, some that grow numb with cold, some that have nothing with which to satisfy their hunger. Our goods, acts and sacrifices do not set out if they are not called, because by remembering them and offering them, creatures dispose themselves to recognize them and to receive the good which Our acts contain. Moreover, there is no greater honor that you can give to all of Heaven than offering their acts which they did on earth, for the noble, most high and sublime purpose of the coming of the Kingdom of the Divine Will upon earth."

Then, I continued to think about the Divine Volition, and my beloved Jesus added: "My daughter, an act, a prayer, a thought, an affection, a word, in order to be welcome, perfect, ordered, complete, must elevate themselves to the same purpose wanted by God Himself. In fact, as the creature, in her act, elevates herself to the purpose wanted by the Supreme Being, she embraces the beginning and takes into her act the purpose with which God created her. God and the creature hold hands, and want and do the same thing. By doing so, the divine order, the divine act, and the same purpose with which God wants that act to be done, enter the act of the creature. So, as the divine purpose enters, the act of its own renders itself complete, holy, perfect and fully ordered. Whoever the author of the purpose of that act is, so does the act become. On the other hand, if the creature does not elevate herself to the purpose wanted by God in her act, she goes down from the beginning of her creation and will not feel the life of the divine act within hers. Perhaps she will do many acts, but incomplete, imperfect, disordered; they will be like acts that are lost from the purpose of her Creator. Therefore, the thing that pleases Us the most is to see Our same purpose in the act of the creature; it can be said that she continues Our Life upon earth, and Our Will operating in her acts, words, and in everything."

Incessant breath of God. Divine Life and fulfilled act of God in the creature. The facsimiles, the people, the princes, the noble court, and the royal army of the Celestial Kingdom.

I feel the omnipotent force of the Divine Fiat that invests the whole of me, absorbs me and transforms me into Its light. This light is love, and it makes the Life of my Creator palpitate within me; this light is word, and it gives me the most beautiful news of the beginning of my existence – the relations, the bonds of union, the communicating virtue, the inseparability that exists still now between me and God. But who maintains all this in full force if not the Divine Will? Oh! Power of the Supreme Fiat, prostrate in the immensity of your light, I adore You profoundly, and my little nothing, loving You, dissolves within You.

But while I was thinking of this, my sweet Jesus told me: “My good daughter, only my Will maintains and preserves as intact, with a continuous act, the beginning of the creation of the creature. Our Supreme Being gave the beginning and animated her life with the power of Our divine breath. This breath was never to be broken; more so, since when We give and do an act, We never withdraw it, and this serves to form fulfilled works of the being that We issue to the light. While this first act of Ours serves to give the beginning and form the life, the continuation serves to make of the creature a fulfilled act of Ours; and as We breathe upon her, so We form in her Our continuous acts in order to complete Our Divine Life. Our breath, as We give it, forms, sip by sip, the growth of this Life of Ours in the creature. Our breath, as it gives itself, forms Our fulfilled act of sanctity, of beauty, of love, of goodness, and so forth; and when We have filled her so much, in a way that We have no more space in which to put of Our act in the creature, because she is limited, Our breath ceases and ends its life on earth; and in order to eternize Our breath in Heaven, We transport Our Life, formed in her, Our fulfilled act, into Our Celestial Fatherland as triumph of Our Creation. There is no rarity more beautiful than these lives and fulfilled acts of Ours in the celestial dwelling; they are the narrators of Our Power, of the ardor of Our Love, they are speaking voices of Our omnipotent breath, which alone could form the Divine Life, Our fulfilled act in the creature.

But do you know where We can form this Life and this fulfilled act of Ours, as much as it is possible and imaginable for a creature to receive from her Creator? In the soul who lives in Our Divine Will and lets herself be dominated by It. Ah! only in her can We form the Divine Life and carry out Our fulfilled act. Our Will disposes the creature to receive all the divine qualities and colors; and Our breath, never interrupted, as most skillful brush, paints with admirable and inimitable mastery the most beautiful shades, and forms the facsimiles of Our Supreme Being. If it were not for these facsimiles, the work of Creation would have been nothing great, nor a great work of the Power of Our creative hands; to create the sun, the heavens, the stars and the whole universe would have been an absolute nothing for Our Power. But, instead, all of Our Power, the art of Our divine arts, the indescribable excess of Our intense Love, is to do Our fulfilled act in the creature, by forming Our Life in her; and Our satisfaction is so great, that We Ourselves remain enraptured in Our act that We carry out. For Us, to do a fulfilled act is the greatest glory that most glorifies Us, it is the most intense love that most sings Our praises, it is the power that hymns Us continuously. But alas! for those who do not live in Our Will, how many of Our acts broken, without fulfillment; how many of Our Divine Lives only conceived or, at most, born without growing. They break the continuation of Our work and bind Our arms, unable to go forward; they put Us in the impotence of a master who has his land, and is prevented by his ungrateful servants from doing the work that is needed in his land, from sowing it, from planting the plants that he wants. Poor master, keeping the land sterile, without the fruit that he could receive, because of his iniquitous servants. Our land is the creatures, and the ungrateful servant is the human will, which, opposing Our own, puts Us in the impotence of forming Our Divine Life in them. Now, you must know that in Heaven one does not enter if he does not possess Our Divine Life, either conceived at least, or born; and for as much growth as each Blessed has formed of Our Life within himself, such will be his glory, his beatitude. Now, what will be the difference between one in whom It was only conceived, born or grown in small proportion, and one who has let Us form fulfilled Life? The difference will be so great as to be incomprehensible to the human creature. The first will be like the people of the Celestial Kingdom, while Our facsimiles will be princes, ministers, the noble court, the royal army of the great King. Therefore, one who does my Divine Will and lives in It can say: ‘I do everything, and I belong, even from this earth, to the Family of my Celestial Father’.”

Encounters of steps between God and the creature. How God has formed the creature as center of Creation.

My little existence revolves always in the Holy Divine Volition. I feel that It draws me more and more to Itself, and each of Its words, light or knowledge of It, is a new life that It infuses in me, an unusual joy that I experience, and a happiness without end, such that, unable to contain it because I am too small, I feel as if my heart wanted to burst with joy and with divine happiness. Oh! Divine Will, make Yourself known, possessed and loved, so that all may be happy – but of celestial happiness, not terrestrial. But while I was thinking of this, my sweet Jesus, making His little visit, told me: “My daughter, for each act that you do in my Divine Will, so many steps you take toward God, and God takes His steps toward you. The step of the creature is the call that moves the divine step to go to meet her; and since We never let Ourselves be beaten or surpassed by her acts, if she takes one step, We take five - ten, because Our Love, being greater than her own, hastens - multiplies the steps, to make the encounter sooner and dive one into the other. Even more, many times it is We who move the step in order to call the step of the creature to come to Us; We want Our creature, We want to give her something of Our own, We want her to resemble Us, We want to render her happy, and therefore We hit the step to call her. And one who is in Our Will – oh! how she hears the sweet treading of Our steps and runs to come to Us, to receive the fruits of Our steps. But do you want to know what these fruits are? Our creative word. As soon as the encounter takes place, the creature flings herself into the center of Our Supreme Being; We receive her with so much love, that unable to contain it, We identify her with Us, and with Our word We pour out Our knowledges upon her, making her share in Our Divine Being. So, each word of Ours is an outpouring that We make upon the creature, and as many degrees of knowledge as she acquires by means of Our word, so many more degrees of participation she receives from her Creator. See then, each act done in my Divine Will is the way that you form for yourself, to move the step in order to form yourself as all of Divine Will; and my word will serve you as formation, as light and as participation in Our Divinity.”

After this, my abandonment in the Divine Fiat continued, and my beloved Jesus added: “My little daughter of my Will, you must know that the only purpose of Creation was Our Love, which, externizing Itself outside of Us, formed Its center, in which, by externizing Itself, It was to centralize Itself in order to carry out the purpose for which Our Love had come out of Us. So, Our center was the creature, in whom, as Our Love would fix Itself, We were to make her feel Our Life palpitating and Our Love operating in her. And the whole of Creation was to be the circumference of this center, almost like solar rays, which were to surround, embellish, sustain this center, which, fixing itself in Us, was to give Us the field to externize ever new love, so as to render more beautiful, more rich, more majestic, the center within which Our Love was leaning, to make of it a work worthy of Our creative hands. Now, all creatures were to form, united together, the place of center of Our externized Love, but many scattered from the center, and Our Love remained suspended, It had no place in which to fix Itself in order to centralize Itself, to have Its primary purpose - the reason for which It had come out. So, the order of Our Wisdom, the operating Life of Our externized Love, could not tolerate the failure of Our purpose; this is why, in all centuries, there has always been some soul whom God has formed as center of the whole Creation, and within her Our Love leaned and Our Life palpitated and obtained the purpose of the whole Creation. It is by means of these centers that the whole Creation is maintained, and that the world still exists; otherwise, it would have no reason to exist, because the life and the cause of everything would be missing. Therefore, there has not been one century, nor will there be, in which

We will not choose souls dear to Us, more or less portentous, who will form the center of Creation, in whom We will have Our Life palpitating and Our Love operating. And according to the epochs, the times, the needs, the circumstances, they have been offered for the good of all, they have given themselves to all, they have defended all; they alone have been the ones who have sustained my sacrosanct rights and have given Me the field to maintain the order of my infinite Wisdom. Now, you must know that these souls have been chosen by Our Divine Being in each century as center of all Creation, according to what We wanted, the good that We wanted to do, and what We wanted to make known, and also according to the needs of the scattered centers; and this is the reason for the diversity in their ways, in the speaking and in the good that they have done. But the whole substance of these souls was my Life palpitating and my Love externized, leaning and operating in them.

Now, in this century We have chosen you as center of all Creation, to do the great good of making known with more clarity what it means to do Our Will, so that all might long for It and call It to reign into their midst, and, in this way, the scattered centers might unite to the only center and form a single one. Creation is a birth come out of the Power of my Divine Will, and it is right and necessary that all recognize who this Mother is, who with so much love has delivered them and issued them to daylight, so that all of Her children may live united together with the Will of their Mother; and having one single Will, it may turn out easy to form one single center, in which this Celestial Mother would make Our Divine Life and Our operating Love palpitate. More so, since the predominant vice of this century, the idol of many, is the human will - and even in the very good that they do; and this is why one sees that from within that good come out many defects and sins. This says that the fount by which it was animated was not pure, but vicious, because true good knows how to produce good fruits, and from this it can be known whether the good that is done is true or false. Therefore, there is an extreme necessity to make known my Divine Will - bond of union, powerful weapon of peace, beneficial reviver of the human society.”

The good acts done in the Divine Will change into light. Admirable effects of the abandonment in the arms of Jesus. One who lets herself be dominated by the Divine Will becomes a people of His Kingdom.

I am always in the arms of the Divine Will, which forms Its day of light in my little soul; and even though some cloud shows up in this day, the power of Its light fixes on it, and the cloud, seeing itself fixed upon, flees, it dissolves, and it seems to say: ‘It shows that there is no place for me in this day that the Divine Will forms in the creature.’ And the Divine Will seems to answer to it: “Wherever I am present, there is no place for anyone, because of the creature I want to make a single act of my Will, which does not admit anything at all that does not belong to Me.’ Oh! Divine Will, how admirable, powerful and lovable You are - and highly jealous wherever You reign. O please! always put to flight for me my miseries, the weaknesses, the clouds of my will, so that my day may be always perennial, and the heaven of my little soul may be always serene. But while I was thinking of this, my lovable Jesus told me: “My daughter, good is light, and if this good is done in my Divine Will, so many rays are formed for as many good acts as are done; and my Fiat fixes these rays of light in the circumference of Its eternal light. So, these acts take their place within Our acts, and do double office: of praise, of adorations, of perennial love, toward Our adorable Majesty, and of defense, of mercy, of help, of light, toward the human kind, according to the circumstances in which it finds itself. On the other hand, if the good acts are not done in my Will and with Its power, though they are light, they do not have the power to extend in order to fix themselves in the circumference of Our light, and they remain without supports and like broken rays, and therefore they do not have perennial life; and since the fount of the light is missing, there is the danger that, little by little, they may die down.”

After this, continuing my abandonment in the Divine Volition, I was feeling all afflicted because of the privation of my sweet Jesus. His privation is like a hammer that always pounds to exacerbate the pain more; and only then does it cease to pound, when the Divine Host comes out of His hiding place to make His little visit to His beloved creature. His sweet presence, His lovable trait, makes the joy rise again from the very pain, and the hammer ceases its cruel crafting; but as soon as the Celestial Visitor withdraws, it begins to pound again, and my poor soul feels itself all eyes, all ears – who knows, it might see Him and hear Him again; and it anxiously waits and waits for the One who, having wounded me, alone has the power to heal the wound He has given me – alas! too painful. But while I was pouring out my sorrow, my sweet Jesus came back, and embracing my poor soul, told me: “Daughter, I am here, abandon yourself in my arms, and rest in Me. Your abandonment in Me calls for my abandonment in you, and forms my sweet rest in your soul. Abandonment in Me forms the sweet and powerful chain that binds Me so much to the soul, that I cannot unbind Myself from her, to the point of rendering Me her dear and sweet prisoner. Abandonment in Me gives birth to true confidence, and she has confidence in Me, and I have confidence in her; I have confidence in her love that will never fail; I have confidence in her sacrifices, for she will never refuse Me anything of what I want; and have I all the confidence that I can accomplish my designs. Abandonment in Me says that she gives Me freedom, and I am free to do what I want; and I, entrusting Myself to her, manifest to her my most intimate secrets. Therefore, my daughter, I want you all abandoned in my arms, and the more abandoned you are in Me, the more you will feel my abandonment in you.”

And I: ‘My Love, how can I abandon myself in You if You escape from me?’ And Jesus added: “Then is the abandonment perfect, when, seeing Me escape, you abandon yourself more. This gives Me no field to be able to escape; on the contrary, it binds Me more.” Then He added: “My daughter, life, sanctity, consists in two acts: God giving His Will, and the creature receiving It; and after she has formed within herself the life of that act of Divine Will that she has received, giving it back again as act of her will, to then receive It again. Giving and receiving, receiving and giving – everything is in this. God could not give more than His continued act of His Will to the creature; the creature could not give more to God – for as much as it is possible to creature – than His Divine Will, received into herself as formation of Divine Life. In this way – giving and receiving, receiving and giving – my Divine Fiat takes dominion and forms in her Its Kingdom; and the whole interior of the creature forms as though the people of the Kingdom of the Divine Will: the intelligence, faithful people that glories in being directed by the Sovereign Commandant of the Divine Fiat; and the crowd of the thoughts that press themselves around, and aspire to know more and more, and to love the great King that sits, as though on a throne, in the center of the intelligence of the creature. The desires, the affections, the heartbeats that are unleashed from the heart, increase the number for the people of my Kingdom; and – oh! how they throng around Its throne; they all stand at attention to receive the divine orders and even lay down their life in order to execute them. What an obedient, orderly people is the people of the Kingdom of my Fiat. There are no contentions, no differences, but this whole crowd of people of the interior of this fortunate creature wants one thing alone, and like a fierce army, it posts itself in the fortresses of the Kingdom of my Divine Will. Then, when the interior of the creature becomes all my people, it pops out of the interior and increases the people of the words, the people of the works, of the steps. It can be said that each act formed by this celestial people contains the password, written in gold characters: ‘Will of God’. And when this crowd of people moves to exercise each its own office, they put in the front the flag with the motto ‘Fiat’, followed by the words, written with vivid light: ‘We belong to the great King of the Supreme Fiat.’ See then, each creature who lets herself be dominated by my Will forms a people for the Kingdom of God.”

How confidence forms the arms and the feet of the soul. How God continues the work of Creation in the soul who does His Will. The Divine Will, cement of the human will.

My Jesus, center and Life of my little soul, my littleness is such, that I feel the extreme need for You, my Love, to hold me tightly in your arms and be moved to pity for my great weakness. I am tiny, and You know that the little ones have need of swaddling clothes to strengthen their members, and of the milk of their mama in order to be nourished and grow. And I feel the intense need for You to swaddle me with the swaddling clothes of love and, clasping me to your divine breast, give me the milk of your Divine Will for food, to nourish me and make me grow. Hear, oh! Jesus, I feel the need of your Life in order to live. I want to live of You; and then You will be writing, not I, and You will be able to write what You want and the way You want it. Therefore, the task is yours, not mine; I will only lend You my hand, and You will do all the rest. Let us make this agreement, oh Jesus.

Then, abandoning myself in the arms of Jesus, I heard His most sweet voice whispering to my ear, saying to me: "My little daughter, the more You remain abandoned in Me, the more you will feel my Life in you, and I will take the place of primary life in your soul. Know that true confidence in Me forms the arms of the soul, and the feet in order to climb up to Me and clasp Me so tightly, that I cannot unbind Myself from her. So, one who has no confidence, has no arms, nor feet - she is a poor cripple. Therefore, your confidence will be your victory over Me, and I will hold you tightly in my arms, attached to my breast, to give you the continuous milk of my Divine Will.

Now, you must know that each time the soul does my Will, I recognize Myself in the creature, I recognize my works, my steps, my words, my love. It happens that the Creator recognizes Himself and His works in the creature; and the creature, in operating, projects herself in the Creator and recognizes herself in Him. This recognizing themselves in each other, God and the soul, calls for the first act of Creation, and God goes out of His rest and continues the work of Creation with this creature who lives and operates in my Will. In fact, Our work did not end - there was only a pause of rest; and the creature, by doing Our Will, calls Us to work, but - sweet call, because for Us work is new happiness, new joys and prodigious conquests. So, We do nothing other than continue Our outpourings of love, of power, of goodness and of unreachable wisdom, which gave the start in Creation. And the creature feels that her God does not rest for her, but continues the labor of His creative work. And as she operates in Our Will, she feels, starting over her soul, the rain of the operating love of God, His power and wisdom that does not remain idle, but works in her soul. Oh! if you knew the enjoyment, the pleasure We feel when the creature calls Us to work. By calling Us, she recognizes Us; by calling Us, she opens the doors to Us, she gives Us dominion, and she gives Us all the freedom to do what We want in her soul; so, We will do a work worthy of Our creative hands. Therefore, never let Our Divine Will escape you if you want Our work to be continuous; It will be your voice-bearer and Ours, in which you will emit your voice to call Us, and We will hear the sweet whispering to Our ear and will immediately descend into Our own Will within your soul, to continue Our work. In fact, you must know that the continuous acts form fulfilled life and works; what is not continuous can be called effects of my Will, not life that is formed in the creature, and the effects little by little vanish away, and one remains on an empty stomach. Therefore, courage and confidence, and always forward, crossing the sea of the Divine Will."

After this, I was following the acts that my highest Good, Jesus, had done in His Humanity when He was on earth; and making Himself heard, He added: “My daughter, my human will had no act of life; but rather, it was in act of receiving the continuous act of my Divine Will, which I, as Word of the Celestial Father, possessed. Therefore, all my acts and pains, prayers, breaths and heartbeats that I did, as my human will would undergo the life of the Divine Will, formed many ties, to retie the human wills to Mine. And since these human wills were like houses, some collapsing, others damaged, and others reduced to ruin, my Divine Will, operating in my Humanity, prepared with my acts the helps to sustain the ones collapsing, to cement the ones damaged, and to raise again, upon their very ruins, the houses destroyed. I did nothing for Myself - I did not have any need; I did everything in order to redo, to rehabilitate, the human wills. My only need was love, and wanting to be loved back. Now, in order to receive all my helps and all my pains and works as operating works, speaking voice and helping messengers, the creature must unite her will to Mine, and immediately she will feel herself retied to Mine, and all my acts will offer themselves around to do their offices, in order to sustain, cement and raise again the human will. As soon as she unites herself and decides to do my Divine Will, all of my acts, like fierce army, place themselves as defense of the creature, and form the boat of safety in the stormy sea of life. But for one who does not do my Will, I could say that she receives nothing, nor can she receive, because my Will alone is the out-giver of everything I did for love of creatures.”

November 9, 1931

How God has the acts of the creature established. Operating and incessant act of the Divine Will. One who does not do the Divine Will is left without Mother, and remains orphaned and derelict.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues. Oh! with what tenderness It awaits me on Its maternal lap, to say to me: “Daughter of my Will, never leave Me alone; your Mama wants you together with Her. I want your company in the incessant work that I do for all creatures. I do everything for them, I do not leave them for one instant, because if I left them they would lose life. Yet, there are those who do not recognize Me – even more, they offend Me, while I am all for them. Oh! how hard is loneliness – this is why I long for you, my daughter. Oh! how dear to Me is your company in my acts! Company renders the work sweet, it empties it of its weight, and is the bearer of new joys.”

But while my mind was wandering in the Divine Will, my always lovable Jesus, making me His little visit, told me: “My daughter, my Will is untiring; wanting to maintain the life, the order, the balance of all generations and of the entire universe, It cannot, nor does It want to cease Its work. More so, since each motion is as though given birth by It, and bound with inseparable bonds. An image of It is the air, which, while no one sees it, yet gives birth to the breath in the creatures, and is inseparable from the human respiration. Oh! if the air ceased its work of letting itself be breathed, the life of all creatures would suddenly cease. My Will is more than air; the air is nothing other than the symbol, the image, and it produces the life of the respiration from the vital virtue of my Divine Will; while my Will is life in Itself – and uncreated. Now, God has all the acts of creatures, and the number of their acts, established. So, the commitment of these acts, because they are established by God, is taken by my Divine Will. It orders them, and It places Its life in them – but who gives the fulfillment to these acts established by the Supreme Being? One who cooperates with them and lets herself be dominated by the Divine Will. With the cooperation, and with Its dominion, she feels the bond and the inseparability from It, and feels Its divine life flow in her acts. On the other hand, when she does not cooperate, she loses the dominion of my Divine Will, and instead of doing Mine, she does her will, and each act of human will forms a void for the divine in the soul. These voids disfigure the poor creature, and since she was made for God, He alone can fill these voids, because the acts, established in their number, were to serve to fill her with the Divine Being. Oh! how horrible are these voids – in them appear crooked ways, acts without divine origin and without life; therefore, there is nothing that ruins the creature more than her will. So, my Will is operating and incessant act, inside and outside of the creature – but who receives Its operative act? One who recognizes It in all her acts. One who recognizes It loves It, esteems It, appreciates It. By being recognized, my Will makes one touch with one's own hand Its operative and incessant act; and the creature feels Its arms in hers, the power of Its motion in hers, Its vivifying virtue in her breath, the formation of Its life in the beating of her heart. Everywhere, from inside, from outside, she feels herself being vivified, touched, embraced, kissed by my Will. And my Will, as It sees that the creature feels Its loving embraces, clasps her more to Its divine breast, and keeps forming Its sweet chains of inseparability between Itself and Its beloved creature. By being recognized, It feels as though repaid of Its incessant work, and with Its power It removes the veil that kept It hidden from the creature, and It makes her know who it is that forms the life of all her acts. Therefore, the more you will recognize It, the more you will feel how much It loves you, and you will love It more.

In addition to this, you must know that the soul without my Divine Will is like a flower that is picked from the plant. Poor flower – they took its life away, because it is no longer bound to the root, and, detached, it no longer receives the vital humors which circulated like blood and kept it alive, fresh, beautiful, fragrant, because it has lost the root which, like mother, loved it, nourished it and kept it clasped to its breast. And while the root remains under the earth, as though buried alive to give life to the flowers, its children, and to let them make a beautiful appearance, so much so, as to draw the human attention with its sweet enchantment, however, as the flower is picked from the plant, as if it had lost its mother, it seems to assume an attitude of melancholy, it loses its freshness, and it ends up withering. Such is the soul without my Divine Will; she detaches herself from the Divine Root which, more than mother, loved her, nourished her; and while It lives as though buried, It lives in all her acts and in the depth of her soul to administer to her the divine humors, which It makes circulate like blood in all her acts, in order to maintain her fresh, beautiful, perfumed by its divine virtues, so much so, as to form the most beautiful and sweet enchantment for the earth and for the whole of Heaven. So, as she detaches herself from my Divine Will, she loses her true Mama, who with many maternal cares kept her safe, held her tightly to Her breast, defended her from everyone and from everything; and she ends up becoming disfigured and withering to all that is good. And these souls come to feel the sad melancholy for they live without She who generated them, without life, without the caresses of their Mama. So, they can be called poor derelict orphans, without custody, and maybe in the hands of enemies and tyrannized by the passions of their own self. Oh! if the root had reason, how many harrowing cries of sorrow would it not emit in seeing the life of its flowers being snatched away, and itself being forced, like sterile mother, to remain without the crown of its children! But if the plant does not cry, my Will cries in seeing so many of Its children orphaned – but voluntary orphans, who feel all the pains of orphanhood, while their Mother lives and does nothing but sadly miss and call the crown of Her children around Herself.”

Each human act is a game, a pledge, in order to win the celestial graces. The human act is soil in which the Divine Will sows Its seed. How love constitutes a right.

I feel myself prey to the Divine Will – yet not forced, but voluntary; and I feel the intense need to make a prey for myself too, that would render me happy in time and eternity; and therefore in all my acts I try to make a prey of the light of the Divine Will, of Its sanctity, of Its very life. So I call It, I press It, to capture It in my acts, to enclose It in them and be able to say: ‘Each act of mine is a prey and a conquest that I make’ – prey and conquest of Divine Will. More so since, It having preyed mine, without a will I cannot live, therefore it is fair, and a right, for me to make a prey of Its own; and in this preying of each other, it seems to me that we maintain the correspondence, the game; and the love of both sides ignites more.

Now, while I was thinking of this, my sweet Jesus seemed to be pleased in hearing my nonsense; and I said to myself: ‘After all, I am little and just newly born. If I speak nonsense it is not a big deal – but rather, one is to make allowances for me, because the little ones are prone to speak nonsense, and many times dear Jesus delights in the nonsense spoken out of pure love, and He takes the occasion to give a little lesson, as in fact He did.’ Visiting my little soul, He told me: “My little daughter of my Will, indeed everything that passes between the Creator and the creature, the acts that she does, and what she receives from God, serve to maintain the correspondence, for them to know each other more so as to love each other more, and to keep up the game between each other – to obtain the intent of what God wants from the creature, and of what she wants from God. So, each act is a game that is prepared to obtain the most beautiful victories and make a prey of each other. The act serves as material in order to play, and as pledge in order to have something to give to the winner. God, by giving, puts in His pledge; the creature, by doing her act, puts in her own - and they set up the game. And Our goodness is so great, that We make Ourselves weak so as to let the creature win; other times We make Ourselves strong, and We win; and this We do in order to keep her on her toes, so that, by doing more acts, she may put in more pledges, and so she may be able to win, to make up for the defeat. After all, how could the union be maintained, if We were to give nothing, and the creature were to give Us nothing? See then, each act is a committing of Ourselves to give greater graces, and a correspondence that you open between Heaven and earth, and a game in which you call your Creator to be with you. More so, since each act done by the Divine Will in the act of the creature is a divine seed that germinates in her; the act prepares the soil in which my Will sows Its seed, to make it germinate into a divine plant. In fact, according to the seed that is sown into the womb of the earth, that is the plant that is born: if the seed is of flowers, the flower is born; if the seed is of fruit, the fruit is born. Now, my Divine Will sows a distinct seed in each act of creature: in some It sows the seed of sanctity, in some the seed of love, in others the seed of goodness, and so forth. The more acts she does in It, the more soil she prepares in which my Will prepares Its distinct seed, to fill the earth with these human acts. So, one who lets herself be dominated by my Divine Will is beautiful, is striking; each of her acts, containing the variety of the divine seeds, is a note of her Creator: one act says sanctity, another mercy, others justice, wisdom, beauty, love. In sum, a divine harmony appears, with such order, that it shows the finger of God operating in her. Do you see, then, the necessity of the act of the creature in order for Us to be able to find the soil in which to enclose Our divine seed? Otherwise, where to sow it? As for Us, We have no soil, therefore she must form it for Us with her acts, so that, with Our seeds, We may germinate the Divine Being in the creature. Therefore, one who does and lives in Our Divine Will can be called the one who reproduces her Creator and hosts within herself the One who created her.”

Then, I continued my acts in the Divine Volition, and my littleness wanted to embrace everything in my embrace of love, to be able to make my little love run in all things and everywhere. But while I was doing this, my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, to love means to possess, and wanting to make the beloved person or object one’s own. To love means bond, whether of friendship or of kinship or of sonship, according to the greater or lesser intensity of the love. So, if between the creature and God there is no void of divine love, if all his acts run toward God to love Him, if they have their origin in love and in love they end, if he looks at all things that belong to the Supreme Being as his own – this says love of son toward his Father, because in this way one does not go out, either of the divine properties or of the house of the Celestial Father. In fact, true love constitutes a right in the creature – right of sonship, right of participation in the goods, right to be loved. Each of his acts of love is a vibrating note that palpitates in the Divine Heart; and with its sound it says: ‘I love You – love me.’ And the sound does not cease if he does not hear the note of his Creator that, echoing the sound of the soul, answers to him: “I love you, oh son.” Oh! how We await the ‘I love You’ of the creature, to let him take his place in Our Love, to have the sweet pleasure of being able to say to him: ‘I love you, oh son’, and so be able to give him a greater right to love Us and to belong to Our Family. A broken love, and one that does not make Our things its own, nor does it defend them, cannot be called love of son; at most, it can be love of friendship, love of circumstance, love of interest, love of necessity, which does not constitute a right, because only sons have the right to possess the goods of the father, and the father has the sacrosanct duty, even by divine and human laws, to make his children possess his goods. Therefore, love always, so that you may find, in all your acts, the love, the encounter, the kiss of your Creator.”

Surge and empire of the acts done in the Divine Will. Exchange of life between Creator and creature. Sweet murmuring in the Divine Being.

I feel the holy duty, the irresistible force, the extreme necessity, to live in my dwelling, given to me by my Celestial Jesus – that is, by His adorable Will; and if sometimes I make some little exits – oh! how much they cost me. I feel that all evils swoop down on me, and feeling the great contrast that exists between living in my dear dwelling in which beloved Jesus has given me my place, and outside of it, I dash to take my place, assigned to me by Him, and I bless the One who gave me a dwelling so happy, and gave me the great good of making me know His Most Holy Will.

But while my little intelligence was crossing the great sea of the Supreme Fiat, my beloved Good, Jesus, made Himself felt in my little soul, and told me: “My daughter, to be in the dwelling of my Divine Will is to be at one’s place of honor, given to her by God when the creature was issued to daylight; and for one who is at her place, God allows nothing to be lacking to her – neither sanctity, nor light, nor strength, nor love. Even more, He places at the creature’s disposal whatever she wants to take from within the divine source; so, she lives in the abundance of all goods. All the acts done in the Divine Will have the operative virtue of God, who feels drawn by His own power to operate in the act of the creature, and therefore these acts have the virtue of flinging themselves with such might and empire into the same sea of the Divine Will, to move It and place It in attitude of redoubling Its glory, and to let It operate new goodness, new mercy, new love and light toward all creatures. So, with her acts she does nothing other than spin the divine engine to let it operate. It is true that, of Our own, We are continuous motion that produces incessant works, but it is also true that, by doing, herself, her acts in Our Will, she enters into this motion, she places something of her own, and Our motion feels itself being spun and moved by the creature, to produce Our works – We feel her immediate act with all Our works. So, to feel her together with Us, with Our acts, is the greatest glory and happiness that We can receive. Do you think it is trivial that We give her the virtue of moving the whole of Our Divine Being? And since We enjoy, as long as she remains at her place, We let her do what she wants, because We know with certainty that she will do nothing but what We Ourselves want. All the opposite for one who lives of human will; her acts do not have divine power, they are without surge, they remain down below, and many times they embitter their Creator.”

After this, I was saying to myself: ‘Oh! how I would want to give to my Jesus, to attest my love to Him, as many lives for as many acts as I do.’ And my Jesus added: “My daughter, you must know that, in each thing that the creature does, We give the act of life that comes out of Us. If she thinks, We give her the life of the thought of Our intelligence; if she speaks, We give her, in her voice, the life of Our word; if she operates, the life of Our works runs within hers; if she walks, We give the life of Our steps in hers. See, it is two acts of life that must run in each act of the creature: first, the act of divine life, and, immediately, her act. Now, if in all the things that she does, she does them out of love for the One who gives her life, an exchange of life is formed: life We give, and life We receive. And although there is great difference between the acts of Our life and those of the creature, yet We remain glorified and satisfied, because that is what she can give Us, and that is what she gives Us. More so, since all the acts done by her to give Us the exchange of life remain, not outside of Us, but inside of Us, as attestations of perennial life of the creature. We feel the exchange of her life with the life that We have given to her in Our Divine Being; Our Will and Our Love bring Us the sweet murmuring of the life of her thoughts in Our intelligence, the gentle murmuring of her word in Our voice; her works murmur sweetly in Our works, and the treading of her steps, as they walk, murmur ‘love’ and ‘attestations of life to my Creator’.” And We, in Our emphasis of love, say: ‘Who is it that murmurs in Our Divine Being with the life of her acts? One who is in Our Will and operates out of pure love for Us.’ But what is not Our sorrow when We give life to the acts of the creature and We receive nothing! These acts of hers remain outside of Us and as though dispersed, because the current of Our Will and of Our Love is missing, which would bring them to Us; and these acts, the majority of them, carry the seal of the offense to the One who gave them life. Oh! if creatures comprehended with clarity what it means to do their will, they would die of pain in comprehending the great evil into which they hurl themselves, and the great good that they lose by not doing Our Divine Will. Be attentive, my daughter, if you do not want to lose the eyes of the soul - which are my Will. Once these are lost, you yourself will not comprehend your highest misfortune, just as many other creatures do not comprehend it, who gamble away the Divine Will to do their own – but to do what? To render themselves unhappy.”

Good of the prolixity of time. How God counts the hours and the minutes to fill them with graces. One who does the Divine Will tears the veil that hides her Creator. Bath of light that the Divine Will gives.

I was feeling oppressed because of the privations of my sweet Jesus, and as though tired of my long exile; and I thought to myself: ‘I would never have believed it – a life so long. Oh! had it been shorter, as for many others, I would not have gone through so much. But, Fiat! Fiat!’ I felt that my mind wanted to make nonsense, therefore I prayed Jesus to help me, and I swore to Him that I want to do always His adorable Will. And the Sovereign Jesus, dispelling the darkness that surrounded me, made His little visit to my soul, and told me with unspeakable tenderness: “Good daughter, courage. Since your Jesus wants to give you more and receive more from you, I permit the prolixity of time. There is no comparison that holds between one who has given Me proofs for a few years and one who has done so for long years. A prolonged time always tells more: more circumstances, more occasions, more tests, more pains; and remaining faithful, constant, patient in so many circumstances – and not for a short while, but for a long time – oh! how many more things does this tell. You must know that each hour of life under the empire of my Divine Will is new divine lives that one receives, new graces, new beauties, new ascendancies before God, corresponding to a new glory. On Our part We measure the time, what We give, and We wait for the requital of the act of the creature in order to give again; and for the creature it takes time in order to digest what We have given, and therefore let her take another step toward Us. If she adds nothing to what We have given, We do not give immediately, but We wait for her act in order to give again. So, there is nothing greater, more important, more pleasing before Us, than a prolixious life, lived in a saintly way; each hour is already one more proof of love, of fidelity, of sacrifice that she has given Us; and We count even the minutes, so that not one of them may not be filled with graces and with Our divine charisms. With a short life, We can count few hours, and We cannot give her much. Therefore, let Me do, and I want you to be happy with what I do; and if you want to be happy, think that each hour of your life is a pledge of love that you give Me, which will serve to bind Me to love you more. Aren’t you happy?”

After this, I was continuing my acts in the Divine Will, and I felt upon me the empire, Its immensity that overwhelmed the whole of me within It; and my beloved Jesus added: “Beloved daughter of my Will, to live in It means to recognize Its Paternity; and as she feels herself a daughter, she wants to be close, clasped, on the knees of her Father, and live in His house – and by right, because she recognizes herself as a birth from Him who, with so much love, generated her and delivered her to the light; and she looks at all other things as extraneous, and without the sweet bond, either of Paternity or of daughtership. So, she sees with clarity that, by going out of the house of her Father, she would be a lost daughter, who would have not even a nest in which to form her abode. And this is why one who does and lives in my Divine Volition tears the veils of Our power and finds that her Creator powerfully loves her, and draws His creature with His power to make Himself powerfully loved. Tearing the veil, she finds the sacrarium of the divine power, and she fears no more, because if He is powerful, He is powerful to love her and to make Himself loved; and loving with powerful love, she becomes daring and tears the veil of the divine wisdom, of goodness, of mercy, of love and of justice, and finds as though many divine sacraria that love her wisely, and with a goodness most tender and excessive, united to mercy unheard-of, they love her; she finds the overflowing love that loves her immensely; and since the Divine Being is order, He loves her with justice. And the creature, moving from one sacrarium to another, not outside, but inside of these divine veils, feels the reflections of her Creator and she loves Him wisely, with goodness and tenderness, united to mercy which, since her God has no need of it, she turns for the good of all generations; and feeling the love that overflows within her bosom - oh! how she would want to melt herself in love in order to love Him; but justice, preserving her, gives her the right love, as much of it as it is possible for creature, and it confirms her in life.

My daughter, how many things do these veils of Our divine qualities hide. But to no one is it given to tear these, Our veils, except to one who does and lives in Our Will. She alone is the fortunate creature who sees her God, not veiled, but as He is in Himself. And because We are not recognized as We are in Ourselves, they have such low and perhaps even distorted ideas of Our Supreme Being; and this is because, not having Our Will in them, they do not feel within themselves the life of the One who created them. They touch Our veils, but not what is inside, and therefore they feel Our power as oppressive, Our light eclipsing, as though in act of moving them away from Us and putting them at a distance; they feel Our sanctity as veiled, that makes them feel ashamed, and, discouraged, they live immersed in their passions. But it is all their fault, because there is a sentence pronounced by Us in the terrestrial paradise: 'Here one cannot enter - this is a place only for those who do and live in Our Will.' And therefore the first creatures were put out, placing an Angel as guard, to prevent their entrance. Our Will is paradise for creatures - terrestrial on earth, and celestial in Heaven, and it can be said that an Angel is placed there to guard It. One who does not want to do It, and does not want to live in Its arms and live common life in Its house, would be an intruder if he did so - but he cannot do it either, because Our veils become so thick that he would not find the way to get in. And just as an Angel forbids him the entrance, so another Angel guides and gives the hand to one who wants to live of Our Will. Therefore, content yourself with dying a thousand times rather than not doing Our Will.

You must know that Our Will is all eyes over the happy creature who wants to live of It; and as she does her acts, It gives her Its bath of divine life. This bath refreshes her and makes her feel the divine coolings; and since the light, as it forms, by its own nature produces fecundity, sweetness, flavors, colors within its veils of light, so, while in appearance it seems only light, inside it hides so many beautiful riches and innumerable qualities, such that no other element can be said to be similar to it - even more, it is from the light that they implore the fecundity and the good that each element must do in the order in which it was placed by God. The light can be called the soul of created things - symbol of Our uncreated light of Our Divine Fiat that animates everything. So, with this bath of divine light, as she is about to do her acts in It, the soul feels herself being sweetened, balmed, fortified, purified and invested by the beautiful iris of the divine colors, which render the soul so graceful, striking and beautiful, that God Himself feels enraptured by a beauty so rare. This bath of light is like the preparation to be able to cross the thresholds and tear the veil that hides Our Divine Being to the human creatures. More so, since it is Our interest that one who lives in Our Will be like Us and do not a thing that would be unworthy of Our Majesty trice Holy. Therefore, think that it is a bath of light that my Will gives you every time you dispose yourself to do your acts in Its interminable light, so that you may be attentive to receive it."

The Queen of Heaven, withdrawer of the good acts of creatures into Her seas of graces. The immutability of God and the mutability of the creature.

I continue my abandonment in the Divine Fiat. Its sweet chains clasp me so tightly – but not so as to take the freedom away from me – no, no, but to render me more free in the divine fields, and to keep me defended from everyone and from everything. So, I feel safer, enchained by the Divine Will. And while I was doing my acts in It, I felt the need of my Celestial Mama, for Her to help me and to sustain my little acts, so that they might encounter the divine satisfaction and smile. And the Celestial Consoler, who is unable to deny me anything when it is about pleasing Him, visiting my poor soul, told me: “My daughter, our Celestial Mama holds primacy over all the good acts of creatures. She, as Queen, has the mandate and the right to make the withdrawal of all their acts into Her acts. Her love of Queen and of Mother is so great, that as the creature disposes herself to form her act of love, from the height of Her throne She makes a ray of Her love descend, She invests and surrounds their act of love to place in them from Her own, as prime love. And as it is formed, She takes it up within Her same ray of love into the fount of Her love; and She says to Her Creator: “Adorable Majesty, in my love which always springs for You, there is the love of my children fused within my own, which I, with right of Queen, have withdrawn into my sea of love, so that You may find, in my own, the love of all creatures.” If they adore, if they pray, if they repair, if they suffer, from the height of Her throne descend the ray of the adoration, the ray of Her prayer, the ray of Her reparation; She unleashes the vivifying ray from within the sea of Her sorrows, and She invests and surrounds the adoration, the prayer, the reparation, the sufferings of creatures. And when they have done and formed the act, the same ray of light takes them up unto Her throne, and they fuse within the fount of the seas of the adoration, of the prayer, of the reparation, of the sorrows of the Celestial Mama. And She repeats: “Majesty Most Holy, my adoration extends in all the adorations of creatures, my prayer prays You in their prayer, repairs with their reparation, and, as Mother, my sorrows invest and surround their pains. I will not feel Myself Queen if I do not run and place my prime act over all their acts; nor will I enjoy the sweetnesses of Mother if I do not run to surround, help, compensate for, embellish, fortify all the acts of creatures, so that I may be able to say: ‘The acts of my children are one with mine; I hold them in my power before God in order to defend them, help them, and as the sure pledge that they will reach Me in Heaven.’”

Therefore, my daughter, you are never alone in your acts – you have the Celestial Mama together with you, who not only surrounds you, but nourishes your act with Her light of Her virtues, to give it life. In fact, you must know that the Sovereign Queen, even from Her Immaculate Conception, was the first and only creature who formed the link of connection between the Creator and the creature, broken by Adam. She accepted the divine mandate to bind God and men, and She bound them with Her prime acts of fidelity, of sacrifice, of heroism, of making Her will die in each of Her acts – not once, but always, to make that of God live again. From this sprang forth a fount of divine love, which cemented God and man and all their acts. So, Her acts, Her maternal love, Her dominion of Queen, are cement that runs – that cements the acts of the creatures to render them inseparable from Her own, unless someone, ungrateful, would refuse to receive the cement of the love of his Mama. Therefore, you must be convinced that around your patience there is the patience of the Queen Mama that surrounds, sustains and nourishes yours around your pains; Her sorrows surround you, sustaining and nourishing, like balsamic oil, the hardness of your pains. In sum, in everything She is the Queen, all-doer, who is unable to remain idle upon Her throne of glory, but descends – runs as Mother into the acts and needs of Her children. Therefore, thank Her for Her many maternal cares, and thank God who has given to all generations a Mother so holy, lovable, and who loves so much as to reach the point of acting as the withdrawer of all their acts in order to cover them with Her own, and to compensate for what is lacking in them, of beauty and of goodness.”

Then I continued my usual round in the created things, to follow what the Divine Will had done in Creation; and – oh! how beautiful and enchanting It seemed to me. Every single time I go around in It, I find surprises that enrapture me, new things that I had not understood before, the ancient and new love of God that never changes. But while my mind wandered within the horizons of Creation, my lovable Jesus, surprising me, added: “My little daughter of my Will, how beautiful are Our works, aren’t they? Everything is solidity, perfect balance, immutability, which is not subject to change, nor can it mutate. See then, all Creation tells and reveals Our Divine Being, Our solidity in Our works; Our balance is universal in all things, and no matter how many things may happen, whether pleasing or displeasing, Our immutability is always at its place of honor. We have changed nothing of the way It was created; and if the creature sees and feels many various changes, she is the one who changes, who mutates at every circumstance; and since this changing is inside and outside of herself, she feels as if Our works were changing for her. These are her own changes that surround her, that have the power to move her away from Our immutability. Everything is continued and balanced in Us - what We did in Creation still continues; and since everything was made for those who would live in Our Will, as the creature places herself in order with It, Our creative work carries out its continued act in her, and she feels the life of Our immutability, the perfect balance of Our works, Our love that loves her always without ever ceasing. There where We find Our Will We continue the work of Our Creation; not because Our work is interrupted because Our Will is not done – no, no, there is no danger. It is because the purpose for which they were created, which is that of doing Our Will, is missing in them, and therefore they have no eyes to look at Our perfect balance which is above them to balance their works and render them immutable together with Our immutability; nor ears to hear what Our works say; nor hands to touch them and receive Our continued love that We hold out to them. Therefore, they themselves rendered themselves as though estranged from the house of their Celestial Father; and Our acts continue, do their course, but for them they remain as though suspended and without effects.”

December 14, 1931

One who does the Divine Will is carried in the arms of Its immensity. Man, citadel of God. Difference between one who lives and one who does the Divine Will.

I am always back in the Divine Volition. It seems to me that my little soul takes its flight within Its light, to be consumed and lose my life in It. But – no! While I consume myself, I rise again to new love, to new light, to new knowledge, to new strength, to new union with Jesus and with His Divine Will. Oh! happy resurrection that brings so much good to my soul. It seems to me that my soul, in the Divine Will, is always in act of dying, to receive the true life and form, little by little, the resurrection of my will in Its own. Then, my highest Good, Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: “My daughter, Our Will is the prime point and the unmovable and unshakeable support of the creature. She is carried in the arms of Our immensity, in such a way that inside and outside of her nothing vacillates, but everything is solidity and insurmountable strength. Therefore, We want nothing but Our Divine Will to be done, so as to find in the depth of her soul Our divine sacrarium, the hearth that always burns and is never extinguished, the light that forms the divine and perennial day. And since Our Will, when It reigns in the creature, gets rid of all that is human, it happens, then, that from the center of her soul she gives Us divine acts, divine honors, divine prayers and love which possess invincible strength and insurmountable love. So much so, that as you, in my Will, wanted to embrace all the works of those who are in Heaven, and of the creatures who are on earth, so that all might ask that the Divine Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven, all the works remained marked by the great honor of asking that my Fiat be the life of each creature, and that It may reign and dominate in them; and Our Divinity received the greatest honor – that all works would ask for the life, the Kingdom of the Divine Will. No deed of grace is conceded by Us if it is not signed by the golden signature of Our Will; the doors of Heaven do not open but for one who wants to do Our Will; Our paternal knees do not adapt to take into Our arms, to let her rest in Our loving bosom, but one who comes as daughter of Our Will.

Here, then, the great distinction that Our Supreme Being used in creating the heavens, the sun, the earth and so forth, from the way of creating man. In the created things It placed an ‘enough’, in a way that they can neither grow nor decrease, although It placed in them all the sumptuousness, the beauty and magnificence of the works come out of Our creative hands. On the other hand, in creating man, since We had to hold Our dwelling place in him, and therefore Our Will dominating and operating, It did not place an ‘enough’ – no, but It gave him the virtue of doing multiplicity of works, of steps, of words, but one different from the other. Our Will in man would remain hampered if It did not give him the virtue of doing works ever new – not subject to doing only one work, of saying the same word, of moving his steps on one path alone. He was created by Us as king of Creation, because since His Creator, the King of kings, was to dwell in him, it was right that he who formed the dwelling for Our Divine Being would be the little king who was to dominate the very things created by Us. And he himself, for love of Us, was to have the power to do, not just one work, but many new works – sciences to be able to start new things, also to give honor to the One who dwelled inside of him, and who, remaining with him in intimate conversation, would teach him many beautiful things, to do and say. Therefore, Our Love in creating man was insuperable - but so much, that It was to overwhelm all centuries, to give love and ask for love, and form in him the Kingdom of Our Divine Will. We have no other aim upon creatures, nor other sacrifice, but for them to do Our Will; and this, in order to give man the right to be king of himself and of created things, and to be able to dwell in him with Our decorum and honor, as Our citadel and royal palace that belongs to Us.”

After this, while I continued my abandonment in the Divine Volition, my beloved Jesus added: “My good daughter, you must know that Our Will has Its life, Its dominion, Its dwelling place, Its center, in Our Divine Being; It forms one single thing with Us, and Our very life; from Its center It emits Its rays full of Its life that fills Heaven and earth. Now, for one who lives in Our Will, her acts are formed in the center of Its life – that is, in Our Divine Being. On the other hand, one who only does Our Will, also does good, but does not live in It; her acts are formed in the rays which It emits from Its center. There is a difference between one who could operate in the light that the sun spreads from the center of its sphere, and one who could rise into its center of light. This one would feel the consummation of her being and the rising again of her being in that center of light, in such a ways that it would be difficult for her to detach herself from within that sphere of light. On the other hand, the others who operate in the light that fills the earth do not feel the intense power of the light that consumes them, nor that to rise again in the same light; and even though they do good, they remain as they are. Such is the difference between one who lives and one who does my Will. So, for as many acts as she does in It, so many times does she rise again to divine life, and is consumed and dies to what is human. How beautiful are these resurrections in the soul! It is enough to say that they are formed by the wisdom and mastery of the Divine Maker; and this says everything – all the beauty and all the goodness that We can do in the creature.”

How a continued act is like judge, order and sentry of the creature. Who the depositories of Jesus are. Divine fields and seas.

My abandonment in the Divine Fiat continues. Its power imposes Itself upon me, and wants me to recognize It in each act of mine, as life of my act, to be able to extend with Its power the new heavens of beauty, of love; to be able to recognize, in my act, Its own act, which does not know how to do small things, but great, that must arouse the amazement of the whole of Heaven and be capable of competing with all Its works. But if I do not recognize It, my act is not fit for receiving the power of the act of the Divine Will, and my act remains act of creature, and Its power remains aside. Oh! Divine Will, let it be that I may always recognize You, to be able to enclose in my act your potentiality, operating and glorifying, of the works of your adorable Will. Then, while I was thinking of this, my beloved Jesus made His short little visit to my poor soul, and told me: “My daughter, to recognize what my Will can do in the act of the creature forms the divine act in her; and in this act, as its foundation, my Will places the divine beginning; and as it keeps forming, It invests it with Its immutability, in such a way that the creature will feel in her act a divine beginning that never shows any sign of ending, and an immutability that never changes. She will hear within herself the ringing of the bell of her continued act that does its continuous course. This is the sign that the soul has received the divine beginning into her acts: the continuation – a prolixious act says God dwelling in her and in her acts; it says confirmation of the good, because the value, the grace, the power of a continued act is so great, that it fills the little voids of intensity of love, the little weaknesses to which the human nature is subject. It can be said that a continued act or virtue, is like the judge, the order, the sentry of the creature. This is why I care so much that your acts be continuous – because there is something of my own inside of them, and I would feel my act dishonored in yours.

See, my daughter, my ardor of love is so great, that I want everything I have done for love of creatures to be recognized; but this, for nothing else than to give. I feel a restlessness for giving, I want to form the depositories of my life, of my works, of my pains, of my tears – of everything. But these do not depart from Me if they are not recognized. By not recognizing them, they prevent my step from drawing near to place in them that which, with so much love, I want to give; and besides, they would remain without the effects, they would be like many blind who cannot see what is around them. On the other hand, the recognizing is sight for the soul, which makes the desire and the love arise, and therefore the gratitude toward Me who so much wants to give; and they jealously keep my treasure deposited in them, and, in the circumstances, they make use of my Life as guide, of my works in order to confirm their works, of my pains as support of their pains, and of my tears in order to wash themselves if they are stained. And – oh! how happy I am that they make use of Me and of my works in order to help themselves. This was my purpose for coming upon earth - to remain like a little brother in their midst, and inside of them as help in their needs. As they recognize Me, I do nothing other than reflect Myself in them in order to seal the good that they have known; almost like sun which, by reflecting its light over plants and flowers, communicates the substance of the sweetness and of the colors – not just apparent, but in reality. So, if you want to receive much, try to know what my Will did and does in Creation, and what It did in Redemption, and I will be generous with you, and will deny you nothing of what I make you know. Even more, know that if I do not stop yet acting as your teacher, to make known to you many other things that belong to Me, it is because I want to keep giving you what I make you know. I would not remain content if I did not have something to give, and always new things to give to my daughter; therefore I anxiously wait for you to set in place, in your soul, that which you have known, that you may retain it as your own thing. And while you set it in place, in order to help you set it, I keep caressing you, molding you, strengthening you; I expand your capacity – in sum, I renew what I did in the creation of the first creature. More so since, those being my own things that you have known and that I want to deposit in you, I do not want to trust anyone – not even yourself. I Myself, with my own creative hands, want to prepare the place and deposit them in you; and in order to keep them safe, I surround them with my love, with my strength, and with my light as guard. Therefore, be attentive, let nothing escape you, and in this way you will give Me the field to be able to give you the most beautiful surprises.”

After this, my little intelligence continued to cross the interminable sea of the Divine Will; and my highest Good, Jesus, added: “My daughter, We have interminable divine fields and seas. These are filled with joys, with beatitude, with enchanting beauties of every kind, and possess the virtue of making ever new joys arise, and beauties, such that none of them is like another. However, in these divine seas and fields of Ours, as much as there are innumerable things and beatitudes, We have no lives that palpitate; while We are life and heartbeat of everything, also of Our joys, We miss the heartbeat of the creature that would palpitate in Our own and, as life, fill these interminable fields and seas of Ours. Now, do you want to know who brings to Us her life? Not a new thing – We have so many of them! It is one who comes to live in Our Will. In fact, Our Will, overflowing from Us, forms for Us Our divine fields and seas, filled with all possible and imaginable happinesses; and the creature comes into them as life, and We have the great contentment and the great glory that a life of Ours can give Us. And even though this life has come out of Us, she is yet free to stay or not stay in Our divine fields, and she loses – she sacrifices her human freedom, and in Our Will she takes the divine freedom; and, as life, she lives in Our fields and seas without boundaries. And – oh! how beautiful it is to see this life making her way through the thick crowds of Our happinesses and joys, and casting in them her seed, her grain of wheat – image of her will that forms its ear, so high – but as the reality, and not just apparent, of the palpitating and operating life in Our celestial field. Or like a little fish – also symbol of her will which, as life, palpitates, swims in Our sea, lives and nourishes itself, amuses itself, plays a thousand waterworks and amuses its Creator – not as joy, but as life. There is a great difference between what Our joys can give Us and what a life can give Us. This is why We can say: ‘Our fields are deserted, Our seas are without fish’ – because the life of the creatures with which to fill them, so as to be able to give and receive life for life, is missing. But the time will come when they will be full, and We will have the full contentment and the great glory that, in the midst of Our manifold joys, there will be a multitude of lives that will live inside of these fields, and will give Us life for life.

Now, you must know that these, Our fields and seas, are at the disposal of those who live on earth and who want to live life in Our Divine Will – not for those who live in Heaven, because those cannot add a single comma to what they have done. These are the enjoying lives in Our divine fields, not the operating lives; it can be said of them: ‘What is done is done.’ But it is the operating and conquering lives from the earth that We long for, and for them to enter, while being on earth, into these fields of Ours and operate and act as conquerors in a divine manner. More so since, from the moment man sinned, he went out from inside Our Will, and, with justice, the doors of these fields of Ours were closed to him. Now We want to open these, Our doors, after so many centuries, to whomever wants to enter – not forcing them, but freely, to let Us populate these divine fields of Ours, so as to give a new form, a completely new way of life to the creature, and be able to receive from her, not works, but life in each of her acts – life formed in Our own life. Here, then, the reason for my so much speaking about my Will – the power of my creative word will dispose them, will give them the desire, will change the human will; and knowing that I want to open the doors, they will knock, and immediately I will open to them, so that I Myself may be satisfied, and I may have my fortunate people that will give Me, in return for my life which I gave for them, their life in exchange for mine. Never have I spoken without getting anything, or in vain. I spoke in Creation, and my word served to form the admirable things of the whole universe; I spoke in Redemption, and my word, my Gospel, serves as guide to my Church, as light, as support. It can be said that my word is the substance and the life palpitating in the womb of my Church. Now, if I have spoken and I still speak about my Divine Will, it will not be in vain – no, but I will have the admirable effects and the life of my Will, known, operating and palpitating in the midst of creatures. Therefore, let Me do, and I will dispose things in a way that my word will not be a dead word – but alive, which will give life with all its admirable effects. More so, since these celestial fields and seas of Ours will act as mothers to the fortunate souls who would want to live in them; they will educate them in a divine manner, they will nourish them with delicious foods taken from the celestial table, and will raise them in a noble way, and holy, such that in all their acts, steps and words, it will appear, written in clear notes: ‘They are similar to their Creator.’ God will hear the melody of His voice in their word, His power in their works, the sweet motion of His steps that runs after everyone for He wants them with Himself, in their steps; and as though enraptured, He will say: ‘Who is it that is like Me? Who can imitate my sweet, harmonious, powerful voice, as to be able to shake Heaven and earth? Who possesses such strength as to capture Me into her works to make Me operate together with her? Who is it? Who is it?’ Ah! it is one who lives in Our divine fields. It is right that she be like Us in everything, as much as it is possible for creature. She is Our daughter, and that’s enough. Let Us allow her to imitate Us - to be like Us; she will be Our glory of Our creative work, the longed-for one of her Celestial Father. These souls will form the new hierarchy of the Celestial Fatherland, where there is a place reserved for them, which to no one else is it given to occupy.”

Desire of Jesus for the company of the creature. Extreme need of little Child Jesus to be loved with divine love by His Celestial Mother.

I feel myself as though being inundated by the sea of light of the Divine Will. Oh! how I would really like to be the tiny little fish in this sea, in such a way as to see nothing but light, and touch, breathe, live of light. Oh! how happy I would be to hear, said to me, that I am the daughter of the Celestial Father. But while I was thinking of this and other things, my dear Life, the sweet and sovereign Jesus, visiting my little soul, made Himself seen with seas of interminable light coming out from within His adorable Person; and from within this light came out souls that populated the earth and all Heaven. And Jesus, calling me, told me: “My daughter, come into this light – I want you here. The virtue of my light, its motion as fount of life, does nothing other than unleash souls – that is, life of creatures - from within its womb of light. Its power is so great that, as it moves, it emits souls; and I want my beloved together with Me, in the womb of my light – that is, of my Will. As souls are formed and emitted outside, I do not want to be alone, but I want your company, that you may recognize the great portent of the creation of souls – Our excessive love. And since I want you in my Will, I want to deposit them in you, entrust them to you, not leaving them alone while they journey as pilgrims through the earth, but having someone together with Me who would protect them and defend them for Me. Oh! how sweet is the company of one who takes care of the lives come out of Me. This is so pleasing to Me, that I make one who lives in my Will the depository of the creation of souls, the channel by which I let them come out to the light, and the channel to let them reenter into the Celestial Fatherland. Everything do I want to give to one who wants to live in my Fiat. Their company is necessary to my love, to my outpourings, and to my works, for they want to be recognized. To act and not to be recognized – they are like works that cannot boast triumph, nor sing victory and glory. Therefore, do not deny Me your company; you would deny your Jesus an outpouring of love, and my works would lack the cortege and the appreciation of the creature, and would remain like isolated works; and my love, constrained, would turn into justice.”

After this, I was thinking about the birth of little Baby Jesus, especially in the act when He came out of the maternal womb; and the Celestial Infant told me: “Dearest daughter, you must know that as soon as I unleashed Myself from the womb of my Mama, I felt the need of a divine love and affection. I left my Celestial Father in the Empyreum, loving each other with love fully divine; everything was divine among the Divine Persons – affections, sanctity, power, and so forth. Now, I did not want to change ways in coming upon earth; my Divine Will prepared for Me the Divine Mother, in a way that I had Divine Father in Heaven, and Divine Mother on earth. And as soon as I came out of the maternal womb, feeling the extreme need of these divine affections, I ran into the arms of my Mama to receive, as the first food, first breath, first act of life for my tiny Humanity, Her divine love. And She unleashed the seas of divine love that my Fiat had formed in Her, and She loved Me with divine love, as my Father loved Me in Heaven. And – oh! how happy I was – I found my Paradise in the love of my Mama. Now, you know that true love never says ‘enough’; if it could say ‘enough’ it would lose the nature of the true divine love; and therefore, even from the arms of my Mother, while I was taking the food, the breath, the love, the Paradise that She gave Me, my love extended, made itself immense, embraced the centuries - it searched, ran, called, raved, for it wanted the divine daughters. And my Will, to calm my love, presented to Me the divine daughters whom It would form for Me in the course of the centuries; and I looked at them, I embraced them, I loved them and I received the breath of their divine affections; and I saw that the Divine Queen would not remain alone, but would have the generation of my divine daughters and hers. My Will knows how to change and give the transformation, and form the noble grafting - from human to divine. Therefore, when I see you operate in It, I feel, being given to Me and repeated for Me, the Paradise that my Mama gave Me when She received Me, a little Baby, into Her arms. Therefore, those who do and live in my Divine Will make arise and form the sweet and beautiful hope that Its Kingdom will come upon earth, and I will delight in the Paradise of the creature, which my Fiat has formed in them.”

And while my mind continued to think about what Jesus had told me, with a more intense and tender love, He added: “My good daughter, Our Love runs continuously toward the creature; Our loving motion that never ceases runs in the beating of the heart, in the thoughts of the mind, in the breathing of the lungs, in the blood that circulates. It runs - always runs, and vivifies, with Our note and motion of love, the heartbeat, the thought, the breath, and It wants the encounter with the love palpitating, with the breath loving, with the thought that receives and gives Us love. And while Our Love runs with unreachable rapidity, the love of the creature does not meet with Ours – it remains behind, and does not follow the race of Our Love that runs without ever stopping. And as We see that We are not even followed while We continue to go around in the heartbeat, in the breath, in the whole being of the creature, delirious, We exclaim: ‘Our Love is not known, nor received, nor loved by the creature; and if she receives It, it is without knowing It.’ Oh! how hard it is to love and not to be loved. Yet, if Our Love did not run, their lives would cease in one instant. It would happen as to the clock: if it is wound, it makes its ‘tic, tic’ heard, and it marks the hours and the minutes in an admirable way, and it serves to maintain the order of the day, the public order. If the winding ceases, the ‘tic, tic’ can no longer be heard, it remains motionless, as though lifeless, and there can be many disorders because the clock is not moving. The winding of the creature is my Love, such that, as this celestial winding runs, the heart palpitates, the blood circulates, the breath is formed; these can be called the hours, the minutes, the instants of the clock of the life of the creature. And in seeing that if I do not let the winding of my Love run, they cannot live, and yet I am not loved back, my Love continues Its race, but with the attitude of dolorous and delirious Love. Now, who will remove from Us this sorrow, and will soothe Our loving delirium? One who will have Our Divine Will as life. Our Will, as life, will form the winding in the heartbeat, in the breath, and so forth, of the creature; It will form the sweet encounter with Our Love, and Our winding and theirs will proceed at the same rate. Our continuous ‘tic’ will be followed by their ‘tic’, and Our Love will no longer be alone in running, but will have Its race together with the creature. Therefore, I want nothing other than my Will – my Will in the creature.”

Certainty of the coming of the Kingdom of the Divine Will upon earth. How all difficulties will melt like snow before a burning sun. The human will is the dark room of the creature.

My abandonment continues in the Divine Fiat, but I felt worried by the thought: ‘How will this Kingdom of the Divine Will ever be able to come? Sin abounds, evils get worse, it seems to me that the creatures are not disposed to receive such a great good; so much so, that there is not a soul, as good as they may be, who truly wants to occupy himself with making known what regards the Divine Will. If God does not operate a prodigy of His omnipotence, the Kingdom of the Divine Fiat may be in Heaven, but as for the earth, it is useless to think about it.’ But while I was thinking of this and other things, my beloved Jesus, making His usual visit to my soul, told me: “My daughter, everything is possible for Us. The impossibilities, the difficulties, the insurmountable obstacles of creatures melt before Our Supreme Majesty like snow in front of a burning sun. Everything is in whether We want it; all the rest is nothing. Did the same not happen in Redemption? Sin abounded more than ever; only a small group of people was awaiting the Messiah, and in the midst of this group, how many hypocrisies, how many sins of all kinds – they were often idolatrous. But it was decreed that I was to come upon earth. In the face of Our decrees, all evils cannot prevent what We want to do. We are glorified more by one act alone of Our Will than We are offended by all the evils and sins committed by creatures, because Our act of the Will is divine and immense, and in its immensity it embraces all eternity, all centuries, it extends to all. Therefore, it is not of Our infinite wisdom not to give life to even just one act of Our Will because of the evils of creatures. We place Ourselves on Our divine side, and We do what We have to do; and the creatures We leave by their human side; and acting as Sovereigns, We lord it over everything and everyone, even over evil, and We put out Our decrees.

Now, just as my coming upon earth was Our decree, so is Our decree the Kingdom of Our Will upon earth; even more, it can be said that one and the other are one single decree, and having carried out the first act of this decree, We are to carry out the second. It is true that We pace Ourselves according to the good disposition of the creatures in order to give the great good that an act of Our Will can produce, and therefore at most We take time, and We make Our way in the midst of their evils in order to dispose them. It is true that the times are sad; the peoples themselves are tired, they see all the ways closed to them, they can find no way out even for the necessary natural means; the oppressions, the demands of the leaders are unbearable – just penalty, since they have elected as leaders godless men, of evil life, without a just right to be leaders, who deserved a prison more than the right of regime. Many thrones and empires have been overthrown, and those few that are left are all vacillating and about to be overthrown. So, the earth will remain almost without kings, in the hands of iniquitous men. Poor peoples, poor children of mine – under the regime of men without pity, without a heart, and without the grace to be able to act as guides for their subjects. Indeed, the epoch of the Jewish people is being repeated, as they remained without a king when I was near to coming upon earth, and were under the dominion of an alien empire, of barbarous and idolatrous men who did not even know their Creator. Yet, this was the sign of my nearing coming into their midst. That epoch and this one hold hands in many things, and the disappearance of thrones and empires is the announcement that the Kingdom of my Divine Will is not far. It having to be a universal, pacific Kingdom, there will be no need of kings to dominate It – each one will be king to himself. My Will will be for them law, guide, support, life and absolute King of all and of each one; and all the arbitrary and rightless leaders will be shattered like dust in the wind. The nations will continue to fight against one another – some by war, some by revolution, among themselves and against my Church. They have a fire in their midst that devours them, that gives them no peace, and they can give no peace. It is the fire of sin, and the fire of acting without God that gives them no peace; and they will never make peace if they do not call God into their midst, as regime and bond of union and of peace. And I let them do, and I will make them touch with their own hands what it means to act without God.

But this does not prevent the Kingdom of my Supreme Fiat from coming; this is all creature's stuff, of the low world, which my power knocks down and disperses whenever it wants, and it makes the most serene sky and the most refulgent sun arise from the storm. On the other hand, the Kingdom of my Divine Will is from on high, from the Heavens, formed and decreed in the midst of the Divine Persons – no one can touch It or disperse It. First We will deal about It with one creature alone, forming the first Kingdom in her; then with few; and then, making use of Our omnipotence, we will divulge It everywhere. Be certain, do not worry because evils get worse; Our power, Our winning love that has the virtue of always winning, Our Will that can do everything and, with invincible patience, knows how to wait even for centuries - but what It wants and has to do is worth more than all the evils of creatures – in the face of Its invincible power and Its infinite value, their evils will be like little drops of water, like many trifles that will serve for the triumph of Our Love and for the greater glory of Our fulfilled Will. And then, when We have the great glory of forming this Kingdom inside one creature alone, she will be like sun, such that all have the right to enjoy and possess its light. More than sun, she will give to all creatures the right to possess a Kingdom so holy; and We, with infinite wisdom, will abound with graces, with light, with helps, with surprising means, so that they may let the Kingdom of my Will reign in their midst. Therefore, let me do; when it is your Jesus that has told you this, that's enough – it is as though already done. All evils and all creatures together have no power and no right over Our Will, nor can they prevent a single act of Our Will, wanted by decrees of Our wisdom.”

Then, I continued to think about the Divine Fiat, and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, my Will is light, the human will is the dark room in which the poor creature lives. As my Will enters into this dark room, it remains all invested by this light that illumines everything, even the most remote and little hiding places of the soul. It makes Itself light of the thought, of the word, of the works, of the steps – but with a marvelous variety. The thought takes on a variety of colors animated by the light; the word takes on another variety of colors; the action, the step, other varieties of colors. And as she repeats the thought, the word, the action, the step, animated by the light of my Will, so are the tones of the divine colors formed; and the beauty of it is that they are all colors animated by light. Oh! how beautiful it is to see the creature animated by the iris of Our divine colors – it is one of the most beautiful scenes that she presents to Us and makes Us enjoy. We look at her and We see that those are nothing other than the reflection of Our thoughts, of Our actions, and so forth, that has formed that variety of Our divine colors; and Our Will makes display of light in the acts of the creature who, with her sweet enchantment, enraptures Us and makes Us the spectators of Our acts; and – oh! how We await with all love the repetition of these scenes so beautiful and delightful.”

The Divine Will can be wanted, commanded, operative and fulfilled. Example: the Creation.

My following the Divine Volition continues. I feel It always over me, in act of enclosing Itself in my acts, to have the contentment of saying to me: “Your act is mine, because inside of it there is my life that has formed it.” It seems to me that with an invincible patience, but loving, sweet, amiable patience that enraptures my soul, It observes, It counts when I must operate, move my step, etc., to enclose Its operating life and the moving of Its step in mine, as though wanting to imprison Itself in my act, while It remains immense as It is. But who can say what I experience and feel under the empire of the Divine Will? I am always the little ignorant one who can only say the ‘a b c’ of the Divine Will. In many things I lack the terms, and while my mind is full, and who knows how many things I would like to say, yet I try to speak and cannot find the words to express myself; and therefore I move on.

Then, my sweet Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My daughter, my Will has surprising and different ways of acting, and It acts according to the dispositions of the creatures. Many times It makes known what It wants, but It leaves it up to the disposition of creatures to do it or not do it – and this is called wanted Will. Other times, to the volition It adds the command, and It gives double graces so that the command may be executed. And this is for all Christians; not doing this means being not even Christians. Another way is the operative one: It descends into the act of the creature and operates as if the act of the creature were Its own; and therefore, as Its own act, It places in it Its life, Its sanctity, Its operative virtue. But in order to come to this, the soul must be accustomed to the wanted and commanded Will, which prepares the void in the human act in order to receive the operating act of the Divine Fiat. But It does not stop - the operative act calls for the fulfilled act, and the fulfilled act is the holiest, the most powerful, the most beautiful act, the most refulgent with light, that my Divine Will can do; and because It is Its fulfilled act, everything It has done is enclosed in this act, in such a way that one can see, flowing and enclosed in it, the heavens, the sun, the stars, the sea, the celestial beatitudes – everything and everyone.”

And I, as though surprised: ‘But how can it be that one act alone can enclose everything? It seems incredible.’ And Jesus added: “Why incredible? Can my Will perhaps not do everything and enclose everything, in the great just as in the smallest act? You must know that in the fulfilled acts of my Will enters the inseparability of everything It has done and will do; otherwise it would not be a single act, but would be subject to a succession of acts - which cannot be, either in Our Divine Being or in Our Will. And besides, the Creation is a tangible example: all created things are inseparable among themselves, but one distinct from the other. Look at the sky, fulfilled act of the Fiat: it acts as footstool to the Celestial Fatherland up above, where all the happinesses and joys run; it is occupied by all Angels and Saints, and upon it We form Our throne. That same sky forms the azure vault above the heads of the creatures, and in the same space one can see multitudes of stars; but they do not extend beyond the sky. Down below there is the sun, the wind, the air, the sea – but under that same space of heaven; and while each one does its office, their inseparability is such that at the same time and place one can hear and see the sun darting through with its light, the wind whistling and blowing its refreshing breaths; the air makes itself breathed, the sea makes its murmuring heard – it seems that they are fused together so great is their inseparability; so much so, that the creature, at the same time and place, can enjoy the sky, the sun, the wind, the sea, the flowery earth. The fulfilled acts of my Will are not subject to separating, because, from the one Will from which they came out, they came out with the unitive force and power, therefore it is no wonder that in the fulfilled acts that It does in the creature, It encloses everything; and one can see, portrayed, as though seeing through a glass, all Its works – while each thing stays at its place, yet they reflect themselves with an admirable power in the fulfilled act of my Will in the act of the creature. This is the reason why the value of a fulfilled act of my Will, whether in the creature or outside of her, is so great, that as much as We give, We remain always with something to give, because she does not have the capacity to take all the value it contains. She fills herself to the brim, overflows outside, forms seas around herself – and what has she taken? One can say: extremely little - because this act encloses the infinite, and the creature is incapable of taking the value of an infinite act of my Divine Fiat. It would be easier for her to enclose all the light of the sun within the small circle of her pupil - but this too is impossible; she can fill her eye with light, but how many seas of light do not remain outside of her pupil? Why? Because there is a Divine Fiat in that sun, such that to all pupils it is not given to enclose it. They may take as much light as they want, but as for exhausting it – never. They will always have something to take – true image of a fulfilled act of my Will in the creature. Therefore, be attentive, and let It be Its life in your acts.”

Round in the Divine Will. Pledges, advances and commitments on the part of creatures. Capital on the part of the Creator. Echo which the Divine Will forms in the creatures.

I was doing, according to my usual way, the round in the acts done by the Divine Will. I felt that in It and with It I could embrace everything, remember everything, look at everything of what the Divine Will had done. It was the infinite theatre that made itself present before my little mind, and with divine and innumerable scenes it made me enjoy unspeakable sweetnesses and the most beautiful and enchanting scenes that the power of the Divine Fiat has put out in the round of Creation, Redemption and Sanctification. It seems it is a round that It made in the course of the centuries, and in this round It has done many beautiful, marvelous things, such as to astonish Heaven and earth; and It made this round in order to make us go around it, to make known to us how much It can do and is able to do for love of us.

So, while I was going around in the infinite round of the Divine Volition, my lovable Jesus, visiting His little newborn, told me: “My little daughter of my Will, if you knew how much I enjoy seeing you go around in the infinite round of my Supreme Fiat.... And as I see you pause, as though surprised, in front of Its prodigies, Its admirable and adorable works, Its enchanting and enrapturing scenes, in my ardor of love I say: ‘How happy I am that my daughter is the spectator and enjoys scenes so admirable of the Will that created her.’ But this is not enough. You must know that in order to purchase a property, it is necessary for the one who must sell it to give to the one who must acquire it the freedom to visit it, almost leading him by the hand in order to let him know all the goods that are in it, the fountains it possesses, the rarity and preciousness of the plants, the fertility of the ground; and this serves to charm the one who must purchase it. And it is necessary for the one who must purchase it to give some advances, to make some substantial commitments in order to bind the one who must sell the property, so that it may not escape him.

Now, blessed daughter, since I want to give the Kingdom of my Divine Will, it is necessary for you to go around in Its divine properties; and I, leading you by the hand, make known to you Its interminable seas, the goods, the prodigies, the surprising marvels, the joys, the happinesses - all things of infinite value, which It possesses, so that, by knowing It, you may love It and become so enamored, that not only would you not be able to live without It, but you would lay down your life to purchase a Kingdom so holy, peaceful and beautiful. But this is not all yet; your part is needed, your pledges, your advances and commitments. And Our Love and Goodness, wanting to give Our Will as property that belongs to the creature, is so great that It places at her disposal what Our Will has done, so that she may use it as the equivalent pledges and commitments in order to receive a gift so great. Now, as you go around in the Creation, and you look at the heavens, and you delight in seeing the beautiful azure vault studded with stars, the sun radiant with light, and you recognize and feel the Divine Fiat still palpitating, having created them for love of creatures; and unleashing from your heart your little love, you love the One who has so much loved you - your love is imprinted in the height of the heavens, in the light of the sun, and you give Us the heavens as pledge, the stars as advance, the sun as commitment, because for you it was created, and it is enough that you possess Our Will as your life for it to be already yours, and to be used as the valid commitment in order to obtain Its Kingdom. The same, as you go around in all the other created things, and you recognize them, and you love Us; and for as many times as you repeat your rounds, so many times do you repeat the pledges, make the commitments, and commit Us to dispose things, to give graces, helps, in order to give, as Kingdom, the great gift of the Fiat Voluntas Tua on earth as It is in Heaven. We know that the creature has nothing to give Us, and Our Love imposes Itself in order to give Our acts as if they were her own, placing Our works in her hands as divine currency, so that she may have sufficient means to be able to negotiate with Our Supreme Being. Though she has nothing, she has her little love, unleashed by Our own in the act of creating her, therefore she has a particle of the infinite Love of God; and when the creature loves Us, she places the infinite in attitude, and We feel the magnetic force of the particle of Our infinite Love that, hovering about, loves Us in her, rises, extends, reaches unto Us, and wants to enter into the infinite from which it came out. Oh! how it enraptures Us; and in the ardor of Our Love, We say: "Who can resist the power of Our infinite Love that unleashes itself from the creature and loves Us?" To give heavens and earth seems little to Us in order to repay her for her little love which, though little, possesses the particle of the infinite, and this is enough for Us.

Oh! how sweet and dear is the precious pledge of the love of the creature. And since there is nothing in the round of the centuries that has not come out of Our Will, your going around in the creation of man is a visit that you make to It, in order to know what It operated and in what seas of graces, of sanctity, of love, he was placed in the act of being created. And you would want to make that love all yours in order to love Us, and you commit Us with those same acts with which We created man. In the same way, when you go around in the creation of the Virgin, in Her seas of graces, in my coming upon earth and in everything I did and suffered, you place, as commitment, the Queen of Heaven, my very Life and all my acts. My Will is everything, and in order to give Itself to the creature It wants to be recognized, It wants to interact, It wants to negotiate with her; and the more you visit It in Its acts, the more bound and committed It finds Itself, and It begins the disbursing of Its capital: all the truths, the knowledges I have given you about my Divine Will – has this perhaps not been the capital I have made in your soul? And it is so exuberant, that it can fill the whole entire world with light, with love, with sanctity, with graces, with peace. And was it perhaps not after a round you did in Its acts, that I was already waiting for you, with all love, in order to give you Its pledges and advances that Its Kingdom would come upon earth? You gave your pledges, and my Fiat gave you Its own. It can be said that each truth and word It spoke about It was a measure It took in order to form this Kingdom, a call-up It made in order to form Its army, a capital It disbursed in order to maintain It, joys and delights to draw creatures, divine strength to conquer them. In fact, We first do deeds, order everything, and then We show and make known the deeds We have done. And since We want to give this good to the creatures, it is just and reasonable that We deal at least with one creature, so that from one it may pass to another. We do not do Our works in the air, but We want a little shelf on which to form Our greatest works. Wasn't the Queen of Heaven Our little shelf in the great work of Redemption, which then extended to all and to whoever wants It? Therefore, let your flight in my Will be continuous, so that the two of you may exchange – you, your pledges, and my Will, Its capitals, in order to accelerate Its Kingdom onto the face of the earth."

After this, I felt, more than usual, all immersed in the Divine Fiat, and my Sovereign Jesus added: “My daughter, when my Divine Will operates in the soul, one knows it immediately: as It operates, It lays in the human being gentleness, sweetness, peace, fortitude, firmness; before It operates, It blows into it and impresses in it Its omnipotent Fiat, which extends Its heaven around the work It wants to do. It seems that without Its heaven my Will is unable to operate; and while It operates, It makes Its sweet, harmonious echo resound in the Three Divine Persons, keeping Them aware of what It is doing in the soul. In fact, since the Will that is operating in her is one with that of the Divine Persons, it happens that, whatever It does in the Divine Persons, It makes Its powerful echo resound in the creature; and in this echo It brings to her the admirable secrets, the ineffable sweetnesses, the inseparable love as the Divine Persons love One Another, and the sweet accord among Them. This echo is the bearer of the most intimate things of the Supreme Being into the creature; wherever my Will is operating, the echo of one fuses in the other – the one up above makes itself the divine revealer; the one from below, resounding in God, has the virtue of speaking powerfully, with divine manners, of the good of the creatures and of the same love that They⁹⁶ have for them. My Will, with Its power, forms the sweet chains, and identifies and transforms God and the creature, in such a way that God feels redone in the creature, and she feels redone in God. Oh! my Will, how admirable and powerful You are – extend your sweet chains and bind God and creatures, so that all may return into my divine womb.”

Dominating, speaking and delighting modes of the Divine Will. How Heaven remains behind. Victory of God and victory of the creature. The Divine Will, gatherer of Its works. Example of a mother who cries over her crippled child.

My little soul continues to cross the interminable sea of the Divine Fiat, and – oh! how I remain surprised, that while I seem to have gone a long way, I go about looking and I find but a few steps compared to those that are left for me to take. The interminability is so great, that even if I should walk for centuries, I would always find myself at the beginning; and there is so much to know about the Divine Volition, that finding myself in Its sea, I always feel like the little ignorant one who has only learned the vowels of the Divine Will, and who maybe will go to learn the consonants in the Celestial Fatherland – which I hope to reach soon. Oh! how I would like to have ways to move all Heaven to pity, so that my long exile may end. But, after all, Fiat! Fiat! Fiat! And my always lovable Jesus, having compassion for me, clasped me in His arms, telling me: “Blessed daughter, courage, do not afflict yourself too much – for now, I want your Heaven to be my Divine Will. It will be for you Celestial Fatherland on earth, and will not fail to make you happy and to give you the pure joys from up there. Wherever It reigns It has many manifold ways to give always new surprises of joys, of contentments, so that the soul who possesses It may enjoy her paradise on earth; and therefore, now It takes on the dominating mode, and Its dominion extends in the mind, in the word, in the heart, in the whole being of the creature, even in the tiniest motion, and – oh! how sweet is Its dominion. It is dominion and life, it is dominion and strength, it is dominion and light that makes its way, and Its light dispels the darkness, removes the bars that may prevent good, and Its dominion puts the enemies to flight. In sum, the creature feels carried by the dominion of the Divine Will; and while she is dominated, she becomes dominator of herself, of her acts, and of the very Divine Will, which is such that, while It dominates and rules, Its gentleness, strength and sweetness are so great, that It identifies Itself with the creature and wants her to dominate along, because Its dominion is peaceful, and to each of the acts that the creature does It gives Its kiss of dominating peace. This kiss, gentleness and sweetness, enraptures the human will in the Divine, and they extend the dominion together to form the Divine Kingdom in the depth of the soul. There is nothing more beautiful, more dear, greater and holier, than to feel the dominion of my Will flow in all of one's acts, and in the whole entirety of the creature. I could say that Heaven remains behind in the face of the dominion of my Will in the heart of the pilgrim creature. In fact, in the Saints It has nothing to add; there is nothing left but to delight them continuously; while in the pilgrim soul there are works that It can do, new life It can infuse, new conquests It can obtain, to expand and extend more Its dominion. The total dominion of my Divine Will in the creature is Our continued victory; for each of Its acts which It does in her with Its dominion, so many victories do We obtain, and the creature becomes the winner of Our Divine Will in her acts. On the other hand, in Heaven We have nothing to win because everything is Ours, and each Blessed completes his work in the act of breathing his last; therefore, Our conquering work is on earth in the pilgrim souls, not in Heaven. In Heaven We have neither anything to lose, nor anything to acquire.

Now, once my Divine Will has secured Its total dominion in the creature, It takes on Its speaking mode. You must know that each of Its words is a creation; wherever It reigns It is unable to remain idle, and since It possesses the creative virtue, It is unable to speak if It does not create. But what does It create? It wants to create Itself in the creature, It wants to make display of Its divine qualities – and It does so word by word, almost as It did in the creation of the universe, when It spoke, not just one word, but as many words for as many different things as It wanted to create. The soul costs Us more than the whole universe, and when It is sure of Its dominion, It does not hold Its words back – on the contrary, as she receives the act of Its creative word, It expands her capacity and prepares yet another. So, It speaks and creates light, It speaks and creates sweetness, It speaks and creates divine strength, It speaks and creates in her Its day of peace, It speaks and creates Its knowledges. Each of Its words is bearer of creation of the good It possesses and reveals. Its word makes itself the announcer of the good It wants to create in the soul. Who can tell you of the value that one word alone of my Divine Will possesses? And how many heavens, seas of riches, varieties of beauty It places in the fortunate creature who possesses Its sweet and happy dominion?

Now, after the work, arises the joy, the happiness. My Will, of Its own nature, is pregnant with innumerable joys; It looks at the creature who has offered herself to receive the creation of Its words, and – oh! how happy It feels, because It sees that each creation that was received gives birth to a joy and happiness without end. And It passes from the speaking mode to the delighting mode; and so that the creature may enjoy more, It does not put Itself aside – no, but delights together with her; and in order to make her rejoice more, It keeps explaining to her the nature and diversity of the joys It has created in her soul only because It loves her and wants to see her happy. And since the joys, the happiness, are not full when they are alone, and they seem to die, It therefore leaves Me together with you, to be able to delight you always and prepare the new joys with the work of my creative word.

Therefore, Our only feast and happiness that We have upon earth is the soul who lets herself be possessed by the dominion of my Supreme Will. In her, Our word, Our life, Our joys, find a place. It can be said that the work of Our creative hands is in the order, there where it was established by Our infinite wisdom – that is, in Our Divine Will; she is at her place of honor. On the other hand, one who lets herself be dominated by the human will, is in the disorder, and is Our continuous shame of Our creative work. Therefore, be attentive, my daughter, and make happy the One who wants to make you happy in time and eternity.”

After this, I continued to swim in the sea of light of the Divine Fiat. I felt myself being drowned with light, and Its knowledges were so many, that I did not know which of them to cling to; because of my littleness I did not know where to put them, therefore they dispersed in the same light, and I remained stunned, unable to say anything. And my sweet Teacher, Jesus, added: “My daughter, my Will is the gatherer of all Its works; in Its light It hides everything; with Its light It defends them and places all Its works in safety. How much does this light not do in order to place the creature in safety - the most beautiful work of Our creative hands; and to make her return beautiful, striking, as We issued her? It gathers her onto Its lap of light, and It casts much light upon her, to make all evils disappear from her. If she is blind, by dint of light It gives her vision; if she is mute, by dint of light It wants to give her speech. The light takes her from all sides, and gives her hearing if she is deaf; if crippled, It straightens her up; if she is ugly, by dint of light It renders her beautiful. A mother does not do as much as my Divine Will does in order to render Its creature beautiful and restored. Its weapons are of light, because there is no power that the light does not hide and no beauty it does not possess. What would a mother not do if, after she has given birth to a beautiful child that enraptured her with his beauty, and the mother felt happy in the beauty of the child, a misfortune strikes him and he becomes blind, mute, deaf, crippled. Poor mother – she looks at her child and no longer recognizes him: his eye lifeless, no longer looking at her; his silvery voice that would make her start with joy in hearing herself being called ‘mama’ – she no longer hears; his little feet that would run to place themselves upon her lap – they hardly drag themselves. This child is the most piercing sorrow for a poor mother. And what would she not do if she knew that her child could return again to his original features? She would go around the whole world if she could obtain this, and it would be sweet for her to lay down her own life as long as she could see her child beautiful as she gave birth to him. But, poor mother, it is not in her power to give back to her dear child the original beauty, and he will always be her sorrow and the most piercing thorn of her maternal heart.

Such has the creature rendered herself by doing her will – blind, mute, crippled. Our Will cries over her with tears of ardent light of Our Love; but what the mother cannot do for her crippled child my Divine Will does not lack the power to do. More than mother, It will place at her disposal Its capitals of light, which possess the virtue of restoring all the goods and the beauty of the creature. As tender Mother, loving and vigilant of the work of Her hands, which, more than dearest child, She issued to the light, She will go around, not the whole world, but all centuries, in order to prepare and give the powerful remedies of light that vivifies, transforms, straightens and embellishes; and only then will She stop, when She sees on Her maternal lap, beautiful as She issued it, the work of Her creative hands, to make up for the many sorrows and enjoy it forever. Are the many knowledges on my Will perhaps not remedies? Each manifestation and word that I speak is a fortress that I place around the weakness of the human will; it is a food that I prepare; it is a bait, a taste, a light, to make them reacquire the lost sight. Therefore, be attentive and do not lose anything of what my Will manifests to you, because in due time everything will be needed – nothing will go lost. Do you think It does not take into account even just one word of what It says? It counts everything and loses nothing; and if in your soul It has formed Its cathedra in order to deposit Its truths, however, the primary cathedra It keeps reserved within Itself as the greatest treasure that belongs to It, in such a way that if you lose any word or manifestation that belongs to It, It already keeps the original within Itself, because what regards my Divine Will is of infinite value, and the infinite cannot disperse, nor is it subject to dispersing; on the contrary, jealous, It preserves Its truths in the divine archives. Therefore, you too, learn to be jealous and vigilant, and to appreciate Its holy lessons.”

Each little visit of Jesus, bearer of celestial truths. One who lives in the Divine Will is under the rain of the new act of God. Example of the flower. How each act done in the Divine Will is a step. Office of mother.

I was feeling all concerned about the many truths that blessed Jesus has told me on His Divine Will; and while I felt in me the sacred deposit of His truths, I also felt a holy fear of how I kept them in my poor soul, and many times badly exposed, without that attention that befits truths which contain infinite value. Oh! how I would like to imitate the Blessed, who, while they know so much about the Divine Will, don't say anything to any of the pilgrim souls – they keep them all with themselves; they are beatified, they are delighted, but from up there they send not even one word to make known a single truth of the many they know. But while I was thinking of this, my lovable Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness, told me: “My daughter, each word I have spoken to you about my Divine Will has been nothing other than a little visit that I have made to you, leaving in you the substance of the good that each of my words contains; and not trusting you, because you were incapable of keeping a single word of mine, I Myself remained as custodian of the infinite value of my truths which I deposited in your soul. Therefore, your fears are not just – I Myself guard everything. These are celestial truths, things of Heaven, outpourings of love of my Will, and from many centuries, which had been repressed; and before deciding to speak to you, I had already decided to remain in you in order to keep what I would deposit in you. You enter the secondary order – I Myself am the first custodian. Now, since these little visits of mine are bearers of celestial things, you will bring them with you into the Celestial Fatherland as triumph of my Will and as guarantee that Its Kingdom not only will come upon earth, but has established Its beginning of Its reigning. Those which will remain on paper will leave the perennial memory that my Will wants to reign in the midst of the human generations; and they will be spurs, incitements, divine supplications, irresistible strength, celestial messengers, captains of the Kingdom of my Divine Fiat, and also powerful reproaches to those who should occupy themselves with making known a good so great, and who, out of indolence and vain fears, will not let them go around through the whole world, so that they may bring the good news of the happy Era of the Kingdom of my Will. Therefore, abandon yourself in Me, and let Me do.”

Then, I continued my acts in the Divine Will, where everything It has done in Creation is all in act, as if It were now creating It, to give It to the creature as display of Its love; and since I am too small, I cannot take all created things together, and I go little by little, up to where I can reach. And the Divine Love awaits me in each created thing, to repeat and duplicate the creating act and say to me: “See how much I love you – for you I created them, for you I keep the creating act in act, to tell you, not only with words, but with deeds: ‘I love you!’ I love you so much that I am drowned with love, I fidget, I rave, for I want to be loved; so much so, that by creating the Creation before you, I prepared for you the way, all love; by maintaining the creating act in act, I say to you in each instant: ‘I love you’ and ‘I want love’.” So I went through the created things, so as not to leave the loving Maker sorrowful because I had not received His love which He had placed in each created thing, placed there for me. And as I arrived at the exuberant act of the love of the creation of man, I felt myself under the rain of this intense love; and my always lovable Jesus told me: “Blessed daughter, Our way with the creatures never changes – just as it had its beginning of externizing itself in Creation, so does it continue, and will always, always continue. Now, one who enters into Our Will touches with his own hand Our creating act, always in act, and Our Love ever new, in act of giving Itself to the creature. But it is not only Our Love; in fact, Our great Love makes Us unleash from Our womb, and gives life over them⁹⁷ to new goodness, new power, new sanctity, new beauties, in such a way that We keep the creature under the rain of Our new acts, always new and always in act. So, all Creation is always in act of repeating Itself and giving Itself to them. And since Our ways are always the same and never change, what We do with the Blessed in Heaven, nourishing their beatitude with Our new act, without ever ceasing, We also do for those who live in Our Divine Will on earth – We nourish their life with new sanctity, new goodness, new love. We keep her under the rain of Our new acts, and always in act – with this difference: that the Blessed acquire nothing new, they only swim in the new joys of their Creator, while the fortunate pilgrim soul who lives in Our Will is always in act of making new conquests.

So, one who does not do and does not live in Our Divine Will renders herself estranged from the Celestial Family, nor does she know the goods of her Celestial Father, and she only takes little drops of the love and the goods of her Creator. She herself renders herself an illegitimate daughter who does not have full rights to the possessions of her Divine Father. Only my Will gives the right of daughtership and the freedom to take what she wants from the house of her Celestial Father. One who lives in Our Will is like the flower that remains on the plant, and mother earth feels the duty to give to the root of the flower a place in her own house, to nourish it with her vital humors which she possesses, to keep it exposed to the rays of the sun in order to color it. And she waits for the night dew so that her flower may receive sufficient humors to withstand the ardent kisses of the sun, so that it may develop and receive the most intense and most beautiful color and fragrance. So, it can be said that mother earth is the nourishment and the life of the flower. So it is for the soul who lives in Our Will; We must give her a place in Our house and, more than mother, nourish her, raise her and give her so much grace for her to be able to bear and remain exposed to, from outside and from within, the ardent light of the immensity of Our Will. On the other hand, one who does not do and does not live in It is like a flower that is snatched from the plant and placed in vases. Poor flower - it has already lost its mama who, with so much love, nourished it and kept it exposed to the sun in order to warm it and color it. And even though there is water in the vase, it is not the mother that gives it to it, therefore it is not a nourishing water, and in spite of its being kept in the vase, it is yet subject to withering and dying. Such is the soul without my Will – she lacks the Divine Mama that generated her; she lacks the nourishing and fecundating virtue, she lacks the maternal warmth that warms her and, with its light, gives her its brush strokes of beauty, to render her beautiful and florid. Poor creature – without the tenderesses and the love of the One who gave her life; how skinny and without beauty will she grow; and how withered in the true good.”

After this, I went around in the Divine Will to find all the acts of creatures, in order to place in them my ‘I love You’ and to ask in each act of creature for the Kingdom of the Divine Will upon earth. And my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, my Divine Will, when It is invoked in the act of the creature, takes away the sourness of the human will, It sweetens its manners, It represses the violent manners, and with Its light It warms the works made numb by the cold of the human will. So, one who lives in my Divine Will prepares the prevenient grace for the human generations in order to make It known to them, and each of her acts in It forms the step in order to ascend – herself first, and then the creatures, to the knowledges of the Supreme Fiat. So, to one who lives in It, my Divine Will gives the maternal virtues, and It gives her the office of performing, before God and before creatures, the office of true mama.

See, then, the necessity of your acts in my Will, in order to form a long staircase that must touch Heaven, in such a way as to force It with Its very divine strength, to let my Fiat descend upon earth and form there Its Kingdom, making It find, upon this staircase, the first people that would receive It and be willing to let It reign in their midst. Without a staircase one cannot go up, therefore it is necessary that one creature would make it, to lay the field in order to let others ascend. And so that this creature may be willing, We must give her the office of mother, who, loving the creatures as her own children, given to her by my Divine Will, would accept the mandate and would spare neither toils nor sacrifices, and, if needed, even her own life for love of these children. More so since, in giving her the office of mother, my Divine Volition endows the soul with maternal love, and makes her feel these children in her own heart, and gives her divine and human tenderness in order to conquer God and the creature and unite them together, to make her do His Divine Will. There is no greater honor We can give to the creature than maternity. Maternity is bearer of generation, and We give her the grace to form Our beloved people. And even though maternity says pain, she will yet feel the joy, all divine, of seeing the children of my Will come out from within that pain. Therefore, always repeat your acts, and do not draw back; drawing back is of the cowardly, of the indolent, of the inconstant - not of the strong; even less so, of the children of my Will.”

The Divine Will, spy, sentry, Mother and Queen. Its blowing breath forms in the soul the basin of love in order to enclose Its truths. Ecstasy of love of the Creator; nourishments that He gives to His gifts.

I was following the acts of the Divine Fiat, and it seemed to me that in each of Its acts that I followed It prepared for me Its blowing breath of love, which It contained within Itself and longed to unleash from Itself, to make it a prisoner inside my little soul. And I, feeling Its love, from within Its same love, unleashed my love toward the One who so much loved me, and I longed for Its new blowing breath of love, to say to It, with more intense affection: 'I love You.' It seemed to me that the desire of the Divine Will to be loved is so great, that It Itself places in the soul the dose of Its love, to make Itself loved, and It waits for the love of the creature, to be able to say to her: "How happy I am that you love Me." But while I was thinking of this, my adored Jesus, making His little visit, told me: "My daughter, you must know that Our Love gives of the incredible. Our Divine Will is the spy of the creature, and It keeps spying to see when she is disposed to receive Its blowing breath of contained love, because It knows that the creature does not possess a great quantity of Divine Love – she just has a particle of the infinite Love from when she was created; and if it has not been nourished, it is like the fire when it is under the ashes, such that, while the fire exists, the ashes keep it covered and repressed, in a way that it cannot even make its heat felt. Human love We do not want, and therefore Our Divine Will uses Its loving stratagems, It spies on the dispositions, and It blows. Its blowing breath, like light breeze, puts to flight the ashes that the human will has produced; the particle of Our infinite Love is revived - it lights up. My Divine Volition continues to blow and It adds more Divine Love; the soul feels herself being emptied, warmed; she experiences the coolings of love, and from within the particle of the infinite Love that she possesses, she loves Us, and she gives Us, as her own, Our Divine Love.

You must know that the Love of this Divine Will of Mine is so great, that It uses all the arts: It acts as a spy and It blows Its breath upon her; It acts as her Mother and It rocks her in Its arms; It acts as her sentry and It watches over her; It acts as her Queen and It dominates her; It acts as Sun to her and It illuminates her; and It offers Itself even to serve her. And when It wants to deposit in you Its knowledges, Its truths, even just one of Its words – what does It do? It blows Its breath upon you so much, that first It forms in you Its basin of love, of light, in order to enclose Its truths in the basin of Its love and light that It formed in you. So, It entrusts Its truths to Its own Love, to Its light, knowing that only Its Love can have true interest in keeping them, and in spurring you on so that they may not remain hidden. Oh! if it wasn't for this, my basin of love, which encloses all the knowledges of my Fiat, how many things you would have buried in your soul, without anyone knowing anything. This is the reason why, before manifesting to you Its truths, It acts as the All-doer around you – to prepare you, to place new love in you, to form the new basin for Its truths, and put them in the safe bank of Its Divine Love. And if I wait for you in your acts with so much love, these are Our usual pretexts – the occasion We keep looking for, to find the comma, the dot, of the creature, in order to give her new love, new graces; and even more so, because We want her company. Without the one who wants to do Our Will We cannot be; Our Will Itself already brings her to Us, in Its arms, into Our acts, so that she may be with Us, and with everything We do."

After this, I continued my round in the acts of the Divine Will, and as I reached the point of the creation of man, I paused in order to watch, as spectator, with what love the Divine Maker had created him. And my Highest Good, Jesus, added: "Little daughter of my Will, to the little ones We feel drawn to tell Our ineffable and infinite secrets – We want to tell Our story; more so, since her origin is involved in it, so as to make her touch with her own hand with what love was her littleness loved, and loved again, by Us. In fact, she was present – she was already within Us in the act of the creation of man; and this, in order to let her celebrate, and, for Us, to celebrate together with her the solemn act of her creation. Now, you must know that Our Supreme Being, in the act of creating the creature, found Itself in a sort of profound ecstasy; Our Love enraptured Our Divine Being – Our Love enraptured Us, and Our Fiat placed Itself in act of operating with Its creative virtue. And it was in this ecstasy of love that We issued from Ourselves all the graces, the gifts, the virtues, the beauties, the sanctities, and so forth, with which all creatures were to be endowed and enriched. Our Love was not content, other than when It placed in order, outside of Us, everything that was to serve all and each one – all the varieties of sanctities and specialties of beauties and gifts, so that each one might be the facsimile of her Creator. These endowments and riches are already at the disposal of all; so, each creature, in being born, already has her endowment ready, which God, from the very moment man was created, issued from Himself for each one. But, how many do not know it, nor do they avail themselves of the rights that God gave them; and while they are rich, they live a poor life, and are so far away from true sanctity, as if they were not the beings who came out of that God trice holy, who cannot make but holy, beautiful and happy creatures, similar to Himself. But the centuries will not end, nor will the last of days come, if everything We have issued in Our ecstasy of love is not taken by the creatures. In fact, it can be said that extremely little has been taken of that plenty which We have placed at their disposal.

But, listen, good daughter, to another excess of Our ardent Love: in putting out of Ourselves the endowments, the graces, the gifts, We did not detach them from Us – outside of Us, yes, but inseparable from Us, so that the creature, in taking Our gifts, with Our inseparability, might receive the continuous nourishment in order to nourish Our gifts, Our sanctity, Our beauty, Our graces. So, together with Our gifts, We rendered the creature herself inseparable from Us, because she does not have the necessary and holy nourishments with which to nourish Our gifts; and We offer to give gifts and nourishments in order to nourish Our sanctity, Our celestial graces. So, We are in continuous act of being together with her, to give her now the food to nourish Our sanctity, now the food to nourish Our strength, now the distinct food to nourish Our beauty. In sum, We are around her, and always busy giving the different nourishments to each gift We have given her; and this serves to preserve, to grow and to crown Our gifts; and the happy creature also is crowned, with and in Our own gifts. Therefore, to give a gift to the creature serves to bind Us with her, not only to nourish it, but We give her, as pledge, Our work, the inseparability, and Our very Life. In fact, if We want Our likeness, We must give Our Life, to be able to produce Our likeness in her; and this We do gladly – even more, Our Love repeats for Us Our ecstasy, and makes Us give everything, so as to have Us take the littleness of the creature, which is also Ours, and which came out of Us. From this you can comprehend what Our cares are – Our ecstasies of love, when We give, not a gift, but Our own Will as life of the creature. To nourish Our gifts is one thing; to nourish Our Will is another. By virtue of It, the creature already enraptures Us continuously to herself, and We suffer continuous ecstasies of love; and in these ecstasies We do nothing but pour out love in torrents, seas of light, indescribable graces. Nothing is given by measure, because We must not only nourish her, but We must keep her surrounded by cortege and honored with divine honors in the creature. Therefore, my daughter, be attentive, and let nothing human come out of you, so that you too may honor, with divine acts, my Will in you.”

Fiat!!!

February 6, 1932

One who lives in the Divine Will is raised by God with divine features and manners. The race in the Fiat. The acts done in It are placed on the eternal scale and enclosed in the divine bank.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues. I always feel like the little atom that goes up and down, as though wandering in Its acts, to find Its life and mine in Its acts. And my atom does not stop – it runs, it always runs, because I feel the extreme need to find the life in the Fiat! Otherwise, I feel I cannot live without Its life, and without Its acts I feel I am on an empty stomach, and therefore I must run to find life and food. More so, since the Divine Will awaits me in Its acts with an unspeakable love, to fix Its food for Its little daughter. But while my mind was wandering within Its light, the sweet and Sovereign Celestial Jesus, making His little escape to His little daughter, told me: “Blessed daughter, how beautiful is your race in Our Will; and even though you are the little atom, We can raise you as We want. The little ones can be raised with Our features, which resemble Us; We teach Our divine manners, Our celestial science, in such a way that she forgets the rough manners and the ignorance of the human will. Those who are grown-ups are already formed, and We can redo little or nothing; and then, they are used to living like grown-ups, according to the human will, and it takes miracles to destroy habits, if one manages at all. On the other hand, with the little ones it is easy for Us, nor does it cost Us much, because they have no radical habit – at most, a few fleeting motions, such that one little word of Ours, one breath of Our light, is enough for her to remember it no more.

Therefore, be always little if you want my Divine Will, acting as your true Mother, to raise you, so that it may be all Our glory and also yours.

Now, you must know that an act that is repeatedly renewed forms the habit; and since an act that never ceases is only of the Supreme Being, if the creature, then, feels herself in possession of an act that she always repeats, it means that God has enclosed His life, His manner, in that act. A continuous act is divine life and act, and only one who lives in my Divine Will can feel within herself the power, the virtue, the miraculous strength of an act that never ceases, because, having been raised by Us, it is not easy for her to depart from Our manners, and not to feel within herself the life and the continuous acts of the One who has raised her. Here, then, your running, feeling always the extreme need to find Our life and yours in the Fiat, in Its acts; and We, running in you to be present in Our incessant acts. And while We run, you run with Us, so that Our acts that are in you may live common life with Our acts that are outside of you; and just as you feel the extreme need, so do We feel the extreme need of love to make your littleness go around in all the acts of Our Fiat, so that, since you are unable to enclose them all within yourself, with your going around in them you may take part in as many as you can. Therefore, run, always run; even more, I tell you: let us always run, because there is no greater grace that I can give to the creature than letting her feel within herself the virtue of a continuous act.”

Then, I continued to follow the acts of the Divine Will, and my beloved Jesus added: “My daughter, each time you form an act of yours in the act of my Divine Will, as many more bonds do you form in It, remaining confirmed as many times for as many acts as you do in the Divine Fiat; and the Divine Will remains confirmed as many more times in you. And for each bond and confirmation that you form, my Will expands Its seas around you, and, as confirmation, It places in it one of Its truths, one of Its knowledges as seal, and It manifests to you one more degree of value that my Will contains. But do you know what these additional bonds, confirmations, truths, knowledges, values that you come to know, do in your soul? They make the life of my Will grow in you. Not only this, but by repeating your acts, they will have as many more degrees of value for as much more as you have known. Your acts are placed on the scale of the divine value, and they are worth for as much as you have known, and for as much value as has been communicated by Us into your act. So, your act of yesterday, as you repeat it today, does not have the same value as yesterday, but has acquired the new value which We have made known. Therefore, by the repetition of the acts, accompanied by new truths and knowledges, they acquire day by day new degrees, always increasing, of infinite value. Not only do We place the acts of the creature done in Our Will on Our eternal scale, to give her the weight of an infinite value, but We preserve them in Our divine bank, to give her a hundred times as much. Therefore, every single time you repeat your acts, so many times do you come to put your little coins in Our divine bank, and therefore you acquire as many more rights to receive from Us. See, then, where the excess of Our Love reaches, such that We want to make Ourselves debtors of the creature, receiving the little coins of her acts into Our immense bank, for We possess so much, yet We greatly love to receive the tiny little coins to give her the right to receive of Our own. Our Love wants to interact with the creature at any cost, It wants to be in continuous relationship with her; and this, by dint of giving, and maybe even of losing. How many times, while We want to give to her, We want to make known to her many beautiful things of Ours, We want to make her feel how sweet and powerful Our word is – and she shows herself cold, indifferent, if she does not turn her back to Us at all; and Our Love remains as though defeated on the part of human ingratitude. But the little daughter will never do this, will she? Your littleness will make you feel the extreme need of your Jesus, of His Love and of His Will.”

Work of God in the soul who lives in the Divine Will. Co-breathing between God and the creature. Lookout of Jesus to have the company of the creature in His works.

My sweet Jesus, with His enrapturing force, pulls me always into His adorable Will, to let me cover the multiplicity of His works, which seem to be waiting for me to give me something more than what they have given me; and I remain amazed at so much divine goodness and generosity. And beloved Jesus, to infuse in me greater love and desire to follow the acts of the Divine Will, told me: “Blessed daughter of my Volition, each time you elevate yourself in It to unite yourself to each act It has done, and to unite your act to Its own, the divine act rises and gives you a degree of grace, of love, of sanctity, a degree of divine life and of glory. These degrees, united together, form the necessary substance to form the divine life in the creature; one forms the heartbeat, one the breath, one the word, one the eye, one the beauty, one the sanctity of God in the depth of the soul. As the creature approaches them, Our acts rise, to give what they possess; they anxiously wait for her in order to place themselves in attitude of rising, to form their divine outpourings, to deposit themselves and repeat the acts in her. So, one who unites herself with the acts of Our Divine Will gives Us the occasion to let Us work – but to do what? To form Our life with Our work in the creature. You must know that the creature, by elevating herself in Our Divine Will, leaves everything and reduces herself to her nothingness. This nothing recognizes its Creator, and the Creator recognizes the nothing that came out to light – not the nothing cluttered with things that do not belong to Him, no; and finding it ‘nothing’, He fills it with the ‘All’. Here is what it means to live in my Will – to unclutter oneself of everything and, extra light, to fly into the womb of the Celestial Father, so that this nothing may receive the life of the One who created it.

In addition to this, Our Will is Our life and Our food, and since We have no need of material foods, It gives Us, then, the food of Its holy works; and since the creature is one of Our works, We want to find in her Our Will as life, so that, not only herself, but all of her works may serve Us as food; and We, in exchange, give her the food of Our works. This feeding ourselves with the same foods forms the co-breathing between God and the creature. This co-breathing produces peace, communication of goods, inseparability; it seems that the divine breath breathes in the creature, and that of the creature in God, uniting them so much as to feel as if the breath of one were one with the other. Here then, come the co-breathings of Will, co-breathing of love, of works; We feel that breath which We issued in the creation of man, and which he broke by doing his will, reborn again in the creature. Our Will has the virtue and office of regenerating in him what he lost with sin, and of reordering him as he came out of Our creative hands.”

After this, I was going around in the works of Creation and Redemption, and my Sovereign Jesus added: “My daughter, Our works suffer isolation if they are not recognized as works done for love of creatures. In fact, there was no other purpose in doing so many marvelous works in Creation, than to give them many attestations of love. We had no need, everything was done with an intense love for them. Now, if this love of Ours is not recognized in each created thing, Our works remain alone, without cortege, without honors, and as though apart from the creatures. So, the heavens, the sun, the other created things, are alone; what I did in Redemption, my works, my pains, my tears and everything else, are isolated. Now, who forms the company for Our works? One who recognizes them and, going around within them, finds Our love palpitating for her, longing for her company in order to give and receive love. So much so, that when you go around in Our Will to find Our works, and to recognize Our love and place your own, I feel so drawn, that I am almost always waiting for you in each work, to enjoy your company, your cortege; and I feel as though repaid for what I did and suffered. And when sometimes you delay your coming, I am waiting, and I put Myself on the lookout from inside my works, to see when you are about to come, so as to enjoy your sweet company. Therefore, be attentive - don’t make Me wait.”

The acts done without the Divine Will are voids of the infinite. How one must do everything and wait for the events to let the Kingdom of the Divine Will come. How the acts done in It set out for Heaven as property of the Celestial Fatherland.

I was continuing my acts in the Divine Will, to find all Its acts and fuse them together, so as to be able to say: 'I do what It does.' Oh! what happiness one feels in thinking that one is doing what the Divine Will does. And my lovable Jesus, visiting His little daughter, told me: "Good daughter, if you knew what void is formed in the act of the creature when it is not filled completely with my Will... That act lacks the fullness of sanctity, it lacks the infinite; and since the infinite is missing, an abyss of emptiness appears, which only the infinite could fill. In fact, the creature, with all her acts, was made for the infinite, and when my Will runs within her acts, It places the infinite in them, and her act appears full of light, kept by my Will in Its womb of light, and with the infinite inside, which renders it a fulfilled act. On the other hand, when my Will does not enter the act of the creature as life, beginning, means and end, the act is empty, and no one can fill the abyss of that void; and if there is sin, an abyss of darkness and of miseries appears in that act, such as to be horrifying. Now, my daughter, how many of these acts are there in the length of the centuries, empty of the infinite – the infinite rejected by the human act. My Divine Will has the right over each act of creature, and in order to come to reign It wants one who lives in It to go tracing all these empty acts, in order to pray It – to press It to put the infinite in each act, that It may recognize Its own act in each act, so that Its dominion may be complete. And even if these acts were to be past acts, for one who lives in my Will there is always something to do and to repair, because in It there is the power to be able to fix and redo everything, as long as It finds a creature who is willing. More so, since those are acts of creature without my Will; therefore another creature, united with my Will, can fix and order everything.

This is why, my daughter, I have told you other times, and I repeat to you: 'Let us do everything it takes in order to make the Divine Will known and let It reign.' Nothing must be lacking on our part: prayers, sacrifice of one's life, taking all the acts of creatures as though in one's hand in order to call It to place something of Its own, so that there might be my 'I love you' and yours, my plea and yours, crying out: 'We want the Divine Will.' So, the whole Creation and all acts will all be as though covered with Divine Will, and the Divine Will will feel called by each act of creature from all points, and by each created thing, because you and I have already made the call, wanting to put even the sacrifice of our life in each thing and in each act, so that It may come to reign. This will be power before the Throne of God, magnetic force, irresistible magnet – all acts crying out that they want the Divine Will reigning in the midst of creatures. But who is crying out? I and the little daughter of my Will. Then, as though captured, It will descend to reign. Here, then, your rounds and rounds in Creation, in my own acts, in those of the Celestial Mama – to commit Our very divine acts for a Kingdom so holy; and in those of the creatures – to copy them and place what they may lack. But all of them must have one single voice, whether directly, or indirectly by means of one who wants to make the sacrifice of becoming the supplier and repairer, to obtain that It may come to reign in the midst of the generations. Therefore, what I have you do, and I Myself do together with you, are necessary acts, preparations, formation, wealth and capitals that are needed. Once we have done everything, on my part and on your part, in such a way that nothing must be lacking, so as to be able to say: 'We have done everything, there is nothing left for us to do', just as I said in Redemption: 'I have done everything to redeem man, my love does not know what else to invent in order to place him in safety', and I departed for Heaven, waiting for man to take the good that by the sacrifice of my life I had formed for him and given him – in the same way, once there is nothing left for us to do for the Kingdom of my Will upon earth, you too will be able to come into Heaven, waiting from the Celestial Fatherland for the creatures to take the wealth, the capital, the Kingdom of the Supreme Fiat which will already be there formed. This is why I always say to you: 'Be attentive, do not omit anything' – when there is nothing else that can be done, let us do our part; the rest, the circumstances, the events, the things, the diversity of people, will do the rest; and since It is already formed, It will come out by Itself and will go forward in Its reigning. It takes more sacrifice to form something, for then it is easy to put it out; but in order to form it, it takes someone who would lay down his own life, and the sacrifice of a will sacrificed with continuous acts in Mine.”

After this He remained silent; and then He added: “My daughter, you must know that each act of creature has its place around God. Just as each star has its place under the vault of the heavens, the same for the acts of creatures: each has its place. But which ones are those that set out on the royal road, as property of the Celestial Fatherland, and take the most honorable places, and give divine glory to their Creator? The acts done in my Will. When one of these acts departs from the earth, the Heavens bow down, all the Blessed go to meet it, and accompany that act to the place of honor around the Supreme Throne. In that act all feel glorified, because the Eternal Will has triumphed in the act of the creature, and has placed Its divine act in it. On the other hand, the acts that are not done in my Will, be they even good, do not set out on the royal road; they set out through winding roads, and make a long stop to go to Purgatory, and there wait for the creature, so as to be purified together by dint of fire. And when they are done with being purified, then do they set out for Heaven, to take their place – not in places of prime order, but in secondary places. Do you see the great difference? The first acts, as soon as they are formed, don’t even remain together with the creature, because, being things of Heaven, they cannot remain on earth, and therefore they immediately take their flight into their Fatherland. Not only this, but all the Angels and Saints claim in Heaven, as their own thing, that which has been done in the Divine Will, because everything that is done by It, both on earth and in Heaven, is all property of the Celestial Fatherland. Therefore, each little act of hers is claimed by the whole of Heaven, because they are all founts of eternal joys and beatitude, which belong to them. The complete opposite for one who does not operate in my Will.”

Continuous rebirths of the creature in the Divine Will. How the creature becomes the protector of the divine works.

I am always in the arms of the Divine Will which, more than mother, keeps me clasped in Its arms, surrounded by Its light in order to infuse in me Its life of Heaven. It seems to me that It is all attention, in order to have Its great glory of having a daughter all of Divine Will, who has not taken any other food, who knows no other science, nor other law, nor other tastes or pleasure but Its Will alone. And therefore, in order to keep me occupied and estranged from everything, It gives me many surprises, It tells me many beautiful things, one more beautiful than the other – but always things that belong to It, in such a way that my poor mind remains as though enraptured and sunken in Its arms of light. And since everything It has done, even though It issued it outside, It keeps yet all centralized within Itself - so much so, that if one looks inside Its Will, one finds one single act; if one looks outside, one finds innumerable works and acts that cannot be numbered – I felt in It the beginning of my existence, as if at that point I were about to come out to light; and I remained surprised. And my beloved Jesus, making me His short little visit, told me: “My daughter, born and reborn in my Will, each time that, with all your full knowledge, you abandon yourself in Its arms of light and remain there inside, so many times are you reborn in It, and these rebirths are one more beautiful and striking than the other. This is why I have called you many times ‘the little newborn of my Will’ - because while you are reborn, you return to be born again. In fact, my Will is unable to remain idle with one who lives together with It, but It wants to be always occupied by being born again in a continuous way in the creature, absorbing her continuously into Itself; so much so, that my Fiat is reborn in her, and she is reborn in my Will. These rebirths on both sides are lives that they mutually exchange, and this is the greatest attestation of love, the most perfect act – to be reborn, to exchange lives, so as to be able to say to each other: ‘See how much I love you - that I give you, not acts, but continuous life.’ Here then, my daughter, for one who lives in my Divine Will, my Will places this fortunate creature in the first act of her creation; she feels her beginning in God, the creative, vivifying and preserving virtue of His omnipotent breath; so much so, that if she withdraws in it, she returns into her nothingness, from which she came out, and therefore she feels, vividly, her continuous rebirth in the arms of her Creator; and feeling herself in her beginning, the creature renders back to God the first act of life that she received from Him, which is the holiest act, the most solemn, the most beautiful – the act of God Himself.”

After this, I continued my round in the acts of the Divine Will, and – oh! how I would like to embrace everything, also what all the Blessed have done, so as to give, in each act, an honor and glory to God and to the Saints, and make use of the very acts done by them to honor them. And my beloved Jesus added: “My daughter, when the creature remembers, honors, glorifies what was done by her Creator for love of her, and by her Redeemer, to place her in safety, and by all the Saints, she becomes the protector of all these acts. The heavens, the sun and all Creation feel protected by the creature; my terrestrial life down here, my pains, my tears, feel a refuge in her, and find their protector; the Saints find in her memory, not only protection, but their own acts vivified, renewed in the midst of creatures - in sum, they feel life being given back to them in their acts. Oh! how many beautiful works and virtues remain as though buried in the low world, because there is no one who remembers them and honors them. The memory calls again the works of the past and renders them as though present. But do you know what happens? An exchange takes place: the creature becomes the protector with her memory, and all Our works, Creation, Redemption and everything that the Saints have done, make themselves the protectors of their protector; they place themselves around her to protect her, to defend her; they act as sentries for her, and while they take refuge in her to be protected, each of Our works, all my pains and all the works and virtues of my Saints, compete among themselves, taking turns to act as her guard of honor, that she may remain defended from everything and from everyone. And then, there is no greater honor you can give, when you make use of them in order to ask, in each act, for the Kingdom of the Divine Will. They feel called and employed to act as messengers, between Heaven and earth, of a Kingdom so holy. You must know that past, present and future – everything must serve for the Kingdom of the Divine Fiat. Now, with your remembering, asking for this Kingdom by means of Our works and the virtues and acts of all, all feel placed at Its service, and take their office and place of honor. So, your going around is necessary because it serves to prepare the Kingdom of the Divine Will. Therefore, be attentive and continuous.”

One who lives in the Divine Will feels the need to go around the divine works; and how all the divine works go around the creature. The purpose, seed of light.

I was continuing my round in the divine works.... I feel my poor mind as though fixed around the works of my Creator; and it does its race, almost continuous, around them. In fact, since they are works done for love of me, I feel the duty to recognize them, to use them as stairways in order to ascend to the One who so much loved me, and loves me, and to give Him my little love because He wants to be loved. But while I was doing this, I thought to myself: ‘And why does my mind have to always run? It seems to me that a powerful force is over me, maintaining my race.’ And my sweet Jesus, making me His tiny little visit, told me: “My daughter, everything goes around the creature: the heavens go around, and do not let her escape from under their azure vault; the sun goes around, and with its little rounds of light it gives her light and heat; the water goes around the creature; the fire, the air, the wind - and each element gives her the properties it contains. My very life and all my works are in continuous round around the creatures, to be in continuous act of giving Myself to them. Even more, you must know that as soon as a baby is conceived, my conception goes around the conception of the baby, to form him and keep him defended. And as he is born, my birth places itself around the newborn, to go around him and give him the helps of my birth, of my tears, of my wailings; and even my breath goes around him to warm him. The newborn does not love Me, though unconsciously, and I love him to folly; I love his innocence, my image in him, I love what he must be. My steps go around his first vacillating steps in order to strengthen them, and they continue to go around unto the last step of his life, to keep his steps safe within the round of my steps. In sum, my works go around his works, my words around his, my pains around his pains; and when he is about to breathe the last breath of his life, my agony goes around him as support of his own, and my death, with unconquerable strength, goes around to give him unexpected helps, and with jealousy, all divine, it presses itself around him so that his death may not be death, but true life for Heaven. And I can say that even my Resurrection goes around his sepulcher, waiting for the propitious time in order to call, by the empire of my Resurrection, his resurrection of the body to immortal life.

Now, all the works that have come out of my Will, all of them go round and round – for this purpose were they created. To stop means to have no life and not to produce the fruit established by Us – which cannot be, because the Divine Being knows not how to do either dead works or works without fruit. So, one who enters into my Divine Will takes her place in the order of Creation and feels the need to go around together with all created things; she feels the necessity to make her rapid rounds around my conception, my birth, my tender age and everything I did upon earth. And the beauty of it is that while she goes around all Our works, Our works go around her; in sum, they compete in going around each other. But this is all the effect and fruit of my Divine Will, such that, since It is continuous motion, one who is in It feels the life of Its motion, and therefore the need to run together with It. Even more, I tell you: if you do not feel the continuous race of going around Our works, it is a sign that your life is not permanent in my Will, but you make some exits, some little escapes; and therefore the race ceases, because the One that gives it the life of running is missing; and as you enter into It, so It puts you in the order, and you continue the race, because another Will, Divine and operating, has entered into you. Therefore, be attentive, because you have to deal with an omnipotent Will, which always runs and embraces everything.”

After this, I was thinking to myself: ‘What will be the good, the utility of this race of mine, of this going round and round in the acts of the Divine Will?’ And the Celestial King Jesus added: “My daughter, you must know that each act of creature contains the value of the purpose with which she animates her act. The purpose is like the seed which, buried under the earth, pulverizes with the earth – yet, not in order to die, but to be reborn and form the little plant, loaded with branches, with flowers and fruits that belong to that seed. The seed cannot be seen, it is hidden in its little plant, but from the fruits one knows the seed – whether it is good or bad. Such is the purpose – it is seed of light, and it can be said that it remains as though buried, and it pulverizes in the act of the creature. And if the purpose is holy, all the acts that come from that purpose will all be holy acts, because there is the first purpose, the first seed that animates and gives life to the sequence of the acts of the first purpose; and these acts form the life of the purpose, and in them appear flowers and fruits of true sanctity. And as long as the creature, with full knowledge of her will, does not destroy the original purpose, she can be sure that her acts are enclosed in the first purpose. Now, your race in my Divine Will will have the purpose that you want – that Its Kingdom be formed – and therefore all its acts are centralized in my Fiat; and converting into seed of light, they all become acts of my Will, which eloquently, with arcane and divine voices, ask for this Kingdom so holy into the midst of the human generations.”

She, the prisoner; He, the Divine Prisoner. The Virgin, announcer, messenger, leader of the Kingdom of the Divine Will. One who lives in the Divine Will forms the speaking creation.

My abandonment in the Fiat continues; but I feel, vividly, my extreme poverty, my nonentity, the continuous pain of the privation of my sweet Jesus. If it wasn't for His Divine Volition that sustains me, and very often fraternizes me with Heaven, in such a way as to infuse new life in me, I would not be able to go on without the One who so very often takes off, hides Himself, while I remain on the stake of love, waiting for Him; and as I am slowly consumed, when I reach the extremes – only then does He repeat His short little visit. So, I was thinking to myself: ‘Jesus has shackled me and bound me with chains, such that there is no danger that they might break – I am, indeed, the poor prisoner. Oh! how I would like my Celestial Mama in my company, so that, under Her guidance I may live the way one should live in the Divine Will.’ But while I was thinking of this, my sweet Jesus repeated His short little visit, and, all tenderness, told me: “My dear prisoner! How happy I am that I shackled you and bound you – because my shackles and my chains say that my love alone, to keep you at my disposal, has used shackles and chains to make you a prisoner only for Me. But, you know? Love wants tit for tat – if I made you a prisoner, first I made Myself Prisoner for you in your own heart; and not wanting to be alone, I made you prisoner, so as to be able to say: ‘We are two prisoners, such that one cannot be without the other.’ In this way we will be able to prepare the Kingdom of my Divine Will. The works done on one’s own are not enjoyable, but company renders them pleasant, it pushes one to work, it sweetens the sacrifice and forms the most beautiful works; and in seeing you call our Celestial Mama as your guide, your Prisoner Jesus exulted with joy in having Her sweet company in our work.

You must know that She was the true and celestial Prisoner of my Divine Will, therefore She knows all the secrets, the ways, She possesses the keys of Its Kingdom. Even more, for each act that the Queen Prisoner did, She prepared in Her act the place to receive the acts of the creature done in the Divine Will; and – oh! how the Celestial Sovereign stands in waiting, and at attention, to see whether the creature operates in my Fiat, so as to take these acts with Her maternal hands and enclose them in Her acts, as pledges, as antidotes, that the Kingdom of the Divine Will is wanted upon earth. So, this Kingdom was already formed by Me and by the Celestial Lady – It already exists, It only has to be given to creatures. In order for It to be given, it is necessary to know It; and since She is the holiest, the greatest Creature, who knew no other kingdom but the Kingdom of my Divine Will alone, She occupies the first place in It; by right, the Celestial Queen will be the announcer, the messenger, the leader of a Kingdom so holy. Therefore pray Her - invoke Her, and She will act for you as guide, as teacher, and with love, all maternal, will receive all your acts and will enclose them in Her own; and will say to you: ‘The acts of my daughter are like the acts of Her Mama, therefore they can stay with mine, in order to double the right for creatures to receive the Kingdom of the Divine Will.’ Since this, His Kingdom, God must give and the creature must receive, it takes the acts of both sides in order to obtain the intent. So, the One who holds more ascendancy, more power, more empire over the Divine Heart is the Sovereign of Heaven; Her acts will be at the head, with the retinue of the other acts of creatures, changed into divine by virtue of my Will, to give them the right to receive this Kingdom. And God, in seeing these acts, will feel moved to give It for the sake of that love which He had in Creation, as He created everything so that His Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven, and each creature be a Kingdom of His Will, which would have Its total dominion. Therefore, always forward in operating and living in the Supreme Fiat.”

After this, my mind was wandering in the Divine Volition, and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, the soul who enters into my Will converts into light, and all her acts, without losing anything of their diversity, of their nature, and of what they are in themselves, are vivified and animated by light. So, all the acts, though distinct among themselves, have the light of my Fiat as life; and my Fiat delights in forming, with Its life of light, now the thought, the word, the work, the step and so forth; and the soul, as the original heaven animated by the Fiat, forms with her acts the sun, the stars, the sea that always murmurs, the wind that moans, that speaks, that shouts, that whistles, that caresses and forms its refreshments. She gives divine light to her Creator, to herself, and she descends unto the lowest ground of creatures; and since the light is fecund and has the virtue of diffusing everywhere by itself, she forms the most beautiful flowerings, but all invested with light. And here is how my Divine Will repeats Its beloved Creation in the soul who lives in Its light; or rather, an even more beautiful one, because the Creation is mute, and if It eloquently speaks, It does so always in Its mute language; while the creation It forms in the soul is all speaking. The sun speaks of her works, the sea of her thoughts, the wind of her words; the treading of her steps which, as she walks, leaves the virtues of its flowers, and everything she does, speak like brilliant stars which, with their twinkling, pray, love, praise, bless, repair and thank continuously, without ever ceasing, that Supreme Fiat which, with so much love, delights in forming in them the beautiful speaking creation, all animated by Its divine light. Therefore, it is no wonder that your Jesus forms His continual dwelling in the midst of this speaking creation, which my Divine Will forms for Me. It would be more surprising if I were not there, because the Owner, the King who has formed it for Himself with so much love, would be missing. Why form it if I were not to dwell inside of it and enjoy my lovely speaking creation? More so, since in this speaking creation there is always work to do, always something to add. Each of her acts is one more voice that she acquires, and which, with all eloquence, speaks to Me of my love and of hers; and I must listen to it. Not only this, but I want to enjoy her tastes that she gives to Me. I like them so much that I long for them, and therefore I cannot put them aside. Then, there is always something to give, and always something to take; therefore I cannot leave her without Me even for one instant. At the most, now I speak and now I remain silent; now I let Myself be felt and now I remain hidden – but to leave one who lives in my Divine Will I cannot. Therefore, be sure that as long as you do not go out of It, your Jesus does not leave you – He will always be with you, and you will always be with Me.”

Three necessary conditions in order to obtain the Kingdom of the Divine Will. How all live in the Divine Will. Different way of living.

I was thinking about the Divine Will, and was saying to myself: ‘If Our Lord loves so much to make known a Will so holy, and He wants It to reign in the midst of creatures, why, then, does He want them to pray in order to obtain It? Once He wants to, He can give It, even without so much praying Him.’ And my sweet Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My daughter, to know my Divine Will is the greatest thing that I can give and that the creature can receive; and Its reigning is the confirmation of Its great gift and the carrying out of Its Will that was known. Therefore, it is necessary to ask for It; by asking for It, she disposes herself, she forms within herself the royal palace in which to receive It; by asking for It, she acquires the love in order to love It, she acquires the qualities of sacrifice that are needed in order to possess It. And as one asks for It, the human will loses its ground, it is debilitated, it loses strength and disposes itself to receive the dominion of the Supreme Volition; and God, seeing Himself prayed, disposes Himself to give It. It takes the dispositions of both sides in order for Us to give Our celestial gifts. How many gifts do We want to give! But because they are not asked for, We retain them within Ourselves, waiting to give them when they are asked for. By asking, it is as if commerce were opened between Creator and creature. If one does not ask, the commerce is closed, and Our celestial gifts do not descend in order to put themselves in circulation on the face of the earth. Therefore, the first indispensable necessity in order to obtain the Kingdom of the Divine Will is to ask for It with incessant prayers, because, as they pray, so are We reached by little letters – now of solicitation, now of supplication, now of the agreement that they want to make with Our Will, until the last letter comes, of the final accord.

Second necessity, more indispensable than the first, in order to obtain this Kingdom: it is necessary to know that one can have It. Who can ever think of a good, desire it, love it, if one does not know that he can obtain it? No one. If the ancients had not known that the future Redeemer was to come, no one would have given it a thought, nor prayed, nor hoped for salvation, because the salvation, the sanctity of those times, was fixed - centralized in the future Celestial Savior. Outside of this there was no good to be hoped for. To know that one can have a good forms the substance, the life, the nourishment of that good in the creature. Here is the reason for the so many knowledges about my Will that I have manifested to you – that it may be known that they can have the Kingdom of my Will. When it is known that a good can be possessed, arts and industriousness are used, and the means to obtain the intent are employed.

The third necessary means is to know that God wants to give this Kingdom. This lays the foundations, the sure hope in order to obtain It, and forms the final preparations in order to receive the Kingdom of my Divine Will. When a good is wanted and longed for, to know that the one who can give it already wants to give it, can be called the last striking blow, and final act, to obtain what is wanted. In fact, had I not manifested to you that I can give and want to give my Divine Will as dominating and reigning in the midst of creatures, you would have remained indifferent like everyone else toward a good so great. So, your interest, your prayers, have been effects of, and births from, that which you have known. And I Myself, when I came upon earth, during the thirty years of my hidden life - it can be said that, in appearance, I did no good to anyone, nor did a single one know Me. I was, yes, in their midst, but unobserved; all the good unfolded between Me and the Celestial Father, my Celestial Mother and dear Saint Joseph, because they knew who I was; everybody else - nothing. But when I came out of my hiding place, and I openly made Myself known, saying that I was truly the promised Messiah, their Redeemer and Savior, even though by making Myself known I drew upon Myself calumnies, persecutions, contradiction, anger, hatred from the Jews, and my very Passion and death, with all these evils that rained down upon Me like pouring rain, it came to be that I, by making Myself known, affirmed who I was in reality – the Eternal Word descended from Heaven in order to save them. And this is so true, that as long as I remained in the house of Nazareth, not knowing who I was, no one told Me anything, nor did they slander Me or did Me any harm; as I revealed Myself, all evils swooped down upon Me.

But this, making Myself known, was necessary, otherwise I would have departed back for Heaven without accomplishing the purpose for which I had come upon earth. On the other hand, by making Myself known, even though I drew so many evils upon Myself, in the midst of this chasm of evils I formed my Apostles, I announced the Gospel, I performed prodigies, and the knowledge of Me instigated my enemies to make Me suffer so many pains, to the point of giving Me death on the Cross. But I obtained my intent – that many would know Me in the midst of many who did not want to know Me; and the fulfillment of my Redemption. I knew that, by making Myself known, the perfidy and pride of the Jews would do all that to Me, but making Myself known was necessary, because a person, a good, if it is not known, is not bearer of life or of good. The good, the truth, not known, remain hampered within themselves, without fecundity, like many sterile mothers whose offspring ends with them. See, then, how necessary it is that it be known that I can give the Kingdom of my Will, and that I want to give It. I can say that it enters the same necessity as that of making known that I was the Son of God who came upon earth. It is yet true that many, in knowing this, will repeat what they did to Me when I made Myself known as the longed-for Messiah: calumnies, contradiction, doubts, suspicions, scorns, as indeed they have done already, as soon as the beginning of the printing showed signs of making my Divine Will known. But this says nothing; it is the good that possesses the strength that wounds evil; and so creatures, and hell, feeling wounded, arm themselves against good and would want to annihilate good, as well as she or he who wants to make that good known. But in spite of everything that they wanted in the first beginning - having as though suffocated, upon its wanting to rise, the knowledge of my Will and Its wanting to reign – yet It did take Its first steps, and what some did not believe, others have believed. The first steps will call for the second, the third, and so forth, although those who will raise contradiction and doubts will not be lacking. But it is of absolute necessity that my Divine Will, and that I can give It, and that I want to give It, be known.

These are the conditions without which God cannot give what He wants to give, and the creature cannot receive it. Therefore pray, and do not hold yourself back from making my Divine Will known. Time, circumstances, things, people, change – they are not always the same; therefore, what is not obtained today can be obtained tomorrow – to the confusion, however, of those who have suffocated a good so great. But my Will will triumph and will have Its Kingdom upon earth.”

Then, I continued to think about the Divine Will, and I abandoned all of myself in Its divine arms; and my beloved Jesus added: “Good daughter, you must know that my Divine Will possesses and contains everything within Itself – all the joys, all the beauties; everything comes from It, and without dispersing anything, It contains everything within Itself. It can be said that It carries everyone and everything within Its immense womb of light. So, all live in It – with this difference: that one who, with all her will, wants to live in It and lets herself be subdued by Its dominion, lives as daughter, and, as daughter, is constituted heiress of the joys, of the beauties, of the goods of her Mother, in such a way that this Divine Mother is all intent on embellishing, enriching, and making her daughter rejoice; while one who wants to live of human will and does not let herself be subdued by Its dominion, lives in this Holy Will, yet lives, not as daughter, but like a stranger, and all the joys convert for the creature into bitterness, riches into poverty, beauties into ugliness. In fact, by living like a stranger, she lives as though apart from the goods that my Divine Will possesses, and, rightly so, she deserves to possess nothing good; her human will that subdues her gives her what it has – passions, weaknesses, miseries. Nothing escapes my Divine Will – not even hell; and since they did not love It in life, living like members detached from It - but always inside, not outside – now, in those gloomy prisons, the joys, the happiness, the beatitudes of my Divine Will convert into pains and into eternal torments. Therefore, the living in my Will is not new, as some believe - all live in It, good and bad; if something can be called new, it is the way of living, recognizing It as continuous act of one's life, giving It dominion in all of one's acts. In fact, the living in It is the sanctity of each instant that the creature receives; it can be said that she grows continuously in sanctity – but sanctity fed by my Will, raised together with It; so, she feels my Will as life more than her own life.

On the other hand, one who does not live in It, though she is there inside, does not recognize It in each of her acts, and lives as if she lived far away from It and did not receive the continuous act of Its life, even though she does receive it. In this way, not the sanctity of living in my Will is formed, but, at most, the sanctity of circumstances. So, they remember about my Divine Will when a need, a sorrow, a cross, oppresses them. You hear them exclaim: 'The Divine Will be done.' And in all the rest of their lives, where was my Will? Was It not already with them, contributing to all their acts? It was there, but they did not recognize It. It happens as to a mother who lives in her palace, and who has given birth to many children. Some of them remain always around the mother, who instills in the children her noble manners, nourishes them with delicate and good foods, dresses them with decent clothes, entrusts to them her secrets and makes them heirs of her goods. It can be said that the mother lives in the children, and the children in the mother; they make each other happy, and love each other with inseparable love. The other children live in their mother's palace, but are not always around her; they find pleasure in living in rooms far off from that of the mother, therefore they do not learn her noble manners, they do not dress with decency; the foods that they take do them more harm than good; and if sometimes they go to their mother, it is not out of love, but out of need. Hence, the great difference between these two kinds of children; but in spite of this, both the first and the second live in the palace of the mother. So it is – all live in my Will, but only one who wants to live in It lives as a son with his Mother; all others, even though they live in It, don't even know It; others live like strangers; others know It to offend It."

Fiat!!!

March 27, 1932

Condition of assurance for the coming of the Kingdom of the Fiat upon earth. The manifestations on the Divine Will will be the fierce army of love, weapons and net, to conquer the creature.

I was feeling all immersed in the Divine Volition, and – oh! how many thoughts crowded my mind; and Its light that formed its waves, and one followed the other, and these waves converted into voice, into murmuring, into celestial music.... But – oh! how difficult it is to retain the language of that interminable light. While being inside of it, one seems to comprehend much, but as soon as the light withdraws, only a few tiny little drops are left, and the sweet and unforgettable and dear memory of having been in the light of the Eternal Fiat. If blessed Jesus did not operate a miracle, lowering Himself with a way more adaptable to the human nature, I would not have been able to say a thing.

So, I felt in my mind the picture of the Kingdom of the Divine Will, and I wanted Jesus to tell me which ones were the conditions for It, so as to be certain of Its coming. And my Celestial Teacher, visiting the little newborn of His Will, told me: “My blessed daughter, the conditions, absolute, necessary and of highest importance, which form the life and the nourishment in order to ensure the Kingdom of my Divine Will, are: to ask of the creature great sacrifices - and prolixity of long sacrifice; therefore, Our goodness, by virtue of the sacrifice it asks, must give surprising graces to the one of whom this sacrifice is asked, in such a way that to the creature, captivated by my love, by my gifts and by my graces, the sacrifice that I ask of her will seem nothing, even though she knows that her life is ended. She will no longer have any right over herself, all the rights will belong to the One who is asking for her sacrifice. If she did not know all the intensity of the sacrifice that she is accepting, it would not have all the value, because the more one knows the greatness, the weight of the sacrifice, the more value is placed in it. Knowledge places the exact and complete value in the sacrifice. On the other hand, for one who does not know all the weight of a sacrifice – oh! how diminished are the value, the grace, the good that he must obtain. And then, Our love remains wounded, Our power feels powerless before a creature of whom We ask great sacrifices, making her know the weight to which she must submit; and she, only for love of Us and to fulfill Our Will, accepts everything.

The prolixious sacrifice brings the prolixity of prayer, and – oh! how Our ears become all attention, and Our gazes remain enraptured in seeing that, from within the stake of the sacrifice wanted by Us, she prays – and what does she ask and want? What We Ourselves want – that Our Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven. Ah! if she could, she would turn Heaven and earth upside down, she would want everything in her power, to make everyone ask for what she wants, so that her sacrifice may obtain the intent and bring the fruit wanted by God. Our paternal goodness is such that it is impossible for Us not to grant the purpose of a long sacrifice and of a prolixious prayer.

These are the conditions on the part of creatures, and this We have done with you; and We want you to know it, because We do not give Our things to the blind who, because of their blindness, do not know the goods that are given to them, or those which are around them. Much less so to the mute who, because of their muteness, do not have words to manifest Our truths and Our graces. The first thing We give is the knowledge of what We want to make of her; and then We give and do what We have disposed. Knowledge can be called the beginning, the void, the seed in which to place the sacrifice and Our things, and make the beautiful prayer arise, which debilitates Us, enchains Us with chains, with inseparable bonds, and makes Us grant what she wants. More so since, Our Will being life and work that gives life to everything and to everyone, in order to come to reign upon earth, It wanted, on the part of the human family, one life of creature at Its disposal, which, without opposing, would remain at the mercy of Its Divine Will, that It might do with her whatever It wants. This will serve It as prop and condition in order to ensure the Kingdom on the part of creatures.

Now come the conditions of assurance on the part of God. But to whom could I give them, if not to the one of whom I had asked the sacrifice? So, my long prolixity in manifesting so many truths on my Divine Will, my prolonged speaking on Its Kingdom and on the good It wants to do and must do, Its long sorrow of about six thousand years, for It wants to reign and they rejected It; the many promises of goods, of happiness, of joy that It wants to give if they let It reign, have been nothing other than assurances that I have given to the creature of this Kingdom of my Fiat. And these assurances were made and sealed inside the most beautiful thing, the most sacred, the most precious – that is, in the center of the stake of your sacrifice wanted by Us. I can say that I never tire giving assurance – I speak, I return to speak, always with new ways, of new truths, new forms, surprising similes, always on my Divine Will. I would never have said so much if it were not certain that my Kingdom is to have Its dominion upon earth. Therefore, it is almost impossible that a speaking of mine, so prolixious, and a sacrifice of yours, so continuous, would not have their longed-for fruits on the part of God and on the part of creatures. Therefore, continue your flight in that Fiat which has the power to make Its way, to knock down all difficulties, and, by dint of love, to make of Its fiercest enemies Its most faithful friends and defenders.”

Then He added: “My daughter, my conception, my birth, my hidden life, my Gospel, the miracles, my pains, my tears, my Blood that was shed, my death, united all together, formed an invincible army in order to accomplish my Redemption. In the same way, all my manifestations on my Divine Will, from the first to the last word that I will speak, must serve to form the fierce army, all of love, of invincible strength, of irresistible light, of transforming love. They will cast a net around the creature, such that, if she wants to get out, she will be caught inside, she will remain so entangled as to be unable to get out of it; and while she tries to get out, my many manifestations about my Will will continue to assail her, in such a way as to extend Its net even more. So, seeing herself entangled, she will get a taste for the so many beauties of truths, and will feel happy of having been caught in the net of so many of my truths manifested. So, they will form the fulfillment of the Kingdom of my Divine Will! Therefore, each of my manifestations on It is a weapon that must serve to complete a Kingdom so holy. If I manifest it and you do not say it, you will cause the necessary weapons to be lacking. Therefore, be attentive.

In addition to this, you must know that each word come out of the uncreated wisdom contains life, substance, work, instruction; so, each manifested truth on Our Divine Will will have its own office in Our Kingdom. Many truths will have the office of forming and growing the life of the Divine Will in the creature; others will occupy the office of nourishing it; others will act as teachers; other truths will have the office of defenders, in such a way that they will place themselves around the creature like an army, so that no one will be able to touch her. See, then, the necessity of my speaking, so prolixious, and of the many truths I have manifested: it was a Kingdom that I had to form, which is not formed with few words, with few acts and offices – it takes so many of them! And each truth of mine has the virtue of occupying an office in order to maintain perfect order, perennial peace. It will be the echo of Heaven, and they will swim inside a sea of graces, of happiness, under a sun that knows no clouds; the sky will always be serene. My truths on my Divine Will will be the only laws that will dominate the creatures who will enter to live in this Kingdom – laws, not of oppressions, but of love, which will sweetly make themselves loved, because in them they will find the strength, the harmony, the happiness, the abundance of all goods. Therefore, courage, and always forward in my Divine Will.”

How the Divine Power will put a limit to the evils of man, and will say to him: “Enough up to here.” How Our Lord shows with facts that He wants to give the Kingdom of His Will.

I am always back in the Holy Divine Volition, nor can I do without, because, It being life, the life is always felt – one feels the breath, the motion, the warmth. So it is with the Divine Will – as one feels It, so does one feel Its life, Its warmth, Its motion, and everything It encloses; with only this difference - that one pays attention now to one thing, which It encloses as life, and now to another. So, I was thinking to myself: ‘How can the creature ever return to be beautiful and holy as he came out of the creative hands of God, so as to realize the Kingdom of His Fiat in the midst of the human family?’ And my beloved Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My daughter, all the works of Our Supreme Being are perfect and complete – none of Our works is by half. The Creation is all complete and perfect; even more, there are many things which are not of absolute necessity, but like luxury and pomp of Our power, love and magnificence. Should man alone, for whom all things were created, remain like an incomplete and imperfect work of Our own, without the purpose for which he was created – which is for Our Fiat to have Its Kingdom in each creature? And this, because he sinned and remained stained and degraded, which rendered him like a collapsing house, exposed to his thieves and enemies – as if Our Power were limited and did not have all the power to do what It wants, the way It wants it, and when It wants it? Whoever thinks that the Kingdom of Our Will cannot come puts Our very Supreme Power in doubt. We can do anything; We might lack the willingness, but when We want it Our Power is so great, that whatever We want We do – there is nothing that can resist before Our Power. Therefore,

We have the power to rehabilitate him, to render him more beautiful than before, and to fortify and cement his collapsing house, in such a way as to render it stronger than it used to be, and, at the blowing breath of Our Power, shut his thieves and enemies into the darkest abysses.

So, as much as man slipped from within Our Divine Will, he did not cease to be Our work; and even though he disordered himself, Our Power, for the decorum of Our work, which must be perfect and complete just as We want it, will put with Its power a limit to his disorders, to his weaknesses, and will say to him with Its empire: ‘Enough up to here – re-enter into the order, take your place of honor as a work worthy of your Creator.’ These are prodigies of Our Omnipotence that It will perform, which he will not have the strength to resist - but without strain, spontaneously, drawn and attracted by a supreme force, by an invincible love. Wasn’t Redemption, wanted by Our Will, a prodigy of Our Power and of Our Love, which knows how to conquer everything, even the most awful ingratitude, the gravest sins, and requite in love there where ungrateful man offended It the most? If it is about man – of course he will not be able to stand up again in spite of all the helps of my Redemption, because he is not disposed to taking them; many do not cease to be sinners, weak, smeared with the gravest sins. But if it is about my Power, about my Love, when the two scales overflow a little bit more, and touch him with the Will to conquer him, man will feel shaken and floored, in such a way that he will rise again from evil to good, and will re-enter into Our Divine Will, from which he went out, so as to take his lost inheritance. Do you know where everything lays? Everything is in whether Our Will wants it and has decided it with divine decrees. If this is there, everything is done; and this decision is so true, that there are facts.

You must know that when I came upon earth, while I did the office of Redeemer, at the same time, everything that my Holy Humanity did enclosed as many acts of my Divine Will as a deposit to be given to the creature. I had no need of it because I was the Divine Will Itself. So, my Humanity acted like a most tender Mother; It enclosed within Itself as many births from my Will for as many acts as It did, in order to give birth to them and deliver them onto the lap of the acts of creatures, so as to form, in their acts, the Kingdom of the acts of my Fiat. So, It is there, like a Mother, with a love that makes Her agonize, waiting to give birth to these divine offsprings of Hers.

The other fact is that I Myself taught the ‘Our Father’, so that all would pray for my Kingdom to come, so that my Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven. If It were not to come, teaching such a prayer would have been useless – and useless things I know not how to do. And then, the many truths manifested about my Divine Will – do they not say in clear notes that Its Kingdom will come upon earth, not by human work, but by the work of Our Omnipotence? Everything is possible when We want it; We place as much ease in doing small things as We do in great ones, because all the virtue and power is in Our act, not in the good that the act of Our Power receives. In fact, when I was on earth, since in all my acts ran my Power, the touch of my hands, the empire of my voice, and so forth, were all made powerful, and with the same ease with which I called to life the little girl who had died a few hours before – with that same ease I called to life Lazarus, who had been dead for four days, who was already corrupted, and gave off an unbearable stench. I commanded that the bandages be removed from him, and then I called him with the empire of my voice: ‘Lazarus, come out!’ At my emptying voice, Lazarus was resurrected, the corruption disappeared, the stench ceased, and he came back healthy and hearty as if he had not died – true example of how my Power can make the Kingdom of my Fiat rise again in the midst of creatures. This is a tangible and sure example of how my Power, in spite of the fact that man is corrupted, and the stench of his sins infects him, more than a cadaver - he can be called a poor one wrapped in bandages, who has need of the divine empire in order to be freed of the bandages of his passions - but if the empire of my Power invests him and wants it, his corruption will have no more life, and he will rise again healthy, and more beautiful than before. Therefore, at the most, one can doubt that my Divine Will would want it, because they cannot deserve a good so great; but that my Power would not be able to do it – not this, ever.”

How Jesus keeps molding the creature in order to make her rise again in the new life of His truth. How Jesus alone could manifest so many truths on the Divine Will, as He possesses the fount of them.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues. I feel like the little girl who, sip by sip, is nourished with this celestial food, which produces in my soul strength, light, indescribable sweetness. And then, each truth that my beloved Jesus manifests to His little newborn is one of the most touching and delightful scenes, and of the most beautiful, which He places in my mind as bearer of the beatitude of the Celestial Fatherland. So, I was feeling immersed in the so many truths of the Supreme Fiat, and my always lovable Jesus, visiting His little girl, told me: “My little daughter of my Will, you must know that if Our Supreme Being gave to the creature all the heavens, the sun, the earth, the sea, He would not give as much as when He communicates the truths on the Divine Will. In fact, all other things would remain outside of the creatures, while the truth penetrates into the inmost fibers of her soul; and I keep molding the heartbeats, the affections, the desires, the intellect, the memory, the will, to transform her completely into the life of the truth. And as I go on molding her, I keep repeating the prodigies of the creation of man, and by the touch of my hands I destroy the seeds of evil, and I make the seeds of the new life rise again. The creature feels my touch and, as I keep molding her, the new life that is given to her again. On the other hand, the heavens, the sun, the sea, do not have the transforming virtue of making of the creature a heaven, a sun, a sea – all the good is limited to the outside, and nothing more. See, then, how many goods are enclosed in my having manifested to you so many truths? Therefore, be attentive in corresponding to a good so great.”

Then, I continued to think about the many truths on the Divine Will – how many joys, how many divine transformations! They themselves have been the revealers of the Supreme Being; I would never have known my Creator, my Celestial Father, if the holy truths had not acted as messengers, bringing to me the many beautiful news of His adorable Majesty. And while the many truths crowded my mind, a doubt arose in me: ‘Was it really Jesus the one who has manifested to me so many truths, or was it the devil, or my fantasy?’ And Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My good daughter, how can you doubt? The mere multiplicity of the many truths on my own Divine Will is a sure proof that only your Jesus could have a speaking so prolonged on the same subject, with varied and powerful arguments. In fact, possessing the fount of them, it is no wonder that I manifested to you, and in many ways, the little drops of light – I could say – of the knowledges on my adorable Will. I say drops for Me, compared to the much and to the infinite sea that I can still say. Indeed, if I wanted to speak for all eternity, I have so much to say on the knowledges that regard my Supreme Fiat, that I would never end. But, for you, what I have manifested have been seas, because what is drops for Me, who am the Infinite Being, is sea for you, who are a finite creature. So, the mere prolixity and my so much speaking is the surest and most convincing proof that only your Jesus could have so many reasons, and that He alone can know so much, of what regards my own Will. The enemy does not possess the fount; and besides, he would touch a key that would burn him even more, because the thing that he hates the most and that most torments him is my Divine Will; and if it were in his power, he would turn the earth upside down, he would use all arts and tricks so that no one would know and do my Will. Much less could your fantasy, so limited and small – oh! how quickly would the light of reason remain extinguished; and once having spoken two or three reasons, you would have acted like those who want to speak and feel themselves being struck dumb, and cannot go any further. So, confused, you would give yourself back to silence. Therefore, only your Jesus has the word ever new, penetrating, full of divine freshness, of admirable sweetness, of surprising truth, such that the human intellect is forced to lower its forehead and say: ‘Here there is the finger of God.’ Therefore, recognize a good so great, and let my Will alone be your central point in all things.”

Fiat!!!

April 13, 1932

The human nature that lets itself be dominated by the Divine Will: field of Its action, and flowery earth. How the Divine Will possesses the inseparability.

I am always in the arms of the Divine Will, like a little girl clasped in the arms of her Mama, who holds me so tightly in Her arms of light, as to let me see, feel and touch nothing but Divine Will alone. And I thought to myself: ‘Oh! if I were free from the prison of my body, my flights would be more rapid in the Fiat - I would have known more, I would have been, in deed, one single act with It. But it seems to me that my nature makes me do some interruptions, as if it were placing obstacles; and it makes it hard for me to run always in the Divine Will.’ But while I was thinking of this, my Divine Teacher, Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: “Blessed daughter, you must now that with one who lives in my Divine Will, my Will has the virtue of keeping the nature of the creature in order; and instead of being an obstacle, it is a help for her to be able to do more acts of Divine Will. Even more, it serves like earth to the flowers, which offers itself to form the beautiful flowerings that almost hide it and cover it with the variety of their beauties, to which the sun communicates the variety of the most beautiful colors, and keeps glazing them with its light. If it wasn’t for the earth, the flowers would lack the place in which to form their life, to be born and make their beautiful appearance; and the sun would find no place – no one to whom to communicate the display of its beautiful colors and of its pure sweetnesses. Such is the human nature for the soul who lives in my Divine Will – it is like fecund and pure earth, which offers itself as the field of action, and not only to let her form the beautiful flowerings, but to let as many suns pop out for as many acts as she goes on doing. My daughter, it is an enchantment of beauty to see the human nature that lives in my Divine Will, covered and hidden as though under a flowery meadow, all invested with most refulgent light. On her own, the soul could not have formed so many varieties of beauties, while, united to it, it finds the little crosses, the necessities of life, the varieties of the circumstances, now sorrowful, now joyful, which it uses as seeds, in order to sow the earth of the human nature, so as to form its flowery field. The soul has no earth, and would not be able to produce any flowering; while, united to the body, oh! how many more beautiful things it can do. More so, since this human nature was formed by Me, I molded it part by part, giving it the most beautiful shape. I can say that I acted as Divine Artisan, and I placed in it such mastery, that no one else can match Me. So, I loved it, I still see the touch of my creative hands impressed on the human nature; therefore it also is mine – it belongs to Me. Everything is in the complete accord – nature, soul, human will and Divine Will; when this is there – the human nature offering itself as earth, the human will in act of receiving the life of the Divine Will into its acts, letting itself be dominated in everything, and knowing nothing else, in all its things, but my Will alone as life, actor, bearer, preserver of everything – oh! then everything is holy, everything is pure and beautiful. My Fiat remains over her with Its brush of light in order to perfect her, divinize her, spiritualize her. Therefore, your nature cannot be an obstacle to the flights in my Will; rather, an obstacle can be your will, as you must always keep an eye on not giving it life; but from your earth there is nothing to fear. As for it, if it gets something, it receives and gives what it has received; or rather, it gives more, and it changes the seed into flowers, into plants, into fruits; and if it gets nothing, it stays there in its mute silence, and remains like sterile earth.”

Then, I was thanking Jesus for His beautiful lesson, and I felt all content that my human nature could not harm me; on the contrary, it could help me in letting the life of the Divine Will grow in my soul; and I continued my rounds and flights in Its acts. And my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, my Divine Will possesses the inseparability from all Its acts and effects, whether It operates alone within Itself and outside of Itself, or It operates in the creature, or the creature operates in It or executes what my Divine Will wants. In this way of operating, It places something of Its own, and It holds it as Its own acts and Its own properties, inseparable from It. Now, if the creature lives in my Divine Will, these acts become common property of one and the other; if then she makes some exits, she loses her rights – first, since those acts were done in Our House; and then, because the substance, the life of the act, the sanctity, the beauty, the prerogatives that are needed in order to form an act of Ours, were placed by Our Divine Will, the creature has done nothing other than attend and concur with her will of operating together with Our own, but, as for substance, she has placed nothing of her own. Therefore, if she persists in living in Our Will, she masters together with It; if she goes out, by justice, nothing is due to her; but if she reenters into It, she acquires again the right of mastership. However, there is a great difference between one who lives in my Divine Will and operates together with It, and one who, not living in It, follows and does what my Fiat wants in the circumstances. This one takes in her act my Will as limited, and as she finishes the act, it remains like that – it does not go any further; and even though these acts too are inseparable from It, yet these acts appear as not having the continuous operating: they took my Divine Will in a limited way, and limited It remained. On the other hand, for one who lives in It and operates, her act acquires the incessant act of operating continuously; these acts will always be acting in my Fiat, they will never lose the attitude: what the operating of my Will is, which never ceases, so become the acts of the creature. Therefore, always in my Fiat do I want you, if you want to take It, not limited and as though in drops, but as seas, in such a way as to remain so filled, that you will touch and see nothing but my Divine Will.”

Fiat!!!

April 23, 1932

How the creature is called by the Divine Will. As many times as she does her acts in It, so many times is she reborn in her acts. Contest between Creator and creature.

My abandonment in the Divine Fiat continues. I feel Its call in all Its acts – that is, in the heavens, in the sun, in the sea, in the wind, in the acts It did in Redemption; because there is nothing that exists which has not come out of the Divine Volition. And It calls me to tell me: “I have done everything for you – come to enjoy and possess everything that, with so much love, I created for you. Do not render yourself estranged from everything that belongs to you, and do not render Our possessions and yours isolated and deserted. Come and let your voice echo, that it may resound in all Our created things; make Us hear the sweet treading of your steps. Loneliness saddens Us, company puts Us in feast, and gives Us the sweet surprises of the joys that Our beloved creature can give Us.”

But while my mind was wandering in Its works, my always lovable Jesus, visiting my poor soul, all tenderness, told me: “Blessed daughter of my Will, since all created things were made for the creatures, my Divine Will remained in each of them, to call the creatures, because It did not want to remain alone, but It wanted the one for whom things were made, so as to give her the rights over them, and therefore not remain defrauded in Its purpose for which It had created them. Now, who hears this call? One who possesses my Will as life. The echo of my Will present in created things forms the same echo in the soul who possesses It, and in Its own arms It carries her there where my own Will calls her. And since she has her rights, given by Me, if she loves, all created things say love; if she adores, they say adoration; if she thanks, they say thanksgivings, in such a way that the love, the adoration, the thanksgiving of the creature who possesses my Divine Will can be seen hovering in the heavens, in the sun, in the sea, in the wind - in everything, even in the tiny little bird that sings. How vast is the love and everything that she can do and say – Heaven and earth are in her power.

But this is nothing yet. You must know that for the soul who possesses my Divine Will, Its divine omnipotence enters her operating; and true power means to diffuse oneself in everyone and everything, to call everyone into that act, to make oneself be heard by all with one’s empire, to call everybody’s attention, in such a way that they feel the operating power of my Fiat in the act of the creature. In fact, I can call it, not her act, but my own; and those who are in possession of my Fiat – that is, the Angels, the Saints, the Creation – feel a vein of Its power flowing, and they all come to attention in order to receive it; and bowing down, they adore, they thank, they love the Divine Will operating. An act of It is the greatest thing, the most beautiful, for all Heaven and for all the earth. An act of Its own, since It possesses complete power, whether It operates in the human act or alone, can bring innovation, transformation over everything, and make new things arise, which did not exist before. So, an act in my Divine Will takes place in the divine order, and with its powerful empire it empires over all, it empires with its attractive love, with its enrapturing beauty, with its infinite joys and sweetnesses. It is an act that encloses the whole of everything, and those who do not feel the beauty of it are forced to feel the weight of Divine Justice upon them. However, all will feel the touch of the power of an act of my Will – no one will be excluded. And only these acts line up in continuous homage toward God Himself, because the acts done in my Fiat are those which give the most glory to God and continuous homage, because they are acts reproduced by God Himself, and take part in Their⁹⁸ incessant act.”

After this, I was doing my acts in the Divine Will, and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, the soul who lives in my Will is in continuous act of being reborn in the acts that she does in It. If she loves, she is in continuous act of being reborn in the divine love; and while she is born, the life of love is formed in her, and, as life, it takes primacy in all her being, in a way that her heartbeat, her breath, the motion, the gaze, the step, the will, and everything else, become love; and as many times as she is reborn, so many more times does love grow. This love, as life, and in act of always being born and growing, has the enrapturing and wounding strength, which, while it wounds Us, enraptures Us, but with Our own divine power; and We, feeling Ourselves being wounded, pour out more love from Our wounds, and We wound Our beloved creature, and in each rebirth We redouble Our love for her. In the same way, if she repairs, and for as many times as she repairs in Our Will, so many times is she reborn in the divine reparation and forms the life of reparation in her soul; so, her breath, her motion, her will and all her being, acquire the life of reparation. And since it isn’t with one act alone that she repairs Us, but with one entire life, she has, as life, the disarming power; and disarming Us, she converts the scourges into graces. And so with all the rest that the creature can do in Our Divine Will: it is lives that she acquires, which are nourished by Our divine founts. So, if she praises Us in Our Divine Will, if she thanks Us, if she blesses Us, she forms one entire life of thanksgivings, of praise and of blessings toward her Creator; and each time she does it, while she is reborn in these acts and grows, she forms the fullness of life, in a way that the breath, the heartbeat, if she thinks, if she speaks, if she moves her step, if blood circulates in her veins – the whole entirety of the creature – there is not one particle of her being that does not say: ‘I thank You, I praise You, I bless You.’ Oh! how beautiful it is to see her – possessing as many lives for as many times as she is reborn in her own acts done in Our Divine Fiat; and for as many lives as she possesses We feel in her heartbeat as many heartbeats in one, as many breaths, motions and steps in one; and each of them - some say ‘love’, some ‘reparation’, some ‘thanksgivings’, some ‘praise’ and some ‘blessing’. These rebirths and lives form the most beautiful harmony in the fortunate creature who had the good of acquiring them. Our satisfaction is so great, that Our gaze is always fixed on looking at her, Our ears always intent on listening to her, the power of Our Will calls Our continuous attention. And as she says to Us: ‘I love You’, so do We repeat to her: ‘We love you, oh! daughter.’ As she repairs Us, so do We press her to Our Heart; as she thanks Us, praises Us, blesses Us, so do We keep repeating: ‘We thank you that you are thanking Us’, ‘We praise you for you are praising Us’, ‘We bless you for you are blessing Us.’ We can say that We put Ourselves in a contest with her. Heaven and earth are astounded that their Creator engages in a contest with His beloved creature. Therefore, always in my Will do I want you, because in It you give Us much to do and to say, and you form Our outpouring of love.”

⁹⁸ of the Holy Trinity

How the living in the Divine Will is a gift. Example of the poor man, and example of the king.
How the gift is an excess of the love and magnanimity of God, who does not pay attention to, nor does He want to do the accounts of the great value He gives.

I was feeling all immersed in the Divine Volition. A crowd of thoughts absorbed my mind, but always on the same Fiat, because in It one can think of nothing else; Its sweet enchantment, Its light that invests everything, Its many truths which, like formidable army, line up all around, move away everything that does not belong to It. The happy creature who is in the Divine Will finds herself as though in a celestial atmosphere, all happy, in the fullness of the peace of the Saints; and if she wants anything, it is only that everyone may know a Will so lovable, so holy – she would want everyone to come to enjoy her happiness. But I was thinking to myself: ‘But, how can it be that the creatures may come to live in the Divine Will, so as to form Its Holy Kingdom?’ And my beloved Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My daughter, how little you are! It shows how your littleness is incapable of rising in the power, immensity, goodness and magnanimity of your Creator; and from your littleness you measure Our greatness and Our liberality. Poor little one – you get lost within Our interminable powers, and are incapable of attributing the right weight to Our divine and infinite ways. It is true that, humanly speaking, for the creature, besieged by evils as she is, to live in my Will, to form Its Kingdom in their midst, is like wanting to touch Heaven with her finger – which is impossible; but what is impossible for men is possible for God. You must know that the living in Our Will is a gift which Our magnanimity wants to give to creatures; and with this gift the creature will feel transformed – from poor, rich, from weak, strong, from ignorant, learned, from slave to vile passions, sweet and voluntary prisoner of a Will all holy, which will not hold him prisoner, but king of himself, of the divine dominions and of all created things.

It will happen as to a poor man who is clothed in miserable rags, lives in a hovel, without doors and therefore exposed to thieves and enemies; he has not enough bread to satiate his hunger, and he is forced to beg for it. If a king gave him a million as gift, the poor man would change his lot, and would no longer make the impression of a poor beggar, but of a lord who possesses palaces, villas, and dresses with decency, has abundant foods, and puts himself in the condition of being able to help others. Who changed the lot of this poor man? The million he has received as gift. Now, if some wretched money has the virtue of changing the lot of a poor unhappy one, much more will the great gift of Our Will, given as gift, change the unhappy lot of the human generations, except for those who, willfully, want to remain in their unhappiness. More so, since this gift was given to man in the beginning of his creation, and, ungrateful, he rejected it from Us by doing his will, withdrawing from Our own. Now, those who dispose themselves to do Our Will prepare the place, the decency, the nobility in which to be able to put this gift, so great and infinite. Our knowledges on the Fiat will help and prepare them, in a surprising way, to receive this gift, and what they have not obtained up to this day they will be able to obtain tomorrow. Therefore I am acting as a king would, who would want to elevate a family to a bond of relationship with his own royal family. In order to do this, first he takes a member of it, keeps her in his royal palace, raises her, dines with her, accustoms her to his noble manners, entrusts to her his secrets, and in order to make her worthy of himself, he makes her live of his will; and to be more sure and not to let her descend to the lowness of her family, he gives her his will as gift, that she may hold it in her power.

What the king cannot do, I can do – bilocating my Will so as to give It to the creature as gift. So, the king keeps his eyes fixed upon her, keeps embellishing her continuously, clothes her with precious and beautiful clothes, in such a way that he feels enamored; and unable to wait any longer, he binds her to himself with the lasting bond of marriage, in a way that one becomes gift for the other. With this, on both sides they have the right to reign, and that family acquires the bond of relationship with the king; and the king, out of love for the one who has donated herself to him, and to whom he has donated himself, calls that family to live in his royal palace, giving to it the same gift which he gave to the one whom he so much loves.

So We did. First We called one from the human family to live in the Royal Palace of Our Will; little by little We gave her the gift of Its knowledges, of Its most intimate secrets; in doing this We experienced unspeakable contentments and joys, and We felt how sweet and dear it is to make the creature live in Our Will. And Our Love pushed Us – even more, It did violence on Us to give her the gift of Our Omnipotent Fiat; more so, since she had given Us the gift of her own – she was already in Our power, and the Divine Will could remain secure and at Its place of honor in the creature. Now, after We have given the gift of Our Fiat to one member of this human family, the family acquires the bond and the right to this gift; in fact, We never do works and gifts for one alone, but when We do works and gifts, We do them always in universal ways. So, this gift will be ready for everyone, as long as they want it and they dispose themselves. Therefore, the living in my Will is not a property of the creature, nor is it in her power, but it is a gift; and I give it whenever I want, to whomever I want, and in the times I want. It is gift of Heaven, given from Our great magnanimity and from Our inextinguishable love.

Now, with this gift, the human family will feel so bound to its Creator, as to no longer feel far away from Him, but so close, as if it were from His own Family and lived together in His own Royal Palace. With this gift it will feel so rich, as to no longer feel the miseries, the weaknesses, the tumulting passions – everything will be strength, peace, abundance of grace; and recognizing the gift, she will say: ‘In the House of my Celestial Father I want for nothing - I have everything at my disposal, always by virtue of the gift I have received.’ We give gifts always by effect of Our great love and of Our highest magnanimity. If it were not so, or if We wanted to pay attention to whether the creature deserves it or not, whether she has made sacrifices, it would no longer be a gift then, but a remuneration, and Our gift would become as though a right and a slave of the creature, while We and Our gifts are slaves to no one. In fact, man did not exist yet, and before he was, We already created the heavens, the sun, the wind, the sea, the flowery earth and everything else, to give them to man as gift. What had he done to deserve gifts so great and perennial? Nothing. And in the act of creating him, We gave him the great gift that surpassed all others – Our Omnipotent Fiat; and even though he rejected It, yet We did not desist from giving It again, no, but We keep It in store, to give It to his children – the same gift which their father rejected. The gift is given in the excess of Our Love, which is so great as to be unable to do or pay attention to the accounts; while the remuneration that is given if the creature does good works and sacrifices herself, is given with just measure and according to what she deserves. Not so with the gift. Therefore, if anyone should doubt, it means he knows little about Our Divine Being, or of Our generousities, or to what extent Our Love can reach. However, We want the correspondence of the creature, her gratitude, and her little love.”

The creature, by doing her will, prevents the course of the gifts of God, and if she were able to, she would reduce Him to immobility. How God, in all His works, gives the first place to the creature.

I continued to think about the Divine Will, and the grave evils of the human will, and how this will, without the life of the Fiat, is without guidance, without light, without strength, without nourishment – ignorant, because it does not have the Teacher who teaches it the divine science. So, without It, the creature knows nothing about her Creator; it can be said that she is illiterate, and if she knows anything, it is only shadows or a few vowels, but not with clarity, because without the Divine Will there is no light – it is always nighttime. Here is the reason why so little is known about God, and the celestial language, the divine truths, are not understood – because the Divine Will does not reign as life, as prime act. I seemed to see the human will before my mind, as though dying of hunger, ragged, cretinous, all stained, limping, and wrapped in thick darkness; and because it is not used to living of light and to looking at it, each little light of truth eclipses its sight, confuses it, and it becomes more blind. Oh! how the great misfortune of the human will is to be cried over – without the Divine it seems to lack the life of good and the necessary nourishments in order to live.

But while I was thinking of this, my Celestial Teacher, Jesus, making me His short little visit, told me: “My blessed daughter, doing one’s own will is so grave, that if the creature were to prevent the course of the sun, of the heavens, of the wind, of the air, of water, that would be a lesser evil. Yet, by preventing this course, there would be such disorder and terror, that man would no longer be able to live. But, still, this great evil would be nothing compared to the grave evil of doing one’s own will, because with this the creature prevents the course, not of created things, but of his very Creator. By withdrawing from Our Will, Adam stopped the course of the gifts that God was to give to His beloved creature; had he been able to, he would have forced God to immobility. Our Supreme Being, by creating the creature, wanted to remain in continuous correspondence with him, It wanted to give him now one gift, now another; It wanted to give him many beautiful surprises, never interrupted. Now, as he does his will, he tacitly says to his Creator: ‘Draw back, I have no place where to put your gifts. If You speak to me, I don’t understand You; your surprises are not for me – I am enough for myself.’ And he says so with reason, because without my Will, which is his primary life, he has lost the life and the capacity in which to place my gifts, the capacity of comprehending Our celestial language, and he alienates himself from Our most beautiful surprises. By not doing Our Will, the creature loses the divine life, the most beautiful, most interesting and most necessary act of his creation and of how he was created by God. Here, then, as man withdrew from Our Fiat, he disordered himself in such a way that he staggered at each step, because he detached himself from, and rejected, the vital act of his life and the stable and permanent act that was to live with him as one single life – which is Our Divine Will. Hence, We feel immobilized by man, because We want to give and We cannot; We want to speak and he does not understand Us; and as though from afar, We make Our sorrowful laments heard, by saying to him: ‘Oh! man, stop it - call back into yourself that Divine Will which you rejected. It does not look at your evils, and if you call It, It is ready to take possession of you and to form in you Its Kingdom of dominion, of peace, of happiness, of glory, of victory for Me and for you. O please! do not want to be a slave any longer, or live in the maze of your evils and miseries. I did not create you so – I created you king of yourself, king of everything. Therefore, call my Will as life, and It will make you know your nobility and the height of your place in which you were put by God. Oh! how happy you will be, and will make your Creator happy!’”

After this, He added: “My daughter, when the creature enters into my Divine Will – only then does she feel true life within her; because in It the creature sees with clarity her nothingness and how this ‘nothing’ feels the need of the ‘All’ – that is, of the One who drew her from nothing, that she might live; and as she recognizes herself, the All fills her with Himself. This nothing feels the true life; she finds herself in immediate contact with the sanctity, with the goodness, power, love and divine wisdom; she recognizes within her the power of the creative work, its life palpitating, and her extreme need of this divine life. Otherwise, she feels as if there were no life in her. It is my Will alone that makes the creature recognize her true nothingness; and It keeps blowing continuously over this nothing in order to maintain the divine life always lit in her, to make her grow as a work worthy of Our creative hands. On the other hand, without Our Will the creature feels as if she were something, and the All remains outside of the nothing.”

Then, I continued my acts in the Divine Will, and my poor mind wandered within the multiplicity of Its works, which ran in search of man in order to embrace him and line up around him to defend him, lend him all the helps, make him happy and let him feel Its loving moans, Its sorrowful notes deep inside his heart, because while the Divine Fiat, in everything It does, looks for man, wants to find him and love him, he does not look for It in his acts, he does not surround It, nor does he let It hear his loving notes or his sweet moans, for he wants the One who so much loved him, and whom he should love. Now, while I was wandering in Its divine works, my sweet Jesus began to speak again, saying: “My daughter, all of Our works ‘ad extra’ have been made and will be made only for the creatures; Our purpose is only for them, because We have no need. Therefore, in the operating that We do shine the creature in Our act, she flows within it as the purpose of Our operating; and since the effect and each act, as well as the cause that moves Us to operate, is the creature, in all Our works the first place is occupied by her – it is she who shines and flows in Our act. This is why We can say: ‘You were with Us when We stretched out the heavens and formed the sun; in that azure and in that light We gave you the place of honor, and you flowed within them. In each act of the Word done upon earth, in each pain, in each word, you had your central place and flowed within them as your own property.’ Now, We did not give to the creature the place in Our act to let her stay there uselessly and to let her flow in them almost lazing about – no, no, idleness has made no one a saint. We placed her in Our acts so that inside Our own she would put her acts. Our own was to serve as model, as the space in which to place her acts with more safety. We too work – to love is to work, and Our work, because it is love, is operating, vivifying, creating, sustaining of everything and of everyone. Therefore, even though the creature has her place in Our works – oh! how many of Our works can be seen empty of the acts of the creatures. Even more, she does not even know them, and she lives as if We had given her nothing. So, Our works have a sorrow, and they incessantly seek the one who, while she has her place, does not make use of it, nor does she work with her love together with the work of her Creator. Yet, the centuries will not end until Our works obtain the purpose for which they were made – that is, the creatures operating inside of them, as the center of their acts. And these will be the ones who will make my Divine Will reign as life in their souls.”

How the knowledges on the Divine Will will form the eye and the capacity in order to look and to receive the gift of the Divine Fiat, and will accustom the creatures to live as Its children. Chaos of the human will.

I am always back in the Supreme Fiat; and feeling in me the sweet enchantment of Its light, of Its peace, of Its happiness – oh! how I wish that the whole entire world would know a good so great, so that all may pray for Its Kingdom to come upon earth. But while I was saying this, I thought to myself: ‘If the living in the Divine Will is a gift that He must give to the human generations, and Jesus so much loves, wants, longs for this Divine Will to be known in order to let It reign, why, then, does He not hasten to give this gift?’ And my highest Good, Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness, told me: “My daughter, you must know that even though I burn with the desire to see my Divine Will reign, yet I cannot give this gift – not before the creatures, with the truths that I manifested, as they come to know them, have the great good of forming the sight in order to be able to comprehend it, and therefore dispose themselves to receive a gift so great. It can be said that the eye in order to see, and the capacity in order to comprehend it, is now missing; and therefore first I manifested many truths on my Divine Will, and as the creatures come to know these truths of mine, they will form the eye-socket in which to place the pupil, and animate it with sufficient light to be able to look at and comprehend the gift which, more than sun, will be given and entrusted to them. If I wanted to give it today, I would act as if I wanted to give a sun to a blind man. Poor one – with all the sun given to him, he would always be blind; neither would his lot change, nor would he receive any good; on the contrary, he would have a sorrow: having a sun as gift without even seeing it or receiving its beneficial effects. On the other hand, one who is not blind - how many goods would he not receive! Having a sun as gift, at his disposal, would be his perennial feast, and he would place himself in the condition of giving light to others, and would be surrounded and loved by all in order to obtain the gift of the light that he possesses.

So, to give today the gift of my Divine Will which, more than sun, will change the lot of the human generations, would be like giving it to the blind; and to give it to the blind would be like giving them useless gifts – and useless things I know not how to give. Therefore I wait with divine and delirious patience that my truths may make their way, prepare souls, enter into them and form the eye, animated by sufficient light, that they may not only look at the gift of my Fiat, but have the capacity in order to enclose It within them, so that It may form in them Its Kingdom and extend Its dominion. Therefore, patience and time allow things to be done as is befitting, and as Our Sovereignty deserves in operating. We, Our Supreme Being, act as a father would, who wants to give a great gift to his little son. The father calls the little one and shows him the gift, saying to him: ‘This gift is prepared for you – it will indeed be yours’, but he does not give it. The son remains surprised, captivated, in seeing the gift that his father wants to give him; and remaining around the father, he pleads with him to give him the gift; and he is unable to detach from him – he pleads and pleads again, for he wants the gift. Meanwhile, the father, seeing him around, takes the opportunity in order to instruct the son, so as to make him comprehend the nature of the gift, the good, the happiness that he will receive from this gift. At the manifestations of the father, the son becomes mature and capable not only of receiving the gift, but of comprehending what good, what greatness, is enclosed in the gift he must receive. Therefore he draws closer around the father, he pleads and pleads again, he longs for the gift, he reaches the point of crying, and can no longer be without the gift. It can be said that, with his pleas and yearnings, by acquiring the knowledges of the gift that his father has given him, he has formed within himself the life, the space, in which to receive the gift as in a sacred deposit. This delaying of the father to give the gift to his son has been a greater love; he burned, he longed to give the gift to his son, but he wanted him capable and able to comprehend the gift he was receiving. And as soon as he sees him mature to receive so great a good, immediately he gives it to him.

So We do. More than father, We long to give the great gift of Our Will to Our children, but We want them to know what they must receive. The knowledges of It mature Our children and render them capable of receiving so great a good. The many manifestations I have given will be the true eyes of the soul to be able to look at and comprehend what Our paternal goodness has been wanting to give for many centuries. More so, since the knowledges I have manifested on my Divine Will, as they become known by creatures, will cast into them the seed in order to make filial love germinate toward their Celestial Father. They will feel Our Paternity, and that if He wants them to do His Will, it is because He loves them and wants to love them as His children, so as to share His divine goods. So, Our knowledges on the Divine Fiat will make them accustomed to living as Our children; and then will every marvel cease that Our Supreme Being is giving the great gift of Our Will to His children. It is a right of the children to receive the properties of their father, and it is a duty of the father to give his goods to his children. One who wants to live like a stranger does not deserve the possessions of the father; more so, since Our Paternity yearns, longs, burns with the desire to give this gift, so that one may be the Will with His children. Then, yes, will Our paternal love rest, when We see the work that came out of Our creative hands on the lap of Our Will, in Our House, and Our Kingdom populated by Our dear children.”

After this, I continued to think about the Divine Will - it seems to me that I cannot be without thinking about It. And my Celestial Teacher added: “Blessed daughter, all the acts that my Divine Will does are so bound to one another as to be inseparable, in such a way that if one wants to find them, at first sight one finds one act alone, but upon entering deeper inside, one finds many acts, one distinct from the other, though fused and bound together; so much so, that they cannot be detached. This force of union and of inseparability forms the nature of the divine operating. The very Creation says it: if even just one star could detach from its place, in which it is connected with all other created things, it would fall and would cause general chaos in all other created things, so great is the inseparability and union that they have. All together, they all have life, though they are distinct among themselves, and they form the beautiful harmony of all Creation; once separated, it can be said that they lose life and cause chaos everywhere. Such is the human will separated from the Will of its Creator – not only does it itself fall, but it keeps causing chaos everywhere, and if it could, it would turn everything upside down, even the very order of its Creator. Nor is there anything to be surprised about; the human will was created by Us, and separated from Our own would be like a star detached from its place, in which it possessed divine strength, the union in common accord and with all the good of its Creator. By detaching itself, it loses the strength, the union and the goods in order to live; therefore, by necessity, it has the lot of falling and of causing chaos everywhere. Now, with the living in my Divine Will, as the soul does her first act, she feels the strength and the union of all the acts of the Divine Fiat. So, one act includes and encloses all other acts, and she feels the need to continue her acts in order to be linked with them, so as to unfold the strength of the Divine Will that she feels within herself, which, as life, cannot be without making Itself felt – It wants to breathe, palpitate, operate. One act calls for another, and in this way she forms the sequence of acts with the union of the acts of my Will. In order to form a life, one act, one breath, one heartbeat, are not enough – no, but it takes the continuous breathing, palpitating and operating; and as the soul lives in my Divine Will, she lets It breathe and palpitate, and my Fiat forms Its entire life of works, as much as it is possible for a creature to enclose within herself. Therefore, if you want Its life in you, let your acts be continuous in It.”

Delightful scenes that the soul forms for her Creator. The Divine Will will give to the creature the gift of infused knowledge, which will be like a divine eye for her.

My poor mind swims in the immense sea of the Divine Will. In this sea one murmurs continuously. But what does one murmur? Love, praise, thanksgivings. And the Supreme Being comes to meet the murmuring of the creature with His own, and He gives love to receive love. What a sweet encounter between the Creator and the creature, giving love to each other; and in this exchange of love waves of love, of light, of indescribable beauties are formed, by which the poor creature, incapable of enclosing them all within herself, feels drowned. And while she has taken who knows how much, the drowning that she feels prevents her from being able to repeat what she feels within herself of the ineffable secrets of love, of light, of divine knowledges, which the murmuring of the Eternal One has enclosed in her soul.

But while I was wandering amid so many knowledges as to be incapable of repeating anything – I feel I am stammering, I lack the right terms, and in order not to speak nonsense, I move forward. And my lovable Jesus, compassionating my incapacity and littleness, clasped me to Himself, in His arms, and told me: “My blessed daughter, you are right that your littleness feels itself being drowned under the immensity of my light, of my love, and of the innumerable truths that Our adorable and Holy Being contains. But Our power and immensity delights in filling the creature so much, with light, with love, with manifold knowledges of Ours, with sanctity, to the point of drowning her. It is one of the most beautiful scenes: to see the creature as though drowned in Our immensity, wanting to speak and being drowned with light, with love, with surprising truths. Oh! how beautiful it is that she wants to speak of what she feels, and Our waves invest her and reduce her to silence. However, in this way We make display of Ourselves with Our beloved creature, and We act like a teacher who wants to make display of his knowledge with his little disciple: he puts everything out of what he knows, and the disciple listens, fills his mind and heart, but since the things he told him have been so many, he is unable to repeat anything. However, this helps him to appreciate and love the teacher, and to look forward to the height that his knowledge can reach. While the disciple is under his direction, this helps the teacher to make himself known and earn his attention and fidelity.

So We do, in order to make Ourselves known and loved. When We see the creature empty of everything, wanting nothing else but Our Divine Will, We so greatly delight, to the point of drowning her with light, with love, and with Our truths that belong to Us; and then We go on breaking down for her, into small pieces, little by little, that which We have infused in her all together, and in this way We also delight in adapting Ourselves to her small capacity.

Now, you must know that one who lives in the Divine Will, among the many prerogatives, will reacquire the gift of infused knowledge - a gift which will be her guide in order to know Our Divine Being, facilitating for her the unfolding of the Kingdom of the Divine Will in her soul; and it will be her guide in the order of natural things, it will be like the hand that guides her in everything, and will manifest the life of the Divine Will palpitating in all created things and the good It continuously offers to her. This gift was given to Adam in the beginning of his creation; together with Our Divine Will he possessed the gift of infused knowledge, in such a way that he knew Our divine truths with clarity; and not only those, but all the beneficial virtues that all created things possessed for the good of the creature – from the largest thing down to tiniest blade of grass. Now, as he rejected Our Divine Will by doing his own, Our Fiat withdrew Its life and the gift of which It had been the bearer; therefore he remained in the dark, without the true and pure light of the knowledge of all things. So, as the life of my Will returns into the creature, the gift of infused knowledge will also return. This gift is inseparable from my Divine Will, just as the light is inseparable from the heat; and wherever It reigns It forms the eye full of light in the depth of the soul, who, looking with this divine eye, acquires the knowledge of God and of created things, as much as it is possible for a creature.

Now, as my Will withdraws, the eye remains blind, because the One who animated the sight has departed – that is, It is no longer operating life of the creature. It happens as to the body: as long as the eye is healthy, the creature can see, can distinguish colors, objects and people; but if the pupil is darkened and loses the light, she remains blind, therefore she can no longer distinguish anything; at the most, she will help herself through the hearing, in order to know and comprehend something, but her light is extinguished and ended. She might have eyes, but no longer full of life of light, but of thick darkness, which is bearer of sorrow for the lost sight.

Such is my Will; wherever It reigns, It centralizes in the soul this gift of infused knowledge which, more than eye, sees and comprehends – but without effort – the divine truths, the most difficult knowledges of Our Supreme Being – but with a marvelous ease, with no artifice and with no study. More so, since no one can know the substance of natural things, the good that there is inside, but the One who created them. Therefore, it is no wonder that Our Divine Volition, in the soul in whom It reigns, makes Itself the revealer of Our Divine Being and of the things that He Himself created; while, if It does not reign, everything is darkness for the poor creature – Our children are blind and do not know, nor love, the One who created them, who, more than father, loves them and longs for the love of His children. Wherever It reigns, my Divine Will does not go empty-handed, but brings all the goods It possesses; and if, ungrateful, they force It to withdraw, It takes everything with Itself, because It is inseparable from Its goods. It acts like the sun: as it rises in the morning, it gives the gift of its light and of its beneficial effects to the earth; and as it withdraws in the evening, it takes all the light with itself – nothing is left, not even one drop of light for the night. And why? Because it cannot, nor is it given to it to detach a single particle of light; because it is inseparable from its light, and wherever it goes, with the fullness of light that it possesses, it forms full daylight. Therefore, be attentive, because there where my Will reigns It wants to do great things, It wants to give everything, nor does It adapt to doing small things; but It wants to form full daylight and make display of gifts - and with magnificence.”

How the Divine Will looks for the act of the creature in order to form Its life in her. Difference between the Sacraments and the Divine Will; how the Divine Will is life, while the Sacraments are effects of It.

My little mind continues to cross the immense sea of the Divine Fiat. It seems to me that in all things, and even over the Supreme Being, It holds the first place of dominion and of command; and It says: “In vain do you escape Me – in all things I can say: ‘I am here’. I am – I am here for you, to give you life; I am the insuperable One, no one can surpass Me, either in love or in light or in my immensity, in which I form as many lives of Myself for as many lives as I want to give to creatures.” Oh! power of the Divine Will – in your immensity you look for the act of the creature in order to form as many lives of Yourself in each of their acts. But how many of these acts do not receive You and reject You! And your life remains suffocated within You, in your immensity. Ah! You, without tiring, with love that conquers everything, continue your searches of the human acts, to give your life and bilocate it in each instant.

But while my mind was wandering in the sea of the Fiat, my Celestial Teacher, Jesus, visiting His little daughter, told me: “Blessed daughter of my Will, each act of the creature done in my Will is a step that she takes in order to come closer to God; and God, in His turn, takes a step to draw near her. It can be said that the Creator and the creature are always on a journey – they never stop, one toward the other; my Will descends into the act of the creature to form Its step of divine life, and she ascends into the Fiat, into the celestial regions, to make herself conqueror of light, of love, of sanctity and celestial cognitions. So, each act, word, breath, heartbeat in my Will are as many steps of divine life that the creature takes; and my Will longs for these acts in order to have Its field of action, to be able to form as many divine lives in the creature.

This was the purpose of Creation: to form Our life in the creature, to have Our divine field of action in her; and this is why We love so much for her to do Our Divine Will: to place Our life in safety, not within Ourselves - We have no need of anyone, We are more than sufficient to Ourselves - but in the creature. This was the great portent that We wanted and want to make by virtue of Our Will: to form Our life in the life of the creature. Therefore, if We don't do this, the Creation would remain without Our original purpose, a hindrance to Our love, a continuous bitterness – to look at It and see a work so great and of such great magnificence, unfulfilled, and Our purpose failed. If the certainty that Our Will will reign in the creature to form Our life in her were not in Us, Our love would burn up the whole Creation and would reduce It to nothing; and if so much is endured and tolerated, it is because We see, beyond the times, Our purpose fulfilled.

Now, as the creature does her will, she draws back and takes a step backward from her Creator; and God draws back, and an infinite distance is formed between the two. See, then, the necessity to persevere in operating in my Divine Will in a continuous way, to reduce the great distance between God and the creature, produced by the human will. And do not think that it is a personal distance - I am everywhere, in everyone, in Heaven and on earth; the distance that the human will without Mine forms, is distance of sanctity, of beauty, of godness, of power, of love; these are infinite distances that only my Will operating in the creature can reunite and connect together, rendering one inseparable from the other.

This happened in Redemption; each manifestation that We made on the descent of the Word upon earth was a step that We took toward the human kind; and as they longed for Him and prayed and manifested to my people Our manifestations, prophecies and revelations, so did they take as many steps toward the Supreme Being. So, they were on a journey toward God, and We toward them; and as the time of the descent from Heaven to earth drew near, so did prophets increase, to be able to make more revelations, to hasten the journey on both sides. This is so true, that in the first times of the world there were no prophets, and Our manifestations were so scarce, that it can be said that one step per century was being taken. This delay in the journey caused coldness on the part of the creatures, and almost everyone held my descent upon earth as a way of speaking, something absurd – not a reality; just as the Kingdom of my Will is thought of today: a way of speaking, and almost something that cannot be. So, the prophets came after Moses, almost in the last times, close to my descent upon earth, and through Our manifestations to them the journey was hastened on both sides. And then came the Sovereign Queen of Heaven, who not only walked, but ran to hasten the encounter with her Creator, to make Him descend and let Him accomplish Redemption. See, then, how my manifestations of my Divine Will are sure proofs that It is walking to come to reign upon earth, and that the creature to whom they have been given is walking and running, with iron constancy, to receive the first encounter, so as to give It her soul in order to let It reign, and therefore give way to It, to let It reign in the midst of creatures. Therefore, let your acts be continuous, because only continuous acts are those which hasten the journey, surpass every obstacle, and are the only conquerors that conquer God and the creature.”

After this, the crowd of my thoughts on the Divine Will went on; and since I had received Holy Communion, I thought to myself: ‘What difference is there between the Sacraments and the Divine Will?’ And my Sovereign Jesus, breaking His Eucharistic veils, made Himself seen, and heaving a sorrowful sigh, told me: “My blessed daughter, the difference between one and the other is great. The Sacraments are effects of my Will; while my Will is life, and, as life, with Its creative power It forms and gives life to the Sacraments. The Sacraments do not have the virtue of giving life to my Will, because my Will is eternal, nor does It have a beginning or an end. On the other hand, my adorable Will occupies always the first place in all things, and possessing the creative virtue by Its own nature, It creates things and Its very life wherever It wants, when It wants and the way It wants. It can be said that the difference is like a simile between the sun and the effects that the sun produces: these do not give life to the sun, but receive the life of the sun and must remain at its disposal, because the life of the effects is produced by the sun. And then, the Sacraments are received in time, places and circumstances: Baptism is given only once and never again; the Sacrament of Penance is given when one falls into sin; my very Sacramental Life is given only once a day. And in this gap of time the poor creature does not feel upon herself the strength, the help of the baptismal waters that regenerate her continuously, nor the sacramental words of the priest that fortify her in a continuous way, by saying to her: ‘I absolve you from your sins’. Nor does she find, in her weaknesses and trials of life, her Sacramental Jesus for her to take at all hours of the day. On the other hand, my Divine Will, possessing the primary act of life and the capacity to give life, with Its empire, holds the continuous act over the creature. In each instant It gives Itself as life – life of light, of sanctity, of love, life of fortitude; in sum, with It as life there are no times, circumstances, places, hours; there are no restrictions, nor any law, especially since It must give life, and life is formed with continuous acts, not at intervals. And therefore, in the ardor of Its love, with Its continuous empire, it can be said that It is continual Baptism, absolution never interrupted, and communion of each instant. More so, since this Will of Ours was given to man in the beginning of his creation as perennial life dwelling in him.

This was the substance, the fruit of Creation – Our Will that was to form Our life in the creature. With this life We gave everything, there was nothing he might need which he would not be able to find in this Will of Ours. It can be said that he would have at his disposal anything he might want: help, strength, sanctity, light – everything was placed in his power; and my Will took on the commitment to give him anything he wanted, as long as he would give It dominion and would let It dwell in his soul. Therefore, it was not necessary to institute the Sacraments when man was created, because in my Will he possessed the origin and the life of all goods. The Sacraments, as means of helps, of medicines, of forgiveness, had no reason to exist. But when man rejected this Will of Ours, as It withdrew, he remained without divine life, therefore without the nourishing virtue, without the continuous act of receiving new and increasing life; and if he did not die completely, it was because of the effects which, according to his dispositions, circumstances and times, my Divine Will gave him. Now, as Our Paternal Goodness saw that man kept falling lower and lower, in order to give him a support, a help, It gave him the law as norm of his life. In fact, in Creation It gave him no law nor anything else but my Divine Will which, by giving him continuous life, gave him Our divine law as his own nature, in such a way that he was to feel it within himself, as his own life, with no need for Us to tell him and command him. More so, since wherever my Will reigns there are no laws, nor commands; laws are for servants, for rebels, not for one’s children. Between Us and those who live in Our Will it all resolves in love. But, with all the law, man did not recover; and since Our ideal of Creation had been man, and only for him was everything made, I wanted to come upon earth, then, into their midst; and in order to give him more valid supports, more salutary medicines, surer means, more powerful helps, I instituted the Holy Sacraments, and these act in times and circumstances, according to the dispositions of the creatures, as effects and works of my Divine Will. But, in spite of all this great good, if the soul does not let the Divine Will enter into her as life, she will always have her miseries, a life in the middle; she will feel her passions to the quick; sanctity and even salvation will always be in danger, because my Will alone, that gives Itself as continuous life, forms the sweet enchantment to passions, to miseries, and in the evils of the creatures It forms the opposite acts of sanctity, of fortitude, of light, of love, in such a way that the human will, feeling the sweet enchantment, feels, flowing into its evils, the beauty, the goodness, the sanctity of the continuous act of life that my Will gives it, under Its gentle and sweet empire; and it lets my Will do what It wants with it, because a continuous act that gives perennial life can never be matched by other acts, helps and means - however strong and holy - in doing the good that a continuous act can do.

Therefore, there is no greater evil that the creature can do to herself, nor greater wrong that she can do to Our Paternal Goodness, than not letting Our Will reign in her. If it were in her power, she would induce Us to destroy the whole Creation, because the creature was made to be Our dwelling. And not only her, but all created things: heavens, sun, earth – everything, since they are works come out of Our Supreme Height, We have the right to inhabit them, and by inhabiting them We preserve them with decorum, beautiful and always new, as in the act in which We issued them to the light. Now, by not doing Our Will, the creature puts herself out of Our dwelling, and it happens to Us as it would happen to a rich lord who, wanting to build a great and beautiful palace for himself, when he has finished it, goes to live in it. But the doors shut in his face, the stones hurl themselves at him, in such a way that he is forced to stay out of it, prevented from living in the house that he himself has formed. Would it not deserve to be destroyed by the one who has formed it? Yet, he does not do it, because he loves his work; but he waits and waits – who knows, he might conquer it in love, and of its own it might open the doors to let him in, giving him the freedom to live in it. In such conditions does the creature put Us, by not letting Our Will reign in her soul - she shuts the doors in Our face, and hurls at Us the stones of her sins. And We wait, with invincible and divine patience; and since she does not want Our Will as life within herself, with paternal goodness We give her the effects of It, which are the laws, the Sacraments, the Gospel, the helps of my examples and prayers. But of all this great good, nothing can equal the great good that my Will can do as perennial life of the creature; because my Will is, all together, law, Sacraments, Gospel, life.... It means everything - being able to give everything, possessing everything; and this is enough to be able to comprehend the great difference that exists between my Will as continuous life in the creature and Its effects, which It can produce, not in a perennial way, but in circumstances and time, even in the Sacraments. And although the effects can do great good, yet they can never come to produce all the goods that the life of my Divine Will reigning and dominating in the creature can produce. Therefore, be attentive, my daughter, and give It the holy freedom to do whatever It wants in your soul.”

One who lives in the Divine Will find all the divine works in act and done for her. One who lives in the Divine Will does the office of breeze for the divine works.

My little soul keeps going around within the Divine Fiat; it feels the irresistible need to live in It, because in It I find everything at my disposal – everything is mine. Even more, I feel as though a secret invitation that all created things make me in the depth of my heart, saying to me with mute voice: ‘Come into our midst, come to possess us and to enjoy the many beautiful works that our Creator made for you and to give us to you.’ Oh! what a sweet enchantment the whole Creation has, looked through the veils of the Divine Will. But while my little soul was as though enveloped in the sweet enchantment of all Creation, my beloved Jesus, repeating for me His dear little visit, told me: “My blessed daughter, for one who lives in my Divine Will everything is present; past and future do not exist for her – everything is in act. Since she enters the divine order, Our Paternal Goodness does not want to give a love past which It had in Creation, or a love that is to come; this would not breach into the heart of the creature, because to her it will seem that the love that was unleashed from Our womb in Creation would be like a love and a work that are not directed to her; and those of the future, like love and works to be hoped for; more so since, in Us, past and future don’t even exist. Past and future are for one who lives outside of Our Will, because she looks only at the exteriority of Our works – not inside of them; while one who lives in It looks at Our works inside of Us, and looks at Our Creation as continuous and for each creature. So, for the happy creature who lives in Our Will, We let her see and touch with her own hand Our acts of stretching out the heavens, of creating the sun, the wind, the air, the sea and so forth – all for her. And she sees and comprehends with clarity Our intense love in each thing created for her, Our power and wisdom in ordering them for love of her, in such a way that she feels involved and as though drowned under the waves of Our love, power, wisdom and goodness of each created thing. And while she feels drowned, she sees that Creation for her shows no sign of ending, It never says ‘enough’, but the creating act continues – always continues; and seeing that Our creating and operating act never ceases, she echoes Our love and never ceases loving Us.

Oh! how beautiful it is to find in the creature a continuous love that never ceases, just as Our own never ceases. Even more, seeing herself drowned by Our continuous love of sustaining the creating act for love of her, in order to requite Us she makes use of her stratagems to imitate Us, and she says to Us: ‘Supreme Majesty – oh! if I had the power, I too would make as many heavens, suns and everything that You can do, for love of You; but since I am unable to, I give You heavens and sun and everything that You have given me, to tell You that I want to love You very, very much.’ And - oh! how happy and requited We remain, for the creature makes use of and gives Us Our love, made her own, to love Us. Therefore, in Our Will there are no dissimilar things between Creator and creature: if she loves, she makes use of Our love to love Us; if she works, she works in Our works; nor does she love or work outside of Our love and of Our works. We can say that Our love is hers, and hers is Ours; and We have done Our works together with her. Here, then, how this living in Our Will makes Us and the creature happy – because We created her for We want to interact with her, be together, work together, delight and love each other, together. Our purpose was not to keep her far away – no, no, but together and fused with Us; and in order to keep her absorbed, We gave her Our creating and operating act which, as it created things, so formed its waves of love and opened veins of happiness in the creature, in such a way that she was to feel within herself, not only Our Will, Our life palpitating and operating, but the sea of Our joys and Our happinesses; so much so, as to feel Paradise in her soul.

And not only is Creation always in act, but also Redemption is always in act; and one who lives in my Divine Will feels the continuous act of my descent from Heaven to earth – and it is precisely for her, for love of her, that I descend, I am conceived, I am born, I suffer and I die. Everything for her; and in order to give Me tit for tat, I descend and she receives Me, is conceived in Me, is born again with Me, lives together with Me, and dies with Me, to rise again with Me. There is nothing I have done which she does not want to do together with Me. So, I feel her inseparable from Creation, inseparable from Redemption and from everything I did. And if she is inseparable from all Our works, from my very life, what should I not give to one who lives in Our Will? How could I not centralize everything in her? If I did not do it, my love would not tolerate it. Therefore, if you want everything, live in my Will; I cannot give things by half - but everything; and you will have the great good of feeling within yourself Our operating in continuous act, and – oh! how you will comprehend how much you have been loved by your Creator, and how obliged you are to love Him.”

After this, I abandoned all of myself in the arms of the Divine Will. But, because of certain sorrowful memories, my mind was restless; and my sweet Jesus, having compassion for me, came and blessed me. His blessing was like beneficial dew that put me in the perfect calm, and I felt like a tiny little one, all timid, come out and freed from a storm. And my beloved Jesus, all goodness, told me: “My good daughter, courage, do not fear, because courage is the powerful weapon that kills timidity and puts to flight every fear. Put everything – everything aside, and come into my Divine Will to form your breeze to all Our works. They are all in order in Our Fiat, but do not move, they want the breeze of the creature in order to move their step toward them; and if the breeze is strong, they run – they fly to be the bearers of the good that each of Our works possesses. So, the soul who enters into Our Will, as she enters, unites herself with Our acts to do hers within Our own; and as she unites herself, she forms the breeze, and with the very strength of Our Will she moves, she calls, she captures, she forces all Our works with her sweet and penetrating breeze, and she puts them on the way toward creatures.

Oh! how happy We are, how We long for this sweet and refreshing breeze that the creature brings Us in Our Will. Therefore, be attentive, and do not want to lose peace, otherwise you will not be able to come into Our Will to form your breeze, the sweet refreshments, the freshness to Our ardent love, and the motion to Our works. In fact, no one but peaceful souls enter into Our Will – there is no place for others; and if It does not hear you follow Its steps, and Its works are not surrounded by the cortege of your breeze, with sorrow It says to you: ‘Oh! the daughter of my Will has remained behind, and has left Me alone without her company.’

Now, my daughter, you must know that Our Divine Being, as He created man, remained over him in act of pouring from Us sanctity, light, love, goodness, beauty, and so forth; so, by withdrawing from Our Divine Will, He withdrew from under Our rain. Now, when the soul comes into Our Will, as she forms for Us the breeze and moves all Our works with her acts within Our own, We form the rain, and We pour Ourselves first over the fortunate creature, and then over all. And just as the favorable breeze in Our Fiat calls the rains, invokes it, longs for it from Our Supreme Being, so the operating of the human will outside of Ours forms the contrary wind and drives away Our beneficial rain, causing it to remain up in the air. Here is why many creatures can be seen like parched lands, without flowering and without fruits. But this does no harm to the soul who lives in Our Divine Will; she draws apart from everyone and comes to live with her Divine Family, and she feels upon herself Our continuous rain that Our Divinity forms over her.”

How one who lives in the Divine Will encloses, does and braids her acts with those of the Virgin and those of Our Lord. How she forms a nuptial among all the things that belong to the Divine Will.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues; I feel Its omnipotent force that invests me completely, and my little soul is as though undone, in such a way that I want, I feel, I touch nothing but Divine Will alone. And if some little cloud invests my mind, Its divine light, immediately, almost without giving me time, inundates me and puts it to flight for me; and I throw myself either into the arms of my Celestial Mama, as my refuge, or into the arms of my most sweet Jesus, to find again my dear Life; and I pray, now one, now the other, to enclose me in-between their acts, that I may be safe and defended from everything and from everyone. But while I was thinking of this and other things, my highest Good, Jesus, clasping me in His arms, told me: “Blessed daughter, my acts and those of my Queen Mama, Our love, Our sanctity, are in act of continuous waiting, to enclose your acts in-between Our own, so as to give them the shape of Our acts and place the seal of Our own upon your acts. In fact, you must know that the acts of the Sovereign of Heaven are braided with my acts, therefore they are inseparable, and one who lives in Our Divine Volition comes to operate in the middle of Our braiding, and her acts remain enclosed in-between Our acts, which keep them in custody as triumph and works of the Holy Fiat. Nothing enters into Our acts if it is not a birth from It. See, then, where the sanctity of one who lives in Our Will is formed – in the middle of Our sanctity; she loves in the center of Our love, and operates in the midst of Our works. So, one who operates in Our Will will feel, as though in her nature, the inseparability – she from Our acts, and We form her own, just as the light is inseparable from the heat, and the heat from the light. And therefore they⁹⁹ are Our continuous triumph, Our glory, Our victory over the human will; they are Our divine properties, which We form in her, and she forms in Us. The human will and the Divine Will kiss each other continuously, they fuse together; and God carries out His life in the creature, and she carries out her life in God.

Furthermore, for the creature who lives in my Will, there is nothing that belongs to my Fiat over which she does not acquire her rights: right over the Divine Being, right over her Celestial Mama, over the Angels, over the Saints; right over the heavens, over the sun, over the whole Creation. And God, the Virgin, and everyone, acquire the right over her. It happens as when two young spouses unite themselves together with an indissoluble bond, such that, on both sides, they acquire the right over their very persons, and over everything that belongs to both – a right which no one can take away from them. The same for one who lives in Our Will: she forms the new, true, real marriage with the Supreme Being, and, with it, a nuptial is formed with everything that belongs to Him. Oh! how beautiful it is to see this creature espoused to all – the dear, the favorite, the beloved of all. And, with right, everyone wants her, they yearn to enjoy her and to keep her together with them; and she loves all, gives to all the right over her, and gives herself to all – it is the new and extensive family of her Creator that she has acquired. Oh! if it could be seen from the earth, they would see that God carries her in His arms, the Sovereign Queen nourishes her with the choice food of the Divine Volition, the Angels and Saints form the cortege around her, the heavens extend over her to cover her and protect her – and woe to those who touch her. The sun fixes on her with its light and kisses her with its heat, the wind caresses her; there is not one thing created by Us which does not offer itself to perform its office around her. My Will moves everything around her, so that everyone and everything may serve her and love her. Therefore, one who lives in It gives everyone something to do, and all feel the happiness of being able to extend their field of action inside and outside the fortunate creature. Oh! if all creatures would comprehend what it means to live in my Divine Will – oh! how all would aspire and compete, to make in It their celestial dwelling.”

Then, I was feeling, more than ever, all abandoned in the immensity of the light of the Divine Volition, and I could see and feel my sweet Jesus inside, all attention over the littleness of my poor soul. He would take care of everything, He wanted to give me everything, do everything, in such a way that it appeared how, with the touch of His fingers, He formed my heartbeat, animated the breath, the motion, and kept the thoughts, the words and everything in order; but with such love and tenderness as to be enrapturing. And blessed Jesus, seeing me surprised, told me: “My little daughter, do not be surprised at my many attentions and loving tendernesses that I do inside and outside of you. You must know that in the soul in whom my Divine Will reigns I serve Myself; therefore, for the decorum of my Divinity and Sanctity, I lend my own acts, as if they were for my own life; and so I place the intensity of my love, the order of my thoughts, the sanctity of my works. And in seeing the docility of the creature offering herself like a daughter to receive the offices of her father, his loving tendernesses, the life of the father in his daughter – oh! how happy and honored I feel to serve her. More so, since I serve Myself in my daughter, and when one serves oneself it is not servitude, but it is honor, glory; it is to know how to preserve oneself in the dignity, in the sanctity, in the order of one’s own state, without descending down below. Servitude begins when one serves other people; but to serve oneself is to maintain the height of one’s state. Besides, there where my Divine Will reigns it is my interest that everything the creature does be acts worthy of It, and that they be a birth from my own acts. Otherwise, it would be unseemly to my Divine Will as well as to the human acts; therefore I offer Myself to do everything, so as to serve my own Will.”

In addition to this, while I continued my abandonment in the arms of Jesus, He added: “Blessed daughter, my Humanity so loved the human family, that I carried it, and still carry it, inside my Heart and clasped in my arms; and each pain, work, prayer that I did were new bonds of union between Me and them. So, the whole of my Being and everything I did ran and ran like a mighty torrent toward each creature; and melting into love it constituted itself bond of union, of love, of sanctity, of defense, which, forming arcane voices of penetrating, passionate, delirious love, said to each one of them: ‘I love you, my children – I love you very much; and I want to be loved.’ My Humanity reordered and established the true union between Creator and creature, and bound them all among themselves, like members united to the head; and I Myself constituted Myself head of the whole human family. Therefore, virtue possesses, of its own, the binding force to bind oneself to God; not only this, but to bind oneself to the creatures, in such a way that for one who exercises patience, her patience is bound, then, to all those who have patience, and disposes others to have patience. In the same way, those who are obedient, humble, charitable, form the different categories in my Church. What to tell you, then, of the most extensive bonds that one who does and lives in my Divine Will forms! Since she is present both in Heaven and on earth, she establishes her bonds everywhere; with her acts she binds Heaven and earth, and calls everyone to live of Divine Will.”

Sublimeness and power of sacrifice. How God, when He wants to give a great good, asks for the sacrifice of the creature. Example of Noah and of Abraham.

I was doing my round in the Divine Will, to trace everything It has done, so as to make Its acts my own and be able to say: ‘I was and I am with You, and I do what You do. So, what is mine is yours, and what the Saints have done by virtue of You is also mine, because You are the fount that spreads everywhere and produces all goods.’ And while I was going around, I reached that point of the history of the world when God asked of Noah the sacrifice of building the ark; and I offered that sacrifice as if it were my own, to ask for the Kingdom of the Divine Will upon earth. But while I was doing this, blessed Jesus, making me pause at that point of history, told me: “My daughter, all the good of the history of the world is founded upon the sacrifice that is wanted of creatures by my Supreme Will; and the greater the sacrifice that We ask of her, the more good We enclose in it. And We ask for these great sacrifices when, because of their sins, they deserve that the world be destroyed - making the new life of creatures come out from within the sacrifice, in place of the destruction. Now, you must know that at that point of the history of the world creatures deserved to exist no more – all should have perished. Noah, by accepting Our mandate and by exposing himself to the great sacrifice, and for so many years, of building the ark, bought back the world and all the future generations. As he went on sacrificing himself for so prolixious a time, of hardships, of toils, of sweat, so did he pull out the coins, not of gold or silver, but of his whole being in act of following Our Will. In this way he put in enough coins to be able to buy back what was about to be destroyed. So, if the world still exists, they owe it to Noah who, with his sacrifices and by doing Our Will the way We wanted him to do it, saved man and everything that was to serve man. A prolixious sacrifice, wanted by God, says great things – universal good, sweet chain that binds God and men. We Ourselves don’t feel like escaping from the maze of this chain so long that the creature forms for Us by a prolixious sacrifice. On the contrary, it is so sweet and dear to Us, that We let Ourselves be bound by her, as she herself best pleases. Now, by his prolixious sacrifice, Noah bought back the continuation of the human generations.

After another length of time of the history of the world, Abraham came, and Our Will commanded him to sacrifice his own son. This was a hard sacrifice for a poor father; it can be said that God put the man to the test and demanded a proof that was inhuman and almost impossible to execute. But God has the right to ask whatever He wants and any sacrifice He wants. Poor Abraham – he was put in such constraints that his heart bled, and he felt death within himself, the fatal blow that he was to strike over his only son. The sacrifice was exuberant; so much so, that Our Paternal Goodness wanted the execution of it, but not the completion, knowing that he could not have lived – he would have died of grief after an act so harrowing, of killing his own son, because it was an act that surpassed the strengths of his nature. But Abraham accepted everything – he was heedless of everything, either of his son or of his very self, while feeling consumed with sorrow in his own son. If Our Will, just as It commanded it, had not prevented the fatal act, even though he would have died together with his beloved son, he would still have accomplished the sacrifice wanted by Us. Now, this sacrifice, wanted by Us, was great, exuberant and unique in the history of the world. Well then, this very sacrifice elevated him so high, that he was constituted by Us head and father of the human generations; and by the sacrifice of sacrificing his son, he poured out coins of blood and of intense sorrow to buy back the future Messiah, for the Jewish people and for all. In fact, after the sacrifice of Abraham, We made Ourselves heard often in the midst of creatures, which We would not do before. The sacrifice had the virtue of drawing Us closer to them; and We formed the prophets, up to the time when the longed-for Messiah came.

Now, after another most extensive length of time, wanting to give the Kingdom of Our Will, We wanted the sacrifice on which to set It, such that, while the earth is flooded by sins and deserves to be destroyed, the sacrifice of the creature buys it back for Us, and with her sacrifice - and in her sacrifice, she calls back the Divine Will to reign, and makes the new life of my Will be reborn in the world in the midst of creatures. Here, then, I asked for the prolixious sacrifice of your life, sacrificed in a bed. And this was nothing, because other souls have remained in a bed of pain; but it was the new cross, which I have not asked of and given to anyone, that was to form your daily martyrdom – and you know what it is, since many times you have lamented to Me about it. Daughter, when I want to give a great good, a new good to creatures, I give new crosses and I want a new and unique sacrifice – a cross for which the human can give itself no reason; but there is my divine reason, which man is obliged to not investigate, but to lower his forehead and adore it. And besides, this was about the Kingdom of my Will, and my Love had to invent and want new crosses and sacrifices never before received, to be able to find pretexts, the prop, the strength, sufficient coins, and an extremely long chain to let Itself be bound by the creature. And the sure sign, when We want to give a great and universal good in the world, is to ask of a creature a great sacrifice, and prolixity in it; these are the assurances and certainties of the good that We want to give. And when We find one who accepts, We make him a portent of grace, and in his sacrifice We form the life of that good that We want to give. So, my Will wants to form Its Kingdom in the sacrifice of the creatures, surround Itself with it in order to be secure, and, by her¹⁰⁰ sacrifice, undo the human will and erect Its own; and with this, she comes to form many coins of divine light before Our Divinity, to buy back the Kingdom of Our Divine Will and give It to the human generations. Therefore, do not be surprised at your long sacrifice, or by that which We have disposed and do in you – it was necessary to Our Will; nor should you be concerned because you do not see and hear in others the effects of your sacrifice. It is necessary that with your sacrifice you make the deed of purchase with Our Divinity; and once you have settled with God, the purchase is assured: in due time, with certainty, the Kingdom of the Divine Will will have life, because the purchase of It was made by the sacrifice of one who belongs to the human family.”

Prodigies and secrets that the living in the Divine Will encloses. Moving scenes. Generations of the divine acts in the creature. Divine custody and jealousy.

I am in the arms of the Divine Fiat; Its dominion extends in everything over my littleness, but Its empire is not slavery – no, but union, transformation, in such a way that the creature feels that she dominates together with It; and by letting herself be dominated, she acquires the virtue of dominating the very Supreme Will. But while my mind was swimming in the sea of the Divine Fiat, in such a way that I felt as though drowned by Its waves, my Celestial Jesus, visiting my poor soul, told me: “My blessed daughter, the living in my Will encloses so many prodigies and secrets as to astound Heaven and earth. You must know that as the littleness of the creature enters into It, it gets lost in Its immensity, and the Divine Will receives it in Its arms to make of it a conquest, and the human will makes itself the conqueror of the Divine. Now, in these conquests on both sides, the Divine Will celebrates the conquest of the human, making of it the use It wants, and the human will celebrates the great conquest it made of the Divine; and wanting to make of It the use it wants, it sends It off to Heaven as its conquest and bearer of new joys and happinesses, which It possesses. My Will, conquered by the soul, does not hold Itself back; bilocating Itself, It stays and sets out for her Celestial Fatherland only to comply with the one who has conquered It, and It carries the conquest It made of the human will, and the joys and happineses that the conquering Divine Will encloses. My delighting and beatifying Will which is in Heaven, and my conquering Will which is on earth, plunge together and flood the celestial regions with the new joys that my conquering Divine Will possesses. In fact, you must know that the joys of my conquering Will are quite distinct and different from those of my delighting Will. The conquering joys are not in the power of the Blessed, but in the power of the creature, who must send them from the earth, and they are formed in the middle of the stake of pain and of love, and over the annihilation of her own will. On the other hand, the delighting joys are in their power, and are fruits and effects of the celestial dwelling in which they find themselves.

There is great difference between the joys of my conquering Will and those of my delighting Will. I can say that my conquering joys do not exist in Heaven, but only on earth, and – oh! how beautiful it is to see the creature who, for as many times as she does her acts in my Will, so many times makes herself the conqueror of It, and makes It set out for Heaven, for Purgatory, into the midst of terrestrial creatures – wherever she wants. More so since, my Will being everywhere and in every place, It has to do nothing other than bilocate Itself to give the fruit, the joys of the new conquest that the creature has made of It. My daughter, there is no scene more moving, more delightful, more useful, than to see the littleness of the creature come into Our Divine Will, do her little acts and make her sweet conquest of an immense, holy, powerful, Eternal Will that encloses everything, can do anything and possesses everything. The littleness of the creature, in seeing herself the conqueror of a Divine Fiat so interminable, remains stupefied, does not know where to put It, would want to enclose It all within herself – but she lacks the space; and acting as a stalwart, she would want everyone to take so great a good. Here, then, she sends It off to Heaven as a sacred right of the Celestial Fatherland, and to whomever wants It; and with eagerness she sets about doing more acts in It, to reacquire It as many times for as many acts as she keeps on doing. It is the true divine commerce that God and the creature form between Heaven and earth.”

Then, my mind continues to wander within that Fiat that wants to always give Itself to the creature, and while It gives, It never stops giving. And my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, the human will is the fount and substance of the life of the creature; from it she draws the life of her works, the thoughts of her mind, the variety and multiplicity of her words. If the human life did not have a free will, it would be a life without fount and without substance; so, it would lose all the beauty, the strikingness, the admirable braiding that the human life can weave. The same for the Divine Will: wherever It reigns It makes Itself fount, substance and life of the acts done in It. So, as the creature thinks, speaks, operates, walks, this fount diffuses in her acts and places in them the divine substance. And, oh! the variety of these acts distinct among themselves in sanctity, in beauty, in light, in love - when this fount diffuses in her acts, It does always new acts and forms the harmony of the divine operating in the creature. Now, you must know that all Our care is for these acts because in them is formed the generation of Our divine acts in the depth of the creature. And, oh! Our contentment, for We can continue the generation of Our acts - and in this generation We feel Ourselves the God operating, not the God hindered, unable to carry out the generation of Our acts because Our Will is not there in the creature. So, to Our care adds Our custody and jealousy of these acts; your Jesus remains inside and around the creature in order to keep It¹⁰¹ in custody; my jealousy has a gaze fixed on them to watch them, to delight Myself and take all the pleasure that the generation of Its acts operating in her possesses. After all, Our Will possesses an infinite value, and not keeping even just one act of It in custody would be like going against Our very Selves. Even more, you must know that since It is fount and substance of Our Supreme Being, Our power, sanctity, goodness and all Our attributes form a crown around Our Will and all Its acts, to be dependent upon It and give It the homage and custody of all Its acts, whether It does them in Us or in the creature. Therefore, be attentive, and let yourself be dominated by my Will if you don’t want ever to lose your Jesus, whom you so much long for, love and want.”

Hunger that the Divine Will produces. Life imprisonment of love. How God forms the persecution of love to the creature.

I feel myself under the empire of the Divine Will, and if for a few minutes I don't feel Its empire, I feel I am without life, without food, without heat – I feel that the divine life ends, because there is no one who forms it, nor anyone who nourishes it; and in my sorrow I keep repeating: 'Jesus, help me, without your Will I die of hunger. O please! make me feel Its sweet empire, so that, nourishing me, your life may live in me, and I may live of You.' And my beloved Jesus, having pity on me, all love and tenderness, clasped me in His arms and told me: "My little daughter of my Will, courage, do not lose heart – the divine life, formed and nourished by my Will, cannot die; and if you feel the hunger, it is, rather, that you don't always hear my speaking on other wonders and novelties that my Will possesses. This interrupted speaking of mine makes you feel hungry for the ever new nourishment which It possesses. But this prepares you to receive the new nourishment of Its knowledges, to make you grow and be nourished only of Divine Will; nor would you submit to taking any other food – it would be disgusting to you, and you would content yourself with dying of hunger, because one who has savored It many times cannot adapt to taking other nourishments. However, this hunger is also a fortune, because it can serve you as an outlet into the Celestial Fatherland, and you must know that the only nourishment of these divine regions is the new act, never interrupted, of my Divine Will. This nourishment that possesses all tastes, all delights, is the daily food, and of all instants, of the Celestial Jerusalem. And besides, to feel the hunger says life, not death; therefore, wait with unconquered patience for the nourishment of my Will, which will repay you for the hunger suffered, with such abundance, that you will not be able to take it all."

And I, interrupting the speaking of Jesus, said: 'My Love, my heart bleeds in telling You this: to me, rather, it seems that You no longer have that continued love for me that would make You always speak, and giving me many new enchanting surprises of your Being and of your Will, I would feel and touch with my own hand your love palpitating for me; so much so, that I was forced to say: 'How much Jesus loves me!' Now, because of this interrupted speaking of yours, it seems to me that I am not always loved by You; and to pass from a continuous love to an interrupted love is the harshest of torments, and I keep repeating: 'I am not loved! I am not loved! by He whom I so much love.' And Jesus, interrupting my speaking, added: "My daughter, what are you saying? You must know that when the creature loves Us, if We did not love her We would act against the nature of Our Divine Being. To be loved and not to love is not of the Supreme Being; and if this could be, and We were capable of pain, the love of the creature would put Us into a life imprisonment of torments, and would become Our persecutor; nor would it give Us peace until, fused together, the love of one and of the other would kiss and rest together. Ah! you do not know what it means to love and not to be loved by he or she whom one loves. All the pain, the restlessness, is carried by the one who does not love, because the one who loves is at his place, and fulfills the most sacrosanct of duties. In such state is Our Divine Being, because We love too much and man does not love Us; Our Love persecutes he whom We love, It puts him into life imprisonment, It torments him, It gives him no peace. Restlessness is the sure sign that the creature has been aimed at by Our Love that wants to win the love of the creature by dint of persecution. Therefore, calm yourself; if you love Us, Our Love loves you before you do, and the inseparability of Our Love and yours is so great, that yours forms the little heat, and Ours, feeding yours, forms the immensity of the light, in such a way that both one and the other lose the separative virtue, and live always together as if they were one single nature, to form one the life of the other.

Therefore, if my speaking is not continuous, this does not mean broken love – no; it would be interrupted if you did not feel like wanting to do my Will even at the cost of your life – this would be no longer having It in your power. And if my goodness has reached such extent as to give It in your power, this assures you that my Love for you is continuous. In fact, you must know that one who does and lives in my Divine Will is nothing other than the operating life of God Himself in the creature. Our Love for one who lets herself be dominated by Our Divine Will is so great as to make Itself her sweet prisoner. It restricts Itself, It makes Itself small, and takes a most great delight: to love and to operate in her soul. But while It restricts Itself, It remains immense and operates with infinite ways, just as We love and operate within Ourselves; because that is Our nature – immensity, infinity – and everything We do remains immense and infinite as We are; and – oh! Our contentment, for while We restrict Ourselves in her littleness, We give course to Our Love and works. And she remains filled, overflows outside, fills Heaven and earth, and We have the great glory and honor of loving and operating as God in her littleness - and if you knew what even just one act of love means, one work alone done by Us in you, you would die of joy, and the whole of eternity would not be enough for you to thank Us for a good so great. Therefore, let Me do; let Me do what I want with you, and be certain that both you and I will remain content.”

Celestial atmosphere. Jesus, guarding the act of the creature; work of one and of the other. How the acts done in the Divine Will guard and embrace the centuries, and are the sentries and sentinels of the creatures.

I am always occupied with and in the Divine Volition; in It there is always work to do. But it is not a work that tires – no; rather, it gives strength, it makes the divine life grow, and inundates one with joy, with peace – one feels a celestial atmosphere inside and out. But while I was swimming in the eternal waves of the Divine Volition, my highest Good, Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: “Blessed daughter, it is I who form the celestial atmosphere inside and outside the creature. In fact, as soon as she enters into my Divine Will, I place Myself as guard of the act that she is doing, and she forms the soil with her acts, and I form the divine seed, to cast it into the act of the creature. So, her acts serve as soil; and I, Celestial Farmer, by filling her with my seeds, use this in order to reap the harvest of the works that are done in my Will. Do you see, then, what the continuation of the acts done in my Divine Will is for? It serves to give Me the work and the occasion never to leave the creature, because she gives Me always something to do, and I do not want to, nor can I leave a soil so precious, formed in my Will and exposed to the vivifying rays of the Divine Sun, empty. Therefore, my Will calls you to work in It, and you call Me, and – oh! how sweet it is to work together in my Fiat. It is a work that does not tire; on the contrary, it is bearer of rest and of the most beautiful conquests.”

Then He added: “My daughter, you must know that Our acts, which We do in the creature, contain three acts in one: the preserving act, the nourishing act, and the first creative act. With these three acts in one We give perennial life to Our acts, and the creature who possesses them feels within herself the creative power, which removes from her all the weaknesses of the human nature; the nourishing one keeps her always occupied, giving her its food to prevent her from taking any other food, and preserves her from all evils – this nourishment is like the embalming that prevents corruption; and the preserving act strengthens and keeps the good pure and beautiful. These, Our three acts in one, are like impregnable fortresses that we give to the creature who lets Our Will reign in her, which render her so fortified that no one can harm her.”

After this, my little mind continued my round in the Divine Will, searching for Its acts in order to enclose my acts within Its own and make them one. This is all the contentment of my long exile: to be able to operate together with the Supreme Volition, to make my acts disappear in Its own. I feel I take Heaven as though in my power; I feel the eternal beatitudes flow in them¹⁰², in such a way that I feel neither distant nor estranged from my dear Celestial Fatherland. So, while my mind was as though crowded by thoughts on the Divine Will, my highest Good, Jesus, repeating His short little visit, told me: “My little daughter of my Will, I want you to know that for each of your acts in It you are regenerated and grow as many times, in a completely new way, in Our Fiat. So, you feel Heaven, and the Supreme Being has the great contentment of regenerating in the act of the creature. To form Our life in her act is Our feast, Our longing; We unite all Our stratagems of love and receive the complete glory that the creature can give Us. Now, you must know that sacrifice, with powerful voice, calls God; and doing Our Will makes Him descend into the soul to let Him operate as the God He is.” And I: ‘My Love, even though I try to operate always in your Will, and I pray and pray that Its Kingdom come upon earth, nothing is seen yet.’ And Jesus: “Good daughter, this says nothing; in fact, you must know that the prayers, the acts done in Our Will, because they enter Our divine act, have such power that they must bring to the creatures the good they contain. They place themselves as guards of the centuries, and they guard them with so much love, and with unconquered patience they wait and wait, and with the light that they possess they knock at the hearts, they make themselves light for the minds; and without ever tiring, because they are not subject either to tiredness or to diminution of power, they act as sentries, as faithful sentinels, who do not leave other than when they have given the good that they possess.

These acts are the possessors of my Will, and in an absolute way they want to give It to creatures; and if one escapes them, they take aim at another; if one century does not receive them, they do not stop, nor do they depart, because We have given them the centuries in their power, and they form and will form Our divine army in the midst of the human generations, to form the Kingdom of Our Will. In these acts there is the human, crowned with divine power, and they give to the creatures the right to possess such a Kingdom. There is Our Will operating in these acts, and It gives God the right to reign and dominate the creature with Our Omnipotent Fiat. They are like the down payment and capital that pay God on behalf of creatures, and have the right to give what they have paid for to the human generations; and like sun that does not withdraw or ever tire of beating on the earth with its light to give the goods it possesses, so do they, more than suns, go around through each heart, go around the centuries, are always in motion, nor do they ever give up, until they have given my operating Will which they possess. More so, since they know with certainty that they will obtain their intent and victory. Therefore, if you see nothing, do not be concerned; you - continue your life and your acts in my Will. This is more necessary than anything – to form the currency in order to pay for a Kingdom so holy on behalf of your brothers. And besides, you must know that my very life spent on earth, and my own acts, find themselves in the same condition. I paid up for all, and my life and what I did is at everyone’s disposal, and want to give themselves in order to give the good they possess. And although I departed for Heaven, I left and I stayed to go around the hearts, the centuries, so as to give to all the good of my Redemption. It has been about twenty centuries, and my life and my acts continue to go around; but not all of them have been taken by creatures; so much so, that various regions still do not know Me. So, my life, the fullness of my goods and my acts, do not withdraw, they run and go around always, they embrace the centuries as though one, to give to all the good that they possess. Therefore, it is necessary to do, to pay, to form the capital – the rest will come by itself. So, be attentive, and let your flight in my Fiat be continuous.”

Deo gratias.

How Jesus, with His word, generates His sanctity, goodness, etc., in the creature. Follies of love to place her at His level and in a contest with Him.

My most sweet Life, Jesus, my Celestial Teacher, take my little soul in your hands, and if You want, continue your divine lessons on your Will. I feel the extreme need to be nourished by your word. After all, You Yourself have accustomed me in this way, You Yourself have given me this form of life – You have made me live of You and of your sweet word. Certainly I have not formed this way of living myself – no, but You did, oh! Jesus; so much so, that I would feel You more than myself, and as You remain silent I feel this life break in me; and even though it is the hardest of my martyrdoms, yet I am ready - if You want to stop your speaking - to say: ‘Fiat! Fiat! Fiat!’ But, have pity on me, and do not leave me alone and abandoned.

Then, I was feeling all abandoned in the arms of the Divine Will, and I longed for nothing but Heaven. It seems to me that there is nothing left for me to do other than conclude my life in the Divine Will on earth, to then start it again in Heaven. And my Celestial Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: “My little daughter of my Will, you oppress yourself too much, and I do not want it. Seeing you oppressed in the midst of so many goods of mine – you show that you have your eye more on yourself than on the goods that your Jesus has given you; and by this, you show that you have not yet comprehended well the gifts and the goods that your Jesus has given you. You must know that each word of mine is gift, and therefore a great good contained in it. In fact, my word possesses the creative, communicative, formative virtue, and as it is pronounced by Us, so it forms the new good to give to the creature. See, for as many words as I have spoken to you and as many truths as I have made known to you, so many gifts did I give you; and these gifts enclose divine goods, one distinct from the other. Everything is in whether the word comes out of Us, in which the good that We want to issue from Ourselves is formed. Once this good has come out, with certainty it will have its life in the midst of creatures, because these gifts are animated and formed by Our creative power, and are preserved inside Our own word, to ensure the good that We want to give; and Our word will move Heaven and earth to give the fruit of the good it possesses.

Now, my daughter, you must know another surprise of Our speaking. Suppose that I speak to you about my sanctity; this word of mine encloses the gift of the divine sanctity to be given to the creature, always as much as it is possible for a creature. If I speak about divine goodness, my word encloses the gift of goodness. If I speak about the Divine Will, it encloses the gift of Our Will. In sum, whatever Our word says, beautiful, good, great, holy - that is the gift it encloses. Now, listen to a trait of Our loving stratagems – it is as if We were never content in forming new inventions of love to give to the creature. So, if Our word says sanctity, it is because We want to give the gift of Our divine sanctity, so that she may be placed at the same level with Our sanctity and may compete with Us. And – oh! Our contentment when We see Our divine sanctity operating in the creature, and We hear her say: ‘I feel, impressed within me, the sanctity of my Creator. Oh! how happy I feel – to be able to love Him with His own sanctity.’ Oh! then Our love comes to follies, and pours upon her in such an exuberant way that We reach the excesses. In the same way, if Our word says goodness, Divine Will, it is because We want to give the gift of Our goodness and Divine Will, that she may be at the same level with Our goodness and Will, and may keep up the contest with her Supreme Being. You cannot comprehend what Our contentment is in seeing the creature endowed with these divine qualities of Ours, of which Our word is the bearer. And since it is Our usual way to direct Our word to one creature, Our word is yet so fecund, powerful and full of light as to act like the sun, formed by one of Our words, which in one blow of light illuminates all and gives the good that the light possesses. Now, why do you oppress yourself if you see that your Jesus often makes use of His word to add gifts upon gifts? And these gifts will have life not only in you, but in many other creatures, because they possess the generative virtue – they give and generate, to then give and generate again. Our word is a birth from Our womb, therefore it is Our daughter, and as daughters they carry the good that they have generated in their Father. So, instead of oppressing yourself, think, rather, that your Jesus wants to give you the new surprises of His divine words, so that you dispose yourself to receive such a great good.”

After this, I continued to think about the Divine Will, and my most sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, when the soul lets herself be dominated, invested, subdued by my Divine Will, in such a way that each particle of her being, both in the soul and in the body – all of them possess my Will operating; so, the mind possesses It animated by Its science, the voice possesses It speaking, the hands possess It operating, the feet possess Its divine steps, the heart possesses It loving, and in the way my Will knows how to love – now, all this, united together, forms the divine sanctity in the creature. Then do We find all Our rights in the creature – rights of creation, because everything is Ours; We find the rights of Our sanctity, of Our works, the rights of Our Divine Fiat, of Our goodness, of Our love. In sum, there is nothing of Our own that We do not find in her as Our right; and the creature finds, in return, her rights in her Creator, because, one being the Will on both sides, the rights of one are the rights of the other. Here, then, what it means to live in Our Will: to receive Our sanctity, Our love, science, goodness – by right, because We cannot do without giving them to her, since they are her own properties, just as they belong to Our Fiat, because her life already lives in It. More so, since one who lives in my Will grows always in Our sanctity, in Our love, in Our beauty, and so forth. This continuous growing forms in the creature a new act to give to her Creator. We give to her the new act that We possess by nature, and she gives it to Us by virtue of Our Will; and – oh! the contentment on both sides, the happiness We feel in being able to receive from the creature, and for Us to be able to give. Giving and receiving maintains the nourishment of the correspondence, preserves the ever-growing union, and is like the blowing breath that keeps the fire always ignited and the flame of love alive, with no danger that it might be extinguished. Therefore, always forward in my Will, and everything will go well.”

Fiat!!!

August 7, 1932

How the light of the Divine Will makes all other things lose life, gives divine freshness, and one who lives in It is confirmed in good and acquires the right of citizen of Heaven.

I am in the arms of the Divine Will, though under the press of the privations of my most sweet Jesus. Without Him hours are centuries, days are interminable, and – oh! how sadly I miss His sweet and lovable presence, and I feel all the hardness of my long exile. But while I moan and sigh, the Divine Fiat makes Its light flow over my sorrow, and mitigating it, It makes me flow within the eternal waves of Its acts to unite mine with its own, and make them one. Ah! it seems to me that It does not even give me the time to feel sorry for being without He who loves me so much, and whom I love. Its light imposes itself on everything, it eclipses and absorbs everything, it wants everything for itself; nor does it permit one to lose time even on the holiest things, which is the privation of Jesus. But while I was swimming in the sea of sorrow, my dear Life, only like a flash that escapes, visiting my little soul, told me: ‘Good daughter, courage, let yourself be guided by the light of my Divine Will, which will know how to convert the sorrows, the pains, my very privations, into perennial peace and into divine conquests. The nature of Its light is eclipsing, corroborating, fortifying, and wherever Its light reaches, sorrow loses strength and life, and It changes it into conquests and into joys, because the strength of Its light surpasses everything, and there where it takes its place, all other things lose life. And if before the light of my Divine Will one feels other effects and desires, it means that the fullness of Its light is not full in the soul, nor does It reign in her in an absolute way. Its Kingdom is absolute Kingdom, not conditioned, therefore It has the supreme right to absorb everything, to make all other things lose life, and to convert everything into Divine Will.

You must know that each time the creature does her acts in my Will, a beneficial dew pours upon her, which preserves in her the divine freshness, and gives her the opium to everything that does not belong to It. And – oh! how beautiful it is to see her always fresh in her acts, fresh in her love, in her sorrow, in act of waiting to receive Its dew, so as to receive the opium in it, in order to convert the sorrow into sweet conquest of Divine Will. Freshness renders one lovable, attractive, whether a person or an object; no one likes old things, and this is why I love so much one who lives in my Divine Will – because I feel in her Our divine freshness, Our sweet fragrances. In sum, she gives of Our own, and your Jesus encloses this beloved creature in His Heart, and I keep forming her, raising her all from my Will. So, this noble cohort of the children of my Will will be formed in my Most Holy Heart, like many little queens, daughters of the great King.”

Then, continuing in my state of oppression because of the privations of my sweet Jesus, I was thinking to myself: ‘Yet, even though I am without the One who is more than my own life for me, still, I feel a profound peace, nor do I fear anything or have any worry that it might be my fault that Celestial Jesus deprives me of Himself; nor do I have any fear that I might get lost. In my little soul I feel nothing other than a placid sea, such that, though it murmurs, its murmuring is yet nothing other than ‘I love You’; and this little ‘I love You’ of mine asks You for nothing other than the coming of the Kingdom of your Will upon earth. And without ever ceasing to murmur, very often I form my little waves, so as to get away from my exile and storm Heaven, to enclose myself in my Celestial Fatherland. But, no - in vain; my waves fall back into my sea and I continue, placidly, to murmur: ‘I love You, I love You....’, and I engage Heaven and earth to ask You for your Fiat. But while my mind was speaking nonsense, my Highest Good, Jesus, clasping me in His arms, all tenderness, told me: “My newborn of my Will, it seems that you are looking for some way how to trouble yourself; but I do not want it – I do not want storms in the sea of your soul, but perennial peace. The storms – that is, worries, fears, doubts, these the storms - would prevent the continuous murmuring of your placid ‘I love You’, that must always run and murmur to conquer your Creator, that He may send His Will to descend upon earth in order to let It reign.

Now, you must know that for one who lets herself be dominated by my Will and lives in It, evils lose life. The fear of offending Me, the worries, the disturbances, lose the seed to be reborn; the soul and the body remain confirmed in good. She finds herself in the conditions of the Blessed for whom evil has no more life, because in those celestial regions, in my Will, evil absolutely cannot enter. So, one who lives in It can be called and acquires the right of citizen of Heaven; and if she finds herself on earth, she is like a citizen lost from the Celestial Fatherland, kept there by my Divine Will for Its great designs and for the good of miserable humanity. But even though she is on earth, she does not lose the right to be citizen of Heaven or to live with the same properties of the Celestial Fatherland. And although she feels as if lost, yet by right she must possess Heaven in her soul, to live not of earth, but of Heaven. Ah! the living in my Will calls Heaven upon earth, and Its light writes on her forehead, with indelible characters: ‘Perennial love; imperturbable peace; confirmation of all goods; daughter of the Supreme Being.’ Therefore, always in my Will do I want you, that you may enjoy the properties of your Celestial Fatherland, which are: continuous love, highest peace, and Divine Will as life of all the Blessed.”

One who does not live in the Divine Will finds herself in the conditions of those who remain idle before the light of the sun. One who lives in It possesses the Most Holy Trinity in act.

I was thinking about the Divine Will, and how for one who lets herself be dominated by It, giving It full dominion, all rights are hers, and everything that others obtain out of pity, out of mercy, by the goodness of God, she obtains by right. By right she obtains sanctity, because what dominates her is holy and has the virtue of transforming soul and body into sanctity, into goodness, into love. So, all the victories, the conquests, the rights are hers, and as the owner she storms Heaven. What a great difference between one who lives in the Divine Will and one who lives of human will! But while I was thinking of this, my adorable Jesus, repeating His short little visit, told me: “Blessed daughter, the difference between one and the other is great and incalculable. For one who does not live in my Will, my Will is like the sun for those who remain idle: as much as it invests them with its light and darts through them with its heat, they do nothing, they learn nothing and earn nothing, and they render the light of the sun sterile for them. And since they are there doing nothing, they get tired, they get bored with the light itself, and they seek darkness as rest for their unhappy sloth. On the other hand, for one who works, the light is operative, it is light for the eye, to let her look at what she has to do. In fact, for as much light as she may have outside, if her eye does not have the life of light, the light that surrounds her will be of no good for her; and if she does not have the external light, no good will come to her from having the life of light in her eye. My Paternal Goodness has placed such union of accord between the external light that the creature can have, and that of her eye – so much so, that one cannot operate without the other: light for her hands if she wants to work, if she wants to write, if she wants to read, and so forth. So, the first operating role in the creature is assumed by the light; without it, it would be difficult for her to do nearly any good, and earn for herself a crust of bread in order to live.

Now, such is the light of my Will for one who does not live in It. My Will invests and exists for all, but is not operative, nor dominating in the act of the creature. With all Its light, she remains idle, she learns nothing of the divine, nor does she make any conquest, and the most beautiful things tire her and bore her. The will that wants to live in Mine is like the eye full of light, which becomes capable of unifying itself with the light of my Will; and as they place themselves in accord with each other, they do and form prodigious labors and works, such as to astonish Heaven and earth. See, then, what it means to live in my Will: not remaining idle; the little light of the soul placing itself in accord with the light of the Eternal Fiat, to render It operating in her acts, and therefore form the inseparability between one and the other.”

Then, the crowd of thoughts on the Divine Will continued in my mind, and my Celestial Jesus added: “Blessed daughter, my Will produces light in the soul; the light generates the knowledge; light and knowledge love each other, and they generate love. So, there where my Supreme Will reigns, reigns the Sacrosanct Trinity in act. Our adorable Divinity is led by nature, in an irresistible way, without ever interrupting, to generate continuously, and the first generative act We do within Ourselves. The Father generates Me continuously, and I, His Son, feel continuously generated in Him; the Celestial Father generates Me and loves Me, I am generated and I love Him, and from One and the Other proceeds Love. In this generative act, without ever ceasing, are enclosed all Our admirable knowledges, Our secrets, Our beatitudes, the times, Our dispositions, Our power and wisdom – everything that eternity encloses, in one single generative act that forms the whole entirety of Our Divine Being. Now, it seems that this reciprocal Love of Ours, which forms the Third Person of Our Supreme Being, inseparable from Us, is not content with Our generative act within Ourselves, but wants to generate outside of Us, in the souls – and, behold, We entrust the task to Our Will animated by Our Love, to descend into souls and go to form Our divine generation with Its light. But It can do this in one who lives in Our Will - outside of It there is no place to form Our divine life; Our word would not find the hearing to let itself be listened to, and as Our knowledges would be missing, Love would not find the substance in order to generate – and here is Our Most Holy Trinity messed up in the creature. Therefore, be attentive in listening to what this light wants to tell you, so as to give it the field for its generative act.”

Desire of Jesus and the need He feels for the 'I love You' of the creature. How His love remains broken. Love, blood of the soul. Anemia that exists in the world.

I was going around in the acts of the Divine Will, and - oh! how I would like to place the requital of my acts for Its acts; and since I am too little and incapable of doing equivalent acts as requital of Its own, I come out with my little 'I love You'. But even though it is little, Jesus wants it, He awaits it, so as to tell me: "The newborn of my Will has placed something of her own in Our acts. So, they are no longer alone, but have the company of the one for the sake of whom they were created; and this was and is Our Will - to give field of action to the creature in Our own acts, so as to be able to say to her: "We love and operate within one single field." But I thought to myself: 'How special at all is this little 'I love You' of mine that Jesus wants and loves so much?' And my beloved Jesus, all goodness, told me: "Little daughter of my Will, you must know that I love your 'I love You', and I am always in act of waiting for it. I love you always, nor do I ever cease loving you, and if you take some breaks in loving Me, I feel that I give you my continuous love and you do not give it to Me, and my love feels as though robbed by you. On the other hand, when my 'I love you' runs, and yours lets itself be found ready to give Me and receive my 'I love you', mine feels requited, and it happens that your 'I love You' gives no time to mine, and mine gives no time to yours. A race takes place, a contest of love between Creator and creature. More so since, when I see that you are about to tell Me 'I love You', my Will invests your 'I love You' to make it big from small, and I find my love in yours. How can I not love it and want it? Daughter, these are my usual stratagems, my industries - I give in order to receive. This is my commerce - I love, I give love in order to receive love; and when I am not loved, my commerce remains broken. And since my passion is love, I do not tire, nor do I draw back; I start all over again, I repeat - I repeat the industries, I abound with stratagems and with tendernesses, to make up for my love, broken in the creature. Oh! if you knew how wounded and sorrowful my Heart remains when I say 'I love you', and she does not hear the call that my love does in order to have her own.

In addition to this, you must know that love is the blood of the soul, just as my Will is the life; and just as in the natural order life cannot function without blood, and the blood cannot circulate if it does not have a life, and according to the abundance of blood, so does one enjoy health - the same in the supernatural order: the soul, my Divine Will, cannot function without the blood of love: the greater the love, the more will she feel strong, robust, active in operating; otherwise she will suffer from anemia and can end up in consumption. So, when there is not enough blood of love, my very Divine Will, as much as It is life, becomes ill in the soul, and inoperative, because It lacks the blood of love in order to function. All virtues become anemic, and instead of patience, of fortitude, of sanctity, these virtues will appear all discolored, changing into defects. Therefore, there is much anemia in the world, because the pure blood of my love is missing, and as a consequence they are facing a terrible consumption that leads them to ruin, in the soul and in the body. This is why I so much love your 'I love You', and I want it in all my acts, in all created things, in each act of creature, so as to be able to form much blood as antidote and remedy for the anemia that exists. And this will be a preparation for the Kingdom of my Will. Therefore, I feel the need of your love; it is true that it is small, but I do not look at whether it is small or big - rather, I look at whether it was done in the power of my Will, which makes the smallest acts great for Me, and invests them with such beauty that I feel enraptured. Therefore, in order for you to do it, it is enough for you to know that I want it, that I like it, that you make Me happy; if it is small or big - I'll take care of it. And this 'I love You' of yours I want in the beating of your heart, in the air that you breathe, in the heavens, in the sun - in sum, in everything. Oh! how I would like to see your 'I love You' investing Heaven and earth, creatures and Creator."

Divine alternations: work and rest. How God takes the creature always by ways of love. Universal love and special love.

My little mind continues to wander in the Divine Volition. It seems to me that I cannot be without plunging myself into Its waves to find, in act, what It has done for love of us. But in the midst of such great immensity of love, my heart had its loving moans because of the privations of my sweet Jesus – His profound silence. I feel that, in my soul, although there is a pure air, a heaven most clear, studded with twinkling stars of all colors, a most refulgent sun that with its light beats continuously on my littleness, so that everything may be Divine Will; everything is peace and serenity, there is not even a slight breath of wind that could make noise, and this, however, is all effect and property of the Eternal Fiat – yet, I was saying to myself: ‘It seems to me that I lack the King, I lack the One who, with a love that I cannot tell, has operated and ordered everything in me. And because I lack Him, I feel lonely. But, tell me, why have you left me? Why do You not speak?’ And my dear Jesus, letting Himself be wounded by my moans, and sustaining me in His arms, told me: “My daughter, do not be surprised, this is my usual way – after work I want to find rest in my own labor, in the midst of my own works which, more than soft bed, are fit to give Me rest in act of profound adoration and in mute silence. Rest after work is the requital for the work, it is the taste and contentment that sacrifice can give. Did I not do the same in Creation? First I created It with my Fiat, because Our word is work, it is step, it is everything; and after I ordered and operated everything, I found the most beautiful and sweet rest. These are the alternations of Our Supreme Being – work and rest. Work calls Us to rest, and rest calls Us to work. So, don’t you want Me to rest in your soul? Everything that you see in you is nothing other than the work of your Jesus. Each word I spoke to you was a work that I was doing, and from within my word I formed the new creation in you, more beautiful than Creation Itself. In fact, that one was to serve for the bodies, while this one was to serve the souls, to give them the life of my Will. If I did not make alternations of work and rest in your soul, it would be a sign that you had not given Me the freedom to do my work in your soul with my creative power, and therefore I would have continued my work unto reaching the intent, to then rest.

If I do not finish, I do not rest; and if after resting I resume the work, it is because I begin new works. Don’t you want Me to rest under this heaven so serene, these stars and sun that rain down upon Me like sweet refreshments, and making for Me the most beautiful lullabies they invite Me to rest, and in mute silence they say to Me: ‘How beautiful are your works - your operating Will, your creative power that gave us life. We are your works – rest in us, and we will form your glory, your perennial adoration’? Upon so sweet a speaking I take rest, and at the same time I keep vigil and I preserve my work, and I prepare other works to do – and if you knew what the first work is that I do after resting! I open my work by saying to the creature a sweet ‘I love you’ of mine; I want to begin my work with my love, so that the creature, feeling wounded and enraptured by the irresistible force of my love, lets me operate, and gives Me the field of action in her soul. I take her, I begin my works, I ask for sacrifices, always by way and by dint of love. My love makes her happy, invests her, absorbs her, inebriates her; and in the face of my love, inebriated as she is, she lets Me do what I want and reaches the point of sacrificing her life for Me, because an ‘I love you’ of mine, coming out from the depth of my Divinity, contains the immensity that is present everywhere, the infinity that never ends, the power that can do anything, the wisdom that disposes everything – so, everything that exists feels the power of my ‘I love you’, and all say it together with Me. Heaven says it to her with the whole Celestial Court; the stars say it with their twinkling that changes into ‘I love you’; the sun, the wind, the air, the water say to her: ‘I love you’, because since I said it, my ‘I love you’ has resounded in everything and everywhere, and all say it together with Me. And the creature feels she is under the rain of an immense ‘I love you’, and feeling drowned by my love, she lets Me operate, she utters not a breath, and she offers herself to let Me accomplish my most beautiful works. And even though she too feels the need to tell me ‘I love You’, she sees, however, that her own is too small in the face of mine, because it does not possess the weapons of immensity, power and infinity. Yet, she does not want to remain behind, and she uses the industry of saying it in the power of my Will, and – oh! how much I enjoy it, and it is a spur for Me not only to work, but to repeat for her an ‘I love you’ of mine, direct and special. In fact, it is true that I love all, my love never ceases for anyone; but when I want to do special labors, new works, more distinctive designs, I am not content with my general love, but I add a special and distinct love which, while it serves to charm the creature, serves as material, as the ground on which to form my labor and lay my works. Therefore, let Me do – I know when work, word, silence and rest are necessary.”

The requital, need of the divine love. The Divine Will operating, continuation of Creation.

I am always in the sea of the Divine Volition, which makes the whole Creation present to me. What an immense theatre, in which there are scenes so moving, that reveal in clear notes the great love of God toward the creatures, and that captivate the heart to love Him. And I was thinking of the great human ingratitude that does not let itself be captivated to love Him. And my sweet Jesus, surprising me, with His Heart swollen with love, told me: “My good daughter, Creation was made by Our Supreme Being in order to give love, and to receive the requital of the love of the creatures. There is not one thing created by Us for which this was not Our purpose – to make it in order to receive the requital. Otherwise, Our works would not have been communicative, fruitful, nourishing works, and full of life to make man happy; they would have been like painted works which, at the most, can attract the sight, but which would do good to no one. On the other hand, by wanting the requital, We placed the communication of the light as though on the way, to give to the creature the life of light; and air, to give her the life of respiration; and water, food, fire, to give her the life and the good that they possess; and so with all the rest. How many acts of life We placed around the creature in order to grow, nourish and sustain her life!

Now, wanting requital for them was a need of Our love; works without requital are works without cortege, without appreciation; and as much as creatures make use of them, they remain isolated works, as if they were not welcome. The requital does not take the work only to make use of it, but enters inside of it to recognize the One who created it for love of her; the requital gives life to gratitude, to thanksgiving. It can be said that the requital maintains the conversation, the friendship, the correspondence between the giver and the one who receives the gift; otherwise, everything remains broken.

Now listen, my daughter, to another trait of Our intense love toward man. In order to have this requital, in creating him We placed in him Our Will operating, united with his own, so that, just as Our Will did many works for love of him in the work of Creation, in the same way, in his soul, possessing Our Divine Will, by virtue of It he might have equal strength and power to give Us the requital wanted by Us. Our Fiat, acting in Creation and acting in the creature, was to engage the human will, so as to make use of all its acts, small and great, to form the just requital of all Its works done in Creation. More so, since It knew the number, the variety, the beauty, the weight of all Its works; in the operating creature It was not to be without operating with the same multiplicity, sumptuousness and beauty as It had operated in the Universe, and therefore requite Its external works, as well as Its internal works done in the depth of the soul. The Divine Will was to make use of the human will as the material in Its hands in order to continue Its Creation. Here then, by rejecting Our Will, man caused Its operating life to cease in his acts, of which It could make use in order to create, and to transform them into heavens, into stars, into suns, into seas, etc. He hampered Our work, he stopped it, he turned Our sweet harmonies upside down - the dear requitals which only by virtue of Our Will could exist. We could do anything in him if Our Will had Its operating life in him. Here then, Our cares, Our sighs, the insistences, Our sorrows, that the human ground might become Our field of action in which Our Will would have full freedom to do what It wants. And do not think that only the Supreme Being wants the requital in His works. For the creature also, the first purpose in her works is the requital; if it is there, or if at least she hopes for it, she has hands and feet in order to move, mouth to speak, strength to sacrifice herself, time in order to operate; but if there is no requital, it seems to her that she has neither hands, nor feet, nor mouth, nor strength, nor time – she feels life dying in her for that work. It might seem that the requital is nothing – but it is not true; on the contrary, it is the beginning and the life of each work. Therefore, the requital is a need of my love, and it makes Me continue the work of Creation.”

After this, I continued my abandonment in the Divine Fiat, and a crowd of thoughts, doubts and difficulties arose in my mind. And my Celestial Teacher added: “My daughter, my Will has the virtue of making the centralization of the whole human being in one single act. If It operates with Its unitive virtue, It centralizes in the creature the thoughts, the heart, the steps and everything, in such a way that the creature feels that it is not only the work, but that the whole of her being is invested by Its operating strength, feeling the empire of my Will operating, and everything does one single thing. This unitive strength renders the creature dominating and ordered, because the first endowment that my Fiat knows how to give is dominion of self and order; and then she takes Its divine dominion and becomes the malleable matter in Its hands that is suitable for Its marvelous works. On the other hand, without my Will, the creature does not even possess the unitive strength in her acts, and therefore she appears all scattered and without order, and hard matter that does not surrender to the forms which Our Will wants to give her.”

Prodigy of the birth of the Queen of Heaven. Ways of communication between Creator and creature. Who forms nobility.

My little mind is always on its rounds inside and outside of the Divine Volition, and as much as it keeps turning around It, I never tire, I feel a mysterious force that, attracting me, never says ‘enough’, but says: “Run – search for Its acts, love them, adore them, kiss them, and transform your acts into Its own, and form your whole life of Divine Will.” And if I am unable to say anything, in my races and rounds I say my tiny little story: ‘I love You, I love You, I adore You, I bless You, oh! adorable Will, in all your works.’ And since today was the nativity of the Queen of Heaven, I stopped to think about the great portent of Her birth, such that it seemed that Heaven and earth came to attention to adore this divine prodigy. And my Highest Good, Jesus, with unspeakable love and tenderness, told me: “Blessed daughter of my Will, the birth of my Celestial Mama encloses all the wonders, all the prodigies united together. But do you know why? It was not Her alone to be born, the pure one, the holy one, the beautiful one, the Immaculate – no, no, but together with the Celestial Baby Girl my Divine Will was born in Her, already conceived and enclosed in Her to form Its life, growing and operating, in the gracious Little Girl. My Will, enclosing Itself to be born together with Her, making use of the organ of the Celestial Creature in order to operate and form Its divine life – this was a prodigy that only the Eternal Love, the divine wisdom and power could operate. It was not just the life that was given, nor was it merely the gift of freeing Her from original sin – this would have been nothing for Our power. What stupefied and drew the attention of all was my Will being born together with Her in the world; so much so, that Heaven and earth remained shaken, came to attention, felt a mysterious force. That same force that dominated them and preserved the whole Creation was the same Will of Ours that moved everything and placed Itself and all Creation at the service and disposal of this newborn Baby Girl. So, this being born of my Will together with Her was the origin that called all the other prodigies to be centralized in Her. Wherever my Fiat reigns there is no good It does not enclose, no prodigy It does not perform; It wants to make display of Its love and power by forming Its operating life, and place from Its own for as much as the creature is capable of containing. Therefore, admire and thank Our Supreme Being, who reaches so much love toward this newborn Little Girl as to make Our Will, which is not born, which has no beginning and no end or limits in Its boundaries, to be born in Her.”

Then, I was following the operating of the Divine Will in all created things, and my lovable Jesus added: “My daughter, created things were made by Us in order to form many ways, so that man might make use of them in order to come to Us. In fact, We left them all open, so that, whenever he wanted to come, he would have no need to knock, or to open in order to come to Us. He was Our son – it was right and reasonable that he would have all the ways open to go to His Celestial Father and spend time with Him, to love Him and be loved, and, as son, to ask Him for graces and favors. But do you know what the ungrateful son did? He himself shut the ways closed, formed the bars and, by sin, formed the doors, closing the correspondences with the One who had given him life. Now, do you want to know who returns to open the doors, to burn up the bars? One who loves Me and lives in my Divine Will. The love and my Fiat are the powerful forces that burn and empty everything, and open all the ways, so as to place the distant child once again in the arms of his Celestial Father.

Now, you must know that all the virtues, the good works, the love, the doing my Divine Will, form the nobility of man. But the substance of this nobility is the richness of my grace; all the good leans upon it, as it makes itself fount and preserver of all the good that can be done. Otherwise, one can be called noble by origin, as man is, but since he lacks the wealth, almost out of necessity he finds himself doing acts unworthy of his nobility. In fact, if one is noble but is not rich, he cannot dress as a noble man, nor live in palaces; so, his nobility is reduced to the mere memory that he was noble. In the same way, for one who does not possess the richness of my grace, all the good is reduced to squalid virtues, which very often show that he is not rich in patience, in prayer, in charity, and so forth. Now, good forms the nobility, the richness of my grace preserves it, my Will forms the King that dominates and, with divine mastery, regulates and orders everything.”

The page written in the Divine Will: story of the creature. How God does not want us servants, but little princes of His Kingdom. Divine Love in search of all creatures in order to love them.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues. I feel myself being hidden by Its eternal waves, in which It hides everything – nothing can escape Its immensity. So, one who wants to find everything, embrace everything, hear the story of each one, must enter into this sea of the Supreme Fiat. But while my mind was wandering in It, my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: “Blessed daughter, my Will encloses everything; even more, for each creature It keeps Its written page of how her story is to unfold and her life to be formed; and this page was written *ab aeterno*¹⁰³ – written in the light of Our Will. So, the life of each creature had its beginning in time, but in Our Supreme Being it had no beginning, and she was loved by Us with love without beginning and without end. Now, the whole Creation did not exist yet, and We loved It, because It was already inside of Us; We kept the great birth of all creatures enclosed inside the Sacrament of Our Divinity; in each of them We looked at Our written page – her events, her tiny little story; and according to what was written, the more or the less by which Our Most Holy Will was to be fulfilled and glorified, so much more intensely did We love her. You did not exist, but Our Will enclosed you; and We, loving you, gave you the place and rest on Our paternal knees. We gave you the various lessons on Our Fiat, and – oh! how much pleasure We took in seeing you listen and write in your soul, as though copying, what was written in Our eternal page. In fact, you must know that what We want the creature to do of Our Will is first done by Us, formed by Us in Our own Volition, and then, overflowing from Us, Our Will wants to do it and form it in the creature, making of her Its field of divine action. Our love is so great, that We want for her nothing other than to do what We Ourselves have done, giving her the model of Our act, that she may make the copy. And how much help and assistance do We not give while she makes the copy, giving her Our own Will as her act, as raw material, so that the copy may turn out according to Our design!

Now, for one who does her own will, each of her acts does nothing other than spoil Our design, forming erasures on Our written page. Each of Our written words contained a special and eternal love, it contained the unfolding of her life according to Our likeness, in which she was to enclose her story of love and of fulfillment, toward her Creator, of His Divine Will. The human will does nothing other than counterfeit this page and upset Our likeness; and instead of forming the copy of Our page written with so much love toward her, it has formed its own page written with notes of sorrow, of confusion, and with a story so vile and low, that the centuries will have no memory of it, and the Eternal One will not find in it the echo of the story written in His page, in which His divine story in the creature was to be hymned.

My daughter, there is a mistaken knowledge in the low world, and they believe that the creature can live as though apart from Us – what a mistake! What a mistake! The whole of Creation is nothing other than an inheritance come out of Us, therefore It is Our own, It belongs to Us, so much so, that although We have issued It outside, yet We have issued It as inseparable from Us, and We want the honor, the glory of Our inheritance, and for creatures to be not Our vile servants, but Our children, and like many little princes of Our Kingdom. And this princehood was given to them by the inseparability from Our Will; so much so, that the creature cannot do without It, nor can she live or separate – not even in hell. At the most, some keep It as operating and some keep It as preserving of their being without giving It the freedom to do good. To live without my Will would be like the body living without the soul – which is impossible; and it shows that when a member is severed from the body, it has no motion, it loses heat and it putrefies, because the soul is missing. So it would be if my Will were missing – everything would resolve into nothing.

Now, the living in my Will is precisely this: to feel, flowing in one’s whole being, in all the acts, the light, the divine strength, the life of my Will, because where Its operating life is not present, that act remains without life, without heat, without strength and divine light. It is as though dead to good, and when there is no good inside, evil is formed and it ends up putrefying. Oh! if the creature could see herself without the operating life of my Will, she would see herself so counterfeited, that she herself would be horrified to look at herself. Therefore, let yourself be engulfed always by the eternal waves of my Will, in which you will find your page written, your story woven with so much love about you. In this way, what We have disposed of you will no longer affect you – you will find everything as things that belong to you and that by absolute necessity must form your life, fill your story and satisfy Our need of love, wanting *ab aeterno*¹⁰⁴ to make Our Will known. Be faithful and do not hinder Our love, and leave Us free to carry out Our admirable designs formed upon you.”

After this, I continued my abandonment in the Divine Fiat, and my sweet Jesus added: “Good daughter, one who does and lives in my Volition rises into the unity of my Will, and in It she descends into all things, to give Me her love in all things, in all creatures and acts of theirs.” And I: ‘My Love, as much as I do to love You in all creatures and in all of their acts, wanting to cover them all with my love, so that You may receive nothing but love from them, still, I see that not all of them love You. This is a sorrow for me, because I think that my love has no vital strength and therefore I am unable to make You loved by all.’ And Jesus: “My daughter, it is the strength of the unity of my Will that flings you over all and over everything, to love in everything and give Me the requital of the love of all; and if they do not love Me, I cannot say that I do not receive your love. On the contrary, in your love I feel the notes of love that all should give Me, and – oh! how happy I am! You must know that this is Our divine office: from the height of Our sole and only act which We never interrupt, Our light, love, power and goodness descend, and go on tracing all the acts, the heartbeats, the steps, the words, the thoughts, in order to mold them, invest them, seal them with Our love. We feel the irresistible need of love to go in search of everything and of everyone, and We let nothing escape Us – not even a heartbeat, without giving the creatures an ‘I love you’ of Ours. Yet they do not love Us; even more, there are some who escape from under the rain of Our love. But in spite of this We continue, We do not stop, because Our divine nature is love and it must love, and We feel the contentment, the happiness that Our love gives Us by loving, as it has the virtue of loving all, of extending to all and everywhere. Nor would there be full happiness in Us if Our love were to suffer the impotence of not being able to love everything, or of stopping if it does not see itself required. In the same way, you – continue to love Us for all, and to engulf all into Our love; and even though you may not obtain the whole of your intent, you will feel the notes of Our love bearer-of-happiness - that you want to love Us for all.”

The Divine Will calls for the life of our Lord into the soul; abandonment calls for His works. Right that the Divine Will gives to one who lives in It.

I am always in the arms of the Divine Volition, like a tiny little girl who wants to be rocked in the arms of her mama to take her sweet sleep. And if the mama does not rock her, the poor little one does not feel secure, she is oppressed and cries, and implores the arms of the mother as bed and rest; and only when she obtains her intent, then does she calm down. So I am – I am the tiny little girl, just newly born, and in order to be secure I feel the great need of the arms of the Fiat, to be rocked and defended. And since I am inexperienced in Its Divine Sea, because I am just newly born, I feel the need to be guided, and of what¹⁰⁵ I have to do in Its own Will. And since I was feeling oppressed because of the privations of my sweet Jesus, and because of other incidents that had happened to me, my Highest Good, Jesus, all goodness, told me: “My little newborn of my Will, come into my arms. You are right that only in my arms can you be secure, nor are there dangers in my Will which, more than a mama, keeps you clasped to Its bosom, nourishes you with Its light and with Its love. There are no oppressions, nor melancholy, nor fear – theses are things outside of my Will, not inside of It, in which there is nothing but peace, joy, continuous attitude. There is so much to do, that the soul does not find either the time or the place to oppress herself. And besides, oppression is lack of total abandonment in my arms. Abandonment produces the sweet sleep, and in that very sleep she dreams of the One whom she loves, and who loves her so much as to keep her clasped to His bosom. On the other hand, oppression, fear, produce the vigil, and she becomes all eyes to look at herself, not at the One whom she loves and who is all eyes for her. You must know that doing and living in my Will calls for my life to be formed in you, and total abandonment in Me calls for my works; and one who does not live abandoned hinders my life and my works within herself, and I would feel ill-at-ease if I were not able to carry out what I want to do in the creature. Therefore, abandon yourself completely in Me, and I will take care of everything.”

After this, I was doing my round in the Creation, to place in It my requital of love for everything He created and preserves out of sheer and pure love; and my beloved Jesus added: “My daughter, the great magnitude of the world, attached to the great Divine Magnitude, revolves continuously, animated by Our incessant motion. It revolves around Us to render to Us the glory, the honor, the love with which We issued It outside of Us. So, We are in the midst of Our works which, while revolving around Us, with secret and arcane voices sing the praises of Our Supreme Being. We feel, then, in the created things, Our life spread in them, and We feel, being returned to Us, the heartbeat of Our love, the depth of Our adoration, the cortege of Our glory, the aura of Our refulgent beauty, the life of Our light. Now, one who goes around in Our works unites with them in giving Us everything that all Creation gives Us; my Divine Will gives her the place in all created things so that whatever they do she may do as well. And it happens that, as she goes around, so does she take more love, more light of knowledge, she embellishes herself more. It is an enchantment to see her – as she goes around, she takes into herself the life of her Creator and she copies it; and my Divine Fiat gives her the right to hold her place of honor in Its works. One who lives in Our Will is inseparable from Us, and from the greatest to the littlest work created by Us, Its creative and unitive strength unites her with everything, with indissoluble and perennial bond.”

¹⁰⁵ Read: “...I feel the need... of being told (of receiving) what I have to do in Its own Will.”

God created man in an ecstasy of love. The Creation, endowment of man. The sweet ringing of the bell; mutual ecstasy of the Creator and of the creature. Prodigy of the Conception of the Virgin.

My abandonment in the Fiat continues, and the more I abandon myself, the more I feel Its strength that strengthens me, Its life that animates mine, Its light that comforts me, brightens me up, and making itself revealer, reveals to me the One in whose arms I am all abandoned, and with powerful attraction, makes me go around in His works, loves and wants His little daughter to be spectator of what He has done for love of creatures. So, while I was going around, my divine and sovereign Jesus, making me pause in the act of the creation of man, told me: “My daughter, what a sweet memory the creation of man – he was created in an ecstasy of love of Ours. Our love was so great, that We remained enraptured before Our own work that We were issuing to the light. The beauty with which We had invested him enraptured Us; the sanctity with which We had filled him enraptured Us; the shape, the harmony with which We had formed him enraptured Us. His prerogatives, each of his qualities were an ecstasy of love that We felt and that enraptured Us to love him. So, Our love remained shaken, subdued, and putting Us into ecstasy, it made the operating and everlasting love toward man arise within Us. And in this ecstasy of love, enraptured as We were, We were heedless of everything, We set no limits, We made such display in loving him and enriching him of all goods, that We left not a void in him, so that his love for Us might be full, and he might be able to enrapture Us to love him continuously. So, the mere memory of how man was created repeats for Us Our loving ecstasy toward him. Now, one who goes around in Our Will, as she finds Our works that were as though a preparation to then create man, rings the bell to call all creatures to recognize this love of God toward man, and its sweet sound calls Our attention, re-awakens Our love, and makes Our ecstasy of love arise again toward him.

Ecstasy means a complete pouring out of oneself toward the beloved; and one who lives in Our Will has the power to make Us undergo Our ecstasy of love, that We may pour Ourselves out into her; and We, with Our power, place the creature in ecstasy for Us, so that nothing may be left of her, and she may pour herself out completely into Our Supreme Being. A reciprocal pouring out of oneself takes place, one into the other; therefore, there is nothing that pleases Us more than to see the creature in that same Will in which he was created. To admire Our works, to know them, to feel the pulsations of Our love that each created thing possesses – this was the endowment that We prepared and gave to man in creating so many things and all Creation. Now, who receives the life of the good that created things contain? One who makes use of this endowment so splendid; and, by right, one who knows them, by knowing them, finds Our love palpating, Our Will operating, and he loves them and loves in them that Supreme Being that loves him. Therefore, be attentive and constant in going around in Our works, so that we may hold hands in loving each other, we may put each other into ecstasy, and with profit you will make use of the great endowment that with so much love your Creator gave you.”

After this, my little mind was wandering about in the acts done by the Divine Will; and going from one act to another, I arrived at the Conception of the Most Holy Virgin. Oh God! The Heavens remain mute before this act performed by the Divine Will. The Angels seem to stammer, and as much as they speak, it seems that they are unable to tell everything about this prodigy so great. Ah! only God can speak about it, because He is the Author of the prodigy of what He operated in this Conception. And while I remained stupefied, my lovable Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My daughter, the Conception of the Immaculate Virgin was a new act of Our Will – new in the manner, new in the time, new in grace: in Her was the whole Creation renewed. In Our all-seeingness and immensity, We called all creatures, all of their good acts, present, past and future, as if they were one alone, so that upon everyone and upon everything might this Conception be formed, in order to give the right to all - and give them the right, not with words, but with facts, over everything. When Our Will does an act that must serve for the universal good of all, It puts no one aside, and making use of Its omnipotence It gathers everything together - creatures and acts of theirs, except for sin, because evil does not enter Our acts - and It performs the act It wants to do. See, your acts also contributed, you placed your part, therefore by right you are Her daughter, and the Virgin Queen is by right your Mama. But do you know why We used this way in issuing this Holy Creature to the light? To renew the whole Creation, to love It with new love, and to place everyone and everything in safety, as though under the wings of this Celestial Creature and Mother. We never do Our works as isolated, but We always start from Our one and only act, and while it is one it unites everything and does everything as if all were one alone. This is Our omnipotence, Our creative strength – to do everything, to find everything and do good to all, in one single act.”

The Divine Will makes of all centuries one. It simplifies, It forms the void and forms the divine nature and Its journey in the human will.

The Divine Volition keeps weaving Its divine life in my soul; with Its sweet enchantment It makes it grow, It molds it, It nourishes it, and with Its wings of light It covers it, It hides it, so that not a breath of wind may harm it or be able to prevent the growth of Its life in my soul. Oh! if it wasn't for the Divine Will that, more than tender and loving mother, holds me in Its arms, covered with Its light in the circumstances of my life – alas! too painful – I don't know what I would do. But Its light calms me, fortifies me, and I move on. Oh! adorable Will, how I must thank you for a good so great, and I offer You the infinity of your own Volition to thank You as You deserve. So, while my mind felt itself under Its light, my beloved Jesus, repeating His short little visit to my soul, told me: “My blessed daughter, how beautiful it is to see the creature grow under the wings of light of my Will. Enveloped within this light, she sees, hears, touches nothing but her Mother-light that keeps her enfolded; and if creatures wound her, beat her, embitter her, she feels herself being drawn deeper inside and clasped by Its arms of light, and she answers with the smile of light to those who want to embitter her and wound her; and making fun of them, she confounds their human perfidy. Oh! power of my operating Will – It slips away from everything, It triumphs over everything, and with Its light It forms Its throne of everlasting glory in the soul who gives It the freedom to operate. You must know that Its power is so great, that It makes of all centuries one, and Its empire extends everywhere, and of all acts It makes one single act. The centuries disappear before Its power, and all the good acts of creatures are nothing other than many atoms which, united together, form one single act; and recognizing Its power, prostrate at Its feet, they form the glory, the adoration of the human generations to this Supreme Will. The symbol of this is the sun, which is nothing other than many atoms of light which, united together, form the sun that gives light to all the earth. But those atoms are armed with a divine power, and each of them contains a marvelous power, so much so, that by merely touching the earth, the plants, they communicate marvelous goods and effects as to form a distinct life in each plant and flower. The same with the acts of the creatures: though they are atoms, they contain the marvelous power of my Will, therefore they are pregnant with admirable effects.

You must know that when the creature disposes herself to do an act in my Will, my Will arms Its power and It simplifies, forms the void and forms the divine nature in the human will, and as though victorious, It forms Its path in the will of the creature. And It keeps journeying and journeying, and only then does It stop and Its step is hindered, when the human volition bars Its way by doing, not Mine, but its own will. What a crime, to hinder the journey, the step of my Will in the will of the creature. This is why I created the creatures – to form for Myself many ways in the human wills, so as to be able to have my continuous journey, and therefore my operating act in them; and one who hinders my journey would want to hinder the continuation of my Creation, hamper my steps and tie my hands so that I may not operate. Ah! not doing my Will seems to be something trivial, yet it is the greatest of crimes, which cries out for revenge on the poor creatures before the Divine Majesty. Especially when my Will is known – that It wants a work to be done, that It wants a sacrifice – not doing It is like wanting to contest the truth, and this is sin against the Holy Spirit, and it cries out for revenge before God. To know my Will and not do It is to close Heaven, break the divine relations, and not recognize the divine lordship that each creature is obliged to know, and to submit to what my Will wants, should it cost her her life. Therefore, be attentive, adore my Will and what I have disposed of you, if you want to content your Jesus.”

The creature, heaven studded with stars. The Creation enclosed within her. How the practice of good forms the life of good in the creature. The sign that Jesus dwells in the soul.

I am always prey to the Divine Fiat. It awaits me in all created things to duplicate the love It had in creating so many things for me. It seems that the Divine Volition longs for the love of Its beloved creature, to be able to find the little prop of love, upon which to lean Its great love. So, heavens, suns, winds, are nothing other than insinuating and continuous calls, to tell us: “I have anticipated you with my love; and you – do not leave Me without yours.” But while I felt that all were calling me to love my Creator, my beloved Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My daughter, just as I created a heaven that extends above your head, studded with stars, in the same way I created a heaven inside of you, and this heaven is your soul, which extends everywhere – from the top of your head down to the bottom of your feet. There is not one part of you to which this heaven does not extend. So, you have a heaven on the outside, and a heaven inside, even more beautiful; and everything that this heaven does by means of your nature – that is, if it thinks, if it speaks, if it operates, if it suffers – is nothing other than most refulgent stars with which this heaven of the soul keeps adorning itself. The sun that shines in it is my Will, the sea that flows is my grace, the wind, my sublime truths that form the flowery fields of the most beautiful virtues – the whole of Creation is enclosed in the creature. It was not of Our Wisdom, or of Our powerful Love, to create the Creation only outside of the creature, leaving the inside, the vital and substantial part of her, without heaven, stars and suns – no, no. When We do a work We fill it inside and out with Our works, and with Our very life – but so much, that there must be not one particle of its being that does not feel Our life and the strength of Our creative works. This is why We love the creature so much – because she is Our work, and We left Our life in her in order to preserve what We Ourselves had done. And this is why, then, if one does not feel within himself the life of my Divine Will, it means that he knows It theoretically, but not in practice, because when one knows a good and practices it, it has the virtue of forming the substance of the life of the good that one knows; otherwise it would remain without practice, like a painted picture which, having no life, does not possess the virtue of forming its life in the one who admires it. My Will is life, Our works are living works, not dead; yet, for one who does not know them, or does not try to know them, or does not put them into practice, they can be dead works for her, and without life. Therefore, it is in the practice that I await the creature, in order to realize, form and grow the life of my Volition, and to render Our works alive for her.”

After this, I was feeling a fear, a doubt – about whether my sweet Jesus was present in my soul, or had withdrawn, leaving me alone and abandoned. Alas! what a cruel thorn that pricks and makes one feel the most ruthless death. But my always lovable Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My daughter, do not fear; and in order to reassure you, I want to tell you the sign when I dwell inside, and when I depart. If the soul submits herself to my Will, loves It, gives It the first place, this is the sign that I dwell within her, because my presence has the virtue of keeping the human will submitted to Mine. On the other hand, if she feels rebellious to my Will, this is the sure sign, then, that I have withdrawn. Therefore, calm yourself, and do not fear.”

One who lives in the Divine Will emits three acts: concurring, assisting and receiving. All the divine qualities continuously call one who lives in His Will, to form her and raise her as similar to them.

The sea of the Divine Volition continues to murmur in my soul. Oh! how sweet, penetrating and engulfing is its murmuring – it engulfs me so much, that I murmur along, as if this divine sea were my own; and fused together with it, I am unable to do anything other than what the Supreme Will Itself does. But while I was murmuring love, adoration, joys, happiness, beauty, which entered into me like many veins, my sweet Jesus, visiting His little daughter, told me: “My blessed daughter, your littleness in the interminable sea of Our Volition is Our greatest joy. You must know that one who lives in It emits concurring, assisting and receiving acts. In the first one she concurs with the very acts of her Creator; since the Will of one is that of the other, there is nothing that this Divine Will does in which It does not put the creature to concur together in Its operating. And here is how my Will is no longer alone – It feels the inseparability of one who lives in It; in Its acts It feels a finite will within the infinite, loving together and concurring to the multiplicity and the incessant operating of Our works. So, one who lives in Our Will breaks Our solitude, and as though naturally We feel her with Us concurring in Our divine sea; and with a continuous pouring of her littleness into Us, she acquires the rights of Our Volition, to do what It Itself does. Ah! you cannot comprehend what Our contentment - what Our joy is, in feeling the creature concurring together, to do nothing other than what We Ourselves do. From the concurring act arises the assisting act – she concurs and assists; there is nothing We do in which she does not concur and assist. How can We hide from one who is already with Us, concurs and holds her place in Our Volition? But, will she only concur and assist? Ah! no – another act arises, and it is that of receiving as her own, and as Our own, the infinity of Our love and of Our works; so much so, that her littleness has no place where to put a love and operating so great. And therefore she remains in Our Will herself, with all the deposit of the goods she has received; and this, by right, because she has something of her own.

You must know that everything that is done in Our Will is so great, that the creature is incapable of possessing it and restricting it within herself, therefore she feels the need to make use of the same Will in which she has operated in order to keep the deposit of it. More so, since everything that the creature does in Our Will - even the little ‘I love You’, the little offerings of her actions, her littleness at the mercy of Our Will - is nothing other than places that she takes in Our Will; and the more space she takes, the more rights she acquires, and feels within herself the divine strength that enraptures her continuously, giving her the flight so that her life may be formed wholly in the Divine Will. And since this way of living was to be of all creatures – this was the purpose of Our Creation, but to Our highest bitterness We see that almost all live at the low level of their human will – now, one who lives at the height of Our Volition sees the great evil of those who live down below, and having Our receiving act at her disposal – that is, the infinity of Our love and the multiplicity of Our works – she places them at Our and creatures’ disposal, so that We may be requited by the love of all, and they may receive graces, light, love, for as much as it befits their littleness. So, between Heaven and earth We have the intermediary before Us and before creatures, who with the power of Our Divine Fiat wants to bind Heaven and earth. And how not to content one who lives in Our Will? It would be as if We wanted to discontent Our very Selves.”

Then, I continued my abandonment in the Supreme Volition, and – oh! how happy I felt in thinking that in the Fiat I was concurring to everything that the Supreme Being was doing. My will, fused in Theirs, was the great secret and the portentous prodigy – that my littleness was as though entangled into doing and concurring to everything that the Divine Majesty does. Neither could I put myself aside, nor could They rid Themselves of me, because it was Their very Will that had caught me into it; and It was so immense, that I could not find the way to get out, and wherever I might go, I would find the Divine Will operating that enclosed me in Its own work, to concur. Nor was I an intruder – It Itself had stretched out Its arms to me to hold me as Its conquest. More so, since on both sides there was highest happiness – for me, to stay there, and for the Divine Volition, to keep my littleness clasped to Itself. So, I am unable to tell with clarity how I wandered about within this interminable light; and while I was all amazed, my dear Life, my Sovereign Jesus, added: “My little daughter of my Volition, the living in my Will is a continuous call that We make to the creature into Our divine qualities. Our Being is always operating, and Our attributes are always in motion; but since it is Our Will that forms the work and the motion inside Our Being, one who lives in It, then, feels that Our Will calls her now into the power, now into Our wisdom, now into Our love, now into mercy, now into divine justice, goodness and beauty. In sum, all of Our attributes, with powerful voices, call the creature into themselves, that she may be formed and grow according to their qualities. They would feel dishonored if it could be that one who lives with that same Will by which they are animated were not similar to them, or did not enjoy their prerogatives. That they tolerate littleness - this does not harm them, because it is known that the finite can never reach the infinite; but rather, littleness gives them more honor, because all the beauty and goodness that they see in it is all their work. But for it to be dissimilar to them – this, never. Here, then, the whispering and the continuous voicing that one who lives in Our Will hears – these are the continuous calls that Our Supreme Being makes to His beloved creature by means of His qualities; above all, because It does not want to be, and is unable to be, and It cannot be without her, because Our Will, being one, possesses such virtue of union and of inseparability, that everything that freely enters into It loses the separative virtue, and Our highest Goodness feels the need of love to keep with Itself what belongs to It and forms a particle of Its very Will. Here is why, then, Our divine qualities claim into their motion and works she who is animated by their same Will, to live life together. They would feel a tearing, and their Will broken, if they did not have her with them. Was it not a tearing what the first man made from inside Our Will by withdrawing from It? And this tearing was so grave as to turn the whole order of Creation upside down for him; and he reached the point of rejecting his Creator with all the current of His divine graces. Therefore, one who lives in Our Will is the restoration of this tearing, so painful, that cost Us so much; and Our Divine Being arms all Our attributes, all around her, so that that same shot may not be repeated to Us again, and as she lives together with Us, both she and We may be happy. And if you wanted to doubt what I tell you, it would be a sign that you have not comprehended well how much I love the creature, and how, in order to have her with Me, my loves makes Me reach excesses, delirium and follies. After all, I have all the rights to love her, because she is mine, and done by Me; and if you are mine, I am yours, and therefore you too have the rights to love Me; and if you did not love Me, you would neglect a most sacrosanct duty toward the One who gave you your being and loves you so much. Therefore, on both sides, let us love each other, always and very much; and love will not stay still – it will make new devices of love arise.”

How God does deeds, and not words. One who operates in the Divine Will operates in eternity; one who operates outside of It operates in time. The words of Jesus are works.

My little mind felt filled with the sweet lessons of my lovable Jesus, and, concerned, wanted to arouse doubts and fears in me; and although I know that when Jesus wants it, He makes the soul reach wherever He wants and the way He wants, nor are there laws for Him, or does He let anyone dictate to Him the laws, or does He pay heed to human views; on the contrary, He always comes up with new things to confound them, nor does He let anyone step in front of the power of His love, as many doubts and difficulties as they may speak and raise; even more, He makes fun of them, leaving them in their chatters, while He does deeds with the soul whom He has chosen – yet, in spite of all this, my frailty remembered my sorrowful fortunes, and I felt shaken; and I said: ‘Who knows how many doubts they will raise on this way of speaking of Jesus....’ And I felt all afflicted and oppressed. But Jesus, who watches over my poor soul, repeating His little visit, all goodness, told me: “Blessed daughter, do not be concerned about anything, my Will has the virtue of making everything that does not belong to It die, and of changing the very weaknesses and miseries of the creature into life of light. Everything I tell you is not her own virtue, but virtue and power of my Will, which can do anything. My Will is symbolized by the sun which, as it rises, dispels the darkness, it makes it disappear and die; and as it invests the earth, it gives its life of light to all things. The same with my Will: as the creature lets herself be invested by the power of Its light, darkness departs from her, her evils die and are replaced with life of light. And if one does not comprehend this, it means that he is illiterate, and therefore does not comprehend either what my Will is, or what It can do, or where one who lives in It, and lets himself be invested by Its light, can reach. Therefore, let them talk - I will do deeds, and they will remain with words; if they have not made a deep study, what do you expect them to comprehend? They may be learned, doctors in other things, but as for my Will they will always be the little ignorant ones; therefore let us put them aside, and let us think of doing, not words, but true deeds.

You must know that for one who operates in my Divine Will, her works, her acts, her adorations, her love toward God, are done and formed in the sphere of eternity, because my Divine Will is eternal, and everything that can be done in It does not get out from within eternity, and remains confirmed forever as divine and perennial works, adorations, love. They can be called works of the creature transfused in God, in which God Himself has operated. What is human does not enter either into the Divine Will or into eternity; and if it enters, it must lose its life to reacquire the life and the works of God Himself. Therefore, one who lives in Our Will is looked upon by Us, not in time, but in eternity, and for Our own decorum and honor, her acts must be Our acts, her love, Our love. We feel that the creature comes into Our Will to give Us the occasion to operate and to give her Our love, so as to make Ourselves loved with Our own love. Everything must be Ours, and everything she does must be coined with the image of her Creator. On the other hand, one who operates outside of my Divine Will operates in time, loves, adores in time, is looked upon in time, and everything that is done in time is works without confirmation. On the contrary, they must wait for the judgment in order to be either confirmed, or condemned, or purified by the fire of Purgatory; and they are looked upon as works of creatures in which the fullness of sanctity, fullness of love and fullness of infinite value can be lacking. The complete opposite for one who lives in Our Will: since those are Our acts, everything is fullness of sanctity, of love, of beauty, of grace, of light and of infinite value. There is such distance between one and the other, that if all would comprehend it – oh! how attentive they would be to live in Our Volition, so as to be emptied of the human act and filled with the operating act of a Divine Will. Therefore, be attentive, and do nothing which is not filtered and emptied by the light of my Will, and you will give Me the highest contentment of setting to work and of being allowed to operate as the God that I am. So, in It do I await you always, to move my step to come toward you, to stretch out my arms to you so as to operate within you, to open my mouth and spend time with you in sweet conversation, so as to manifest to you the arcane secrets of my Supreme Fiat.”

After this, I was thinking about everything that my Highest Good, Jesus, had told me, as if doubts and difficulties wanted to arise within me; and He, with an unspeakable mastery, told me: “My good daughter, do not be surprised at what I tell you – everything is possible to my Will. The impossible does not exist; as long as the creature lets herself be led by It, everything is done. You must know that everything I tell you serves to form, order, harmonize, the Kingdom of my Divine Will. I am repeating the way I had in Creation: I pronounced the 'Fiat' and then kept silent. And even though they are called 'days', in those times the day did not exist, therefore those could be even epochs in which I formed the great machine of the universe. I would speak and operate, and my delight for the work that my words was producing was so great, that one 'Fiat' of Mine would dispose Me and snatch from Me another 'Fiat'; and then yet another, up to the point when my 'Fiat' stopped when I saw that nothing was lacking to Its work, but rather, everything was sumptuousness, beauty, order and harmony; and in order to enjoy my works I remained in them as life and guard of my own 'Fiat'. My 'Fiat' Itself, with Its power, bound Me in my works and rendered Me inseparable from them. Everything is in pronouncing the first 'Fiat', giving my first lessons, placing in the soul the power and the work of my 'Fiat'; and once I have started, I can say that I never end it, unto work fulfilled. What would you have said had I left the Creation half-done? It would not have been a work worthy of Me, or an exuberant love of mine. Therefore, one 'Fiat' draws and snatches another one from Me, It forms the void in the creature in which to place the order, the harmony of my operating 'Fiat', It disposes her and imposes Itself on Me, to make Me give more lessons, so as to form many acts together which, united among themselves, form the new creation, more beautiful, more artful than the machine of the universe, which must serve for the Kingdom of my own Will. Therefore, each word of mine is a work, it is one more outpouring of love, it is to give completion to the first 'Fiat' that was started; and as they hold hands, the first and the last to be pronounced, they will form the braiding of the new creation of my Kingdom in the depth of the soul, which, transmitted to posterity, will be the bearer, more than the very universe, of goods, of sanctity, of graces to the human generations. See, then, what one more word or one word less means – one more lesson, or one lesson less. They are works, and if they are not received by not taking them into account, my 'Fiat' does not draw Me and captivate Me to pronounce more 'Fiats'; and therefore the work will not be complete, and I will wait and repeat my lessons. And if I repeat them it is a sign that you have not taken what I told you into account, and I want nothing to be missing, because everything that I must tell you about my Will has been established. Therefore, be attentive and let Me do what I want.”

After this, I was thinking of what is written at the beginning of this chapter – that is, that one who operates in the Divine Will operates in eternity, one who operates outside of It operates in time. And I thought to myself: ‘And why this great difference?’ And my Highest Love, Jesus, added: “My daughter, it is easy to comprehend it. Suppose you were given a metal of gold, with which, by working it, you would form many beautiful objects of gold. But if instead of gold you were given a metal of copper, of iron, you would not be able to change the copper and the iron into gold metal, therefore you would make objects of copper or of iron. Now, compare the objects of iron with those of gold: what is the difference in their value? Yet, it took you the same amount of time to work them, you made similar objects, but because of the difference in the metal, those of gold surpass in a surprising way, in value, in beauty, in fineness, those of iron. Now, for one who operates, even what is good, with his human will, since he finds himself in time to cross his way, it can be said that everything he does are temporary works, subject to a thousand miseries. They will always be human works of minimum value, because they lack the golden thread of light of my Will. On the other hand, one who operates in It will have the golden thread in his power; not only this, but he will have his Creator operating in his act; he will have, not time, but eternity in his power. Therefore, because of the mere difference between Divine Will and human will, there is no comparison that can stand between one and the other. The living in my Will is precisely this: my Will holds the prime and operating act in the creature. It acts like a teacher who wants the essay he has assigned to his pupil to be developed. He himself gives him the paper, puts the pen in his hand, places his own hand over the hand of the disciple, and develops the essay, as the hand of the teacher and that of the disciple write together. Now, should it not be said that the teacher was operating, and has placed his own science, his own beautiful handwriting into that essay, in such a way that no one will be able to find a shadow of defect? However, the pupil has not moved, he has undergone the work of the teacher, he has let his hand be guided with no resistance; on the contrary, he was happy in seeing the beautiful ideas, the precious concepts, into which he felt himself being enraptured. Now, should it not be said that the fortunate disciple possesses the value, the merit, of the work of his teacher? The same happens to one who lives in my Will: the creature must undergo the act that my Volition wants to do, she must not put herself aside; and my Will must place what is needed and befitting to Its divine acts; and Our goodness is so great that We make her the possessor of Our own acts. On the other hand, to one who does not live in Our Will would happen as when the teacher assigns the essay to his disciple, but does not make himself the actor of the essay of the disciple – he leaves it up to his freedom, in a way that he could make some mistakes, and he does it according to his small capacity, because he does not feel, over and within himself, either the capacity or the operating act of his teacher. And the essay is nothing other than Our grace, which never leaves the creature, even in the little good that she does; and according to the dispositions of the creature, it offers itself either as operating act or as assisting act, because there is no good that is done which is not helped and sustained by divine grace.”

Industries and traffics of Jesus in the Sacrament. What forms His paradise, and what forms His purgatory.

I was feeling all sunken in my nothingness, and feeling without my most sweet Jesus, I felt my nothingness emptied of its life, without support and without strength; and since I had received Holy Communion, I felt that I had nothing to offer to Jesus, and I felt oppressed and embittered. And He, compassionating me, told me: “My daughter, courage, your nothingness with your Jesus is everything, and you can give me everything. In fact, you must know that when you receive Me in the Sacrament I do not descend alone, but I descend with all my works, and just as I make you the owner of my Sacramental Life, so do I make you the owner of all my works. Therefore, if you want, you have much to give Me, because you have my works in your power; more so, since my Sacramental Life which you receive in the Holy Host is surrounded by the acts that my Humanity did for Me when I received Myself in instituting the Most Holy Sacrament; It is surrounded by the acts that my Celestial Mama did for Me when She received Me in the Sacrament; It is surrounded by all the acts of those who live of my Will – because these acts are inseparable from Me, and remain incorporated with Me as part of my own Life. So, you can give Me everything, because they serve to cover your misery, to make up for your love, almost so as not to make you feel ashamed that, as I come into you, you would have nothing to give Me. Even more, as you make use of them in order to give them to Me and be able to please Me and love Me by means of these acts, they bilocate and become your acts and my acts, acts of the Sovereign Queen, and acts of the souls who live of my Will, in such a way that, instead of having one, I have two, and my Sacramental Life remains surrounded by double acts, by double love, by greater glory. These are my traffics that I do when I communicate Myself to souls: I give of my own in order to get twice as much from them, and so I indurate Myself to put into traffic my very Sacramental Life, so as to receive the requital of It. But, alas! how many do not make use of It, and they remain as having nothing, nor do they know what to give Me; and I remain without a new cortege, starved of their acts, and with the sorrow of not even being able to indurate Myself in my loving traffics. You will not do this to Me, because if I come, it is not just to come, but also because I want to give Myself and receive as much as the creature can give. This forms my satisfaction, my contentment and my paradise in the Most Holy Sacrament. To give Myself and receive nothing from them forms my purgatory in my little prison of the Sacramental Host – a purgatory that human ingratitude forms for Me. Therefore, be attentive, and with courage, and without any reservation, give Me from my own, and all of yourself to Me, that I may be able to say: ‘I gave everything to her, and she gave everything to Me.’ In this way you will form my contentment and my traffic of love”

After this, I was doing my round in the acts of the Divine Will, and it seemed to me that all created things were inviting me, one after the other, so as to make themselves known as works of the Omnipotent Fiat, in which It awaited my little requital of love. And, though little, It wanted it, It demanded it, in order to obtain Its purpose for having issued the whole Creation. And while I was trying to follow the Divine Will, my lovable Jesus, repeating His short little visit, told me: “Blessed daughter of mine, everything that Our Paternal Goodness operated in Creation and Redemption has not yet received the requital of the creature; and the reason is because Our purpose, for which Creation was created, was that man would fulfill Our Will in everything. That same Will operating in Creation was to obtain Its continuous operating act in the creature, in such a way that the echo of one was to form the same echo in the other, so as to make them one. But my operating virtue of my Will remains alone with all Its magnificence, power, wisdom and beauty; It remains in the celestial spheres, but in man It is repressed. And because he does not have my Will operating in him, he has no sense of hearing to listen to the echo of Its operative virtue in Creation. Therefore, not having obtained the purpose, Our works are without requital. The purpose forms the requital of any work, little or great, that one may do; and you must be convinced that no one, both in the divine order and in the human, operates without a purpose, and to obtain its requital. The purpose can be called the beginning and the life of a work; the requital, the completion. Oh! how many works would have no beginning if there were no purpose, and would be left half-done if the certainty of the requital were not there. The requital makes one bear unheard-of sacrifices, and gives excessive heroism to God and to creatures.

Now, if my Divine Will does not form Its Kingdom in souls, and they do not give It the freedom to dominate them with Its creative and operative virtue, a true requital will not be given to Us, and therefore We will always be in waiting, and will see Our most beautiful works as though by half and without the fulfillment of Our purpose. So, the most beautiful thing, the most important act is missing, as the purpose for which all things were created is missing. See, then, how necessary it is for the Kingdom of my Divine Will to come; more so since, not having received the true requital, Our creative work has remained as though suspended, and has not been able to proceed forward in the work of Creation. In fact, it is established that from the external Creation that they¹⁰⁶ possess, was to proceed the internal Creation in the depth of souls; and this could be done if my Will had the first place, the freedom to operate in the human will. But, not having it, It cannot go forward in Its creative work, It remains hampered, unable to create in her the new heavens, stars, suns and so forth, to requite Itself for those It gave to her in the creation of all things. And not being able to go forward in Our works, not being able to continue what We have established to do in the creatures by virtue of Our Will - how can We requite Ourselves if We have not yet finished doing what We want, and have not fulfilled the work of Creation that was started many centuries ago? In fact, the work of Creation must comprise, all together, what my Fiat was to do in all creatures, to be able to be called a fulfilled work of Ours. And if Our Volition has not yet done everything It wants to do, how can It say that I have accomplished my work, let alone requite Itself for everything It has done? So, when We obtain the purpose that the creature do Our Will in everything and live in It, and when she has, as her purpose, that of living of Our Will and of letting It reign so as to give the field to the magnificence of Its works – then, once the purpose of one is the purpose of the other, only then will We be able to receive the true requital of everything We have done for love of creatures. Therefore, be attentive, and always forward in my Will.”

God placed happiness in His works to render the creature happy. Each act done in the Divine Will is a work, a step, a love that God gives to the creature.

I am always back to the start in going around in the acts of the Divine Will; and while I seem to have gone around within Its works, and comprehended all the beauty, the sanctity, the infinite goods that they contain, in going around again I feel I am illiterate, a little ignorant one, and I see that there is still much left to comprehend and to take and to learn from the works of the Supreme Will. But while my little intelligence remained as though enraptured in looking at the magnificence of Its works, my Celestial King, Jesus, visiting my poor soul, told me: “Blessed daughter of mine, all my works contain infinite value and goods. This is why, while it seems to you that you have comprehended everything, as you return again into the midst of Our works, you find that very much is left to you to comprehend; and this happens because the infinite cannot be enclosed in the finite – at the most it can be filled, but as for enclosing the whole of the infinite, it will be impossible for it. And since your intelligence is finite, it exhausts before the infinite, it gets filled, and seems to have comprehended everything; but it is not true – it is, rather, that having filled itself, it has no place where to put other divine cognitions. But then, by masticating them and thinking them over, it forms the new little place in its intelligence; and finding itself again in the midst of Our works, it finds new things to take and to learn. Here, then, the reason why you always feel illiterate every time you find yourself before the magnificence of Our divine works.

You must know that both in the works of Creation and in those of Redemption, We placed, in each of them, the fullness of happiness, of light, of grace, of goodness, and so forth, of all the divine qualities; and all these prerogatives, in act of pouring themselves upon the creature, to render her happy. The happiness of Our works, like celestial air, carries the fragrance, the divine embalming, to whomever draws near them to comprehend them; and overflowing out of themselves, they communicate the infinite goods that they possess. By means of Our works, We placed the creatures under the rain of Our happiness, to render them happy; but because they do not draw near in order to comprehend them, they are unhappy and feel the poisonous air of their human will. No one operates with the purpose of becoming unhappy or of being bearer of unhappiness and of not drawing the profit, the good, of one’s work. Much less so does the Supreme Being, who did everything in order to form the staircase of happiness for the creature. Now, Our only contentment is to see the creature in the midst of Our works, to unify herself with them, enjoy them and comprehend them, and to form for herself the norm of how she must operate in her works. And since Our Will knows not how to do dissimilar works, It repeats in the creature the facsimile of Our works.”

After this, I continued to feel all immersed in the Divine Will, and my always lovable Jesus added: “My daughter, do not be surprised – everything is possible in my Will. With It the creature holds everything in her power, and can do anything; even more, she feels Its empire over her being, and not one act comes out of her if it is not invested by a divine act, power and strength. What is human dies in Our Will, but – happy and glorious death – it dies in order to rise again with the life of the acts of a divine power, and of a Will that is not its own. And the empire she¹⁰⁷ feels over herself is so great, that if it were given to her to do other things of her own will, even holy and good, she would never do them - she would content herself with remaining without doing anything even for centuries, rather than doing a single act upon which she does not feel the empire of the operating act of my Will. In fact, in It the creature comprehends with clarity what even just one act of my Will operating in her act means, such that, compared to a thousand acts of hers without the divine act, these would be almost nothing.

You must know that, as the creature enters into Our Will, Our goodness is so great, and We delight so much in keeping her with Us, that We give her Our works, Our steps, Our love, as much as it is possible for a creature. So, each time she does an act in the Divine Will, she acquires now one step of Ours, now one work, now she takes Our love, Our goodness, in her power; and, all happy, she says to Us: ‘In your Will I have your love in my power, therefore I can love You very much. My love is not dissimilar to Yours, therefore I can love You as much as You love Yourselves. I have your works in my power to glorify You, and your steps in mine to tread the same way that You tread in search of all creatures, to lead them all before your adorable Majesty.’ And since Our Supreme Being, with Its immensity, is present everywhere, and therefore is life of each work and step of each foot, and heartbeat of each heart, having given to her from Our own, We feel the creature who lives in Our Will walking together with Us in the steps of all, in the works of each one; and she loves Us in the beating of each heart. And when she sees that the creatures offend Us - ah! as Our faithful one, she would want to hide Us within her littleness, and lay down her life, which is also Ours, for Our defense. Oh! how not to love this creature? In Our Will there are unheard-of prodigies, and since It is not known, it is no wonder that they do not believe in what I tell you. But, you - do not stop, follow Its light, and let yourself be Its happy prey.”

The human will is like paper on which the divine image is coined, and God places on it the value of the number that He wants. Example. God, enclosed in the act of the creature.

I am always prey to the Divine Fiat; my littleness does not tire of wandering around It and within It, with the sure hope of being consumed in Its light, and with the appetite of penetrating ever more into Its knowledges, to be able to savor new divine tastes. In fact, each additional knowledge is one more taste that one receives, and it whets one’s appetite for wanting to taste more. At times one feels an insatiable hunger that is never satiated, and one would want to be always with the mouth open to receive this celestial nourishment. So, my mind was crowded with many things that regarded the Divine Will, so much so, that if I wanted to write everything, I don’t know where I would go to get the paper; therefore I limit myself, as much as I can. And since some doubts were crawling within my mind, my Celestial Teacher, Jesus, visiting His little newborn, told me: “Blessed daughter, it is then that an act has more value, when one knows the good that is inside; and the more one knows, the more one acquires, because the creature does that act based on the value that she knows. And Our Paternal Goodness cannot deceive, nor make fun of anyone - if We make known that there is that value in that act, it is because We want to give the value manifested by Us; and the sure sign is the very knowledge which, of its own, already possesses that value. We act like a king who takes a paper that has no value and puts on it, now ‘one hundred’, now ‘one thousand’, now ‘one million’.... The paper has the same quality, the same shape, but according to the number, so it possesses its value. Therefore, what gives the value to the paper is the number and the image of the king, who makes use of it as the currency of the kingdom.

Now, so We do: the paper is the act of the creature, the knowledge is Our divine image, the value is the number that We place on it. So, what is the wonder if We say that one act alone in Our Will surpasses in value all acts together of all other creatures, done outside of It? It is Our image that is coined in the human act, as if on paper, and the value of Our knowledge that puts the number on it. Are We not entitled to put the number that We want on the paper of the human will? If the king is entitled to put the number he wants over a most wretched paper, more so are We, to form the currency that must circulate in Our azure Fatherland. Moreover, Our Will was a free gift that We gave to man - he paid Us nothing in order to have it, nor did he have sufficient monies or means to be able to pay Us, other than the most wretched paper of his human will which, to his misfortune, he did not even want to lend to Us in order to keep Our great gift. And besides, We were his most tender and most loving Father, and between Father and children no accounts are kept, because it is known that the Father must give to the children, and they are obliged by duty of justice to love and keep with esteem what the Father gives them. Here, then, the necessity of the knowledges on the Divine Will; and We give them bit by bit, so that the creature may appreciate this gift so great, which We freely want to give her. Knowledge generates the appetite, the desire to know more, and the human will is disposed little by little to undergo the transformation, the unification of the Divine Will; and We, without keeping accounts, or paying attention to whether she can pay Us or not, will place Our image and the incalculable number of a divine value, and will be content to see Our children rich and happy, of Our own divine happiness and wealth.”

In addition to this, my most sweet One added: “My daughter, you must know that as the creature operates in Our Will she receives the divine fecundity into her act, which forms the divine seed in all of her acts, such that, spreading in the entire soul, it forms the divine seed in the thought, in the word, in everything, in such a way that the sweet enchantment of her Creator can be seen in her little act, happy to give life to the act of the creature with His lovable presence. Oh! if the sweet surprise, the unheard-of prodigy, could be seen by all - the Supreme Being enclosed in the small circle of the human act - they would remain so stupefied, that the entire prodigy of the universe would be an absolute nothing compared to this. Therefore, there is a great difference between one who operates in my Will and one who operates without It. The first one is a spring whose fount can boast of being inexhaustible in its water, and of being able to give water to whomever wants it without ever drying up; the second is a fount that does not spring, and dries up. The first is fecund earth, and its meadows are always flowery; the second is sterile earth that hardly produces a few wild plants. The first has the sun at her disposal, which makes her drink its large gulps of light, of sweetness, of sanctity, of invincible patience, of heroism, of sacrifices; the second has the night that gives her sips to maintain her passions, to debilitate her and make her lose the sight of Heaven. The difference between one and the other is great; therefore be attentive, and let my Divine Will consume you and transform you completely into Its light.”

Value of an act done in the Divine Will. How the creature becomes powerful over all, and is the only all-doer who moves everything to make her Creator loved.

My abandonment in the Fiat continues. Its enrapturing force sweetly enraptures, invests and absorbs, and my little soul feels so very small - just an atom, and yet it feels Its immensity, which it cannot enclose within its small circle. However, in spite of my littleness, it¹⁰⁸ does not want to remain idle, it wants to love, bless, glorify, thank the One who loves it so much, and who gave to it His very Divine Will at its disposal. But while my mind was wandering in It, my Celestial Sovereign Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: “My daughter, you cannot comprehend all the value that an act done in my Divine Will contains. Its value, its greatness, is such that the very creature who has done it cannot enclose it all within herself. She fills herself, and unable to contain it, it overflows outside and runs in the same immensity of the Eternal Fiat; and everything It envelops and encloses within Its immensity repeats the same act of the creature. So, if you love, adore, bless Me, thank Me, you give to all created things an extensive field to repeat your act, in such a way that Heaven and earth, sun and wind, seas and rivers, plants and flowers - all in chorus - say: ‘We love You, we adore You, We pray You...’ and so forth. It is like an echo that resounds in everything and in everyone, and with its investing force, which my Will possesses, it absorbs all things and makes them undergo the same act that the creature has done in my Will. And - oh! what a sweet surprise, what marvelous enchantment: an act rules over everything and makes all repeat its act. This small atom that enters into my Will becomes powerful over all, and sweetly feeds everyone its same act, to make its Creator loved.

Therefore, Our Supreme Being feels that the creature who enters into Our Will moves everything, makes her voice flow in all things, and not wanting to be alone, she invests, rules, and makes all things that are invested by the Fiat say what she wants. Does she want to love? She makes all things say ‘love’. Does she want to adore, bless? All, then, offer themselves to adore and to bless. In sum, she is the commandant over all Creation, and We let her do. It is Our own Will that wants her to do that - and Its own power, Its own empire with which she has been invested. And We delight so much in seeing the littleness of the creature flowing within Our immensity; and We feel the company of the creature, because to keep Us company means to recognize Us as already present with her; to recognize the act that she does, its value, so that she can tell Us how much she loves Us, because the more she knows that her act is great, the more she gives Us; and the more We feel loved, the more We love her. So, she is the only one who comes from the earth to break Our solitude; she is the only all-doer who wants to move all things in order to make Us loved, blessed, thanked. It is true that the other creatures are there in Our Divine Will, but not knowing that We are with them, or for Who it is that they operate, or the value of their works, they live like strangers and as though apart from Us. And this is a great sorrow for Us - to have children, to keep them in Our Home, that is, in Our Will, as if We did not have them, and without their recognizing the One who gives them life and loves them so much. This does not happen for one who already knows that she lives in Our Will - we know each other, we live like children and Father; even more, she lives in Us and We in her, and we form one single Will.”

How good makes glory arise by nature, and makes itself the narrator of the one who did it. How in each ‘I love You’ there is a triumph of Jesus, and how, in order to be loved, He hiddenly puts His Love in it.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues, though under the nightmare of the repeated privations on my beloved Jesus; although, the light of the Eternal Fiat never leaves me, Its waves of light invest me inside and out, and make themselves heartbeat, breath, motion, nourishment of my little soul. Ah! if it wasn’t for the Divine Will which, as life, takes the place of everything, and even of Jesus Himself, within one blow my life would end, and that same light would take me to Heaven. But, alas! I was saying to myself: ‘How long my exile is - what is the good that I do? And even if I did it, how great at all is the good that I could possibly do?’ But while I was thinking of this, my dear Life, sweet Jesus, repeating His short little visit, told me: “My daughter, courage, my Will is consuming you within Its light, to form in you Its divine copy; and Its jealousy is so great, that It does not cease for one instant to send you light, so as to give you no time to do your will, but always Mine. And besides, how great at all is the good? Indeed, everything is in the operating good. It is the substance of sanctity, and the sun that shines by means of its holy words, works and steps in the midst of creatures, such that, while it gives light to itself and warms it, it gives light and warms whomever is around it. Good produces everlasting glory, both on earth and in Heaven. Who can ever take away the glory of the good that one has done? No one - neither God, nor creatures. Even more, in the good act, from within it, as though by nature, arises the glory which that same act contains, so much so, that many times creatures are forgotten, but the good that was done remains as life in their midst, and it is not easy to forget it. Therefore, each good done sings the glory and makes itself the narrator of the one who did it. So, if you did even just one good act in remaining alive, all eternity would sing to you a greater glory.”

Then, I was continuing my round in the Divine Volition; according to my usual way I was animating all created things with my little ‘I love You’, and I wanted to leave it impressed in all things, so that it would make itself voice and would ask for the Kingdom of the Divine Will upon earth. And blessed Jesus, surprising me again, added: “My little daughter of my Will, you must know that my yearning, my delirium for wanting to love and be loved by creatures is so great, that, hiddenly, without letting Myself be noticed, I put a dose of my Love in the depth of their souls. According to their dispositions, so do I add the dose; and feeling my Love within them, they tell me with the heart: ‘I love You, I love You.’ In feeling Myself loved, I triumph in the love of the creature. So, in each ‘I love You’ of hers, it is a triumph that I make; and although I Myself, hiddenly, put it there, I disregard the fact that it was an artifice of mine in order to make Myself loved; but rather, I look at the fact that it has passed through her channel - that is, through her will, through her voice - and I feel my gaze wounded as though by love that comes to Me from the creature. So, each ‘I love You’ of yours is one more triumph that you make your Jesus have; and as you try to cover Heaven and earth, things animate and inanimate, with your 'I love You', I look at everything as strewn with the beauty of the love of the creature and, remaining enraptured, I say with all the emphasis of my Love: 'Ah yes! How happy I am - I am loved at last; and while I triumph in her love, she triumphs in Mine'."

Having said this, He remained silent, and the ardor of His Love was so great, that as though fainting, He looked for rest in my arms. And then, as though reinvigorated, He repeated with emphasis yet stronger: "Dearest daughter of mine, you must know that what I want, and interests Me the most, is that I want to make known that I love the creature; I want to say at the ear of each heart: 'Child, I love you'. And I would be content if I heard him answer to Me with my own refrain: 'Jesus, I love You'. I feel the irresistible need to love and to be loved. Oh! how many times I remain suffocated in my Love, because while I love, not feeling that they love Me, my Love finds no outlet, and I remain drowned in my own Love. Here is why, then, I love so much your 'I love You' - as you pronounce it, it takes the form of a little refreshing flame which, coming into my great fire of love, brings Me refreshment; and spreading like beneficial dew over the flames that burn Me, it brings calm to my Love, to my deliriums, to my loving yearnings, because if I am loved, I can give my own, and as I am able to give my own, my Love pours Itself out. My daughter, Heaven and earth are filled and swollen with my Love; there is not one point in which my Love does not feel the need to overflow, so as to unswell and run - and run in search of hearts, to tell them its little word: 'Child, I love you, I love you very much. And you - tell Me that you love Me.' And It is all ears to hear whether the creature says to It that she loves It. If this is affirmed to It, It feels Its Love reassured in her, and takes Its sweet rest in her. But if it is not affirmed to It, It runs, It goes around Heaven and earth, nor does It stop if It does not find someone who tells It that he loves It. Now, each 'I love You' of the creature is an outpouring for my Love, and entering into It, it becomes incorporated in my own Love, and has the virtue of cutting through It, while It remains whole as It is; and forming as though fissures, it forms the ways in order to let my Love pour Itself out. However, only then is this love pure, when it is animated by my Will."

Do you see, then, what the long singsong of your 'I love You' is? It is many outpourings that you give to your Jesus; and they call me to rest in your soul. Therefore, I want you to always tell Me your 'I love You' - I want to see it in all the things I have done for you. I want to hear it always - always; and when you don't say it to Me, sighing, I say: 'Alas! not even the little daughter of my Will gives Me the continuous outpouring of being able to pour Myself out in her little love', and I remain all afflicted, and I await your little refrain: 'I love You, I love You'. Love Me, my daughter, love Me, have pity on my wounded Heart that yearns, longs, raves - and, yearning, I ask you for love, and, longing, I embrace you, I clasp you so very tightly to my Heart to let you feel how I burn with love, so that, feeling my flames, you may be moved to pity for Me, and love Me. O please! make Me content - love Me. When I am not loved I feel misfortunate in my love, and therefore I come to deliriums; and when a pitying heart is moved to pity for Me and loves Me, I feel my misfortune being changed into happiness. And then, each 'I love You' of yours is nothing other than a little piece of wood that you cast into the immense ocean of my Love, by which, as it converts into a little flame, you increase by one more degree of love for your passionate Jesus."

Exchange of gifts of wills between God and the soul. Continuous re-birth in the divine life. Bond of marriage; feast of all. How the Divine Will keeps the creature under siege.

I feel like a little girl in the arms of the Divine Will. Oh! how true it seems to me that I am the little newborn, such that, while I am about to be born, by another of Its acts of Divine Will that pours upon me, or another of Its knowledges that It manifests to me, I am reborn again in that act and in that knowledge as though to a new life in Its Divine Will, which, before then, I did not have in my power, nor did I even know it. And in the act of receiving it¹⁰⁹, I feel reborn again; but while I am being reborn, It gives me yet another of Its acts, It invests me with another of Its knowledges, and I am always in act of being reborn. Oh! power of the Supreme Fiat - You can never leave the creature. Even more, it seems to me that You put me into the maze of your immense light, in act of giving me always new life, and I feel the need to receive from you your continuous life, and therefore remain lost in You. But, happy loss - because it is not a loss, but a conquest of new divine life that the creature makes.

But while my mind was wandering in the Divine Fiat, my Celestial Teacher, visiting His little newborn, all goodness, told me: "My little daughter, my love is so great, that I am always in act of giving the gift of my Will in all the acts that the creature does, in order to receive the gift of her own. I am the first to give her the gift of Mine, and I remain on the look-out to see when the creature is about to do an act, so as to give her the gift of my Will in her act, so that, in view of the great gift that I give her, she may give Me the little gift of her will.

Now, with this gift of mine - my Will that I keep giving in all the acts of the creature - she receives a new act of divine life, and I make her reborn in that new act that I give her, and she feels the new divine life that she acquires. And as she is about to be formed in that divine life, I do not wait, but immediately I give her, again, the gift of my Will; and so I keep alternating the life of the creature, by giving my gift and by wanting to receive her own, that she may feel the growth and the continuous re-birth of her life in the divine life. Now, this gift that I give her is so great, that as I am about to give it, the Heavens are stupefied and, reverent, they lower themselves to adore a gift so great, and they extol their Creator for such great liberality; and they all come to attention to be spectators of how this gift unfolds in the act of the creature. And when they see the new re-birth that she has in the divine life, they tremble in seeing the great portent - her being reborn to new divine life for as many times as she is given this gift of my Will. And - oh! how they thank Me for such great goodness of mine, because all feel happier in seeing this gift of my Will operating in the act of the creature. It can be said that in this exchange of wills, in these reciprocal gifts on both sides, a marriage takes place between the soul and God - a repeated marriage, always new. And when there is a marriage all make feast to the new spouses, and sing the praises of their Creator, because with this gift of my Fiat it is not just the gift that I give, but together with the gift I give my Life, which forms the bond of inseparability, in which lies the substance of the true marriage between the human and the Divine. And - oh! the highest ingratitude of one who does not receive the gift of my Will in her act, especially in seeing my cares that I want to give it. I plead, I supplicate, for them to receive it, and many times I indurate Myself in order to procure new incidents, unexpected circumstances, so as to have new occasions to be able to give more often my gift of the Fiat. And when I see that they do not accept it, I feel my industries of love changed into sorrow, and I could say that the Heavens cry together with Me, because when this gift of my Will acts in the act of the creature, the Heavens are engaged together with It, and all feel, either the feast if it is accepted, or the sorrow if it is rejected. Therefore, be attentive, I want nothing other - in your little acts, in everything you do, if you pray, if you suffer, if you work, in everything - than the continuous exchange, your taking the gift of my Will and giving Me your own. Oh! how happy you will make Me - I will be all eyes over your act, that it may have all the requisites of an act worthy of my Divine Will."

Then, I was feeling all invested with Divine Volition. I felt It palpating in my little soul; Its celestial and balsamic air formed Heaven in me, and I experienced the happiness of up there. Or rather, I felt happier than the celestial citizens, because they do not have a gift of act of Divine Will as conquest, as new re-birth in God, but have the gift of It only for being happy and beatified - but not as conquest. I, on the other hand, can make new conquests and can enclose in my act a Divine Will operating. But while my mind was making nonsense, sweet Jesus, surprising me, added: "Blessed daughter, I want to tell you the reason why I want the creature to receive the gift of my Will in all her acts, and to give me her own, time after time: because if in one act there is this exchange and in another act there isn't, in the act where there is no exchange a void is formed in the soul, and this void is filled with miseries, with weaknesses, with passions. With this, the divine life remains broken and as though detached within her, therefore the true re-births cannot take place, because the nourishment, the raw material of the continuous act of my Fiat that forms these new re-births in God, would be missing. More so, since It alone possesses and forms the continuous act, therefore without Its continuous act it is impossible to receive such great gifts and goods as to astonish Heaven and earth.”

On hearing this, I said: ‘Tell me, my Love, why do you care so much about wanting the will of the creature and wanting to give Your own?’ And Jesus: “Do you want to know why? Because by taking her will I place the creature in safety, and by giving her my own I take her from all sides and I place my Life in safety within her. And since there is not one thing or person with which my Divine Will does not have Its bonds of dominion and of preservation, I feel the fortunate creature together with Me in everything and in everyone; and then can I say, with facts, not with words: ‘What is mine is yours - I have done everything for you.’ With this, my purpose is realized; my work, created with so much love - which is the creature - no longer worries Me, nor is there any danger any more, because my Divine Will keeps her under siege within Its immense boundaries. So, there is nothing left but to enjoy her and to make each other happy, with a happiness never interrupted on both sides. This is why until I see the creature endowed with the gift of my Fiat, I give Myself no peace, I am constantly on guard, because I know that her will can betray her and Me, therefore I have to use stratagems, loving industries, I have to work constantly - for Me there is no rest. But when her will is in my power, and Mine in her power, I rest over her fortune - there is no more danger. And if I want the continuous exchange between Me and her, it is so as to have the occasion to interact, to speak and sweetly spend time together in conversation; and since I want to always give her of my own, I use the pretext of wanting hers in exchange, in order to give her my Will again. But hers was already mine, and Mine was already hers; only, by giving It again, I increase new divine life and more surprising graces. Therefore, always in my will do I want you, and in this way we will be safe - you, to be always with Me, and I with you.”

The birth of the little Infant Jesus was universal; He was born in everything and in everyone. How, in order to keep us safe, He came to cover us with the garment of His Humanity. Example of the sun.

My abandonment in the Fiat continues. Today, on the day of Holy Christmas, I spent the whole night without seeing my Celestial Baby, and I felt a pang in my heart without the One who forms my life and my all. Ah! to live without Him is like living as if one had no life - tortured, without strength, without supports, which forms the most terrible of deaths for my poor and little soul. And amid the anxieties and the fear, I prayed the Supreme Volition to unveil to me the One who loved me and who formed my hard martyrdom. Then, while in this state, my mind remained as though captivated by an immense light which filled Heaven and earth; and - oh! marvel, I saw the little Divine Baby reborn in each created thing, in each heart, in everything; the little Infant Jesus, multiplied, bilocated, reborn in the infinite manner, in everything and in each one. So, all had the good of feeling within them, being born, the Celestial Baby. Oh! how beautiful it was to see Him, tiny little One, in the sun, in the stars, in all the elements, in all creatures; and all sang His praises and had the great honor, the immense good, of His being reborn in each one, and of possessing, as their own, the sweet pledge of little Baby Jesus.

Then, between amazement and stupefaction, I saw that the One whom I was looking for with so many sighs and anxieties, was born in me also, and I squeezed Him so very tightly in my arms; and He let me do it - even more, He enjoyed my doing that; and, all tenderness, told me: “My daughter, love Me, love Me. I am born to love and to be loved; and to do it as God, my birth is universal. I would not have acted as God had I not been born in a universal manner, in a way that all can say, with facts: 'The Celestial Infant is born for me, He is mine; and this is so true, that I already possess Him.' My love would remain hampered had I not been able to be reborn for all; my power would have been limited, my immensity restricted, if my re-birth were not universal. And this is no wonder: since my Divinity filled Heaven and earth, in the same way, by incorporating Itself into my little Humanity, It multiplied It and bilocated It, in such a way as to make Me be reborn in all and in each one. These are Our divine and infinite ways that We have, such that all must take the good that We do, and be pregnant with Our works. More so since, having descended from Heaven to earth, I wanted to take on human flesh in order to glorify completely the glory of the Celestial Father, to make up for all that man had not done. Here, then, my little Humanity wanted to be reborn also in the created things, because man had not given Us the glory, the requital of the love for Our having created a heaven, a sun and many other things; and my Humanity, being reborn in them, glorified my Celestial Father completely for the whole work of Creation. Man, by rejecting my Divine Will, had rendered himself impotent to everything; and I came to be his Savior, Repairer, Glorifier, Defender, and I covered him inside the garment of my Humanity, to keep him safe, and to answer for him, I Myself, in each thing, before my Celestial Father. My love was so great, that my Divinity, in order to give vent to my love, led Me to be born in each heart and in all things; and this is so true, that the first to recognize Me and sing my praises were the created things, because, feeling my birth in them, they exulted with joy and made feast for Me. But do you know who the ones are who make feast for Me as I am born in their hearts? Those who possess my Divine Will. These immediately perceive that I am born in their hearts, and they make perennial feast for Me; while the others make Me cry, give Me sorrow and, by sin, prepare for Me the knife with which to wound Me, or to kill Me."

After this, I remained all immersed in His love. The moving scene of the birth of the Celestial Baby, so universal and in each one, made me comprehend who knows how many things. But I believe it is better to let them pass in silence, because, incapable of saying them well, I might speak nonsense. Then, to make feast to the Celestial Infant, I abandoned all of myself in the Divine Will; and He, coming back again, was so very graceful, of a beauty so rare, such that no other can be found similar to it. And, all love, enclosing Himself in my heart as the place of His birth, He repeated in me His baby crying, the loving moans, His repeated sobs. Oh! how touching it was to see Him now crying, now sobbing, now wailing. He made His first entrance of re-birth in each one and in everything, with the weapons of His tears, with the stratagems of His sobs, with the pleas of His wailing. By this, He rendered Himself captivating, and by dint of captivating with the strength of a God that He possessed, He entered into the hearts to form His new re-birth. Oh! Heavens - bow down and, together with me, love and adore the Celestial Infant.

But while my mind was wandering in a mystery so great, the sweet little Baby, amid tears and sobs, mixed with a celestial attitude of smile, added: "Blessed daughter, not only was my birth universal - since, as God, I could not do otherwise - but I found Myself in the condition of the sun, such that, whether they want it or not, all created things, the whole Creation and all creatures must receive its light, its heat. From the height where it descends with its empire of light and with its supremacy, which it holds over everyone and over everything, in its muteness, yet more loudly than if it were speaking, the sun seems to say: 'Either you receive me with love, or I will invest you with the rights that I possess to give you light. And if you do not want to receive me, I will surround you from all sides, in such a way that you will not be able to escape my light, and I will have the great glory that I have given my light to all.' The sun, symbol of my birth, since it too is reborn every day for everything and for each one; and I, not only am I reborn in a universal way, but, while being reborn, I make an invasion - not only am I reborn in the heart, but I invade the mind with my thoughts, the eyes with my tears, the voice with my wailing, in such a way as to make the universal invasion of all creatures. I take her from all sides, that she may not be able to escape Me. If they receive Me with love, my life is not only reborn in them, but grows in a surprising way; but if they do not receive Me with love, I am reborn in them with my rights of God that I possess, but I do not grow in them, I remain small and lonely, and I stay there in reserve, waiting that, who knows, with my wailing and tears, they might be induced to love Me. And if I do not succeed, my life changes into justice for them; and - oh! how tortured is my little Heart in seeing my birth, all love, changed into justice for the poor creature. So, since I am born in you, give Me the good of letting Me grow; in this way you will change my tears and my wailing into joys.”

With one who operates in the Divine Will, God hides within the creature with all His acts. Gratitude He feels toward those who let Him produce His life. Rights on both sides. The little vessel.

I was doing my round in the Creation, to follow the acts that the Divine Will had done in It, and it seemed to me that each created thing was letting me in, to receive my act and place it as cortege and requital to the Divine Will which they possessed as actor and preserver of created things. Now, while I was doing this, the Celestial Little Baby made me His short little visit, and told me: “My daughter, one who does the Divine Will, in doing her acts, pours herself into It; there is not one particle of her being which does not take its place in the Supreme Volition. And then, everything that God created, everything He has done and will do, being all enclosed in my Volition, pours itself completely as one single act over the act of the creature, in such a way that her act remains filled, embellished, surrounded with everything that my Will has done and will do; so much so, that all the divine acts appear, impressed, fused, circumfused, in the act of the creature. When my Will operates, be it in Our Divinity or in the human act, It cannot, nor does It want to detach any of Its acts from another, but unites them all together and forms the new act that It wants to do. It can be said that the whole of Our Divine Being with all Our acts pours over the creature, We hide within her, We wall Ourselves up, while We remain as We are, in Our interminable immensity and power. However, Our happiness is doubled on the part of the creature, because she has given Us the occasion to bilocate Our life together with Our acts, and We receive the glory, the honor, the love of Our own life and of all Our acts on the part of the one who lets herself be possessed by Our Will. It happens to Us as to the sun which, when it gives itself to the earth from the height of its sphere, seems to only give light. But it is not true - together with its light it gives everything it possesses; and this is so true, that one can see the earth blooming with many varieties of colors, varieties of sweetnesses, of flavors. Who gave so much beauty, so many substances, so many colors? The light only? Ah, no! It is because the light gave the substances, the properties, which the light possesses. It can be said that the earth is rich, embellished by the properties that the sun possesses; but while the sun gives, it loses nothing of what it possesses. Oh! if the sun had reason, how much happier, more glorified, it would feel because of the great good it does to the earth. To reproduce Our life, Our acts, in Our beloved creature, is happiness for Us; and We feel as though grateful toward her, because she has given Us the field to make use of Our communicative power, of reproducing Ourselves in her.”

Then, in hearing this, I thought to myself: ‘And what if there were sin and passions - how can the creature receive this great good?’ And Jesus added: “Blessed daughter, when the soul places herself at the mercy of my Will, my Will has the virtue of making evil lose life. There is no sin or passions which do not feel themselves being given death, more than by a deadly sword - even more, they die of their own; as my Will reigns in the soul, so do they feel themselves lose life. My Will is to evil like frost to the plants, which withers them, dries them and makes them die. It is like light to darkness, such that, as the light appears, darkness disappears and dies; even more, one does not even know where it went to. My Will is like heat to cold: the cold dies under the virtue of the heat. If the frost, the light, the heat, have the virtue of making plants, darkness and cold die, much more does my Divine Will have the virtue of making all evils together die; at most, if the soul did not let herself be dominated always by my Will, and there where It does not always reign, It cannot communicate all the goods and convert the whole entirety of the creature into divine life. And wherever the divine life is missing, evil arises, and it can happen as to the plants, if the strength of the frost withdraws: the plants, though with difficulty, begin to turn green again. If the light withdraws, darkness rises again; and if the heat withdraws, the cold acquires its life again. Here, then, the great necessity to always, always do my Will and to live in It, if you want to banish all evils and eradicate even the roots of passions. More so, since my Divine Will wants to always give to the creature; but in order to give, It remains on the lookout to see how much she operates in Its Will, because for each act she does in It, she acquires a divine right. So, as many acts as she does, so many rights does she acquire in the sea of my Fiat; and my Will acquires as many rights over the creature. These rights on both sides render God and the poor creature the masters. And my Will, bilocated and enclosed in the soul, for as much as she is capable of enclosing, wanting to always give, takes her to navigate the immense sea of Its Volition which reigns in God Himself; and rendering her more capable, It takes from Its own sea, and expands the little sea of Its Volition present in the depth of the soul. It can be said that It makes of her Its little vessel, to go sailing in Its immense sea of Its Volition; and insofar as she disposes herself and operates, so does she enclose new doses of Divine Will. Therefore, always in It do I want you; in this way you will give Me the right to be able to always give you - and you, to always receive.”

The page of life. The Creation, celestial page. The ‘I love You’, punctuation of these pages. The Divine Author and Writer.

I was going around through the whole Creation, according to my usual way, to encounter the Divine Will dominating in It, and requite It with my love for Its great love for me in creating so many things for love of me; and it seemed to me that each created thing was there in waiting, to receive the seal of my ‘I love You’. This was a right, a tribute, a little sign that they demanded from the earth for that Divine Will which had given so much to all creatures, and which was for them actor and preserver. But while I was doing this, it seemed that my sweet Jesus, with His own hands, would take my ‘I love You’ and would place it as a seal upon those created things to which I was directing it; and, setting them aside, He would wait for me to continue the crafting of the ‘I love You’ for all other created things. And I, amazed in seeing the interest of Jesus, His waiting, thought to myself: ‘But, how great at all is my little ‘I love You’, as to reach the point of forming the occupation and the interest of Jesus?’ And He, pausing in order to speak to me, told me: “My blessed daughter, do you know what your ‘I love You’ is? It is like the punctuation to a text. A text without punctuation looks like a mess, without the right ideas, without formed expressions, in a way that one who reads it, not finding the true meaning, can get the ideas he wants, beautiful or ugly, according to his own liking. So, if the punctuation is missing, it can be called a script without true value, and it tells in clear notes of the ignorance and the little value of the one who wrote it. Yet, how great at all is a period¹¹⁰, a comma, a question mark, and all the rest of the punctuation? It can be called nothing compared to the work of the developing of a text. Such is your ‘I love You’ - it is the punctuation on the text of your life, of your words, works, steps, and even of your heart. The punctuation of your ‘I love You’ puts order in all your acts, puts the right ideas, renders the most beautiful expressions, and makes you know the One because of whose love was the page and the text of your life formed.

But this is nothing yet. This period, this little comma of your ‘I love You’, rises high and punctuates Our divine page, Our celestial characters of all Creation. What is the whole Creation if not Our divine page, placed outside of Us, and Our celestial characters, impressed on the whole page of Creation, punctuated with such order and harmony, with the rightest ideas, with the most beautiful and moving expressions, made with such value of art, which no author can imitate. Now, your ‘I love You’ unites to the divine punctuation, and punctuating along, it comes to know the value of Our characters, it learns how to read Our page, it comprehends with the right ideas how much We have done for love of it, and receives the most beautiful and moving expressions of its Creator; and it give Us the little tribute, it pays Us the little fee which, with love of justice, We expect of the creature. Not only this; since by its own nature the 'I love You' has the virtue of converting into light, I, with all love, take these periods and commas of your 'I love You', and place your little light upon Our divine punctuation; and looking at the whole Creation, I feel such squeezes of love, for I see the punctuation of the little daughter of my Will united to Our celestial punctuation.

But, tell Me, my daughter, why do you say to Me 'I love You' and want to invest all created things and even my acts with your 'I love You'?" And I: 'Because I love You, and I want to be loved by You.' And He: "So, it is because you love Me that you say to Me 'I love You'. And is this not the greatest of my contentments, my sighs, my yearnings, my deliriums - to be loved by the creature? Now, know that at each 'I love You' of yours, I whisper to the ear of your heart: 'I love you', and I place my celestial punctuation on the page and characters of your life. Aren't you happy?" And I: 'My Love, it is not enough for me, no - only your punctuation; I am not content. My mere punctuation may be enough for you, because, being little and good at nothing, I can do nothing else. But You, who can do everything - in order to be content I want You Yourself to form for me the page and the characters of my life.' And Jesus: 'Yes, yes, I will make you content; and I could tell you that I am doing it.

Now, know that in order to have a written page it takes paper, ink and pen - all things of raw materials in order to form a written page. If one of them is missing, the script cannot have life. Now, the paper is my Divine Will which, as the foundation of everything, must form the page of life. See, I can say that my Will laid Itself as the foundation of all Creation, more than paper, in order to receive Our distinct characters of Our incessant love, into which We poured, more than indelible characters, Our divine qualities and works. Our characters are formed with works and incessant love. In the same way, the soul must possess my Divine Will as the foundation of everything. But this is not enough; the incessant love is needed in order to form the ink with which to write on this paper of light. But paper and ink are not sufficient to form the characters; therefore the pen of holy works is needed, the diversity of sacrifices, the circumstances of life, in order to form the pen, and so write orderly characters, the most beautiful and moving expressions, which now make one cry, now fill the heart with joy, in such a way that whoever will be able to read them will feel transformed and returned with the life of the good which that page possesses. And I, Divine Author and Writer, when I find paper, ink and pen, just as I formed and wrote the page of Creation, so do I occupy Myself, to my greatest delight, with forming and writing the page of this creature, perhaps more beautiful than the very page of Creation. Therefore, have paper, ink and pen always ready, and I promise you to write the page of your life, in which it will appear that I alone have been the One who formed it and wrote it; in this way you will remain content, and so will I."

Loneliness in which Jesus is put by those who receive Him sacramentally. His tears, His pains. Mute species and living species. Continuation of the life of Jesus in the creature.

Having received Holy Communion, I was doing my usual thanksgivings; and my Highest Good, Jesus, made Himself seen afflicted and taciturn, as though He felt the need of company; and I, drawing close to Him, tried to console Him by offering to remain always united with Him, so as to never leave Him alone. And Jesus seemed all content, and in order to pour out His sorrow, told me: "My daughter, be faithful to Me in never leaving Me alone, because the pain of loneliness is the most oppressing. In fact, company is the nourishment of the outpouring of one who suffers, while without company one suffers the pain and is forced to feel the hunger, because one who would give him the outpouring of the nourishment is missing, everything is missing, and one who might perhaps offer relief, be it even a bitter medicine, is missing. My daughter, how many souls receive Me sacramentally in their hearts and put Me in loneliness. I feel in them as inside a desert, as if I did not belong to them; they treat Me like a stranger. But do you know why they do not take part in my life, in my virtues, in my sanctity, in my joys and in my sorrows? Company means to take part in everything that the person who is near does and suffers; therefore, to receive Me and not to take part in my life is the most bitter loneliness for Me; and remaining alone, I cannot tell them how much I burn with love for them, and so my love remains isolated, my sanctity, my virtues, my life, are isolated. In sum, everything is loneliness in Me and outside of Me.

Oh! how many times I descend into hearts and I cry, because I see Myself alone; and when I descend, in seeing Myself alone, I feel neglected, nor appreciated, nor loved; so much so, that I am forced by their indifference to reduce Myself to silence and to sadness. And since they do not take part in my Sacramental Life, I feel apart inside their hearts; and seeing that I have nothing to do, with divine and invincible patience I wait for the consummation of the sacramental species, inside of which my Eternal Fiat had imprisoned Me, leaving only traces of my descent, because I have not been able to leave anything of my Sacramental Life; or maybe only my tears, because, since they did not take part in my life, the void was missing in which I might leave the things that belong to Me and that I wanted to place in common with them. This is why one can see many souls who receive Me sacramentally but they do not resemble Me; they are sterile of virtues, sterile of love, of sacrifice. Poor ones, they feed themselves of Me, but because they do not keep Me company, they remain on an empty stomach. Ah! to what grips of sorrow and of cruel martyrdom is my Sacramental Life subjected! Many times I feel drowned with love, I would want to free Myself, and I long to descend into hearts. But, alas! I am forced to get out of them more drowned than before. How could I pour out if they did not even pay attention to the flames that burned Me? Other times, the spate of sorrow inundates Me, I long for a heart in order to have a relief to my pains, but - no! they would want Me to take part in their own, not they in mine. And I do it - I hide my sorrows, my tears, in order to console them; and I remain without the longed-for relief.

But who can tell you the so many sorrows of my Sacramental Life, and how it is more those who receive Me and put Me in loneliness in their hearts - but bitter loneliness - than those who keep Me company. And when I find a heart that keeps Me company, I place my life in communication with her, leaving her the deposit of my virtues, the fruit of my sacrifices, the participation of my life; and I choose her as my dwelling, as the hiding place of my pains, and as the place of my refuge; and I feel as though repaid for the sacrifice of my Eucharistic Life, because I find one who breaks for Me my loneliness, who dries my tears, who gives Me the freedom to pour out my love and my sorrows. These are the ones who serve Me as living species, not like the sacramental species that give Me nothing - they only hide Me, all the rest I do on my own; they tell Me not a word that would break my loneliness, they are mute species. While in the souls who serve Me as living species, we carry out our life together, we palpitate from one same heartbeat; and if I see her disposed, I communicate my pains to her, and I continue my Passion in her. I can say that from the sacramental species I pass to the living species, to continue my life on earth - not alone, but together with her.

You must know that pains are no longer in my power, and I keep asking for them, out of love, from these living species of souls, that they may make up for what is lacking in Me. Therefore, my daughter, when I find a heart that loves Me and keeps Me company, giving Me the freedom to do what I want, I reach the excesses, I hold nothing back, I give so much that the poor creature feels herself being drowned by my love and by my graces. It is then that my Sacramental Life no longer remains sterile when I descend into hearts - no, but It reproduces Itself, bilocating and continuing my life in her. And these souls are my conquerors, who administer their life to this Poor One in need of pains; and they say to Me: 'My Love, You had your turn of pains, and it ended. Now it is my turn; therefore let me stand in for You, and let me suffer in your place.' And - oh! how content I remain! My Sacramental Life remains at Its place of honor, because It reproduces other lives of Its own in the creatures. Therefore, always together with Me do I want you, that we may live life together, and you may take to heart my life, and I may take to heart your own."

How Jesus does not want to settle accounts with the creature. The Celestial Gardener. The human will, field of Jesus. Endowment and provision that God gives to the creature.

I was thinking about the Divine Volition, and a thousand thoughts crowded my mind; and I said to myself: 'But why is Jesus so keen on wanting my will? If He loves to give me His, so much the better for me - by having a Divine Will in my power, I possess everything, I enclose everything, even God Himself. But as for He wanting my own, no less than in exchange for His - there's more to be surprised about. What good can He get from it - what use, from a will so weak and insignificant, which can produce more evil than good? It shows how Jesus doesn't know much about accounting, nor can He give, or better, want to give the just value to what He gives, in exchange for what He receives. As long as He obtains His intent, He does not care whether He obtains little or nothing compared to the much He has given. However, here it shows how His love is true love - because it is disinterested.'

But while my mind was making nonsense, my most sweet Jesus showed Himself all attentive in listening to my nonsense, and, all delighted, told me: "My blessed daughter, if I wanted to settle accounts with the creature, I would never have anything to give her, because whatever she might be able to give to Me, everything was given by Me before, therefore by giving to Me she gives Me nothing other than what is mine, and this is why my love makes Me always put the accounts aside. To settle accounts with creatures would be like hindering my love and making it lose the freedom to give what it wants to give to the creature, and it would feel uncomfortable. In addition to this, in order for Me to give you my Divine Will, it is necessary that you give Me your own, because two wills cannot reign inside a heart, they would wage war against each other, and yours would be an obstacle to Mine, and therefore Mine would not be free to do what It wants; and I, in order to render Mine free, with much insistence ask you for your own. But this is not all yet. You must know that your will, while being with you, is weak, insignificant; but as it gets into my creative and transforming hands, it changes appearance; I render it powerful, I vivify it and enclose in it the value-producer of good, and I make use of it so as not to remain idle; and making Myself the Celestial Gardener, I work in this field of your will, and I make of it a beautiful flowery field and a garden of my delights. So, what in your hands is insignificant and maybe even noxious, in mine it changes its nature and it serves Me to amuse Myself and to have a little soil at my disposal in order to form the most beautiful flowerings. And besides, in order to be able to give, I want what is little, what is insignificant, also as a pretext to be able to give what is great, and therefore say: 'She has given to Me, and I have given to her.' It is true that she gave Me little, but that is what she had, and her stripping herself even of her little for Me is the greatest gift, and I entrust it to the exuberance of my love, and I make up for what the creature lacks."

After this, I continued to think about the Divine Will, and while I was trying to follow Its acts, my beloved Jesus told me: "My blessed daughter, you must know that as you try to follow the acts of my Divine Will, you put yourself on the way in It, and my Fiat comes toward you in order to receive you, to offer you Its acts, that you may make them one with yours; and I receive the sweet surprises of your attentions, the enchantment of your love, and I never lose sight of you, and I am present at the most moving scenes of your 'nothing' within the 'All', of your little being within the Great, of the finite within the Infinite. It seems a mutual alternation - God and the creature, and in this alternation one pours his own self out into the other, out of pure love. Now, you must now that when We issue the creature to daylight, We give her the endowment, the provision, of little divine particles of Ours. The endowment is Our Will, nor do We set a limit; on the contrary, We gave her the freedom to increase her endowment. Now, the acts that she does in Our Will are new properties that she acquires, in addition to those which her Creator gave her; and in the emphasis of love We say to her: 'The more acts you will do in Our Will, the more divine field We will give to you, to give you the place in which to put your acts. So, you will work in Our celestial field, and We will give you as much more field as you want, as long as you don't keep it empty and are attentive to put it into traffic. Even more, We will have the contentment of seeing your properties yet more extended. We act like a father when he gives his endowment to his son: this son works, he sacrifices himself very much, and in this way he increases his endowment and expands his properties; and the father is delighted, more than if the properties and the fortune of his son were his own. So We do; or rather, still more: when We see her all attention, ready to any sacrifice, We do not leave her alone, but work together with her; We lend her everything that is needed - Our Will, Our Sanctity, Our acts... everything - to have the contentment of seeing Our daughter the possessor of many properties.”

Power of the truths; steps on both sides - God and the creature. Unusual appearance of the Supreme Being.

I was thinking of the many truths that my adorable Jesus has manifested to Me about the Divine Will, and - oh! how many thoughts crowded my mind with surprises, with joys, with deep emotion, on these truths. They seemed to be descending from Heaven, all in order, to fill the earth, and their crafting was that of forming the way within themselves, to let us enter back into these truths; and they walled themselves up around the creatures so as not to let them go out. And my Celestial Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: “My little daughter of my Will, you must know that each truth I have manifested on my Divine Will has been nothing other than a further approachment toward the creatures. As Our Supreme Being would speak, so It would take an additional step toward them, place one more divine particle at their disposal, and lay new bonds of union and of love. Our word is always a birth from Us; it is Our *Verbum*¹¹¹ that We put on the way from Heaven to seek Our longed-for creature; and Our Sacrosanct Trinity, drawn by the power of the Word¹¹², because He is inseparable from Us, takes Our steps along, and step by step We draw near, there where Our word¹¹³ reaches.

Now, you must know that when We decide to manifest a truth by means of Our Word, since it is a part of Ourselves that We issue outside, Our Supreme Being takes on an unusual appearance; a new joy invests Us, a communicative force of new beatitudes comes out of Us. The whole of Heaven, in seeing Our unusual appearance, already realizes that We are about to issue a word of truth of Ours, because We Ourselves, the Three Divine Persons, are the first to celebrate the truths that We issue; and then the whole of Heaven together with Us. These are the gifts of the great King, who can move everything, invests everything; it is Our word, which has the creative, vivifying, transforming virtue, and at times it knocks down, it crushes, it shatters everything, and upon the ruins it makes arise the virtue of Our word, and there it forms the most beautiful things, the new creation, such works of magnificence as to astonish Heaven and earth. What can a Fiat of Ours not do? Anything. And what will the chain of many Fiats of Ours not do! Our Fiat, transformed into word of truth, possesses invincible virtue, unreachable power, unshakeable firmness of the good it wants to form in the power of Our speaking Fiat. You cannot comprehend the great gift and the great good that one alone of my words of divine truth encloses; but you will comprehend it with time, when you see the deeds, the works, that my truths have produced. In fact, not only have my truths the power to draw Our Divine Being after them, to make Us take steps, and many times they even make Us run to approach the creatures; but they give graces to them, in order to let them take some steps, and make them run to meet the One who is already coming to meet with them and give them the great good which Our Fiat pronounced. So, when We put out Our truths, they act powerfully over Our Divine Being, because if they come out, they want to give the life and the good that they possess; and at the same time they want to dispose the creatures to draw near the fount from which they sprang, to transform them into the good of the truth itself. Everything is in whether a new truth comes out of Us; at the most, ages and centuries may pass, but this says nothing, because they are armed not only with power, but with invincible and divine patience, and they do not tire in waiting - they are untiring, they are inflexible: first they must give the good that they have, the life that they possess, and then, triumphant and victorious, they send back to Heaven the fruits that they have conquered. Therefore, my daughter, be attentive in listening to my truths; first you must think where they come from, who it is that offers them to you, the good that they want to do to you, the steps of approachment on both sides. And do not want to put them in doubt because you do not see in the world the effects, the good, the life that my truths possess. Time will do and tell everything; for now, take on your part; your Jesus will take care of the rest.

¹¹² the second Person of the Sacrosanct Trinity

In addition to this, you must know that We first form the basin, the place, the soul, into which Our truths must descend, and then We decide to issue them from within Our paternal womb. In fact, as Our Supreme Being issues the truths from Us, which change into works for the creatures, in issuing them We do not leave them in the air and in idleness - no; Our wisdom never does useless things. If We issue them, they must be bearers of the good that they enclose. Here, then, the necessity of the basin to which Our goodness directs them, so as to immediately begin their crafting of participation and of transformation of the good that they possess, be it even one single soul at the beginning. And then they diffuse so much as to form armies of creatures of the good that Our truths possess. And once they have formed these noble armies, Our truths bring them to Us, into Our womb, in Our Celestial Fatherland. They are the conquerors that populate Heaven, act as messengers, go through the earth, cast the seed, work it, harvest it, and, triumphant, in order to place it in safety, bring it into the celestial regions. They are untiring, nor do they ever stop if they have not obtained their intent. Therefore, be attentive, and do not neglect anything of what your Jesus has taught you.”

God possesses, by nature, the creative power. Necessity to love. God, voluntary Prisoner of the creature. The Divine Fisherman; daily catch.

I was continuing my acts in the Divine Volition, and I felt a powerful force that overwhelmed me, unified me, identified me with the very divine works. I could say that my being had become so small as to get lost in the immense sea which I felt overflowing inside and outside of me. Its eternal waves raised me and submerged me, and I felt more the divine life than my own. And my always lovable Jesus, who brings down and stirs up, who gives death and at the same instant makes one rise to new life, visiting His little daughter, told me: “Blessed daughter, Our love is exuberant, and the more We give, the more We want to give to the creatures. Even more, in giving, Our love makes Us overflow from all sides, and would want to drown them with love, with sanctity, with beauty, with light, with Our goodness. The more We give, the more the passion for loving them and being loved increases in Us. You must know that Our Supreme Being possesses, by nature, the creative power, the redeeming virtue, and the life that vivifies and sanctifies everything. Now, in creating the Creation, We did it on Our own, without the creature; but after We created her, Our love toward her is so great, that We want to continue to unfold the creative power together with her; and while, by preserving the Creation, it is as if We were in act of creating It, this creative power unifies and invests the souls and continues the creation in the interior of each one. And what do We create? New heavens of love, new suns of knowledges, new seas of graces, new air of sanctity, new winds of refreshment which embalm the creature, new life ever growing of Our Divine Will, new flowers of beauty, of holy desires - in sum, the echo of the creation of all things. Our creative virtue echoes in the souls, and with a wisdom and goodness, uniquely Our own, We create always, without ever ceasing. If it ever ceased, which cannot be, We would have to restrict this creative nature of Ours, which has the virtue of always creating.

But, above all this, Our Divine Height lowers Itself so much, We descend into the depth of creatures and there We carry out Our creative virtue together with them. We don't want to do it on Our own - solitude would break Our arms, and would put a limit to Our creative power and virtue. In order to be able to love more, We Ourselves have formed a law of love for Ourselves, and have created within Us the need to love. So, in Us to love is necessity - but wanted necessity, not forced by anyone. And it is this necessity to love that makes Us do so many things unheard-of, it makes Us give in to excesses and follies toward the creatures. It would have been absurd, and not the ways of a perfect Being, as Our own, to create things and living beings, and not to love them. On the contrary, first We love them, We make Our love run as prime act, and then We issue them to daylight as a birth, outpouring and triumph of Our love. If it were not so, the Creation would have been of unbearable weight for Us, and not of glory and of honor. The things that are not loved are shunned; but We love them so much, that We enclose Ourselves in them, making Ourselves the voluntary Prisoners, in order to form Our divine life in the creature and fill her with Ourselves, for as much as she is capable of. And so that We may love her more, and be loved more, We want her to know it, and We want her in Our company, so that she herself may see and touch with her own hand what We are operating and how We carry out Our divine life in her soul. Our love gives itself no respite, and according to the dispositions and cooperation of the creature, now We unfold the creative power, now the redeeming one, and now the sanctifying one, according to her needs and to the correspondence that she offers to Us. But, all this, always together with her - never on Our own. We want to use the creative virtue, but We want her to know it and receive it; We want to use the redeeming virtue if sin tyrannizes her, but We want her to feel the good that We want to do to her, and receive it with love and gratitude. We want to use the sanctifying virtue, but We want her to offer herself to receive the transformation of Our holy acts into her own, so as to receive Our sanctifying virtue. If the soul were not together with Us and would not unite her little crafting to Our great working, it would be for Us as if We wanted to carry out Our crafting of love over inanimate things, which feel and know nothing of the good that they receive; and for them it would be like the faraway God, whom they neither know nor love.

You must know that Our love is so great, that all creatures swim and are present inside this immense sea of Our love. And as if We were not content with such great immensity of this love of Ours, Our Supreme Being makes Itself the Fisherman, and goes on fishing for the tiny little drops of love of the creatures: their little acts, the little sacrifices, the pains suffered for love of Us, an 'I love You' that she spoke to Us from the heart. We catch everything from inside Our own sea, to take for Ourselves the contentment, the happiness, of the requital of the love of the creature. And We yearn for it so much, that We make of it Our daily catch, and We spread Our celestial table. True love has the virtue of transforming things, it puts a sweet enchantment to Our divine pupils, and it renders the little loving acts of the creatures beautiful, gracious and charming for Us, in such a way as to capture Us, wound Us and make Us happy. And We make Ourselves the capturers, making of her Our most delighting conquest. Therefore, if you want to render Us happy and be bearer of joys and of happinesses to your God, love, love always - never cease to love Us. And in order to be more sure, enclose all of yourself in the Divine Fiat, which will make nothing escape you that is not love for your Creator."

The truth: seed. Celestial Farmer and human sower. Immutability of the divine ways. What pains and oppositions serve for.

My little mind was all occupied by the many truths that blessed Jesus had manifested to me on the Divine Will; and each of them made itself present before me like a portent, one distinct from the other - but divine portent, not human; not of the earth, but of Heaven. And they were all as though in act of wanting to assail the creature in order to communicate to her their portentous virtue, all celestial and divine, and to transform her into it. But while my mind was occupied in this way, I thought to myself: 'Yet, in the face of truths so celestial and divine, in which no shade of the human exists - so lovable, so penetrating, holy, filled with lights, each of them enclosing the life, the love, the sanctity of the One who manifested them - there are some who, in reading some of these truths, put them in doubt, raise difficulties; and You know it, O Jesus - everything is known to You.' And I felt all oppressed, and I longed for my sweet Jesus to tell Him of my pain; and He, surprising me, told me: "My good daughter, do not afflict yourself because of this. You must know that in order to know a truth, one needs to love it. Love makes the appetite arise; appetite gives the taste; taste makes arise the hunger for eating one's fill and masticating thoroughly the substance of a food - that is, of my truths. Mastication produces an easy digestion, in such a way that one feels the possession of the great good that my truth possesses and produces; and then doubts cease, difficulties melt like snow before the rays of a burning sun. Now, if they just barely touched them without eating them with a deep study, with a love that generates the appetite, what is the wonder if they raise doubts and difficulties? Oh! how much better it would have been for them to say: 'This is not food for us, nor do we have the will to eat it', rather than giving judgments. But, it is known how my truths find a place more in the simple hearts than in the learned. This happened in my Redemption; to my sorrow, no learned man followed Me, but all poor, ignorant and simple.

You must know that my truths are seeds which I, Celestial Farmer, continue to sow in the souls; and if I do my sowing, with certainty I must reap the fruit. Many times it happens to Me as to a poor sower who casts his seed into the earth, and because of lack of moisture, the earth does not have the strength to eat up the seed in order to digest it and convert it into earth, and from the substance it absorbed from the seed, give to the poor farmer ten, twenty, a hundred times the seed it ate. Other times, while he sows the seed, because of lack of rain, the earth becomes hard over the seed, and does not find the way to let the life, the substance of the seed it encloses come out; and the poor farmer must have patience in receiving the harvest of his seeds. However, by having sowed the seed, he has already done something, and he can have hope - who knows, a rain might give moisture to the earth, which, possessing the substance of his seed, will put out what he sowed; or, by removing the hardness, by stirring it, he might form the channels to let his seed reproduce. So, even though the earth does not immediately produce the multiplication of the seed it received, time, circumstances, rain, can produce a harvest more abundant than expected.

Now, if the farmer, in spite of all the difficulties of the earth, can hope and receive an abundant harvest, much more can I do it, Celestial Farmer, having issued from my divine womb many seeds of celestial truths, to sow them in the depth of your soul; and from the harvest I will fill the whole world. Would you, then, think that because of the doubts and difficulties of some - some, like earth without moisture, and some like thick and hardened earth - I would not have my superabundant harvest? My daughter, you are mistaken! Time, people, circumstances, change, and what today may appear black, tomorrow may appear white; in fact, many times they see according to the predispositions they have, and according to the long or short sight that the intellect possesses. Poor ones, one must pity them. But everything is in the fact that I already did the sowing; the most necessary thing, the most substantial, the most interesting, was to manifest my truths. If I have done my work, the main part has been set in place, I have found your earth in order to sow my seed - the rest will come by itself. And the doubts, the difficulties, the pains, will serve just like the wood and the fire would serve the poor farmer, to cook the seed that was harvested and make of it his food. In the same way, they can serve Me and you as suns, to make them¹¹⁴ mature in the hearts; as wood and fire, to give them, not only with words, but with the practice; and to cook them with the sacrifice of the fire of one's life, so as to convert them into most delicious food and feed it to the creatures. My daughter, had I wanted to pay heed to what they were saying about Me, and to the oppositions they made against the truths I manifested when I came upon earth, I would have neither formed the Redemption nor manifested my Gospel. Yet, the most erudite, the noble class, those who had studied the Scriptures and who taught religion to the people - I let them talk, and I bore their continuous oppositions with love and invincible patience; and I made use of them as wood to the pains that they gave Me, to burn and consume Myself on the Cross for love of them and of all.

In the same way, today, if I wanted to pay heed to what they say about the truths on my Divine Will, I should put an end to the manifestations about It, and to the designs I want to accomplish by manifesting them. But - no, let us not suffer mutability - the divine operating is immutable. The human operating has this weakness, and acts according to the appreciation it receives from others; but We - no, when We decide, there is no one who can move Us, neither all creatures nor the whole of hell; but We wait with Our inextinguishable love for the times, circumstances and people that must serve Us for what We have established. Therefore, do not want to worry; and making Our divine way your own, lay down the sacrifice of your life, if needed, to obtain that my Divine Will be known and reign in the whole world.”

My sweet Jesus remained silent, and I continued to think of the impossibility that the Divine Will might reign on earth as It does in Heaven; and Jesus, sighing, added: “Blessed daughter, what is impossible for men is all possible for God; and if it were impossible for my Will to reign on earth as It does in Heaven, my goodness, all paternal, would not have taught the prayer of the ‘Our Father’. Indeed, to have others pray for impossible things, I would neither have recited it Myself with so much love as the first, placing Myself at the head of all, nor would I have taught it to the Apostles so that they would teach it to the whole world as the most beautiful and most substantial prayer of my Church. Impossible things I do not want, nor do I demand of the creature; nor do I Myself do things that are impossible. Therefore, had it been impossible for my Divine Will to reign on earth as It does in Heaven, I would have taught a useless prayer and without effect, and useless things I know not how to do; at most, I wait even for centuries, but I must make arise the fruit of the prayer that I taught. More so since, freely, without anyone telling Me to give this great good that my Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven, I Myself, as in a second creation, just as I stretched out the heavens, created the sun and everything without anyone praying Me to - the same with my Will: in all spontaneity I said: ‘Pray that my Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven.’ And when spontaneously it is said ‘pray for this to happen’, without anyone importuning Me, it means that first I looked at everything in my all-seeingness, I pondered things well, and when I saw that it was possible, then did I make up my mind to teach the ‘Our Father’, wanting the human will united to Our own, longing for It to come and reign on earth as It does in Heaven. So, everything I have manifested on my Will is enclosed in those mere words: ‘Your Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven.’ In these few words are enclosed abysses of graces, of sanctity, of light, and abysses of divine communications and transformations between Creator and creature. My daughter, this was the gift that your Jesus was giving to the human generations as the fulfillment of my Redemption. My love was not yet content, my pains had not yet completely satiated Me; I wanted - I wanted to give yet more; I wanted to see my Heaven upon earth in the midst of my children. Therefore, a few days before departing for Heaven, first I decided to give my Will on earth as It is in Heaven, and then I taught the ‘Our Father’, in which I Myself remained engaged to giving this great gift; and when your Jesus is engaged, He never falls short. Therefore, do not put doubts; and if others doubt, let them do it - what do they know about how I must carry things out? I have power and Will in my hands, and this is enough for Me. And you, remain at peace, and always follow my Will. Trust your Jesus, and you will see.”

How the human will reduces the soul to shreds and forms the little citadels in disarray, without king and without defense. Crying of Jesus.

While my poor mind was crossing the sea of the Divine Fiat, according to my little capacity, I comprehended Its value, Its sanctity and the great prodigy - that the creature, as long as she lives in It, can enclose within herself a Will so holy and interminable, and becomes the bearer and possessor of this Volition so holy, which encompasses and encloses everything. That the great can enclose the little - there is nothing to be surprised about; but for the little to enclose the great - this gives of the incredible, and only God can do these prodigies. Divine Goodness, how admirable You are; and more than tender and loving mother, who wants to enclose herself in her child to place him in safety, and make herself the repeater of the life of the very fruit of her womb, to have the glory of being able to say: 'The child is all similar to his mother.'

But while my mind was delighting in the pure joys of the Divine Fiat, a sad whirl gloomed my joys, and I comprehended the great evil and the terrible affront that is given to God when, arbitrating ourselves, we do our own will. And beloved Jesus, repeating His short little visit, all embittered, told me: "My good daughter - ah, the human will! It wages war against God and wages war against itself. The weapons it moves against its Creator wound it, and its soul remains like a body torn to shreds before God. Each act of human will separates it from its Creator, from His sanctity, from His fortitude, power, from His love and immutability. Without my Divine Will, the creature becomes like a city under siege, which the enemies force to die of hunger, torturing it in all its members; with this difference: that the torturers that tear her members are her own will. It is not the enemies that torment her, but her own self - she makes herself the enemy of herself. If you knew the sorrow I feel when I see souls torn to shreds! Each act of her will is a division that she forms between herself and God, it is to move away from the beauty of her creation, it is to become cold of the true and pure love, it is to get lost from her origin, it is to prepare for herself, either an anticipated hell, if the will falls into grave evil, or a purgatory, if the evil is venial. The human will is like gangrene to the body, which has the virtue of making the flesh fall off in shreds, and of deforming the beauty of the creature. Poor souls, without my Divine Will - because It alone possesses the unitive virtue, which, unifying everything together - the thought, the desire, the affection, the love, the human will - gives the beautiful unitive form to the soul of the creature. On the other hand, without my Will, the thought wants something, the will something else, the desire wants something other, the affection yet another, in such a way that they wrestle with one another, they brawl, they separate. Ah! there is no peace nor union without my Will; the one who would put the cement so as to reunite the parts that are divided and render her strong against the evils that may arise, is missing.

This is why your Jesus does nothing other than cry over the ruins of these more than Jerusalems in disarray, which, instead of recognizing their Messiah, disowned Him and gave Him death. So is my Will disowned, while It is present in their midst and within them; and they make of their souls little cities in disarray which force Me to repeat the threat: that not a stone on top of the other will be left of them, because without my Will they are citadels without king, and therefore they have no one who protects them, nor anyone who defends them, or administers to them the necessary nourishments in order to do good, and not to get entrenched in evil. And I cry over their lot, and I pray that they would recognize my Will, love It and let It reign. And you - pray together with Me."

After this, I followed the acts that my sweet Jesus did while on this earth, and I prayed Him from the heart that, by virtue of His acts, He would make His Will known to all; and following Him along the ways He covered, my mind paused in the act when my eternal Love, Jesus, was crossing the fields and delighted in looking at the flowers and in picking them with His creative hands. And I wanted to place my 'I love You' upon each flower, so that they might change into voice and speaking flowers, asking that His Will be known and loved. And Jesus, making Himself heard, all goodness, added: "Blessed daughter, I want to tell you of my sorrows and the secret of my Heart. You must know that the human will was the most piercing nail of my Heart. In going through trails and fields, I would look at the flowery fields, at the trees loaded with fruits, and I would feel the joys of my Creation. And those flowery fields symbolized for Me, more than flowers, the beauties, the liveliness, the freshness and the lovely complexion of the creature - and I rejoiced. But soon the nail of the human will would make Me see them transformed into withered, discolored, parched flowers, bending over their stems, in act of dying, which, instead of fragrance, had changed into bad odor; and the fruits of the trees, unripe and rotten, symbol of the evil to which the human will reduces the creature, the most beautiful work of Our creative hands. I received a sorrow, and those flowers snatched tears from my eyes, because I felt, penetrating ever more deeply into Me, the nail of the human will. And my sorrow is so great, that I await your 'I love You', asking Me that the good of my Will and the evil of the human will be known, so that Mine be done and theirs be abhorred. Many times I looked at the azure heavens, studded with stars, and the sun with its majesty, dazzling with light, dominating the entire earth, symbol of the heaven of the soul, and of the sun of my Will which was to dazzle within this heaven so enchanting, and was to dominate with its light the heaven of the soul and the beautiful flowery earth of their bodies; and my Heart had leaps of joy. But - no, those were brief instants - the nail of the human will would soon enter the field, and forming clouds - pitch-black, loaded with thunders - lightnings, hail, would obscure the sun and take away the beautiful sight of the serene heaven; and unloading itself over the poor creature, it devastated the heaven of the soul and the earth of their bodies, casting desolation and horror everywhere. I can say that I took not one step, when I lived down here, in which the nail of the human will would not pierce Me through. From the moment I was born, up to my death, that was precisely what formed my harshest and continuous martyrdom, because it transformed before Me, from beautiful to ugly, my most beautiful creative work. And in everything I did and suffered, my aim was always at the human will, to place it in safety. And - oh! how I love one who calls my acts, unites herself together with Me, and on the stake of my own sacrifice and of my love, sacrifices herself in order to obtain the great good that my Will be known and dominate the human will, fount of all the evils of the poor creature. Therefore, always together with Me do I want you - never leave Me alone, so as to be able to repeat my life within you."

How created things are the guises that cover the Divine Will. Example of a king in disguise. How Creation and Redemption are always in act of calling the creature to operate together.

My Celestial Sovereign, Jesus, hide me inside your Divine Heart, so that, not outside of You, but inside the sacrarium of your Heart, I may begin the present volume. The pen will be the light of your Divine Volition dipped in the furnace of your love; and as You dictate to me what You want to tell me, I will act as a mere listener, and will lend to You the paper of my little soul, so that You Yourself may write what You want, the way You want, and as much as You want. Beware, my Lovable Teacher, not to let me write anything of my own, otherwise I will make much nonsense. And You, Sovereign Queen, hide me under your mantle, keep me defended from everything, never leave me alone, that I may fulfill the Divine Will in everything.

So, I continued to think about the adorable Fiat, and I felt surrounded by all created things; and each of them was saying: "I am the Divine Will. What you see outside of us are Its guises, the garment that covers It; but inside of us there is Its life palpitating and operating, and - oh! how glorious and honored we feel, for we form the clothing of the Divine Will. The sun forms for It the garment of light, the heavens the azure garment, the stars the garment of gold, the earth the garment of flowers. In sum, all things have the honor of forming the clothing of the Divine Will, and, all in chorus, we make feast."

I remained amazed, stunned, and I said to myself: 'Oh! how I wish I too could say: "I am the garment of the Divine Will." How happy I would feel.' And my great King Jesus, visiting His little daughter, told me: "My good daughter, King, Creator, Divine Will, means to dominate, to invest and to hold Our life inside each thing created by Us. To create means to stretch out one's life, to hide Our creating Will in the very thing created by Us. This is to create - to call things out of nothing, to enclose in them the All in order to preserve them in the integrity of the beauty with which We created them. Now, you must know that my Will is like a king in disguise within each created thing; if the creatures recognize him under those guises, he reveals himself and abounds in giving his divine acts and his royal gifts, which only this Celestial Emperor can give. But if he is not recognized, he remains there, unobserved, hidden, making no sound or pomp of his royal person; nor does he abound in giving of his gifts, which only a Volition so holy can give. And the creatures touch the clothing, but know nothing and receive nothing of It and of Its gifts; and my Fiat remains with the sorrow of not having been recognized, and with the anguish of not having given Its divine gifts, because, not knowing It, they lacked the capacity and the will to receive royal gifts.

I act like a king who, disguising himself, goes into the midst of his people: if they pay attention to him, even though he is not wearing the royal garments, they will recognize him from his manners, from his face; and drawing all around him, will give him the honors of king and will ask for gifts and favors. And the king will reward the attentiveness of those who recognize him in disguise, and will give them more than they want; and with those who do not recognize him, he will pass by unobserved, without giving them anything, more so, since they themselves do not ask him for anything, holding him as just anyone from the people. So my Will does when It is recognized under the guises of the created things: It reveals Itself, and It does not wait like the king to be asked for gifts and favors, but It Itself says: 'I am here - what do you want?' And It overabounds in giving celestial gifts and favors.

But It goes beyond the king: bilocating Itself, It gives Its very life to the creature who has recognized It - which the king does not do.

Now, you too can say: 'I am Will of God', and make of yourself the guises, the garment that hides my Divine Will, not only if you recognize It in all created things - but if you recognize It within yourself, give It dominion in all your acts, and place at Its service everything that the guise of your being does, to make Its life grow in you, It will fill you so much that the mere garment will be left of you, which It will use only to cover Itself. And you will be more happy than all created things, because you will be the living guise that will share with It Its joys, Its happiness, and also Its infinite sorrows, for It wants to be life of each creature, but, ungrateful, they do not give It full dominion. In sum, you will always live life together, keeping each other perennial company, forming one single life."

After this, I continued to follow the acts done by the Divine Will in Creation. Since It is always in act of creating It, by virtue of the preservation which It incessantly exercises in each created thing, I find It always in the creating act, in order to say, with deeds, to all and to each one: 'How much I love you - it is precisely for you that I am creating this whole machine of the Universe. O please! recognize how much I love you.' But what surprised me the most was that the Eternal Fiat was waiting for me, It wanted me together with It in the creating act, to tell me: "Come into my act, let us do together what I am doing." I felt all confused, and my eternal Love, Jesus, surprising me, told me: "Little daughter of my Volition, courage, why are you confused? In my Will there is no 'yours' or 'mine' - the act of one must be unified with the other and become one. Even more, as the creature enters into Our Volition, she remains confirmed in the act that my Fiat is doing. Its love, Its loving industries are such, that It wants to say to the creature: 'We have done this together.' Therefore, the stretched-out heavens, the sun refulgent with light, and everything else, are yours and mine - we have the rights in common. This is why I always hold the act present - because I want the creature together with Me; she, for love of whom alone I am always operating, so as to hear her say to Me, in that same act which I am operating: 'I love You, I love You, I love You.' Not having an 'I love You' in works so great and marvelous, not being recognized, would be as if Our love remained defeated - but, no! but, no! among many We have to find someone who would remain with Us, loving and operating; who would give Us the little requital, so that Our love may find its outpouring and its happiness on the part of the creature. And as she enters into Our Fiat, she remains confirmed and bound in Its divine acts, in such a way that Its binding virtue binds God and the creature.

And just as in Creation, so in Redemption - there are no past acts, but all acts in act and present; past and future do not exist for the Supreme Being. So, your Jesus is always in act of conceiving¹¹⁵, of being born, of crying, of suffering, and of dying and rising. All these acts of mine, in continuous act, without ever ceasing, besiege each creature, drown her with love; and for the outpouring of my ardent love, I keep repeating: 'See, only for You am I descending from Heaven, and I am conceived, and I am born. And you - come to be conceived together with Me, to be reborn together with Me to the new life that your Jesus brings you. Look at Me: I cry for you, I suffer for you - have pity on my tears and on my pains. Let us suffer together, that you may repeat what I did, and model your life with mine, so that I can say to you: 'What is mine is yours, you are the repeater of my life.' In the same way, if I die, I call her to die together with Me - not to make her die, but to rise again with the same life of the One who so much loves her. So, my life is repeated continuously; a past or future love would not satisfy Me, nor would it be the love and Redemption of a God. It is the present act that has the virtue of wounding, of conquering and of disposing her to lay down her life for love of the One who, in act, is laying it down for her. However, there is a great difference on the part of creatures: one who listens to Me and takes everything that We have done, both in Creation and in Redemption, as in the act of doing it, forms her life together with Us, feels Our divine acts flow within her acts - everything speaks of God for her. On the other hand, one who looks at them as past things retains only the memory of them, and a memory has not formed either divine life or heroism of sanctity. Therefore, take things as they are in reality: always in act, always to love you, and always for you to love Me.”

Nourishment that the Supreme Being gives to the creature, which serves to make the soul grow, and to make the divine life grow in the soul. The Divine Will, depository of everyone and of everything.

I am always prey to the Divine Fiat; Its love is so great, that It leaves me not one instant without nourishing my poor soul. But in order to nourish me, It wants me with Itself, at the mercy of Its acts, to prepare together the food It wants to give me. So, while following Its acts, I paused in the act when God was creating man; and my highest Good, Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My blessed daughter, Our supreme goodness was not content with loving man, with giving him the whole universe at his disposal; but in order to give vent to Our intense love, We placed Our divine qualities, to nourish his soul. So, We placed Our power, wisdom, goodness, love, sanctity, fortitude, as his celestial and divine nourishment. Therefore, each time he would come to Us, We would spread Our celestial table before him, to nourish him and satiate him. There is nothing that unites and identifies with the creature more than food, which reaches the point of becoming blood, warmth, strength, growth and life of hers. In the same way, Our Divinity, wanting to nourish with Our divine qualities, made Itself warmth, strength, growth and life of the creature. But this was not enough; this nourishment, once digested, would not only make the creature grow all beautiful and holy with the virtues of the nourishments that she would take, but would serve to make the divine life grow, which does not adapt itself to human nourishments, but wants its own divine nourishments in order to grow and form its very life in the depth of the interior of the soul. See, can there be a greater love, a more intimate and inseparable union, than to expose Our Divine Being, Our immense and infinite qualities as nourishment, to make her grow with Our resemblances? And then, to make use of them in order to administer to her the nourishments so that she would not leave Us on an empty stomach within her soul, and may be able to say: ‘God nourishes my soul, and I, with the food that He gives me, nourish His life and make it grow within me.’ Only then is love content, when it can say: ‘You have loved me, and I have loved you. What you have done for me, I have done for you.’ And since We know that the creature can never reach Us, We give of Our own, and in this way We equal both sides and remain content and happy, she and We. In fact, only then does true love feel happy and satisfied, when it can say: ‘What is yours is mine.’ And do not think that this was only for the first man - what We do once We continue always; still now, We are at the creatures’ disposal; all the times in which she unites with Our Will, dissolves hers in Ours, lets Ours dominate, are as many visits that she comes to make to Our Supreme Being. And We - are We going to send her back on an empty stomach? Ah! no. Not only do We nourish her, but We give her of Our own, that she may have sufficient nourishments in order to grow as Our Will wants her, and so that she may not lack the necessary means in order to make Our life grow ever more within her. More so since, on Our part, We don’t let her want for anything - on the contrary, We give always in a superabundant way; if anything is lacking, it will always be on the part of the creature; but from Us - never.”

After this, my poor mind continued to wander in the Divine Volition; and my always lovable Jesus added: “My blessed daughter, my Divine Will is the depository of everything that has been done by Us, and of everything that the creatures have done. Not even a thought, a word, the greatest works as well as the littlest ones, the steps, the heartbeats, the breaths, the pains - nothing can escape It, everything is deposited in It. So, everything you do takes its place in my Will; nor can you hide anything, because with Its immensity It envelopes you, with Its power It is the actor of everything you do, and with Its divine rights It is entitled to possess, to know and to preserve the whole operating of the human generations, and to reward them and to chastise them, according to what they deserve. Its goodness and power together are so great, that just as It does not lose even one star or one drop of light that the sun possesses, or one drop of water from the sea, so does It not lose even one thought of creature. And even if It wanted to lose it, It cannot - Its all-seeingness finds it in act in Its Will. Oh! if creatures would comprehend that a Divine Will receives in deposit everything they do and think, how careful they would be that everything be holy and upright. And they would call this Supreme Will as life in everything they do, so that their acts might not receive any sinister judgment, because they would be in deposit in the same Divine Volition as acts and effects of It, which no one can dare to judge; and they would be rewarded as acts of a Divine Will operating in the creature.

In addition to this, just as the Divine Will is the depository of everyone and of everything, so is the human will the depository of all the thoughts, words, works, steps, etc., of the creature. It loses nothing of what she does; on the contrary, they form one single thing with it, and each thought, word, pain suffered - everything, remains written and sealed with indelible characters. It can happen that the memory might not retain everything - many things it has forgotten; but the will conceals everything and loses nothing; so, it is the depository and bearer of all her acts. Therefore, the Divine Will is the depository and bearer of everyone and of everything; the human will is the individual depository and bearer of itself. What triumph will eternally be, what honor and glory, for one who has thought and operated in a saintly way! And what confusion to one who has deposited in the human will sins, passions, unworthy works, rendering himself, by himself, the bearer of his own evils! And if the evils are very grave, he will be pasture for the infernal flames; and if they are less grave, he will be pasture of the purging flames which, by dint of fire and of pains, will purge that sullied human will, but will not be able to render to it the good, the holy works it has not done. Therefore, be attentive, because everything is being numbered and written - neither do you nor do We lose anything; even a thought, a word, will have its perennial life, and will be like faithful and inseparable friends of the creature. So, it is necessary for you to form holy and good friends, that they may give you peace, happiness and perennial glory.”

Littleness in the Divine Will. How God does the greatest works for free. Example: Creation and Redemption, as well as the Kingdom of the Divine Will. In the Incarnation the Heavens lower Themselves.

I feel as though besieged, invested by the light of the Eternal Volition. My littleness is such that, fearing myself, I do nothing but hide ever more deeply in this celestial dwelling. Oh! how I would love to destroy this littleness of mine, that I may feel nothing but Divine Will alone; but I comprehend that I cannot, nor does Jesus want it to be completely destroyed. He wants it yet small, but alive, so as to be able to operate inside a living will, not a dead one, to be able to have His small little field of action within my littleness, which, being small, incapable, weak, with reason must lend itself to receive the great operating of the Divine Fiat. Now, in this dwelling, sometimes everything is silence, everything is peaceful, with such serenity that not even a breath of wind is felt; other times a gentle breeze is blowing, which refreshes and strengthens, and the Celestial Inhabitant, Jesus, moves, unveils Himself, and with all love speaks of His Royal Palace and of what His lovable and adorable Will has done and does.

So, my dear Life, unveiling Himself, told me: “My little daughter of my Will, you must know that the littleness of the creature serves Us as the space in which We can form Our works; it serves Us like the “nothing” before Creation, and, it being nothing, We call to life in it Our most beautiful works. We want this littleness to be empty of anything that does not belong to Us - but alive, that it may feel how much We love it, as well as the life of the works of Our Will that unfolds within it. Therefore, you must be content with remaining alive without your being the master of it, for this is the great sacrifice and heroism of one who lives of Divine Will - to feel alive only to undergo the Divine Mastership, that It may do whatever It wants, the way It wants, and as much as It wants. This is the sacrifice of sacrifices, the heroism of heroisms. Do you think that it is trivial to feel the life of one's own will, that it may serve, not oneself, as though having no right; to voluntarily lose one's freedom, that it may serve my Will, giving It Its just rights?"

Jesus remained silent, and then, as though reading in my soul certain doubts of mine about the Divine Will, which had passed through me, He added: "My daughter, the greatest works done by Our Supreme Being have all been done for free, without paying attention to whether the creatures deserved them, or told Us anything. Had We paid attention to this, We would have had to bind Our arms and do no more works. But if the creatures, ungrateful, do not glorify Us, should We not have even the good of being glorified and of having praises sung to Us by Our own works? Ah! no! no! One work alone of Ours glorifies Us more than all the works of all human generations united together; one fulfilled act of Our Will fills Heaven and earth, and with its regenerative and communicative virtue and power, it regenerates for Us so much glory as to never end, such that the mere little drops of it is the creature given to comprehend. In fact, what merit did man have that We should create the heavens, the sun, and all the rest? He did not exist yet - nothing could he say to Us. So, the Creation was a great work of marvelous magnificence of God, completely free. And Redemption? Do you think that man deserved It? Not at all. It was all free; and if he prayed Us, it was because We made him the promise of the future Redeemer. It was not he the first who was to tell Us, but We Ourselves: it was Our own decree, completely free, that the Word would take on human flesh; and it was fulfilled when sin and human ingratitude were rampant, and were flooding the whole earth. And if it seemed that they did something, those were just little drops, which could not be enough to merit a work so great, which appears incredible - that a God would become similar to man in order to rescue him, and even after he had so gravely offended Him. Now, the great work of making my Will known, that It may reign in the midst of creatures, will be a work of Ours that is completely free. And here is the illusion: that they believe that there will be merit, and the contribution of creatures. Ah! yes, there will be, like the little drops of the Jews when I came to redeem them. But the creature is always creature, therefore there will be Our part, completely free, such that, abounding upon her with light, with grace, with love, We will overwhelm her in such a way that she will feel a strength never before felt, a love never before experienced; she will feel, as more alive, Our life palpitating in her soul, so much so, that it will be sweet for her to let Our Will dominate. This life of Ours still exists in the soul, it was given to her by Us from the beginning of her creation, but it is so repressed and hidden, that it is there as if she did not have it; it is there like fire under the ashes, which, covered and as though crushed underneath them, does not let the benefit of the life of its heat be felt. But suppose that a vigorous wind comes: the ashes flee from over the fire, and the fire makes its life seen and felt. In the same way, the vigorous wind of the light of my Fiat will put to flight the evils, the passions which, like ashes, hide the divine life in them; and so, feeling it alive, they will be ashamed not to let themselves be dominated by Our Will. My daughter, time will tell everything, and those who do not believe will remain confounded."

After this, I followed the Divine Will in the Incarnation of the Word, to make my love, my adoration and thanksgiving run in this act so solemn and full of tenderness and of excessive love, such that Heaven and earth tremble and remain mute, unable to find worthy words with which to sing hymns to an excess of love so astounding. And my sweet Jesus, with such tenderness as to make my heart split, told me: "Dearest daughter, in my Incarnation the love was so great, that the Heavens lowered Themselves and the earth elevated itself; if the Heavens would not lower, the earth would not have the virtue to elevate. It was the Heaven of Our Supreme Being which, taken by an excess of love, the greatest, never before heard, lowered Itself, kissed the earth, elevating it to Itself, and formed the garment of my Humanity in order to cover Itself, hide, identify with It, unifying together in order to live life in common with It. And forming, not just one excess of love, but a chain of continuous excesses, It restricted my immensity within the little circle of my Humanity. For Me, power, immensity, strength, were my own nature, and it would have cost Me nothing to use them. What cost Me was that I was to restrict my immensity within my Humanity, and remain there as if I had neither power nor strength, while they were already with Me, and inseparable from Me; and I was to adapt Myself to the little acts of my Humanity - and only out of love, not because I was unable. So, I descended into all the human acts in order to elevate them and give them the divine form and order. Man, by doing his will, destroyed within himself the divine way and order; and my Divinity, covered by my Humanity, came to redo what he had destroyed. Can there be a greater love toward a creature so ungrateful?"

How the 'I love you' is the breath and the heartbeat of God; His love is generative and operating. The greatest prodigy is to enclose His life in the creature.

My little soul feels the extreme need to live in the arms of the Divine Fiat; and since I am just newly born, I am weak and cannot take one step by myself; and if I wanted to try doing it, I would slip, and would be in danger of hurting myself. So, fearing myself, I abandon myself more in Its arms, saying to It: 'If You want me to do it, let us do it together, for by myself I can do nothing.' And then I feel within me a continuous love, a motion, a breath, which is not my own, but so fused with mine, that I cannot tell for sure whether it is mine or not. So, while I was with these thoughts, my Sovereign Jesus, surprising me, all goodness, told me: "My blessed daughter, you must know that Our Divine Being is nothing other than a substance, all of love; so, the consequence of this is that everything, inside and outside of Us - everything is love. Hence, Our breath is love, and the air that We breathe is love; Our heartbeat is love, and while We palpitate love, it forms the circulation of pure love in Our Divine Being, with a race that never stops. And this circulation, while it preserves Our life in pure and perfect balance of love, gives love to all and would want love from all. Anything which is not love does not enter into Us, nor can it enter, or find a place in which to put itself; the fullness of Our love would burn up anything that would not be pure and holy love. But who directs this life of Ours, all of love? The light, the sanctity, the power, the all-seeingness, the immensity of Our Will, which fills Heaven and earth with Our Supreme Being, in such a way that there is not one point in which It is not present, and It can do nothing other than love and give love. But it is not a sterile love and Will - no, no; it is fecund, and generates continuously; it is operative, and within one single breath of love it forms the most beautiful and marvelous works, the prodigies most unheard-of, so much so, that all the human sciences feel small and ignorant before the littlest of Our works, and, confounded, they remain mute.

Now listen to Me, good daughter - to the great prodigy of Our life in the creature, such that no one else, as much love and power as they might have, can boast of being able to say: 'I can bilocate myself, and while I remain what I am, I can form another life of mine inside a person whom I love.' It would be a folly and absurd even just to say it; neither the angel nor the saint have this power - only your God, your Jesus, has this power, because Our Being is fullness, It is totality, It is everything and fills everything; and in the immensity in which It finds Itself, which envelops everything, It breathes, and with a simple breath We form Our divine life in the creature, and Our Will dominates her, nourishes her, makes her grow and forms the great prodigy of enclosing Our divine life within the small circle of the soul of the creature. Here then, your continuous 'I love You' is Our own, it is the breath of Our life, it is Our heartbeat which can palpitate nothing but 'I love you, I love you, I love you'. This serves for the sustenance of Our life, which can do nothing but love, give love and want love. So, while this 'I love you' is Ours, and is Our breath, it is also yours, such that while We give you love, you give Us love, and fused together, Our 'I love you' braids, meets, identifies with yours, and only one 'I love you' is heard, while they are two which, enrapturing each other, form a single one. But who feels this life, alive and palpitating, within herself? One who lives in Our Will. She feels Ours and We feel hers, as We live life together. All other creatures keep it suffocated, and live as if they did not have it; and my love gives, and does not receive, and I live in them with a dolorous and delirious love, while they don't even know that I am present in them. Therefore, be attentive, and let your 'I love You' be continuous, because it is nothing other than the outpouring of mine."

After this, I was doing my round in Creation, and by virtue of His divine immensity, I felt His life palpitating in the created things, awaiting with unspeakable love the heartbeat of the 'I love You' of my littleness. So I thought to myself: 'What would be the difference that passes between the way in which God is present in the Creation and the way in which He is present in the soul of the creature?' And my always lovable Jesus, all goodness, added: "My daughter, there is a great difference between the two: in the created things Our Divinity is present with the creating and preserving act, nor does It add or remove anything of what It has done. In fact, each created thing possesses the fullness of the good it encloses: the sun possesses the fullness of the light, the heavens the totality of the expanse of their azure mantle, the sea the fullness of the waters, and so forth. They can say: 'We have need of nothing; the abundance we possess is so great that we can give without exhaustion, and therefore we give perfect glory to Our Creator.' On the other hand, in the human creature Our divine act is creating, preserving, operating and growing. Our love did not say 'enough' for her - no, but it always wants to give and operate new things; and if she corresponds to Us, Our operating virtue is always in motion: now We give her new love, now new light, now new knowledge, new sanctity, new beauty. Our operating virtue never ceases - We want to give always, and by giving, We operate. By creating the creature We opened the commerce between Heaven and earth, and We put into traffic Our operating love - We, in giving, and she, in receiving; and, what's more, We want her together with Us in operating, We don't want to do it on Our own. If We were capable of sorrow, Our happiness would be embittered if We did not have her always together with Us. And from Our operating love and act arises Our ever growing act; so, the creature is under the rain of Our creating, preserving, operating and growing love and act."

The divine love is so great, that it reaches the point of exhausting itself in its works. Jealousy of the Divine Will. The little road of the creature within It.

The Divine Will keeps extending around me and inside of me. The jealousy of Its marvelous light is so great, that It wants nothing to enter into me other than what belongs to It, so as to let the life of the Divine Will be fulfilled and grow in me, and to let me watch Its divine ways, that I may copy them, being content with administering to me what is needed to be able to say to me: "The works of Our daughter might be little, because the creature can never reach Us, but they are modeled after Our own and are similar to them." But while my mind was following the light of the Divine Will, my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, all love told me: "My daughter, only then can an act be called fulfilled when the one who operates exhausts in it everything that was needed in order to fulfill it. If anything is lacking, or anything can be added, it can never be called a fulfilled work. Our way of operating has always been like this - We have exhausted everything: love, power, mastery, beauty, to render the work that came out of Us full, perfect, complete. It is not that We deplete Ourselves, because the Supreme Being is never depleted, but in that work that We have done, nothing more would fit in to render it complete; and if We had wanted to place more, that more which We might have placed would have been useless and of no advantage. And this We have done in the work of Creation, of Redemption, and of the designs of sanctity that We make for each creature. Who can say that something is lacking to Creation? Who can say that Our operating love did not exhaust itself in Redemption, as it was so great that there are still interminable seas which the creatures can take and have not taken; and these seas overflow around them because they want to bring their fruit, hide them inside their waves, so that the love, the works, the infinite pains of the God Humanate might take life in them? If We do not exhaust Ourselves, We are not content; the exhausted love brings Us rest and happiness; but if We have more to give and to do in Our works, it renders Us as though alert, We are all eyes, Our Divine Being is all in motion over what We are doing, to give so much, until It finds Our act fulfilled with the fullness of Our exhaustion.

Now, in Creation and in Redemption there were no oppositions against Our love, nor any impediment to Our exhausting Ourselves in order to render Our works complete, because We operated independently of anyone - no human will was involved that might prevent Us from exhausting Ourselves as We wanted. We suffer all the opposition on the part of creatures, for each design of sanctity that We want to fulfill with them; and - oh! into what constraints they put Us if the human will is not united with Ours, if it does not abandon itself into Our hands in such a way that We can handle it as We want, to give it the shape established by Us, to fulfill Our designs, and so exhaust Ourselves by forming Our fulfilled act. Ah! We cannot give what We want, or only the crumbs, the sparks of Our love, because the human will is always in act of rejecting Us and of opposing Us. Therefore, when We find a will that is willing, We abound - We overabound so much in giving, as to place Ourselves over her more than a mother over her child, to raise him beautiful and graceful, so as to make of him her glory, the honor of the child himself, and the good of the entire world. In the same way, We do not leave her one instant, We give always, not only to keep her occupied, but so as to give her no time to occupy herself with anything else, so that We may be able to say: 'Everything is Ours, We can exhaust Ourselves over this creature.' And since Our love is demanding, with justice it wants her to place, in all her acts, everything she can: her love, the whole of her life, so as to be able to say: 'You have exhausted Yourself for me, so much so, that I cannot contain what You have given me; and I too exhaust myself for You.' And so she goes on modeling herself after Our works, and she copies Our divine acts. Here then, the jealousy of the Divine Will, the light that constantly beats on you, inside and outside of you, because It wants everything for Itself, and It wants that your will, while you feel it alive, must have no life, so that Mine may form Its life in it and fulfill Its divine acts, and so may boast of having given everything It wanted to give: 'I have exhausted Myself in this creature, and she has exhausted herself for Me.' There is no happiness more pleasing, nor greater fortune than the exhaustion on both sides - God and the creature. But who produces all this good? An act of Our Will operating and fulfilled."

Then, after this, I continued my acts in the Divine Fiat, and following Its acts I arrived at Eden, where the divine love made me pause, and the Sovereign Jesus added: "My blessed daughter, Our Divine Being is most pure light, and Our attributes as many suns, one distinct from the other, but unified together and inseparable, forming a circle around Us. Now, in creating the creature, she was placed in these immense suns to form her little road. Now, who comes to form this little road? One who lives of Our Will. Our divine attributes line up to her right and to her left, they make room for her, to give her access and let her walk, to let her form her little road. And as she walks she does nothing other than gather drops of light, with which she remains all studded, such that it is an enchantment to see her. So, she nourishes herself with light, the light embellishes her, and she knows nothing else, nor can she speak of anything else but light. My attributes press around her, and they love this creature as the apple of their eyes; they feel her life in them, and their life in her, and they take on the task of raising her as beautiful as they can, and of not letting her take one step outside of the road that they have formed for her within their interminable light. So, one who lives in Our Will can be called 'the little road in the Divine Will'. This, in time, but in eternity the road will not be little, but long; or rather, these creatures will never stop, because this light has no end, and they will always have some road to walk, to take new beauties, new joys, new knowledges, of this light that never ends. Our love showed off more than ever in this Eden in creating man; and for the fulfillment of Our display, and to keep him more safe, We formed for him the road to be covered within the light of Our attributes. But he went out, because he did not want to do Our Will. But Our goodness was so great, that it did not close this road, but left it open for anyone who wants to live only of Divine Will."

How in all created things, God is always there to tell us: 'I love you'. How Jesus, in all the acts of His life, enclosed love, conquests, triumphs.

I was doing my round in the Divine Volition. I feel I am the tiny little butterfly that keeps going round - around and within Its light and Its ardent love, hoping that, by dint of going round and round, I will finally remain burned and consumed by Its divine light, to the point of feeling one with Its Most Holy Will. And since the first starting point is the Creation, about which, while I go around, I always find new surprises of love, I remain amazed, and my highest Jesus, to let me better comprehend, told me: "My daughter, how pleasing to Me is your dwelling in the acts that Our Supreme Being did in Creation, so much so, that I feel as though captivated and forced by my love to narrate to you Our love story that We had in Creation and in everything else We have done out of sheer and pure love toward the creatures. Coming into Our acts is the same as coming into Our home, and if We did not tell you anything of the many things We have to say, it would be like sending you back on an empty stomach, which Our love knows not how to do, nor does it want to. Therefore, you must know that Our Fiat pronounced Itself and stretched out this azure vault, and Our love studded it with stars, placing in each star a continuous act of love toward the creatures. So, each star says: 'Your Creator loves you, nor does He ever cease loving you. We are here, nor do we move a tiny bit, so as to say to you always: "I love you, I love you".'

But, move forward. Our Fiat created the sun, filling it with so much light as to be able to give light to the whole earth; and Our love, engaging in a contest with the sun, filled it with so many effects as to be innumerable: effects of sweetness, variety of beauty, of colors, of flavors, such that the earth, by merely being touched by this light, receives as life these admirable effects and its admirable and incessant singsong: 'I love you with my love of sweetness, I love you and I want to make you beautiful, I want to embellish you with my divine colors. And while I embellish the plants for you, I want to make you even more beautiful. Know that in this light I descend down to you, to say to you "I love you" with delight. I take delight in loving you and I am all ears to hear you say "I love you" to me.' I can say that the sun is filled with my continuous and repeated 'I love you's', but, alas! the creature does not give it a thought, nor is she attentive to receive this incessant love of Ours in so many ways and various forms, such that it would be enough to drown her and consume her with love. But We do not stop, We move forward; Our Fiat created the wind, and Our love filled it with effects. So, the freshness, the blowing, the whistling, the moaning, the screaming of the wind are repeated 'I love you's' that We say to the creature; and in the freshness We give her Our refreshing love, in the blowing We blow over her with Our love, to the point of moaning and screaming with Our ruling and incessant love; and so with the rest. The sea, the earth, were created by Our Fiat; the fish and the plants that the sea and earth produce are the effects of Our love which, powerfully and repeatedly, says: 'I love you in all things, I love you everywhere, I love you within yourself. And in the face of so much love of mine, O please! do not deny Me your love' Yet, it seems that they have no ears to listen to Us, nor a heart to love Us; and this is why, when We find someone who listens to Us, We keep her as the venting of Our love, and as the little secretary of the story of Creation."

Having said this, He remained silent, and I continued in the acts of the Divine Will; and as I reached those of Redemption, my beloved Jesus added: "My blessed daughter, keep listening to my long love story. I could say that it is an interminable chain of incessant love, never interrupted. After all, I created the creature to love her, to keep her united with Me, and by not loving her I would go against my own Will, I would act against my own nature, which is all love. And besides, I created her because I felt the need to externize my love, and to let her hear the continuous whispering 'I love you, I love you, I love you.' Now, you must know that from the moment I was conceived, and during the whole course of my life, inside all the acts I did I enclosed love, conquest and triumph. My operating was quite different from that of the creatures: doing or not doing, suffering or not suffering, was in my power; my all-seeingness would hide nothing from Me. And I, first I placed my Will in my acts, I enclosed fullness of sanctity, fullness of love, fullness of all goods; and then, with full knowledge, I offered Myself to operating or suffering, according to what I Myself wanted; and by this I rendered Myself conqueror and triumpher of my acts. But do you know for whom I made these conquests and these triumphs? For the creatures. I loved them too much, and I wanted to give, I wanted to be the Jesus victorious, I Myself giving them my conquests and my triumphs in order to win them to Me. So, my life down here was nothing other than a continuous act of heroic love that never says enough; of conquests and of triumphs, to render my children happy. And I did this in everything: if I set out on the way, I possessed the virtue of being able to go from one city to another without making use of my steps, but I wanted to walk, to place my love in each step - in each step that ran and ran, and I rendered Myself conqueror and triumpher of my steps. Oh! if creatures paid attention to Me, they would hear in my steps the continuous cry: 'I run - I run in search of creatures, to love them and to be loved.' In the same way, if I worked with Saint Joseph to procure the necessary means of life, it was love that was running, those were conquests and triumphs that I was making. In fact, a Fiat was enough for Me to have everything at my disposal, and as I made use of my hands for a little earning, the Heavens were stupefied, the Angels remained enraptured and mute in seeing Me lower Myself to the most humble actions of life. But my love had its venting, it filled my acts, it overflowed from them, and I was always the divine conqueror and triumpher. Taking food was not necessary for Me, but I took it to make more love run, and to make new conquests and triumphs. So, I gave course to the humblest and lowliest things of life, which for Me were not necessary, but I did it to form many distinct ways through which to let my love run, and to form new conquests and triumphs over my Humanity, to give them as gift to those whom I so much loved. And therefore, one who does not receive my love and does not love Me, forms my hardest martyrdom, and puts my love on the cross.

But, I move forward. In order to form Redemption, a tear, a sigh, was enough for Me, but my love would not have been content; being able to give and do more, my love would have remained hampered within itself, and could not have claimed the boast of saying: 'I have done everything, I have suffered everything, I have given you everything - my conquests are superabundant, my triumph is complete.' I can say that I reached the point of confounding the human ingratitude with my love, with my excesses and with unheard-of pains. So, I Myself placed in each pain the intensity of the most intense and bitter pain, the confusions most humiliating, the barbarities most cruel; and after I endowed it with all the most painful effects, which only a Man-God could endure, I offered Myself to suffer it, and - oh! the admirable conquests in my pains, and the full triumph that my love obtained! No one would have been able to touch Me, had I not wanted so; and here is all the secret: my pains were voluntary, wanted by Me, and therefore they contain the miraculous secret, the winning force, the love that transfixes; and they have the virtue of overwhelming the whole world, and of changing the face of the earth."

How the life of Jesus was a continuous abandonment in the hands of the Father. One who lives in the Divine Will never interrupts her journey. Example of the clock. The soul takes Heaven in her power and storms It.

I continue to think about the pains of my passionate Jesus, and as I reached the last breath of His life, I heard, resounding in the depth of my heart: "Into your hands, Oh Father, I commend my spirit." It was the most sublime lesson for me, the calling of my whole being into the hands of God, the full abandonment into His paternal arms. And while my mind wandered amid many reflections, my suffering Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: "My blessed daughter, my life down here, as it began, so it ended. From the first instant of my conception it was a continued act of mine; I can say that in each instant I placed Myself in the hands of my Celestial Father. This was the most beautiful homage that His Son gave Him, the adoration most profound, the sacrifice most heroic and complete, the love of sonship most intense that I gave Him. My full abandonment in His hands rendered my Humanity speaking, and with authoritative voice, asking for everything and obtaining everything I wanted. To a Son of His, abandoned in His arms, nothing could my Celestial Father deny; my abandonment of each instant was the act most pleasing, so much so, that I wanted to crown the last breath of my life with the words: ‘Father, into your hands I commend my spirit.’ The virtue of abandonment is the greatest virtue, it is to commit God to taking care of the one who is abandoned in His arms. Abandonment says to God: ‘I don’t want to know anything of myself - this life of mine is yours, not mine; and yours is mine.’ Therefore, if you want to obtain everything, if you really want to love Me, live abandoned in my arms, let Me hear the echo of each instant of my life: ‘Into your hands I abandon the whole of myself’ - and I will carry you in my arms as the dearest of my daughters.”

After this, I was following everything that the Divine Will has done, and I felt an order in me, one after the other, and I was supposed to follow them¹¹⁶. So, I remained surprised, and my sweet Jesus added: “My little daughter of my Will, you must know that one who does my Divine Will and lives in It cannot do without keeping, ever present to her, all the acts done by It, because my Will holds everything within Itself, and everything It has done always in act. Therefore, it is no wonder that in the soul in whom It reigns It holds all of Its acts with all the order It kept in creating them; and the creature, with all ease, follows them one by one, to unite herself with It, as though wanting to do what my own Will did. If she is together with It, how can she abstain from doing what It does, and from placing into the field of action, identified with It, her little love, her adoration, her ‘thank You’, her attentions and wonderments at works so great? Even more, you must know that my Will winds the soul up, and she offers herself to receive it. All Our works are caught in this winding; and the soul, following the winding, follows and becomes aware of all Our works. It happens as to a clock: if it is winded, it moves its little wheels, it marks the minutes, the hours, and the one who possesses it has the good of knowing all the hours of the day. But if it is not winded, the clock does not mark anything, it is as if it had no life, and the one who possesses it does not have the good of knowing the distinct hours of the day.

Now, We can call one who lets Our Will reign “Our clock”, who, being winded, marks the minutes and the hours of Our works, and has the good of remaining aware of the hours of the day of Our Divine Will. Now, if one winds the clock, it moves until the winding is exhausted, nor does it interrupt its journey. In the same way, the soul, if she receives the winding of my Will, must do her journey; and if she wanted to stop, she cannot, because the winding moves the little wheels of her soul and makes her go forward in the great day of the hours of Our works. Therefore, be attentive to receive the good of this divine winding, if you want to know the hours of the day of the Supreme Fiat. More so, since when the soul disposes herself to do my Will and to follow It, all the things It has done compete in order to enter into that act. In fact, being a single act, It does not have detached acts, and therefore everything It did in the order of Creation, of Redemption, in the Angels, in the Saints - It encloses everything in the work of the creature that operates in It; because if It gives Itself, It does not give Itself by half, but in Its entirety. And just as the sun, if it gives itself to the earth, does not give half of itself, but the whole of itself, with the fullness of its light, and because of this, marvels take place on the face of the earth, the same with my Will: if the creature calls It as life into her acts, It gives Itself with all the fullness of Its light, sanctity, power and works. If It did not carry everything, it would be like entering into the creature and into her acts like a king without cortege, without an army, without creative power, and therefore like keeping the wonders that We can perform as though inoperative. Ah, no! no! One who operates in Our Will must be able to say: ‘I take Heaven in my power, I storm Heaven, and I enclose It into my act’.”

¹¹⁶ the acts of the Divine Will

One who does the human will takes earth, and one who does the Divine takes Heaven. How Jesus knows how to do all arts. Delight He takes in working. How the creature is the noble princess who descends from the height of Heaven.

My abandonment in the Divine Fiat continues. I feel that for me the living in It is an extreme necessity, and if I did not do it I would feel the ground missing under my feet, the heavens missing over my head, the air to breathe, the sun that illumines me and warms me, the food that nourishes me. So, how could I live? And if I lived, what an unhappy life would mine be? My God, free me from living even just one instant outside of your Will.

But while I was thinking this, my always lovable Jesus, making me His short little visit, told me: "My daughter, to live outside of my Divine Will is to live without the connection with the divine life, separated from Heaven, as if one had no friendship, knowledge or relationship with her Celestial Father. It can be said that while she knows that she has her Father, yet she does not know Him, she lives as though far away, and therefore she does not partake in His divine goods. More so, since for each act of human will that she does, she keeps collecting earth, and earth is what she knows and loves, and she partakes of the unhappinesses produced by what is earthly, which she keeps acquiring with her human acts. So, the human will without the connection with the Divine knows how to produce much earth, sowing passions, thorns, sins, and collecting miseries, sadnesses, which embitter her life. Each act of human will does nothing other than take a little bit of earth, while for each act of my Will that she does, the creature loses the human ground and acquires the ground of Heaven. Therefore, for each act of Divine Will that she keeps on doing, she takes Heaven, and she keeps expanding her celestial properties; and I Myself administer to her the sowing, and making Myself the Celestial Farmer, I sow together with her the most beautiful virtues, and there I form my dwelling, my refuge, my delights, and I find no difference between being in Heaven together with the Saints in the celestial regions, and being in the heaven of this creature. Or rather, I take more delight in being in the heaven of the human will on earth because in it I have work to do, in order to expand this heaven even more; so, I can make new gains, receive new love. Though it is sacrifice, work has the virtue of producing new inventions, new beauties, new arts; it is from work that the most astounding things arise, the highest and deepest sciences; and I, knowing much about all arts and all sciences, work in this heaven and in it I form the most beautiful works, the inventions most artistic and new, and I communicate the highest and deepest sciences. So, now I make Myself Teacher, and I teach the most sublime sciences; now Artisan, and I form living statues in this heaven; now I act as Farmer, and my creative hands change and transform the little ground of the creature into a heaven. I take so much pleasure in using all arts, and I amuse Myself so much, that now I do one work now another, and now I invent new things; and novelties always bring more pleasure, more delight and more glory; and these terrestrial heavens will also serve as new surprise and contentment for the whole Celestial Court. Wherever my Divine Will reigns as life in the creature, I can do anything, she becomes the raw material in my hands to be able to carry out my divine works; and being able to work is the thing most pleasing to Me, it is the sweetest rest - it seems that work and rest alternate.

Now, in Heaven, in my Celestial Fatherland, there are no works, either on my part or on the part of creatures; one who enters into those celestial regions places her 'enough', and says to herself: 'My work is over, what I have done I have done, nor can I add even one more comma to my work, to my sanctity.' And I cannot make new conquests in their souls, because death says confirmation; nor can they take one more step forward. So, there are no works in the Celestial Fatherland, but everything is triumph and glory; I can say that the whole display that I make, of giving new joys, new happinesses and continued beatitudes, with which I keep the whole of Heaven enraptured, is all on my part, but in them I cannot acquire anything more. This is why I like more these terrestrial heavens of the human will, because the conquests, the works, the delights that I find in them cannot be there where everything is triumph and glory - not even in the regions of my Divine Fatherland. Therefore, be attentive and never go out of my Will, and I promise you never to interrupt my divine works in your soul."

Then, I continued to think about the great good that the Divine Will brings to the creature, and my Sovereign Jesus added: “My blessed daughter, you must know that Our love and ardent desire to keep the creature together with Us is so great, that as soon as she is created, We assign to her the royal place in Our Divine Will. So, each creature has her place of honor in Our Divine Royal Palace, therefore her beginning, her first act of life, both in eternity and in time, is in Our Fiat. She was not there in the world, and We loved her; and longing for her, We not only gave her her place, but placed Our love, Our sanctity, Our power, light and beauty as cortege around her. She is the noble princess that descends from the height of the Heavens to cross the exile; but Our Will does not leave her, It descends together with her, It presses Itself around her, It crosses the exile together with her. In each act that she does, in the pains, joys or encounters, It places Its prime divine act, that she may maintain her nobility and her state of princess. And once It has filled her with all goods, to the point of having no more space in which to place more goods, It takes her up to Heaven again, to the heights of the spheres, and, as though triumphant, It points her out to the whole Celestial Court. Here is what my Divine Will wants to do and knows how to do in the creature. But, to Our sorrow, We see that as she descends into the exile, she no longer thinks about her royal place, or about the nobility of her origin, and she would want to slip away from Our Will which, more than tender mother, carries her clasped in her arms. And making use of the doors of the senses that We gave her, she descends unto the lowest ground of her human will. We had given these doors in order for her to ascend back to Us, so that she might make her little escapes from the exile into the bosom of her Creator; but she makes use of them to make her little escapes into miseries, weaknesses, passions, which disenoble her to the point that she can no longer be recognized as the princess of Heaven, but as the servant of the earth. But, in spite of this, We do not close Our doors to her - which are Our love, Our paternal goodness, Our compassionate mercy, Our waiting for her - and as soon as We see that she closes her doors to come into Our Will, We go toward her, We open wide Our doors, and gazing upon her, from beautiful to ugly, with the garment of princess torn and dirty, We do not make it a reproach for her, but with compassion, all paternal, We say to her: ‘Where have you been? Poor daughter, how you have reduced yourself! Did you see how much evil you have done by living at the low ground of your human will, disunited from Ours? You have walked without guidance, without light, without food, without defense. Therefore, don’t do it any more, so that, as We take you back, you may make up for the good lost.’ We know that the creature without Our Divine Will can do no good; it is as if she wanted to see without eyes, walk without feet, live without food. Therefore, be attentive never to go out of my Divine Will if you want to find strength, light, support, and your very Jesus at your disposal.”

The will, symbolized by the blowing of the breath, which either ignites or extinguishes. The Divine Will, offerer of Its acts in the act of the creature.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues, and my poor mind many times is under the empire of two currents: that is, the great good of the Divine Will, which elevates the soul over everything and carries her up even into the arms of her dear Celestial Father, where everything is joy, feast and divine smiles, such that, inebriated, the soul forgets everything - the earth, the miseries - because in the Divine Will one can have not even the memory of evil, otherwise the happiness would no longer be full; and in the other current the abyss of the human will, which casts the soul into all miseries, and brings her almost into the arms of the devil, that he may tyrannize her as he pleases.

But while I was thinking of this, my Sovereign Jesus, making Himself felt close to me, told me: “My blessed daughter, as the soul enters into my Volition, with Its empire It says to her: ‘Forget everything, even the home of your mother earth - here one lives of Heaven, nor is there any room for miseries and for unhappinesses. My light destroys everything, and it transforms evils into good.’ You must know that the will is symbolized by the blowing of the breath, which has the virtue of igniting and of extinguishing. If the will is for igniting, by blowing over a little spark it can ignite a great fire; if then it is for extinguishing the spark, by blowing over it, it takes life away from it and reduces it to ashes. Such is the human will: if it wants Mine, it blows in all its acts, and Mine animates this blowing with Its power; and its little acts, like little sparks, change into flames. And as it repeats the acts, so is the blowing repeated, in such a way that the whole creature turns into a flame of light of Divine Will. On the other hand, if she wants to do her will, as she does it she blows and extinguishes everything, and is left in a deep night, with not even the good of the little sparks. So, one who lives in my Will acquires the light by nature, and in all her acts she sees light, and they speak to her of light. On the other hand, one who does her own acquires darkness and night by nature, and darkness is unleashed from all of her acts, which speak to her of miseries, of fears, of worries that render life unbearable.”

Then, my mind continued to think about the Divine Will, and I felt It inside and outside of me, all attention, so much so, that It wanted to give me everything and do everything together with me. And my sweet Jesus added: “Little daughter of my Will, you must know that as the soul decides to live in my Will, Its love toward her is so great, that as she is about to take one step, my Fiat offers Its own in that act, in such a way that the human will remains as the field, and my act as the life. So, as she palpitates, It offers Its divine heartbeat; as she breathes, It offers Its breath; as she is about to speak, It offers Its word in the voice of the creature; as she thinks, It offers Its thought; and in the same way, if she operates, if she walks, It offers Its motion and Its steps. So, my Divine Will is the offerer of Its acts in the acts of the creature. Here then, Its incessant love, Its tireless attentions - because It wants to form the whole of Its life, as much as it is possible for a creature; in her It wants to find Its sanctity, Its heartbeat, Its breath, Its word, and so forth. And how can It find it if It does not give it and offer it continuously? Therefore, there is such identification between the Divine Will and the creature who wants to live in It, that they become inseparable from each other; nor would my Will tolerate the slightest separation in one who offers herself to let It form Its life. So, be attentive, and let your flight in my Divine Will be continuous.”

Little place of love that the soul holds within her Creator, and little place that God holds in the soul. How sanctity is formed by degrees of love. Seed sown by Jesus; how He first does deeds and then words.

I felt all immersed in the Supreme Fiat, and repeating my round in It, as I united myself to Its acts, so I felt Its waves of love coming to me, which, pouring upon me, brought me the love of my Creator. Oh! how happy I felt in feeling loved by God. I believe that there is no greater happiness, either in Heaven or on earth, than for the creature to occupy a place in the bosom of the Celestial Father, who makes His waves of love arise, to love her.

But while I felt I was under these waves, my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness told me: “My blessed daughter, going around in Our acts, which We did both in Creation and in Redemption for love of creatures, makes new love arise from within Our Divine Being, and invests the one who unites with Our divine acts. By uniting herself with Our works, she prepares the little place in which to receive Our waves of love; and as she receives them, she too loves Us with new love and forms her waves of love for her Creator, in such a way that she holds her little place of love in Our Divine Being, and We hold Our place in the creature. You must know that true sanctity is formed by the degrees of love with which you are loved by God; and it is then that this love takes possession - when the creature loves. When she receives His divine love and she loves, God disposes Himself to love her more with new love. To be loved by God with new love is the greatest act that God does toward the creature, and all the sanctity, the glory, is constituted for as many times as she has been loved by God, and for as many times as she has loved Him. In fact, you must know that Our Supreme Being loves all and always in a universal and general way; to this He adds a special and direct love toward the one who, as We love her, gives Us her love. So, if the creature has been loved by God with special love once, three times, ten or a hundred times, according to that number so many degrees of sanctity, and therefore of glory, does she acquire. See, then, going around in Our Will, uniting yourself to Its acts, calls Us to love you with special and new love, and God calls you in order to be loved with your new and special love. And God Himself will be your witness who will say to all - to Heaven and to the earth: 'It is true - I have loved her, but she has loved Me. I can say that my love called hers and hers called mine to love each other.' Therefore, one who lives in Our Will secures Our love, nor do We have the sorrow that it might be rejected; on the contrary, as the sign that she has received it, she responds by giving Us her love."

Then, I was thinking about the Divine Will, and a thousand thoughts crowded my mind with doubts, with yearnings, with certainties, with longings for wanting the Divine Will as primary life of my life. I wanted Its sweet empire inside and outside of me. Now, while I was doing this, the ever lovable Jesus added: "My little daughter of my Will, you must know that when I manifest a good, a truth, it is the surest sign that I want to give that good or the gift of a truth of mine as property of the creature. If it were not so, I would be deceiving her, enticing her, making her waste time with a thousand of useless desires, without the possession of the good that I made known to her. I am incapable of deceiving anyone, or of doing useless things; on the contrary, first I decide to give that good, and then I manifest the nature of that good; and while I manifest it I already place the seed in the depth of the soul, that she may begin to feel the beginning of the new life of the good that I made known to her. And the continuation of my manifestations that I make known to her serves to make the seed germinate, to asperse it and water it in order to form the whole of the life of the gift I want to give her. And the sign that the soul has accepted and welcomed the new life of the gift I want to give her is the fact that I continue to manifest the different qualities, the beautiful prerogatives, the immense value that my gift possesses. And after I have made sure that she already possesses, in its entirety, the life of the gift that I wanted to give her, then do I make known to her my aims, the crafting I have performed in her, and the gift which she already possesses. My wisdom is infinite, my industries of love are innumerable - first I do deeds and then words, which serve to instruct the creature on how to receive, preserve and make use of the good that I have given and made known to her. To give a good without making it known is like wanting to give food to the dead - and I have never had anything to do with the dead, but with the living. To make it known without giving it would be a mockery, nor would it be the custom of Our divine nature.

So, if I have manifested to you so many truths on my Divine Will, it is because I want to give you the gift of Its life operating in you. If it were not so, I would never have spoken to you so much; my mere speaking is messenger and bearer and depository of the great gift of my Divine Will - not only for you, but for the whole entire world. Therefore, be attentive, so that my seed may be pulverized in you to the point of changing into your nature; and then will you experience, with facts, the reigning of my Will in your soul. In fact, did I not do the same with my Celestial Mother? First I formed Her, I prepared Her, I endowed Her, I prepared the place, I extended my Heaven in the depth of Her soul, I made known to her many things - and as I made them known to her, so did I give them to Her as gift. I could say that We, Mother and Son, first did the deeds, and when nothing was lacking to my sanctity, to my divine decorum, to the new Heaven that was coming to dwell upon earth, then did I manifest to her the secret - that I had already chosen Her as my Mother. And as I manifested the secret, so did She feel Herself the Mother of Her Creator. See then, the necessity of manifesting what I want to do with the creature, so that God and the creature may want the same thing; and the necessity for my very Incarnation to take place, not before, but in the very act in which She learned that I already wanted Her as my Mother, and She accepted to be so. Therefore, it takes great attention when I make known a good that I want to give to the creature. She does not know where my aims are heading to, I do not make everything known at the beginning, but I proceed gradually, manifesting and operating, in order to get there where I want; and if she is not attentive and does not follow Me, it can happen that she might remain half of the way, and I will have the sorrow of not being able to give my gifts, and of not being able to fulfill my designs.”

How the Divine Will is permanent miracle. One who lives in It is the bearer of the divine works and her fields are the Creation and the Redemption.

I am always around the Supreme Fiat. Its sweet empire, Its powerful attractions, Its kiss of light with which It comes to meet all my acts to deposit in them and enclose Itself inside in order to form Its life, is the sweetest enchantment for my little soul; and amid wonderment and stupefaction, I exclaim: ‘Oh! Divine Will, how much You love me, to the point of lowering Yourself into my little act, to enclose in it your operating life.’ But while my mind was wandering within It, my sweet Jesus, who also enjoyed the charm and the admirable ways of His Volition, all tenderness and goodness, told me: “Dearest daughter of my Divine Will, my Divine Volition is, of Its own, a continuous miracle. To descend into the lowliness of the act of the creature in order to form in it Its act, Its life, is the greatest of miracles, which no one is given the ability to perform. Its investing virtue penetrates everywhere; with Its kiss of light It captivates the act of the creature, It moves it, transforms it, conforms it, and with Its miraculous virtue It forms Its act in that of the creature. And this, without destroying that of the creature - on the contrary, It makes use of it as the space in which to implant Its act; and It uses it as the void in which to form Its life, so much so, that on the outside one can see the human act, while inside appear the wonders, the sanctity, the great miracle of the divine act. So, one who does my Will and lives in It has no need of miracles - she lives under the rain of the miracles of my Volition, and possesses within herself the fount, the source, which transforms the creature into the miraculous virtue of my Divine Will, in such a way that in her appear the miracle of invincible patience, the miracle of perennial love toward God, the miracle of continuous prayer without ever tiring. And if pains appear, they are miracles of conquests, of triumphs, of glory, which It encloses in her pains. For one who lives in my Will, It wants to give to the soul the miracle of divine heroism, and in the pains It puts the weight and the infinite value - It puts the imprint, the seal, of the pains of your Jesus.

You must know, my daughter, that Our love toward one who lives in the Divine Will is so great, that We give her the gift of everything We did in Creation and Redemption, and she makes all that is Ours her own; and because it is hers and Ours, and she seeks the Divine Will as though naturally in all her acts, she finds herself now in the heavens, in the sun, in the sea, and so forth. She feels within herself all the sanctity of Our works, which are also hers; and feeling identified with them, she comprehends what it means to have a heaven always stretched out, a sun that always gives light, a sea that constantly murmurs, a wind that with its waves brings to all the caresses of its Creator. And she feels herself heaven, stars, sun, sea, wind, and - oh! how she loves Us; and with the enrapturing force of her love, which is Our love, she comes to place everything before Our divine throne, and - oh! how enraptured We feel by her notes and currents of love that she forms. We can say that if We keep this creature on earth, We keep her to let her be the bearer of Our works; We spread them in the Creation, and it seems like she gathers them for Us, to come to tell Us: ‘How much You have loved me!’ And how much she loves Us! But she is yet more beautiful when she passes into the kingdom of my acts in Redemption. With how much love does she move from one act to the other, how she kisses them, embraces them, adores them, thanks them, encloses them in her heart, and, all love, says to Me: ‘Jesus, your life on earth ended, leaving your works, your words, your pains. Now it is my turn to continue your life. Therefore, everything You did must serve for my life, otherwise I cannot make of myself another Jesus. If You do not give me everything, I can neither form nor continue your life upon earth.’ And I, all love, say to her: “My daughter, everything is yours; take of Me whatever you want - even more, the more you take, the more content I will be, and the more I will love you.”

But what is most beautiful about this happy creature is that, while she wants everything and takes everything, she feels that she cannot contain what she has received, she comes to her Jesus, pours herself completely into Me, also her littleness, her little will, and - oh! how happy I am, I can say that these are continuous exchanges of life that we make - I to her, and she to Me. The strength of the union with one who lives in Our Will - between she and We - is so great that neither can We put her aside in all Our works, nor can she remain apart. If this could be, it would happen as if one wanted to divide the light of the sun in two; but it is impossible to divide the unity of its light, and if anyone tried to do it, he would be left confounded, and the light, with the strength of its unity, would laugh at him. Or, it would be like wanting to split the heavens, separate the might of the wind, the unity of the air - all impossible things, because the whole of their life, the strength that they possess, is in the unity. Such is the condition in which one who lives in Our Will finds herself: the whole of her strength, her prerogative, her beauty, her sanctity, is in the one force and unity with her Creator. Therefore, be attentive, and let your life be in Us, with Us, and with Our works.”

Precipice, doors and living hell of the human will. Doors, stairways and living paradise of the Divine Will. Necessity of Its knowledges; royalty that the soul acquires. The daughter of the great King.

My poor mind many times struggles between the infinite beauty, power, value and innumerable prerogatives of the Eternal Volition, and the precipices, ugliness and evils of the human volition. My God, what a contrast - such that if everyone could see it, they would lay down their lives rather than do their own will. And while I was feeling all trembling because of the grave evils which my will could hurl me into, my beloved Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My blessed daughter, courage, it is necessary that I let you know where one can reach by holding my Divine Will as one’s life, and into what abyss one hurls himself, who lets himself be dominated by his own will. Even more, each evil I make known to you about it is a door to the human will that I have you close, and a guard that I give you, so that, if you wanted to enter again and descend into the precipice of the human will, the guard may reject you and keep the door shut. And every time I add to it, by letting you know more evils of the human will – those are nothing other than defenses and guards that I add, that they may not let you descend into the depths of its abyss. In fact, you must know that all the evils of the human will are nothing other than many distinct doors which it possesses in order to descend into the kingdom of the evils, of the vices, of the horrifying terrors of a living hell, to the point of rendering oneself nauseating, unbearable, to God and to oneself. And I, by making its evils known, do nothing other than wall up the doors and place my seal, saying: ‘This door is to be opened no more.’” Now, just as the human will has its doors, its stairways in order to descend - not to ascend - into the abyss of evils, so does my Divine Will have Its doors, Its stairways in order to ascend, Its heavens, Its immense goods, and forms the living paradise of one who possesses It; and each knowledge that regards It is a door that is opened, it is a stairway that is formed, it is a way that opens before you, which you must cover in order to possess, with facts, what you have known.

See then, the great good of the many knowledges I have manifested to you - they are as many doors that facilitate for you the entrance into Its Kingdom; and in each door I placed an Angel as guard, that he may hold your hand and lead you safely into the regions of the Divine Will. Each knowledge is an invitation and a divine strength that is given to you, making you feel the extreme need, the absolute necessity, to live of Divine Will. As It makes Itself known, so It stretches out Its hands toward you to hold you, and It leads you, in Its arms, into that very knowledge It manifested to you, It adapts it to your capacity, molds your soul, that it may enter into you as vital humor, as blood, as air, and may produce in you the life, the goods which Its knowledge possesses. And taking the lead, more than mother It remains on the watch to see when Its daughter has absorbed the last drop of the good It made known to her, so as to open Its breast again and pour Itself inside out, into her daughter, making known to her more value, other effects which the life of my Volition contains, and so repeat Its crafting, because It wants to see in her the value of Its life, the effects, the substance of Its goods. Now, the knowledges on my Divine Will instruct the human volition, and the creature acquires cognition and reason - that not only is it justice to let It reign and dominate as primary life in her soul, but it is a highest good that she receives, a great honor and glory, that this Holy Volition, by dominating, reaches the point of giving her the state of divine royalty, so that she may feel herself the daughter of the great King. So, the royalty is also her own property.

When the creature has come to comprehend all this by way of knowledges and of lessons given to her by my Divine Volition, everything is done, my Will has won the human will, and the human will has won the Divine Will. The knowledges about It are so necessary as to serve for drying up the bad humors, substituting them with holy humors; they are like the sun, darting through the human volition, and communicating to it its life, its sanctity, and the ardent desire to possess the good it contains. Therefore, be attentive to listen to its lessons, and correspond to such a great good.”

How one who lives in the Divine Will receives the creative power of the continuous creation.
Bonding with the Divine Will.

My abandonment in the Fiat continues. I am just newly born and I feel the need to remain in Its arms to drink in large gulps the milk of Its truths, to receive the waves of Its light, the sweet refreshment of Its warmth. I feel that the Divine Volition too wants to keep me in Its arms, clasped to Its bosom of light, to be able to infuse in me the continuous act of Its life operating in me. In fact, life means to have acts that never cease, otherwise it could not be called life. Therefore, if I did not want to remain in Its arms to receive these continuous reflections of Its life, or if It did not want to keep me, I would not be able to form Its life in me. So, the word ‘life’ would be reduced to a mere word, or a painted picture, not a reality. My Jesus, O please! do not permit this, and let it be that the reality of Its life may be formed in my soul.

But while I was trying to remain in the arms of the Divine Will, my Sovereign Jesus, visiting my littleness, told me: “Daughter of my Heart, you are right in feeling the extreme need to be in the arms of the Divine Will. In fact, to be in Its arms means to place oneself at Its disposal and to commit It to forming Its life in the creature. If she does not place herself in Its arms, she puts herself as though at a great distance, and life cannot be formed from afar, but in closeness - or rather, by being identified with the very life that one wants to receive. No mother conceives her baby from a distance, but inside her own womb; no seed germinates and forms its plant if it is not identified with and hidden under the earth. In the same way, to say that I want to form the life of the Divine Will in me and not to remain in Its arms, identified with It, bonding with It, to live of Its very omnipotent breath, is impossible.

You must know that Our Supreme Being uses the same creative power which It used in Creation, and continues to use it in the acts that the creature does in the Divine Will. Each act she does in It undergoes a new creation; and my Fiat, by virtue of Its creative power, remains conceived in the act of the creature. A continuous alternation takes place: she offers the act, and my Divine Will creates, and conceives Itself in her act; and while It is conceived, It forms Its life and makes it grow with the nourishment of Its life and of Its love. The Heavens are stupefied, and the amazement is such that they become mute before one act alone of the creature who contains within herself the creative force of the conception of the Divine Fiat. And just as she, by remaining in Its arms, places herself at Its disposal, so We, by holding her in Our arms, place Ourselves at her disposal, and she gives Us her sweet pledge, that We may make of it whatever We want. So, her life, her acts, are as many pledges that she gives Us; and We, holding her pledges, feel confident that We can put out Our creative virtue and operate as God in the act of the creature. You must know that when Our Will operates, whether within Ourselves or in the human act, It never puts Its creative virtue aside, nor can It do so, because It possesses it by nature; therefore, Its acting is always creation. Hence, one who lives in Our Will, receives into her act Its creating act, and - oh! how many marvels take place! Therefore, be attentive, and reverent and grateful - receive into yourself, into your acts, this creating virtue that wants to do great things, not small, which alone are worthy of Our adorable Will.”

The intention forms the life of the action; it forms the veil with which to hide the divine action.
The hidden Actor.

My poor mind is always occupied by the Divine Fiat, which wants to make Itself, not only life, but also nourishment. In fact, life is not enough if one has nothing with which to satiate his hunger - it would be like dying of starvation. Here is why very often It gives me the delicious and celestial food of some more truths that regard the Divine Volition, so that It may not only nourish me, but Its life may grow in me. And - oh! how many times I feel the need for blessed Jesus to tell me something that regards His Will - because I feel I am dying of hunger. And my lovable Jesus, as He Himself wants and gives me this hunger, in visiting my little soul, told me: “My daughter, your desire to be nourished by my nourishing word wounds my Heart, and I, wounded, run to you to give you my divine nourishment, which I alone can give you. My word is life, and it forms in you the divine life; it is light, and it illumines you, leaving in you the illuminating virtue that always gives you light; it is fire, and it makes warmth arise within you; it is food, and it nourishes you.

Now, you must know that I do not look at the external action of the creature, but at the intention that forms the life of the action. The intention is like the soul of the action, and the action becomes like the veil of the intention. It happens as with the soul to the body: it is not the body that thinks, that speaks, that palpitates, that operates and walks, but it is the soul that gives life to the thought, to the word, to the motion. So, the body is veil to the soul, such that, while it covers it and makes itself the bearer of it, yet, the vital part, the action, the step, is of the soul. Such is the intention - true life of the actions. Now, if you call my Divine Will as life of your mind, as heartbeat of your heart, as action of your hands, and so forth, you will form the life of the intelligence of my Will in your mind, the life of Its actions in your hands, Its divine step in your feet, in such a way that everything you do will serve as veil to the divine life, which, with your intention, you have formed in the interior of your acts. But what is this intention? It is your will which, making appeal to Mine, empties itself of itself and forms the void within its act in order to give the place to the action of my Will. And making itself the veil, it hides the extraordinary action of a God even in the most ordinary and natural actions, so much so, that on the outside one sees common actions, but if the veil of the human volition is removed, one finds, enclosed within, the operative virtue of the divine action. And this forms the sanctity of the creature; not the diversity of the actions, not the works that make noise - no, but the common life, the necessary actions of life, which the creature cannot do without; these are all veils that can hide Our Will, and become the field in which God Himself lowers Himself to become the hidden Actor of His divine actions. And just as the body veils the soul, so the will veils God, it hides Him, and by means of its ordinary actions, it forms the chain of the extraordinary actions of God in her soul. Therefore, be attentive - call my Will in everything you do, and It will never deny you Its act, so as to form in you, as much as it is possible for a creature, the fullness of Its sanctity.”

If the Divine Will reigns, God seeks Himself and finds Himself in the creature, and she seeks herself in God and finds herself in His divine center.

I felt my poor and little intelligence as though crowded with many thoughts regarding the Divine Will; and I thought to myself: ‘And why does Jesus have so much interest, and He insists, yearns, prays and wants the creatures to pray for the His Divine Will to come and reign? It is true that for the creature this will be the greatest gain - to have in her power an immense Volition, a power that is never exhausted, a love that always burns, a light that is never extinguished, a sanctity that seems incredible and that always grows; it can be said that there is nothing left for her to desire or to possess, because she possesses everything. But for God? What could be His gain, His glory, His honor?’

So, while I was thinking of this and other things, my sovereign Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness, told me: “My daughter, dearest daughter of my Will, the reason, the cause, the purpose for which I so much long for my Divine Will to take Its place, Its dominion, and to act as sovereign in the creature, is because Our Supreme Being goes in search of Himself in the human littleness. Think well of what it means: a God who goes in search of Himself. But where? Perhaps in the expanse of the heavens? No. In the magnitude of the light that covers the whole earth? No. Perhaps in the multiplicity of the waters of the sea? No; but in the little human heart. We want to hide Our immensity, Our power, Our wisdom, and the whole of Our Divine Being in the creature. To hide Ourselves inside of great things is not so great after all; but in the small things We give greater display of love, power, etc. And since We are omnipotent and can do anything, it gives Us greater delight, and We take more pleasure in hiding Ourselves in the human littleness rather than in great things; and if We do not find Our Will in her, We can neither look for Ourselves, nor find Ourselves in her - We would lack the space in which to place Ourselves; all Our divine attributes would feel impotent to hide Our divine life there where Our Will is not present.

See then, the reason why We want, We long, and for the creature also to long and pray that she may live of Divine Volition: it is because We go in search of Ourselves within her, and We want to find Ourselves as though in Our own center. And do you think this is little - the great gain that We make, the glory, the honor We receive: that the little human heart would hide Our Will and Our very life in order to give Us double love, double power, wisdom, goodness, to engage in a contest with Our very Selves? If you do not comprehend this, it means that you are still blind in the interminable ways of my Divine Will.

Now, if We, by wanting Our Fiat to reign in the creatures, seek and find Ourselves in her, the creature, by wanting It, seeks herself in God, and in Him she finds herself. See then, what an exchange, what a crafting on both sides, what loving stratagems and devices: God who continuously seeks Himself in the creature. But where does He find Himself? In the center of her. So, He seeks and seeks Himself again, He calls Himself over and over again, there where His own love calls Him, there where His very life resides. And the creature imitates her God: she goes round and round, she calls and calls herself again. But where does she find herself? In the divine center. This indicates the exchange of life between the two of them - the same Will which dominates the creature and God, the same love by which they are animated. So, it is no wonder that what one does the other does as well. And it is only my Will that knows how to make these prodigies; without It everything is sterile, everything is hindrance on the part of God and on the part of the creatures; We feel that We are prisoners of Ourselves, and she feels herself imprisoned by her own human will, without flight, and all hampered within herself, and without divine life. Therefore, given all this, is it not right, then, for Us to want nothing but for Our Will to dominate and reign?”

How in the Divine Will there are no stops, as the creature makes herself the repeater of the divine life. Task that is entrusted to her. How God adapts Himself to the human littleness.

My flight in the Divine Volition continues. I feel that if it did not continue I would lack the life in order to live, the nourishment with which to satiate myself, the light in order to see, the feet with which to walk. Alas! I would remain immobilized, wrapped in a deep night; I would lose the way, and would remain halfway. My God, my Jesus, Holy Mama, free me! And when You see me in danger of stopping, come to my aid, give me your hand, that I may not stop. Or, take me to Heaven, where there aren't these dangers of stopping, and I may have the boast of saying: 'I never stopped, and therefore I never lacked either the food, or the light, or the One who, while leading me, instructed me and enraptured me with His speaking.'

But while my mind was all sunken in the Divine Will, my learned teacher, Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, told me: "My blessed daughter, one who lives in the Divine Will feels the need never to interrupt her journey, nor are there dangers of stopping, either on earth or in Heaven. In fact, my Will being eternal, Its ways and Its steps are interminable, and one who lives in It receives by nature the good of always being able to advance. To stop in my Will would be like to cause an act of life to be lacking to Our divine life that keeps forming in her soul. In fact, you must know that one who lives in my Divine Will reaches such an extent, and is capable of so much, to the point of repeating Our divine life. Our Fiat gives everything that is needed to the creature who lives in It, to the point that, with her acts, she makes herself the repeater of the very life of God; and if you knew what it means to repeat Our life, and the glory, the honor, the love that it gives Us, and the good it makes descend upon all generations! What it does is incalculable; and Our Will alone has this power, to make this prodigy so great, which no one is granted, of becoming the repeater of the very divine life in the creature."

On hearing this, I said: 'My Love, what are You saying? How can anyone ever reach such extent? It seems incredible to me.' And Jesus, interrupting my speaking, added: "My daughter, do not be surprised, everything is possible to my Will - even to repeat Our life. You must know that Our Supreme Being, by Its own nature, has the virtue of being able to repeat Itself as many times as It wants, as indeed We repeat Our divine life, in its entirety, for each individual, for each created thing - everywhere, in every place, far and wide. Our immensity carries Us, Our power forms Us, and from Our own single life that We possess, it repeats, bilocates, multiplies so many divine lives of Ours, that only one who does not want it does not take it. Otherwise, the saying: 'Where is God? In Heaven, on earth and everywhere', would be reduced to mere words, not facts. Now, one who lives in Our Divine Will, with her acts, concurs with Our divine life, which is constantly repeated for love of creatures, and therefore We feel Ourselves being repeated by her littleness. And - oh! the contentment, the happiness that We feel; and how Our love finds its outlet, its requital, in feeling its very life being repeated by its beloved creature. And in its emphasis of love and of unspeakable joy that We feel, We say: 'We have given her everything, and everything she has given to Us; nor could she give Us more, because We feel that wherever Our immensity takes Us, she pops out from all sides - there is not one point where she does not make herself heard. And - oh! how sweet and pleasant it is to hear her everywhere within Our life that she possesses: 'I love You, I adore You, I thank You, I bless You.' So, the task that We entrust to one who lives in Our Volition is to repeat Our very divine life. Therefore, be attentive, and let your journey be continuous."

After this, I continued to think about the Divine Will, and my always lovable Jesus added: "My daughter, if you knew the sweet and pleasant surprises that the creature in Our Will gives Us! She is little, and finding herself in Our Fiat, she is surrounded by an immensity that has no end, by a power that has no limits, by a love that not only envelopes her completely, but makes her feel that she herself is nothing other than love; and Our beauty invests her and she remains enraptured. So, the little one moves her tiny little foot and looks at the immensity that surrounds her; and while she moves her step, she wants to take who knows how much of Our immensity. But - no, she manages to take but a few drops of Our power, love and beauty, which, though drops, are yet sufficient to fill her so much as to overflow outside, to the point of forming around her streams of Our love, of Our power and of Our beauty. And the little one gets embarrassed, she tries hard, for she wants to take more, but cannot, because she lacks the space in which to enclose what she wants to take. And We, Our Supreme Being, let her do so; even more, We take pleasure in her efforts and in her embarrassments; We delight, We smile at her, and the little one looks at Us asking Us for help, because she feels the need to extend herself more within Our immensity, power and love. But do you know why? She wants to give Us more, she wants the contentment of being able to say: 'My efforts, my embarrassments are because I want to tell You that I love You more. Oh! If I could possess all of your love, how happy I would be, to be able to say to You: "I love You as much as You love me".' This little one, with her efforts, with her embarrassments, with her speaking, wounds Us, enraptures Us, chains Us; and then, do you know what We do? We take the little one and We adapt Ourselves to her. With a prodigy of Our omnipotence We make Our immensity, Our power, sanctity, love, beauty, goodness, flow in such a way that Our Divine Being remains inside and outside of her, inseparable from her. And it shows how everything is hers; and the little one, in her emphasis of love, says to Us: 'How content and happy I am - I can say to You that your immensity is Yours and mine, and I love You with immense love, with powerful love. My love lacks nothing - neither your sanctity, nor your goodness, nor your beauty that enraptures, wins and obtains everything.' Not to content the human littleness in Our Will is impossible for Us; and since, because of her littleness, she cannot adapt herself to Us, God adapts Himself to her; and this is easy for Us, because there are no elements alien to Us, but everything is Ours. At the most, she may be little, but this says nothing - it will be Our own care, more than hers, to make her as beautiful as We can. On the other hand, for one who does not live in Our Divine Will, there are many elements alien to Us in the human littleness: will, desires, affections, thoughts that are not Ours. It can be said that she should adapt herself to Us by removing what is not Ours, otherwise she will not be able to comprehend Our Will, and even less will she be able to rise up and enter into Its celestial spheres; so, she will remain empty of God, full of miseries, amid the constraints of the human life. How many lives will be found without growth of divine life because they did not do my Will, nor do they occupy themselves with comprehending what it means to live in It, and the great good that they can receive! So, they will be many ignorant and illiterate ones of their Creator."

Each act done in the Divine Will is link of connection, bond of stability, perennial fecundity. What a fulfilled act in the Divine Will means.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues. I am always little and I need my Eternal Mama, which is the Divine Will, to carry me always in Her arms, to use all the cares with me, to defend me, assist me, nourish me, and with Her sweet empire keep my human will repressed - alive, but without life, receiving into its acts the attitude of the Supreme Will. But while I was resting in Its arms, I felt arcane delights, and the rest of the Celestial Fatherland. And my sovereign Jesus, making me His short little visit, all goodness told me: "My blessed daughter, how happy I am to find you in the arms of my Divine Will. I am secure, and you too, when you are in Its arms; and while you rest, It works on your behalf, and Its works are divine and of infinite value; and I, in seeing you the possessor of Its works, rejoice and make feast, saying: 'Oh! how rich is my daughter.' You must know that each act of Divine Will that the creature undergoes and, voluntarily, offers herself to receive, is a link of union that she forms and acquires with her Creator. It can be said that this link encloses God and the creature inside; it connects them together, makes them live from one single life, and forms the inseparability of one from the other. So, as many acts of my Will, so many links, in such a way that a long chain appears, in which they both remain linked and connected together, on both sides. And it is not only link, but bond of stability and of divine immutability. So, the creature is no longer subject to changing, so firm and stable does she feel in the bosom of her Celestial Father. Hence, with all certainty she can say: 'My dwelling is in God, nor do I know or recognize anything but my Creator.'

Now, this link of union and this bond of stability produces perennial fecundity. With this fecundity, the creature generates continuously love, goodness, fortitude, grace, patience, sanctity - all the divine virtues, which possess the bilocating virtue, in such a way that while the creature possesses them, she can bilocate them, giving them to whomever she wants and to whomever wants them. On the other hand, for one who does not let my Divine Will operate, her acts are like broken links, which have no virtue to enclose God and the creature; and because they are broken, they escape from inside of her and therefore can form neither the bond of stability, nor any fecundity, but are sterile acts, which produce no generation of good."

After this, I continued to think about the Divine Will, but I thought to myself: 'But, how does one fulfill a fulfilled act of Divine Will, and what does it mean?' And my beloved Jesus, always good with this little ignorant one, added: "My daughter, how one fulfills a fulfilled act of Divine Will? You must know that in order to form this fulfilled act it takes the power of my Will - the creature on her own cannot do it. Therefore it happens that my Will invests the human littleness, and the human lets itself be invested, and one makes itself prey to the other. Now, in this investing, the power of my Fiat empties the creature of everything that does not belong to It, and fills her to the brim with the Divine Being, in such a way that she feels within herself the fullness of the life of her Creator. There is not one particle, even the littlest, which does not remain filled, in such a way that she feels the divine life flowing, as though in torrents, within her whole being; so, she feels within herself the fullness and totality of the Supreme Being, as much as the creature is capable of. And having this fullness and totality within herself, she has nothing to add to her act, nor anything to remove from it, because on every side she possesses God, who knows not how to do incomplete acts; and the creature, by possessing Him, places herself in the divine conditions of being able to do but fulfilled acts. See then, what a fulfilled act means, and how it can be done: one must possess God with all the fullness, and the God operating in her act. These fulfilled acts have such power as to draw the attention of all; and the Heavens bow down to watch what great things their Creator operates in the act of the creature. Now, by possessing this divine fullness and totality, it happens that in everything she does, since it comes out from a foundation that possesses everything and lacks nothing, if she prays, her prayer possesses the fullness of the divine value; her virtues are complete and nourished by the life that she possesses. So, if she wants to give her acts, either to God as homage, or to creatures as help, she will give God Himself within her acts. Imagine, you yourself, what will be the great good that these acts, fulfilled in my Volition, will produce."

One who does the Divine Will forms for It Its dwelling, which serves as custody, defense and comfort to the Divine Will Itself. The knowledges about It form Its life.

I am always prey to the Divine Volition. I feel Its life palpitating in me as bearer of goodness, of speaking light, such that, while it is mute, it speaks with facts, it speaks by always loving me, it speaks by forming its life, it speaks by making it grow, it speaks by making itself heard. Oh! blessed muteness, you who know how to convert your motion, your sanctity, your love, into arcane voices, and the whole of your being into operating voice.

But while my mind was wandering in the Fiat, my sweet Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, told me: "My blessed daughter, you must know that one who does my Divine Will forms the dwelling place for my Supreme Volition; and just as a dwelling has no reason, nor is it free to do what it wants, and only serves as custody, as defense and as comfort for the one who dwells in it, in the same way, the soul loses her reason within the divine reason, voluntarily surrenders the rights of lordship to my Divine Will, and remains as custody, as defense and as comfort for my Divine Volition, which carries out Its life as It best pleases. Now, the human will, by doing my own, not only changes into a dwelling place for my Will, but will remain as an honored dwelling, which my Fiat will adorn with divine adornments. This, Its dwelling, will form Its Royal Palace, which will leave the very Angels astounded, making display of Its love, of Its sanctity, of Its light, of Its uncreated beauty, forming Its life, and life operating, in the will of the creature. To perform great things within Ourselves - these are rights that We hold by Our very nature; Our power has no limits, it can do anything and can reach everywhere; and if there are many things We don't do, it is because We do not want them, not because We cannot do them. But to arm Our power by rendering Ourselves operating within the small circle of the human will - here We can say that We put more love, more divine art, more power, because within her We must restrict what in Us is immense. Therefore, Our love makes a greater display in rendering Us operating in the creature, and she will feel my Will operating within herself, in such a way that everywhere will she feel Its divine life flowing - in her works, in her steps, in her heart, in her mind, and even in her voice; of her being she will make many rooms so as to give ease to my Divine Will, to let It now speak, now operate, now walk, now love; in sum, whatever It wants."

Then, I continued to think about the many truths that Jesus had told me on His Divine Will; and my beloved Good, Jesus, added: "My daughter, each life has need of nourishment; not only this, but of a material suitable to form that life. It must have its beginning, its growth. Only within Us things have no beginning, but in the creature each thing has its beginning. So, in order for the operating life of my Divine Will to have Its beginning in the creature, It was to administer the raw material with which to form it. But do you know what these raw materials have been? The first knowledges and truths I manifested to you on my Divine Will - these formed the humor, the heat and the first act of life in order to give rise to Its life. Now, after having formed the beginning of this life, it was necessary to form it, to raise it, to nourish it; so, as my manifestations on my Will continued, some served to form it, some to raise it, and some to nourish it. Had I not continued my speaking on It, Its life could have remained suffocated, or a life without growth, because it feeds on nothing other than the truths and knowledges that belong to It. See, then, the necessity of my prolonged speaking on my Fiat - it was necessary in order to make It known to the creature; it was necessary in order to form Its life, and so as not to leave it without the divine nourishment of its own truths, which alone can serve as its nourishment. In fact, outside of the creature my Will has need of nothing and of no one; of Its own, by Its own nature, It is life, food, nourishment, and everything. But in the creature, wanting her concurring role, by way of knowledges and truths that belong to It, It forms Its life according to how much more, or less, she knows. And these knowledges form an indissoluble nuptial between one and the other - the substance, the heat, the growth, the food of the life of my Will in the creature. Here is why I go back to my speaking - because it serves my own Will within you; and it serves you, to make you know It, love It and appreciate It more.

Therefore, when the creatures will hear that my prolonged speaking, my almost continuous visits, my many graces, served to form the life of my Divine Will in you, they will no longer be surprised at the ways I have used, the graces I have given, the many truths I have spoken. It was life that I was supposed to form, and life has need of continued acts. Which life can say it does not need continued acts? None. Works have no need of continued acts, but life needs them: the breath, the heartbeat, the continuous motion, a food that sustains it each day, a garment to cover it, a dwelling to keep it safe. See, then, how everything I have done and will do was necessary - for Me, in order to form this life of my Divine Will; and it was necessary for you, in order to receive it and possess it, and so as not to let it lack anything of what befitted a divine life. When I act, I act with wisdom, order and divine harmony. Was I to tell you that I wanted to form this life of my Divine Will in you without making It known to you, without giving you the divine materials with which to form it, and the continuous food to make it grow? I know not how to do such things; if I say that I want, I must give everything that is needed, and in a superabundant way, so that the creature may do what I want. And since the creatures do not know my way of acting, they wonder, they doubt, and some reach the point of condemning my operating, as well as the creature upon whom I have taken aim in order to accomplish my great designs, which will benefit the whole entire world, because the life of my Divine Will operating in the creature is not subject either to dying or to ending, but will have Its perpetuity in the midst of the human generations. Therefore, let Me do, and continue always your flight in my Divine Will."

How the Celestial Queen grew together with the Divine Will, and how She possessed the speaking sun. Joys of God in the creation of man; power that He gave to him.

I am always in the arms of the Divine Fiat, which now makes me pause in one of Its works, now in another. It seems It wants to make me comprehend well what It did for love of us. So, while I was going around in Its works, It stopped me in the act of the conception of the Virgin - how the Divine Will had Its first place in Her, and grew and diffused in those little members; and how the tiny little Queen Herself grew. They both grew together. What a happy growth, what great prodigy!: the Divine Will lowering Itself, enclosing Itself in the littleness of the Holy Virgin, to grow together with Her.

But while I was there stupefied, my dear Divine Teacher, surprising me, told me: "My good daughter, making the Celestial Queen live in the Divine Fiat was the greatest act, the most heroic, of the most intense love, that Our Supreme Being did; and as much as Our goods are immense and innumerable, as We gave Our Will for It to live in Her, We could give Her nothing more, nor add anything else, because with It We gave Her everything, and She formed within Herself the fount and the spring of all the divine goods, as much as it is possible for a creature. Now, the tiny little Sovereign, by growing together with Our Will, while growing, formed in Her soul, in Her heart, in Her works and steps, many speaking suns, which spoke to Us with voices of light and of irresistible love. They spoke to Us extensively, they spoke to Us of love, they spoke to Us of Our very Divine Being, they spoke to Us of mankind. Her steps, Her little hands, the beats of Her heart, spoke to Us, reaching into Our divine bosom with voice of light, and speaking even inside of Us. Her speaking never ceased, because, since Our Will lived in the Celestial Queen, Her whole being was all-speaking - not with human voices, but with arcane and divine voices - having always something to say, without ever being exhausted. More so, since the Divine Fiat is word, and operating word, creating word. How could Her speaking cease if She held It in Her power? Therefore, Her speaking kept Us besieged, captured, surrounded from all sides, occupied, in such a way as to render itself irresistible and invincible, for Us to give Her whatever She wanted. Her word was powerful, and caused Our power to surrender; it was gentle and sweet, and caused Our justice to bend; it was light, and it imposed itself over Our Supreme Being, over Our love, over Our goodness. In sum, there was nothing of Us that would not sweetly bend at the powerful voices of this Celestial Creature."

But while my sweet Jesus was saying this, He made me see the Celestial Queen, and from within Her Heart came out a sun which invaded the whole Celestial Court, the entire earth, and its rays were formed of most refulgent light, of speaking voices that spoke to God, to the Saints and the Angels, to all the creatures of the earth. So, my Celestial Mama still possesses Her continued speaking, Her speaking sun, which speaks to Her God with voices of speaking light, and loves Him and glorifies Him in a divine manner. It speaks to the Saints, and acts toward them as beatifying Mother and bearer of joy to the whole Celestial Court; it speaks to the earth and, as Mother, She shows us the way, to lead us to Heaven. And my beloved Jesus added: "See, then, what it means to live of Divine Will - one acquires the continuous acting, speaking, loving. What comes out from within my Will possesses the operating, illuminating and perpetuating virtue, and therefore they are triumphant acts, which conquer God."

After this, I continued my round in the acts of the Divine Fiat, and I paused in the creation of man, and I offered the very divine acts that It did in creating man, as well as those of innocent Adam, in order to impetrate the Kingdom of the Divine Will. And my highest Good, Jesus, continued, telling me: "My blessed daughter, as you offered Our acts in creating man, and those of innocent Adam, to impetrate the Kingdom of my Divine Will, you have repeated for Us the joys that We felt in creating man, and you have formed new bonds of union between the Divine Will and the human. It was Our very acts that formed the place in which to create man and administered to him the life in order to animate him; in the same way, Our own acts will form the way to make him reenter into Our Will. Therefore, it is the offering of Our acts, armed with power, that makes us decide to give what the creature is asking of Us. More so, since they are bearers of joys to Us, but so much, as to put Us in feast; and who does not know that in the feasts one abounds in giving gifts never before given? Now, you must know that in no other thing created by Us did We experience so much joy as in creating man. But do you know why? Neither to the heavens, nor to the sun, nor to the stars, nor to the wind, or to anything else, did We give the power to be able to give Us Our own heartbeat, Our life, Our love. If We gave, it was Us giving, but they had no power to give Us anything; therefore, the joy of receiving, no, does not exist in the other created things. At most, the joy of giving; and since there is no requital, the joy remains isolated and without company. On the other hand, in creating man, We gave him the power to give Us Our very life, Our eternal heartbeat that palpitates and gives love. Such was Our joy in giving this power to man, in feeling Our heartbeat in him, and in placing Our life at his disposal so that he might love Us with a divine life! So, man was able to delight Us and requite Us with his joys - and joys which could stand before our own. Now, in seeing Our life in him, in feeling Our heartbeat palpitating in him, We experienced such joy as to remain ecstatic before a portent so great, of the creation of man; and now, as you offer Us these, Our acts, We feel the joys and the sweet memory of his creation being repeated for Us. Therefore, repeat your offerings if you want to give Us joys and bend Us to give Our Will reigning upon earth.”

Delirium and divine passion of the Divine Will for wanting to live together with the creature. Its new act, and the Divine Painter. What it means to live in the Supreme Volition.

I am always back in the arms of the Divine Will. It seems It longs to have me always with Itself, to give me Its continuous life; and I long for It, to receive It. Without It, I would feel the ground missing under my feet, the heartbeat missing in my heart, and I would suffer a terrible hunger, with nothing else being able to give me even a crumb to satiate me. Oh! Divine Will, let us live together if You want to make me happy, and so that You may find in me the happiness of your own life.

But while my mind was wandering in the Fiat, my beloved Jesus, making me His short little visit, told me: “My blessed daughter, I could say it is a delirium, a divine passion of my Will - wanting to live life together with the creature, giving Its own life in exchange for the human littleness. But do you know why? You must know that my Divine Volition keeps, ever ready, a new act to give to the creature; but if she does not live with It, she does not acquire the habit of doing her acts united with my Volition in order to make of them one single act; and so It cannot give it - first, because she would not be worthy to receive it; second, because she would not understand the value of the great gift that she is receiving, and would not have the virtue of absorbing it into herself as her own life. By living together with my Divine Will one acquires new life, divine ways, celestial science, penetration of the most profound things. In sum, since my Fiat is the Teacher of teachers, and the One who creates the highest science, It makes things known, not veiled, but as they are in reality. Therefore, in living together with the creature, It does not want to keep her ignorant, but It instructs her, It gives her Its surprises, It narrates to her Its divine story; and this transforms her and renders her capable of receiving Its new act, which my Will wants to give her; and the soul, in each act that she does united with It, acquires a new prerogative of divine likeness. By living together with my Volition the soul is refined, embellished, and becomes in Our creative hands like the suitable canvas in the hands of the painter, such that, the more beautiful and refined the canvas is, the more beautiful the image comes out which he wants to paint on that canvas. It seems that his brushes and his colors acquire more art, become more skilled, rendering colors more vivid on a canvas that is well refined. So, the canvas changes into an image that seems alive and acquires such value as to be admired by who knows how many peoples. Now, more than Divine Painter is my Will, and It never tires of giving new beauty, sanctity and new science, and is there waiting for an act done together with It in order to enrich her, make Itself known more, and make use of Its divine brushes in order to elevate her to such height and rare beauty, as to make her admired by who knows how many generations, in such a way that all will call her blessed, and whoever has the good of looking at her will feel happy. All the new acts that she has received from God, by virtue of her operating in my Volition, will sing her praises and, hymning her, will make her known as the most beautiful work of my Divine Fiat. Its wanting to lower Itself to living with the creature, Its divine delirium, is a sign that It wants to do great things with her, and worthy of Its creative power.

Therefore, to live together with my Fiat is the greatest fortune, and should be the delirium, the vehement passion and the ambition of all.”

After this, I felt, within me and outside of me, the murmuring sea of the Divine Fiat. Oh! how sweet and gentle is Its murmuring! It murmurs and It speaks, It murmurs and It caresses Its beloved creature, It murmurs and It kisses her; and clasping her in Its arms, It says to her: “I love you, and I ask for love.” There is nothing more beautiful, more pleasant, than being told ‘I love you’ by a Volition so holy, while It asks in return for the little love of the creature. I felt this divine murmuring flow as life in my whole being; and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, do you want to know what it means to do my Divine Will and live in It? It is to know where one is, with whom one is dealing, what one can receive, and not to forget the good that one has received. These are all signs that the soul lives in my Divine Will. In fact, to say that she lives in It and not knowing where the Royal Palace is that offers Itself to be her dwelling, would be like not to appreciate, because things, people, places, when they are not known, are not appreciated. To say ‘I live in the Divine Volition’ and not to know It is absurd; and if she does not know It, it is not a reality, but a way of speaking; while the first thing that my Will does is to reveal Itself, make Itself known to the one who wants to live together with It. So, knowing where she dwells, she knows that she is dealing with so holy a Will, that wants everything in order to give her everything. Hence, she places herself in act of receiving Its sanctity, Its light, and she places herself in act of living of the goods of the One with whom she lives, because, by knowing Him, she no longer feels like lowering herself to her own human will, more so, since it is no longer her own. With this knowledge, the creature acquires the hearing in order to hear It, the voice to speak about It, the mind to comprehend It; the confidence, in a divine manner, in order to ask for everything and receive everything. So, she does not ignore the goods that she possesses; on the contrary, she is all eyes to watch them, and she thanks the One who has lowered Himself to live with her.

Now, if anyone will read these lines that I made you write and will not comprehend what is written, and, wondering, will put in doubt truths so sacrosanct as well as where the creature can reach by living together with my Will, it is a sign that he does not live with It. How can he comprehend It if he does not have within himself this life so holy, has never experienced Its delights, has never listened to Its beautiful lessons, and his palate has never savored this celestial food that my Will is able to give? So, they ignore what my Fiat is capable of doing and giving; and if they ignore it, how can they comprehend it? When a good is not known, if one does not feel at least the dispositions for wanting to believe it, it brings blindness of mind and hardness of heart; and one can even reach the point of despising that good, which, for one who knows it and possesses it, forms his fortune and his glory, and he would lay down his human life in order to possess the life of my Fiat and Its goods, which he has known; and because he knows It, he is all ears to listen to It, he is all eyes to look at It, he is all heart to love It, he is all tongue to speak about It. Even more, he would like to have who knows how many tongues to tell the good that he knows, the prerogatives of the One whom he possesses as life, because his own tongue is not enough for him to be able to tell everything he knows. Therefore, when I want to give a good, a gift, especially the great gift of my Will as life of the creature, the first thing I do is to make It known; I do not want to give the light and put it under a bushel, as if she did not have it; or give my goods and hide them and as though bury them inside of her. Why give them? And if she does not know them, how could the poor creature correspond to Me, love them and appreciate them? If I give, it is because I want for us to live life together and, united, to enjoy the good I have given to her. Even more, your Jesus makes Himself the vigilant sentry in order to keep in custody what I have given to my beloved creature. So, to know means to possess, to possess means to know; for one who does not know, the truths become difficult and without life. Therefore, be attentive, and enjoy what your Jesus has given you and made you know.”

How the Divine Majesty bends toward the creature when He sees her disposed to do an act of His Will. Difference that passes between one who does the Divine Will and one who lives in It, and how the creature remains kneaded within the Fiat.

My poor mind continues to cross the sea of the Fiat. It seems to me that I am always inside of it, but as for embracing it all, this is not given to me - I am too little, incapable; and while I walk, oh! how much is still left for me to walk and to comprehend. The whole of eternity will not be enough to cross it all. But while my mind was wandering within Its immensity, my beloved Good, Jesus, surprising me, told me: "My blessed daughter, indeed the whole of eternity will not be enough for you to cross the immense sea of my Volition; and even less so the few hours of your life. It is enough for you to remain inside of It to make you happy, and to take the little drops that your capacity can contain. In fact, you must know that Our contentment is so great when We see Our creature remaining inside Our sea of the Fiat, and wanting to comprehend more and enclose within herself another one of Its knowledges so as to be able to form one more act of the life of Our Will, that Our Adorable Majesty bends unto the lowness of the creature, and touching her little intelligence with Our hands, We render her capable, and with Our power We form the space in which she must enclose the new act of Our Will, because there is no greater act, that glorifies Us and loves Us more, than a fulfilled act of Our Will in the creature; so much so, that the Heavens lower themselves, all Creation bows, and they adore my Will fulfilled in the little creature. My Will Itself, which invades everything and there is no place where It is not present, calls everything, Heaven and earth, to give honor to Its acts fulfilled in the human littleness."

Then, I continued to think about the Divine Will, and I thought to myself: 'But, what is the difference that passes between one who does the Divine Will and one who lives in It?' And my lovable Jesus added, all goodness: "My daughter, there is a great difference between one and the other. One who lives in my Divine Will possesses the life of It and receives continuous life from God in order to preserve, nourish and grow this life of my Will in the creature - life she possesses, and life she receives. On the other hand, one who does my Divine Will receives the effects of It, and between life and effects there is such distance, that no comparison can stand before it. Is there not difference between life and work? The life palpitates, thinks, speaks, loves, walks, and repeats as many times as it wants that which it possesses as life; while a work, being an effect of the life, does not palpitate, does not think, does not speak, does not love, does not walk, nor is it capable of repeating itself by itself; and it can happen that, with time, that same work is consumed and can no longer be found. How many works, done with who knows how much noise, do not exist any more; while the life is not consumed; and if the body is consumed because of death, it is only for a short time, but the soul does not die, nor can it consume itself, even if it wanted to. See, then, what great difference exists between the life and the effects that the life can produce: the effects are produced for a time, in circumstances, in places, while the life is never interrupted - it palpitates always, and holds in its power the ability to produce different effects according to the circumstances.

Now, one who lives in my Will, possessing the life of It, holds in her power, and always, not at intervals: sanctity, grace, wisdom, goodness - everything. And since it is life that she possesses, both in the soul and in the body - in such a way that all the most tiny little particles of her being contain the Omnipotent Fiat, which flows, more than blood, in the whole of the creature - if she palpitates, it is the Fiat that palpitates; if she thinks, the Fiat is impressed in her thoughts; if she speaks, she feels my Fiat flow in her voice, and she speaks of It; if she operates, her works are kneaded with my Fiat; and if she walks, her steps say 'Fiat'. It is life, my daughter, and, as life, she must feel it in the whole of her being, nor can she help feeling it. Not so for one who does my Will; in order to feel It, she must invoke It, pray It. But when does she invoke It? In the sorrowful circumstances of life, in her needs, when she sees herself pressed by her enemies, almost like those who call the doctor when they are sick; but if they are well, the doctor is always a stranger for them. Therefore, the perennial life of my Divine Volition does not exist in them, and because of this they are mutable in good, they do not feel patience, prayer, light, as life within them, and therefore they do not feel the need to possess them as their own properties, nor do they love them with true love, because when the acts are not continuous, one has no dominion over them, nor does one hold them in his own power; so, love remains broken. Hence, the difference between life and effects is great: the life makes one feel the need to live of Divine Will; not so with the effects - if one has them, one has them; if one does not have them, one remains indifferent. Therefore, always wanting my Will means that one possesses the life of It."

Channels, commerce, between Heaven and earth. Trades of the soul who lives in the Divine Will. Contest of love between creature and Creator.

I am always the little atom in the Divine Volition - just newly born; and I feel the extreme need to be nourished and raised in Its paternal arms. Otherwise, the human will arises in me, to form its unhappy life. My God, have pity on me, and do not permit that I know or acquire any other life but that of your Divine Will. And feeling afflicted, oppressed, because of the almost continuous privations of my sweet Jesus, which keep me sacrificed on the stake of a pain, such that God alone is witness of a martyrdom so hard, I had a fear that my unhappy human will might do me one of its tricks. And my beloved Jesus, to infuse courage in me, sustaining me in His arms for I could bear no more, told me: "My blessed daughter, courage, banish from your heart any fear, which is the weapon that either kills or wounds love, and makes you lose closeness with your Jesus, while I am neither able, nor do I want to be without intimacy with one who wants to live of my Will. It would be as though she were not one with Me; and if it were so, I would not be able to say that one is the Will that animates us and forms your life and Mine; but I would have to say: 'You have your will, and I have Mine.' And I do not want this, because the living in my Volition would no longer exist in you. Instead, in each pain you suffer, be it even my privation, and in everything you do with your whole being, I want you to always call my Will, so that all your acts may form the channel through which It may find the way, the place in which to enclose Its goods and make them flow in abundance. According to the channel you have prepared, each act that you do can be a channel of graces, of light, of sanctity that you lend to my Will, which will make you the owner of the goods It encloses in your acts, and will make them flow for the good of all.

See, then, what your being, your pains, your acts, must serve me for - as many little channels in which I can always place something of my own. Depositing what is mine is happiness for Me, it is to give Me work to do, it is to feel Myself loved and known. And therefore my desire to deposit my divine properties in the acts of the creature, to make her the owner, is so great, that I am on the lookout, I act as a vigilant sentry, I use all my loving attentions to see if her acts are empty of the human will, and if she makes the call to my Divine Will, which, finding the void in the human acts, makes use of them as channels in order to deposit in them the greatest graces, the knowledges most sublime, the sanctity that most resembles Me; and with this It forms the divine dowry for Its beloved creature."

After this, He remained silent; and then He added with a more tender tone: "My daughter, you must know that for one who lives in my Divine Will, there is no time to be wasted, nor can one pay attention to certain trifles, to fears, to oppressions, to agitations, to doubts. One who must do what is greater has to set aside the lesser; for one who must take the sun and enjoy it, it is necessary not to bother with the little lights; and one who possesses the day must not pay heed to the night. In fact, the sun is greater than the little lights, and the day has more value than the night, and if one wants to pay attention to both, he runs the risk of not being able to enjoy all the fullness of the light of the sun, or do everything that the day can do; and it can happen that in order to pay attention to the lesser, one loses the greater. More so, since for one who lives in It, my Will wants to be always in act of giving, and the creature must be always in act of receiving; and if she wants to pay attention to something else, my Will is forced to take breaks in Its giving, because It does not find her attentive on receiving what It wants to give. And this is to break the divine current; and if you knew what that means, how attentive you would be!

Moreover, you must know that as the creature does her acts in my Divine Will, she enters into the divine banks, and does her trades of infinite value. Because she comes into Our Volition, even though she is small, yet she comes as the owner, and makes herself the owner of what our divine banks possess, and she takes as much as she can take. And since she cannot enclose within herself everything that she takes, she leaves it in deposit together with Our own treasures; and We let her do so, We delight in her trades, and Our goodness is so great, that We give her the interest on the acquisitions she has made. So, every time she does her acts in Our Volition, she opens commerce between Heaven and earth, and she puts into traffic Our sanctity, power, goodness, love; and We, so as not to be left behind by our beloved creature, while she ascends, We descend, down to the lowness of the human will, and opening Our commerce, We make the acquisition of the human will - a trade so much wanted by Us and pleasing to Us; and so We compete with each other, and We conquer each other. Good daughter, to live in Our Will, and, at the same time, for her to have nothing to do with Us, or We with her, and to have nothing to say, or not to make Ourselves felt - is impossible for Us. If it were so, it would no longer be Our life that We carry out in the creature, but a way of speaking - not a reality. Life feels the absolute need to move, to make itself felt, to breathe, to palpitate, to speak, to give warmth. How can one suffocate a life - being there, living, and not making oneself felt? This is impossible, to God and to the creature. Therefore, do not become alarmed when you feel that everything is silence in you; those are brief incidents, because I Myself feel the need to make Myself felt - that my life does exist in you. Being there and not making Myself felt would be my hardest martyrdom; I can do it for a little while, but not always. Therefore, do not be concerned, live all abandoned in Me, and I will take care of everything.”

How Our Lord disburses the price to purchase His Divine Will in order to give It to the creatures. The bath in the Divine Volition. The little sea of the soul and the great sea of God.

I was following the Divine Will in Its acts, both in Creation and in Redemption - how all of them had a connection with the human will so that the Divine might have Its place; and since many human acts escaped from receiving the sanctity of the divine act, not giving it the first place, I thought to myself: ‘How difficult it is for the Supreme Fiat to extend Its Kingdom in the human acts of the creatures. Indeed, it seems that they don’t even recognize the divine act that flows in them, therefore they do not appreciate it, nor do they give it the supremacy due to it. On the contrary, it seems that the human acts are like a people without a king, without order, and many of them the enemies of the divine acts that want to give them the life which, while it flows within them, they do not recognize. My God,’ - I was saying to myself - ‘how can it be that your Will may form Its Kingdom?’ And my always lovable Jesus, surprising me, all tenderness, drowned with love, as though in need to give vent to it, told me: “Blessed daughter of my Will, yet, it should not be doubted, it is more than certain that my Will will have Its Kingdom in the midst of creatures, just as certain as was my descent from Heaven to earth. I, acting as King, was to constitute the Kingdom of my Fiat, which man had rejected. Therefore, my Divinity, united to my Humanity, descended from Heaven in order to purchase my Divine Will for the creatures. Each act I did was a disbursement of the price that was needed, and which I gave to the Divine Majesty in order to buy back what man had rejected and lost. So, each act, pain, tear of mine, and my very death on the Cross, were nothing other than the disbursing of the price sufficient to purchase my Divine Will and give It to creatures. So, if the purchase was made, the price was disbursed, the Divinity accepted, and the payment was closed with the sacrifice of my life, how can Its Kingdom not come?

Even more, you must know that as my Humanity operated, suffered, prayed, so my Divine Fiat descended, down into my human acts, and formed Its Kingdom; and since I was the Head, the elder Brother of all human generations, the Kingdom passed on to my members and to my younger brothers. However, Redemption was necessary first, because It was to serve to till the ground of the human wills, to purify them, to prepare them, to embellish them, and to let them know how much did the purchase cost this Man and God - the purchase He made of this Divine Will in order to give It to creatures, that they may receive the grace of being able to receive the great gift of being dominated by my Will. Had there not been Redemption first, the disbursement of the price would be missing, as well as the preparatory act for a good so great. Even more, I tell you that the Divinity, before I descended from Heaven, had decreed Redemption and the Kingdom of my Will, since one was to serve for the disbursement of the other. In fact, my Will being Divine and of infinite value, a Man-God was needed who would be able to pay and acquire a Divine Volition, to give It back to those who had lost It; and if it were not so, I would not have moved from Heaven only to come to redeem; more so, since I was more interested in giving back the rights to Our Will, offended and rejected, than in Redemption Itself.

Besides, I would not have acted as God, had I rescued my creatures while putting my Will aside, not giving It the rights due to It, restoring Its Kingdom in the midst of creatures. Therefore, be certain, Its time will come, I will arm Myself with power and with love, and the hour of the triumph of the Kingdom of my Fiat will sound. And besides, my many truths say this, which I manifested on my Divine Will. Why tell them if Its Kingdom were not to come? My prolonged speaking would have been a little game, or an individual good, but no - no; I can say that my speaking was the continuous disbursement that I put out, to make known what my Will is, and how It must come to form Its Divine Kingdom. Therefore, be attentive, suffer and pray for so holy a purpose.”

After this, I continued to immerse myself in the Divine Fiat; I felt the need to enter into Its sea, to take the necessary nourishments in order to nourish and preserve Its very Will in my soul - the new act It holds, as It feels the need, in me also, to have Its new continued act, Its infinite refreshments. So, while I was immersing myself in Its divine sea, my dear Jesus added: “Blessed daughter, your little stream of my Volition, enclosed within you, feels the need to dive into the great and immense sea of my Will. So, one who lives in my Will, because of her littleness, has the little sea of my Volition inside of her, as well the immense sea outside of her; and what is little feels the need to dive into what is great, so as to expand her little sea more and more. And this she does every time she wants to do acts in my Will: she comes to take her bath in the greatness, and while she bathes, she takes the nourishment, the divine refreshments, Our freshness, in such a way as to feel herself being wholly renewed to new divine life. And since my Will possesses the communicative virtue, It does not let the creature go out of Its great sea if It has not filled her, up to the brim, with new acts of Its Will. See, then, how It awaits your acts in order to give you Its bath and to communicate to you Its new prerogatives, which you did not possess. And if you knew what it means to take a new bath in the sea of my Divine Volition... Each time she feels reborn to new life, she acquires new cognition of the One who created her, she feels loved more in return by her Celestial Father, and new love arises within her toward the One whom she loves. In sum, she is the daughter who knows and wants to know more her Father, and does not want to do anything without His Will; and He is the Divine Father who calls His daughter, to keep her with Himself, to make of her a model of Himself. Therefore, be attentive, and let no act escape you without its taking possession in my Supreme Fiat.”

How the Divine Will is the motor and the assailer, giving life, calling back to life, and making the memory of everything arise. Divine encampment. How the motion of the Divine Will forms Its life in the creature.

I am under the eternal waves of the Divine Volition, and it seems to me that It wants me to pay attention to these waves, to recognize them, to receive them into myself, to love them, so as to say to me: “I am the Eternal Volition who is over you, surrounding you everywhere, investing your motion, your breath, your heartbeat, to make it my own, to make my way through it, and so be able to extend my life in you. I am the Immense One who wants to restrict Itself within the human littleness. I am the Powerful One who delights in forming Its life in the created weakness. I am the Holy One who wants to sanctify everything. Pay attention to Me, and you will see what I can do, and what I will do in your soul.” But while my mind was all occupied with the Divine Volition, my always lovable Jesus, repeating His short little visit, told me: “My blessed daughter, my Will is the motor which, with iron constancy, assails the creature from all sides, inside and out, to have her for Itself and make the great prodigy of forming Its divine life in the creature. It can be said that It created her in order to form and repeat Its life within her, and at any cost It wants to achieve the intent; and in all things It revolves around her and seems to tell her: ‘Look at Me, it is I. Get to know Me, I come to form my life in you.’ And acting as the assailer of the creature, It assails her inside and out, in such a way that whoever pays attention to It, feels my Divine Will overflowing inside and outside of herself, forming the prodigy of Its divine life, such that she is unable to resist Its power. And do you know what this Divine Will of Mine does? It gives life, It calls everything back to life, and in this life It makes arise everything It did, and all the good that all creatures have done, enkindling the sweet memory of Its works, as though present and in act, as if It were repeating them. Nothing can escape this life; one feels the fullness of everything, and - oh! how happy, rich, powerful, holy the creature feels! She feels the endowment of all the good acts of others, and for everything she loves and glorifies the Divine Fiat as if they were her own; and my Volition feels Its own works being returned to It by her - and so the love, the glory, of Its divine works; and through the remembrance, It feels, being repeated, the glory and the love of the other creatures. Oh! how many works put into oblivion, how many sacrifices, how many heroic acts forgotten, which were done by the human generations, and to which no one gives a thought any more; and therefore there is neither the continuous repetition of the glory, nor anyone who would renew the love of those acts. And my Divine Will, forming Its life in the human littleness, makes the memory of everything arise, in order to give and receive everything; It centralizes everything in her, and forms Its divine encampment. Therefore, be attentive to receive these waves of my Volition; they pour upon you to change your destiny; and if you receive them, you will be Its fortunate creature.”

After this, I continued to think about the Divine Will, and I thought to myself: ‘But how can this divine life form in the soul?’ And my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, the human life is composed of soul, of body, of members, one distinct from the other. But who is the primary motion of this life? The will. So, without it the creature would not be able to do beautiful works, or acquire knowledge, or be capable of teaching them; therefore, all the beauty of life would disappear from the creature; and if she possesses beauty, quality, value, ingenuity, it must be attributed to the motion of order that the will possesses over the human life. Now, if this motion of order is assumed by my Divine Will over the creature, it forms the divine life inside of her. So, as long as the creature submits herself to receiving the motion of order of my Will, inside and outside of herself, as prime motion of all her acts, this divine life of mine is already formed, and takes its royal place in the depth of the soul. Motion says life, and if the motion originates from a human will, it can be called human life; if, on the other hand, the origin is my Will, it can be called divine life. See how easy it is to form this life, as long as the creature wants it. I do not want, nor do I ever ask for impossible things from the creature; but rather, first I facilitate it, I render it adaptable, feasible, and then I ask for it. And while asking for it, in order to be more sure that she can do what I want, I offer Myself to doing what I want her to do together with her. I can say that I place Myself at her disposal, that she may find strength, light, grace, sanctity - not human, but divine. I do not look at what I give, or what I do; when the creature does what I want, I abound so much with her as to let her feel, not the weight, but the happiness of the sacrifice, which my Divine Will knows how to give. And just as the human life has its life, its distinct members, its qualities, so does my Supreme Being have Its qualities most pure - not material, because matter does not exist in Us - which form Our life. United together, sanctity, power, love, light, goodness, wisdom, all-seeingness of everything, immensity, etc., form Our divine life. But who constitutes the motion, who is it that rules and unfolds all Our divine qualities with an incessant and eternal motion? Our Will. Our Will is the motor, the director, which gives to each of Our qualities the operating life. So, if it wasn’t for Our Will, Our power would be without exercise, Our love without loving; and so with all the rest. See, then, how everything is in the Will; and this is why, by giving It to the creature, We give everything. And since they are Our little images, created by Us, Our own breaths, the little sparks of love spread by Us in the whole Creation, this is why We gave them a free will, united to Ours - to form Our facsimiles, wanted by Us. There is nothing that glorifies Us more, that loves Us more, that makes Us content, than finding Our own life, Our image, Our Will in Our work, created by Us; therefore We entrust everything to the power of Our Fiat, to obtain the intent.

My daughter, you must know that both in Our Divinity in the supernatural order, and in the natural order of the creatures, there is a virtue in nature, an innate prerogative, of wanting to produce life, images that are like oneself; and therefore a yearning of love, an ardent desire, to pour oneself into the life and work that one produces. In all Creation there is nothing that does not resembles Us: the heavens resemble Us in immensity, the stars in the multiplicity of Our joys and infinite beatitudes; in the sun there is the likeness of Our light, in the air the likeness of Our life that gives itself to all, belongs to all, and no one can escape it, even if one wanted to; in the wind which, while it makes itself felt, now with might, now as though sweetly caressing the creatures and all things, yet they do not see it - Our power and all-seeingness, for We see everything, hear everything, and enclose everything as though in the palm of Our hand, yet they do not see Us. In sum, there is nothing which does not carry a likeness to Us, all Our works give of Us, sing Our praises, and each one has the office of making known each quality of their Creator.

Now, in man it was not just a work that We were making, but human life and divine life that We created in him; therefore We yearn, We want, We long to reproduce in him Our life and image. We reach the point of drowning him with love; and when he does not let himself be drowned, because he is free in himself, We reach the point of persecuting him with love, letting him find no peace in anything that escapes from Us. Not finding Ourselves in him, We wage incessant war against him, because We want Our image beautiful, Our life reproduced in him. And since all things are made and grafted by Us, also in the natural order there is this virtue of wanting to produce similar things and life. See, a mother generates a baby; all her yearnings and desires are that she wants him similar to herself, and she longs to see him born to the light, similar to his parents. And if the baby resembles them, oh! how happy they are, they make of him their boast, they want to show him to everybody, they raise him with their habits, their own way. In sum, this child becomes their preoccupation and their glory. But if, on the other hand, he is dissimilar to his parents, ugly, deformed - oh! how embittered they remain, tormented, and they reach the point of saying, with highest sorrow: 'It seems as if he is not our child, one from our own blood.' They would almost want to hide him, to let no one see him, feeling humiliated and confounded; and this child will be the torture of his parents for all their lives. All things possess the virtue of reproducing things similar to themselves: the seed produces another seed, the flower another flower, the bird another little bird, and so with all the rest. Not to produce similar things is to go against nature, divine and human. Therefore, not to have the creature similar to Us is one of Our greatest sorrows; and only one who lives of Our Will will be able to be Our joy, and bearer of glory and of triumph for Our creative work."

The Humanity of Our Lord, sacrarium and custodian of all the works of the creatures. How love never says enough.

My abandonment in the Fiat continues, nor can I help feeling the murmuring of Its life; not to feel Its murmuring would be like not having life any more; a murmuring that murmurs and gives light, murmurs and fortifies, murmurs and makes you feel Its life that warms you and transform you into Its own. Divine Will, how lovable, admirable You are! How not to love You?

Then, I was following Its works; and as I followed them, so they poured upon me, to give me love and tell me: "We are works of yours, made for you - take us, possess us and make us your own, so that in whatever you do you might have, ready, the model of our own." And while I was following the works of Redemption, my sweet Jesus, making me pause, told me: "My good daughter, in all Our works there was always an excess of love toward man; and one excess gave me the spur to make another one. So, it was not enough for Me to descend from Heaven to earth in order to make him anew, but each act I did, each pain and, I can say, even each breath, was directed toward him. In my all-seeingness I called him, I clasped him in my arms, I molded him anew in order to restore him and give him the new life which I had brought for him from Heaven. I made him my own brother in order to place him in the sonship of my Celestial Father. But this was not enough for Me; in order to keep him more safe, I made of my Humanity the depository of all the works, sacrifices and steps of man. Look at Me - how I hold everything enclosed within Me; and this leads Me to love him twice as much in each act he does. By incarnating Myself in the womb of the Immaculate Queen, I formed this Humanity of Mine and I constituted Myself the Head of the human family in order to unify all creatures with Me and make them my own members. Therefore, everything they do is mine, I enclose everything in the sacrarium of my Holy Humanity, I keep the little good as well as the great. But do you know why? By their passing into Me, I give them the value as if they were my own works, prayers and sacrifices; the virtue of the Head descends into the members, blending everything together, and I give them the value of my own merits. So, the creature finds herself in Me, and I, as the Head, find Myself in them.

But do you think that my love said or says ‘enough’? Ah! no, it will never say ‘enough’. The nature of divine love is to form ever new inventions of love, to give love and receive love. If it were not so, it would be like setting a limit and closing Our love within Our divine sphere. But, no, Our love is immense, and by its own nature must always love. And here is why I want my Humanity to be followed by the large field of my Divine Will, which will do incredible things for love of creatures. Here, then, Its knowledges, Its wanting to reign. If It does not reign, how can It abound, and make display of Its surprises of love? Therefore, be attentive, and you will see what my Will can do.”

Enchanting scenes which Jesus enjoys in the soul who lives in His Will. Continuous calling of God and the creature.

The Divine Volition never leaves me; it seems to me that It remains always inside and outside of me, as though in act of surprising me, for It wants to place Its act in everything I do - whether I pray, I suffer, I work... And even if I sleep, It wants to give me Its divine rest in my sleep. It wants to always keep busy, and in each thing It calls me by saying to me: “Let me descend unto the lowness of your acts, and I will make you ascend up to the highness of mine; and we will start a contest - you, in ascending, I, in descending.” But who can say what the Divine Will makes me feel in my soul? Its excessive love, Its magnanimity, Its continuous keeping busy over my poor soul... But while I was under the empire of the Divine Volition, as It poured Itself upon me, my Highest Good, Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My good daughter, there is no scene that moves Me and enraptures Me more than seeing the human littleness under the empire of my Will. The Divine within the human, the great inside the littleness, the strong in the weak - one hiding within the other, conquering each other - it is so beautiful, so enchanting, that I find the pure joys, the divine happiness that the creature can give Me, though I see that it is my own Will that secretly offers it to Me, and It hands it to Me through the channel of the human will. If you knew how much I delight, you would always let yourself be conquered by my Will in order to please Me. I can say that I leave Heaven, though I remain there, to come and enjoy the pure joys that my Divine Will is able to give Me within the little circle of the creature on earth.

You must know that one who does my Divine Will and allows Its life to flow within her acts, continuously calls God and all His attributes, and God feels constantly called by the creature. Now she calls Him for she wants His power, now because she wants His love, now because she wants His sanctity, His light, His goodness, His imperturbable peace. In sum, she calls Him constantly for she wants of His own, and God is always there waiting for her, to give her what she asks for; and in order to requite her, He feels called and He calls her to give her confidence and say to her: “What else do you want of my Divine Being? Take whatever you want; or rather, as you call Me, I already prepare for you my power, my love, my light, my sanctity, which are needed in your act.” So, God calls the soul and the soul calls God, and this continuous calling of each other - in order to ask and receive, and for God to give - forms the life of my Will in the creature, matures it, makes it grow, and forms the sweet enchantment of her very Creator. A continued act encloses such power, that God cannot unbind Himself from the creature, nor can she from God; on the contrary, they feel the irresistible need to remain clasped to each other; and only my Will knows how to produce these continuous acts that never cease and form the true character of the living in my Will. On the other hand, a mutable character, a fragmented operating, is the true sign of the living of human volition, which knows not how to give either firmness, or peace, and is capable of producing nothing but thorns and bitternesses.”

Divine mastery and art. The little paradise of God. Maze of love. Generative virtue of the Fiat. God prey to the creature.

My abandonment in the Fiat continues. I feel Its omnipotent breath which, breathing over me, wants to make Its life grow and expand in me; It wants to fill me so much, to the point of leaving nothing of my human being other than the veil that covers It. So, I was thinking to myself: ‘But, what does this Holy Volition get, that It has such great interest in forming Its life in the creature as to move Heaven and earth to obtain the intent? And what is the difference that exists between the Divine Will as life and the Divine Will as effect? And my always lovable Jesus, clasping me in His arms, with unspeakable goodness told me: “My blessed daughter, there is nothing more beautiful, more holy, more enjoyable, and that pleases Us and glorifies Us more than forming the life of Our Divine Volition in the creature. In her is formed a little paradise into which Our Supreme Being delights in descending, to form in it Its dwelling. You see, instead of one paradise We have two, in which We find Our harmonies, the beauty that enraptures Us, the pure joys that double Our happiness, because We have formed one more life of Ours in the brief circle of the creature. In this paradise, little as it is, for as much as the creature can be capable of, We find everything, everything is Ours. Or rather, We find the littleness which enamors Us even more, and We admire Our divine art - that We, by virtue of Our power, have enclosed the great inside the little. We can say that, with Our maze of love, We have transmuted things: the great into the little, and the little into the great. Without a divine prodigy of Ours We could form neither Our life nor Our paradise in the creature. And do you think it is insignificant for Us to have one more life of Ours and a doubled paradise at Our disposal, to delight Us more?

You must know that neither the heavens, nor the sun, nor the whole of Creation cost Us as much, nor have We placed in them so much mastery and art, or so much love, as We placed in forming Our life, all of Our Will, in the creature, in order to form for Ourselves one more paradise in which to lord as We best please, and enjoy Our delights. The heavens, the sun, the sea, the wind and everything, narrate the One who created them; they point to Us, they make Us known, they glorify Us; but they do not give Us a life of Ours, nor do they form for Us another paradise; rather, they serve the one, female or male, in whom Our Paternal Goodness took on the commitment of forming Our life. And this creature costs Us so much, that Our Fiat uses Its operating and repeating virtue of Its continuous Fiat over Its fortunate creature, so as to overshadow her with Its power, in such a way that a Fiat does not wait for another – so much so, that if It blows Its breath upon her, It says to her: ‘Fiat’; if It touches her, It repeats: ‘Fiat’; if It embraces her, It uses Its operating Fiat and keeps molding her and as though kneading her within Its divine life. It can be said that, with Its breath, It forms Its life in the creature, and with Its creative virtue It regenerates her and forms in her Its little paradise. And what do We not find in It? It is enough to tell you that We find everything We want – and this is everything for Us.

See, then, the great difference that exists between the Divine Will as life and that as effect: as life, all goods, the virtues, the prayer, the love, the sanctity, convert into nature in the creature; they are founts that form in her, which constantly spring, in such a way that she feels within herself the nature of love, of patience, of sanctity, just as she naturally feels the mind thinking, the eye seeing, the mouth speaking. There is no effort in this, because God gave them to her as her nature, and she feels free to make of them the use that she wants. In the same way, by possessing the Divine Will as life, everything is holy, everything is sacred, the difficulties end, the inclination to evil no longer exists; and even if she changes her action, and now she does one thing, now another, the unitive virtue of my Will unites them together, and they form one single act, with the distinction of many various beauties for as many acts as she has done. And she reaches the point of feeling that her God is fully her own, to the point of feeling that, in the excess of His love, He gave Himself prey to the creature. By virtue of the Divine Will that she possesses as life, she feels Him as a birth from her own womb, and she raises Him with such finesse of love and of profound adoration as to remain as though naturally absorbed in her Creator, who is already completely her own. And the fullness of love, the happiness that she feels, is so great that, unable to contain it, she would want to give to all the Divine Will as life, to render all happy and holy. Not so for one who does not possess It as life, but only as virtue or effect: everything is hardship, and she feels the good in time and circumstances; the circumstance ceases and she feels the void of the good, and this void produces inconstancy, mutation of character, tiredness. She feels the unhappiness of the human will; neither does she enjoy peace, nor can she give peace to anyone; she feels the good within her as if she felt her members dislocated, or partly detached, such that she is not free to make use of them, and has to remain subjected to others in order to be served. Not to live of my Will is to make oneself a slave and to feel all the weight of slavery.

Jesus finds His Heaven in the creature, His Holy Mama and everyone in the All, and the All in all. The Divine Will makes Itself the revealer, and surrenders Its Divine Being to the creature.

I was feeling so very little, to the point of being incapable of taking one step; and having received Holy Communion, I felt the need, as a tiny little one, to take refuge in the arms of Jesus, to say to Him: ‘I love You, I love You very much’, incapable of telling Him anything else, the little ignorant one that I am. But my sweet Jesus was waiting for me to tell Him something else, and I added: ‘Jesus, I love You together with the love of our Celestial Mama.’ And Jesus told me: “How sweet, refreshing, it is for Me to feel Myself being loved together with the love of the daughter and of our Mama. I feel Her maternal tendernesses, Her ardors of love, Her chaste embraces, Her ardent kisses, such that, as they pour into the daughter, Mama and daughter love Me, kiss Me and clasp Me in their arms with one single embrace. To find the daughter together with my Celestial Mama, wanting to love Me and loving Me as my Mama loves Me – these are my dearest delights, my outpourings of love, and I find the most pleasant requital to the many excesses of my love. But, tell Me, together with whom else do you want to love Me?” And He remained silent, waiting for me to tell Him with whom else I wished to love Him. And I, almost a little embarrassed, added: ‘My Divine Jesus, I want to love You together with the Father and the Holy Spirit.’ But it seemed He was not content yet. And I: ‘I want to love You together with all the Angels and Saints.’ And He: “And with whom else?” ‘With all the pilgrim souls and unto the last creature that will exist upon earth. I want to bring You everyone and everything – even the heavens, the sun, the wind, the sea – to love You together with all.’ And Jesus, all love, such that it seemed He could not contain the flames, added: “My daughter, behold my Heaven in the creature: the Sacrosanct Trinity yielding Its love in order to love Me together with her; the Angels and Saints competing in giving out their love so as to love Me together with her. This is the great act: to bring all into the All, who is God, and the All into all. Your littleness, your childlike manners in my Divine Will, embrace everything and everyone; you want to give Me everything, up to the very Adorable Trinity, and since you are little, no one wants to deny you anything; on the contrary, they unite with you and love together with the tiny little one; and by bringing Me all into the All, and by loving Me, you diffuse the All into all. My love being bond of union and of inseparability, I find everything in the soul – my paradise, my works and everyone – and I can say: ‘I lack nothing – neither Heaven, nor my Celestial Mama, nor the cortege of the Angels and Saints. All are with Me, and all love Me.’ These are loving stratagems and industries of one who loves Me, who calls all, asks for love from all, in order to love Me and make Me loved by all.”

After this, I continued to think about the Divine Volition, and my sweet Jesus added: “My blessed daughter, one who possesses my Will as life feels within herself the divine motion. God moves in Heaven, and she feels His motion. Our motion is work, is step, is word, is everything; and since Our Will is one with the will that the creature possesses, she feels, flowing within herself, the very motion with which God moves, and therefore the divine work, step, word; my very Will – whatever It does within Us, It does in the creature, in such a way that she feels within herself, not only the life, but the nobility and the manner of the One who created her; so, she does not feel the need to ask for It, because she feels as the possessor of It. Our Will occupies her so much as to give her Its love in order to make Itself loved, Its word to let her speak, Its motion to let her move and operate; and – oh! how easy it is for her to know what It wants from her. There are no secrets, nor curtains, for one who lives in Our Will, but everything is unveiled. We can say that We cannot hide from her because Our very Will already unveils Us. Who can hide from oneself – from knowing one’s own secrets and what one wants to do? No one. One can hide oneself from others, but from oneself – this is impossible. Such is Our Will; It makes Itself the revealer, and renders the creature aware of what It does, of what It wants to do, and It gives her the great surprises of Our Divine Being. But, who can tell you where the creature can reach and what she can do by possessing Our Will as life? There takes place the true transformation and consummation of the creature in God, and God takes on the active role and says: ‘Everything is mine in this creature, and I do everything in her.’ It is the true divine nuptial in which God surrenders

His Divine Being to His beloved creature. On the other hand, to one who lives of human will it happens as to one who, degrading from the nobility of his family, takes an uncultured, clumsy, bad-mannered woman to wife. This man, little by little, will lose his noble and refined manners, and will assume rough and clumsy manners, such as to become unrecognizable. What a distance between those who live of Divine Will and those who live of human will! The first form the Celestial Kingdom upon earth, enriched with goodness, with peace, with graces – they can be called the noble portion; the second form the kingdom of revolutions, of discords, of vices – they have no peace, and can give no peace.”

The Divine Will, guide of the soul, and the soul, gatherer of the works of her Creator. How one who lives in the Divine Will receives the transmission of what was first done in God, and then communicated to her.

I was doing my round in the Creation, and it seemed to me that all created things wanted the great honor of being offered as homage and glory to their Creator; and I went from one thing to another, and I felt so rich, for I had many things to give to the One who loves me so much, and while He had done everything for me, I was able to give everything to God, to be able to say to Him: ‘I love You by means of your works, which are pregnant with your love and teach me how to love You.’ But while I was doing this, my highest Good, Jesus, surprising me, all goodness, told me: “How beautiful it is to find Our daughter in the midst of Our works! We feel as if she wanted to compete with Us. In order to love her, We created everything for her, and We gave her all things, that she might possess them, enjoy them, and they might be the narrators of Our power and the bearers of Our love. And therefore she, in each created thing, feels Our love that embraces her, that kisses her, and while molding her, says to her, intensely and tenderly: ‘I love you’. She feels the squeezes of love to Our divine bosom that We give her, and in the midst of so much love she gets lost, confused, and in order to compete with Us she follows the same way that We covered in creating so many things in order to descend to her; and putting herself on the way in each created thing, she feels what We did for her and how We loved her, and she repeats for Us what We did for her. She repeats for Us Our loving embraces, Our ardent kisses, Our ardors of love, and – oh! Our contentments in seeing that the creature ascends to Us and brings Us that which, with so much love, We gave her and give her. Our Will acts as her guide and brings her unto Us, that We may be given the requital of what We gave to her. So, one who lives in Our Will is the gatherer of all Our works, and brings them onto Our lap to say to Us: ‘I love You with your own love, I glorify You by means of your power. Everything You gave me, and everything I give to You’.”

Then, I continued my round in the Divine Will, and as I arrived at Eden, I thought to myself: ‘Oh! how I wish I had the love, the adoration of innocent Adam, so that I too might be able to love my God with the same love with which the first creature, created by Him, loved Him. And my sweet Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My blessed daughter, one who lives in my Divine Will finds in It whatever she wants, because of all that is done in It nothing goes out, but everything remains inside, together with It, inseparable from It; even more, it forms Its very life. Therefore, of all that he did in my Divine Will, Adam could not take anything away with himself; at the most, the happy memory of how he had loved, of the seas of love that inundated him, of the pure joys he had enjoyed, and of everything he had done in Our Fiat – which served to embitter him more. An act done in Our Will, a love, an adoration formed in It, is so great, that the creature has no capacity, nor a place where to put it; therefore, only in my Will can these acts be done and possessed. Hence, one who enters into It finds, in act, everything that innocent Adam did in It, his love, his tendernesses as son toward his Celestial Father, the Divine Paternity that overshadowed His son from all sides in order to love him. She makes everything her own, and she loves, adores and repeats what innocent Adam did. My Divine Will does not change, nor does It mutate – as It was, so It is and will be; as long as the creature enters into It and lives life together with It, It puts no limits, nor does It set boundaries, but rather, It says: ‘Take whatever you want – love Me however you want. In my Fiat what is Mine is yours; only outside of It begin the divisions, the separations, the distances, and the life principle of ‘yours and mine’.’ Even more, you must know that everything that the creature must do in Our Will is first done in God, and she, in the act of doing it, receives the transmission of the divine love and acts into herself, and she continues to do what was done in Our Supreme Being. How beautiful are these lives that receive the transmission of what was first done in Us – they are Our most beautiful works, the magnificences of Creation; the heavens, the sun, remain behind them; they surpass all, they are the absolute sanctities established by Us, which cannot escape Us. We give her so much of Our own as to drown her inside Our goods, in such a way that she cannot find the void for thinking of whether she has to correspond or not, because the current of the divine light and love keep her besieged and as though fused within her Creator, and We give her such knowledges of things as to serve her as free will, that she may do nothing by force, but of her own spontaneous and resolute will. Therefore, these celestial creatures are Our occupation, Our continuous work; We keep her constantly occupied, because Our Will cannot remain idle – because It is life, work and perennial motion. So, one who lives in It has always something to do, and always gives work for her Creator to do.”

How the Divine Will never changes Its action or manner; what It does in Heaven It does on earth; Its act is universal and one. One who does not live of Divine Will reduces the Divine Maker to idleness and escapes from His creative hands.

It seems that my poor mind can do nothing but think of the Divine Will. I feel a powerful force upon me, which gives me no time to think or want anything else, other than that Fiat which is everything for me. So, I was thinking to myself: ‘Oh! how I wish to operate and live of Divine Will just as they operate and live in Heaven.’ And my sweet Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, told me: “My blessed daughter, in my Celestial Fatherland reigns the one and universal act. One is the Will of all – whatever one wills, the other wills as well. No one changes action or Will; each Blessed feels my Will as his own life, and because they all have one single Will, It forms the substance of the happiness of the whole of Heaven. More so, since my Will knows not how to do, nor can It do, broken acts, but continuous and universal; and since in Heaven It reigns with Its full triumph and with the totality of Its dominion, all feel, as their own nature, Its universal life, and are full, up to the brim, of all the goods It possesses. At the most, It might be in them according to the capacity of each one and to the good they have done in life, but no one will be able to change, either will, or action, or love. The power of my Divine Will keeps all the Blessed absorbed, identified, fused within Itself, as if all were one.

But do you think that Its universal act, and Its life palpitating and communicative to each creature, extends only in Heaven? No, no, what It does in Heaven It does on earth – It changes neither action nor manner. Its universal act extends to each pilgrim soul, and one who lives in It feels Its divine life, Its sanctity, Its uncreated heartbeat which, while constituting itself life of the creature, keeps pouring into her with Its incessant motion, without ever ceasing. And the happy creature who lets It reign feels It everywhere, inside and out; Its universal act keeps her surrounded from all sides, in such a way that she cannot go out of my Will, and Its continuous giving keeps her always occupied with receiving; so, even if she wanted to, she has no time to do or think about anything else. Therefore the creature can say, and be convinced, that just as they live in Heaven, so does she live on earth; there is only a difference of place, but one is the love, one is the Will, one the action. But do you know who it is that does not feel the life of Heaven in her soul, and does not feel the universal act, the one force of my Will? One who does not let herself be dominated by It. Giving It no freedom to reign, it is this soul that, indeed, changes action, love and will at each moment. It is not my Will that changes – It cannot change; but it is the creature that changes, because, living of human will, she has no virtue, nor capacity, to receive the universal and single act of my Will, and – poor one – she feels mutable, without firmness in good, always like an empty reed that has no strength to withstand the slightest blow of the wind. Circumstances, encounters, creatures, serve her as wind, to flap her about, now doing one action, now another, now loving one thing, now another; and therefore she appears now sad, now joyful, now all fervor, and now all coldness; now inclined to virtues, now to passions. In sum, as the circumstance ceases, so does the act cease in them. Oh! human will, how weak, mutable, poor you are, without my Will – because you lack the life of good that should animate your will, and therefore the life of Heaven is far away from you. My daughter, there is no greater disgrace, nor evil that deserves to be cried over more than doing one's own will."

Then, I continued to think: "But, why does God have so much interest that the Divine Will be done?" And my always lovable Jesus added: "My daughter, do you want to know why I have so much interest that my Will be done? Because this was the purpose for which I created the creature, and by her not doing It, she destroys the purpose for which I created her, she takes away from me my rights which, with all reason and divine wisdom, I hold over her; and she puts herself against Me. Does it not appear grave to you that the children would put themselves against the Father? And besides, I created the creature so that she might be and form the raw material in my hands, so that I might delight in it and form from this matter my greatest works and my most beautiful handiworks that would serve Me to adorn my Celestial Fatherland, and I might receive from them my greatest glory. Now this material of the creature escapes from my hands, puts itself against Me, and so, in spite of all the materials I have formed, I cannot perform the works I established, and they reduce Me to idleness. In fact, since my Will is not in them, they are not fit for receiving my works, they become like hard stones, such that, as many blows as one may strike on them, they do not possess the softness to be able to receive the shape one wants to give them. They are shattered, they reduce themselves to dust under the blows, but it is not given to Me to form the smallest object, and I remain like that poor artisan who, having formed for himself the most beautiful raw materials – gold, iron, stones - he goes about taking them in his hands in order to form the most beautiful statues, as he had established, and these materials are not fit; even more, they put themselves against him, and he is not allowed to carry out his beautiful art. So, the materials only serve to occupy space, but not to let him realize his great designs; and – oh! how idleness weighs on this poor artisan! So I am. In fact, since my Will is not present in them, they are incapable of receiving my works, there is no one who can render them soft, or anyone who can heat them up to receive my creative and operative virtue; and if you knew what it means to know how to do something, to be capable of doing it, to possess the materials in order to do it, without being able to do anything, you would cry with Me from a sorrow so great, and from an affront so grave. Do you think it is trivial to see many creatures crowding the earth, and because the operating life of my Will is missing in them, I am not allowed to display my art and to do what I want? Therefore, may you take to heart letting my Divine Will alone live in your soul, because It alone knows how to dispose souls to receive all the ability of my art; and in this way you will not force your Jesus into idleness, but I will be the untiring Worker, to make of you what I want."

*How one who disposes himself to do the Divine Will forms the passport, the way, the train.
How Jesus wants to replicate Himself in the creature. The Signer and the celestial engine.*

My Celestial Sovereign, Jesus, and my Great Queen of Heaven, come to my aid, place this little ignorant one in-between your Most Holy Hearts. And while I write, my dear Jesus acts as my prompter, and my Celestial Mama, as with a daughter of hers, guides my hand on the paper, so that, as I write, I will be between Jesus and my Mama, that I may write not a word more than what they tell me and want me to.

With this confidence in my heart I begin to write the thirty-third volume. Perhaps it will be the last one – but I don't know, though I have all the hope that all of Heaven would have compassion on the poor exiled one, and would soon let her repatriate with them. But, after all, Fiat! Fiat!...

So, I continued to think about the Divine Will, life and center of my poor existence, and my sweet Jesus, repeating His fleeting little visit, told me: "My good daughter, you must know that as the soul disposes herself to do my Divine Will, she forms the passport in order to enter the interminable boundaries of the Kingdom of the Fiat. But do you know who lends you what is needed in order to form it, and who offers to sign it and give it the value of passage into my Kingdom? Daughter, the act of disposing oneself to do my Will is so great, that my very life, my own merits, form the paper, the characters, and your Jesus acts as the Signer to make this creature known, and give her free access. It can be said that the whole of Heaven runs to the aid of one who wants to do my Will, and I feel so much love, that I take my place in this fortunate creature and I feel loved by her, from my own Will. Now, seeing Myself loved by her, from my own Will, my love becomes jealous and does not want to lose even one breath, one heartbeat of love, of this creature. You yourself, imagine my care, the precautions I take, the helps I give, the loving stratagems I use toward her; in a word, I want to replicate Myself within her, and in order to replicate Myself, I expose Myself, so as to form another Jesus in the creature; therefore I apply all my divine art to obtain the intent. I hold nothing back, I do everything, I give everything; wherever my Will reigns, I can deny nothing, because I would deny it to Myself.

Now, disposing oneself to do my Will forms the passport; beginning the act forms the way that she must cover within It – a way of Heaven, holy, divine. Therefore, to one who enters into It, I whisper, to the ear of her heart: 'Forget the earth, it is no longer yours now; from now on you will see nothing but Heaven. My Kingdom has no boundaries, therefore your journey will be long; hence, you'd better hasten your steps, to form for yourself many paths and, in this way, take much from the goods which are there in my Kingdom.' So, to begin the act forms the way, to fulfill it forms the train, and when I see the train formed, I act as the engine, to set it at fast pace; and – oh! how beautiful, delightful, it is to stroll along these ways, which the creature has formed for herself in my Will. These acts done in my Will enclose centuries of merits and of incalculable goods, because there is the divine engine that runs, which has such velocity as to enclose centuries within minutes, and it renders the creature so rich, beautiful and holy, as to make Us boast before the whole Celestial Court, pointing at her as the greatest prodigy of Its creative art.

Furthermore, as the creature keeps forming her act in my Divine Will, so are the veins of the soul emptied of what is human, and a divine blood – I could say – flows within them, which makes the divine virtues, in their substance, to be felt in the creature, which have the virtue of flowing, almost like blood, in the very life that animates her Creator - which renders them inseparable from each other, so much so, that one who wants to find God can find Him in His place of honor in the creature, and one who wants to find the creature will find her in the divine center.”

The works of God prepare a banquet for the creature, and by living in His Divine Volition, she acts as queen in the seas of the Supreme Being. How one who does her own will sets herself apart from everyone and remains alone, the derelict and lost one of Creation.

I was doing my round in the works of the Divine Fiat, and since I am too little, I feel the need to be carried in Its arms; otherwise, either I get lost within Its immensity and the multiplicity of Its works, or I am unable to move forward. But since It wants to make known to me Its works - in which Its speaking and operating love is found, and where It tells me how much and in what manner It has loved me - so, It carries me in Its arms and It leads me along the interminable ways of Its Holy Will. But this is not enough; for each of Its works, It encloses in me the love of each work, as much as I can contain; It wants to hear in me the sound of the love which each work encloses. I too am a work of Its own, an act of Its Will, and since It did everything for love of me It wants me to enclose within myself all the sounds and keys of love which Its works contain.

So, while I was going around in Its works, beloved Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My blessed daughter, you cannot comprehend how pleased I am to see you go around in the works created by Us. They are pregnant with love, and as you go around in their midst, they pour out love and give you the love with which they are filled; and this is one of the reasons why I want you to go around in Our works: they prepare the banquet of Our love for the creatures, and feel honored to have a little sister of theirs in their midst, who nourishes herself with it and forms within herself as many sounds of love for their Creator for as many works as were created. But this is not all; my Divine Will is not content with letting her go around in Our works, but after It made her go around, making known to her many things about Creation and filling her with love up to the brim, It leads her, in Its arms, unto the bosom of the Supreme Being, who, as with a tiny little pebble, casts her into the interminable seas of His attributes. And the little daughter of Our Will – what does she do? Just as a little pebble cast into the sea makes all the waters of the sea ripple, so does she move the whole of the sea of Our Divine Being; and while she swims in it, she drowns with love, with light, with sanctity, with wisdom, with goodness, and so forth. And – oh! how beautiful it is to see her, to hear her say, as she feels drowned: ‘All of your love is mine, and I place it in act of praying You to make the Kingdom of your Will come upon earth. Your sanctity is mine; your light, your goodness, your mercy is mine. It is not my littleness that is praying You – no, but it is your seas of power, of goodness, that pray You, that press You, that assail You and want your Will reigning on earth.’ So, the littleness of the creature appears as acting as queen in Our Supreme Being, reuniting together Our immensity and power, and making Us ask from Our own selves what she wants and We Ourselves want. She comprehends well that there is no other good but Our Will alone, and in order to obtain the intent she makes the very infinity of Our divine qualities ask Us for It. And there appears the tiny little one, little and powerful, enriched with the prerogatives of Our divine qualities, as if they were her own, giving her such charm of beauty as to enrapture Us, debilitate Us, so as to make Us do what she wants and We Ourselves want. She becomes Our echo, and is unable to tell Us or ask of Us anything other than for Our Will to invade everything and form one single will with all creatures.

So, once the creature has understood what Divine Will means, and feels Its life flowing within herself, she no longer feels a need for anything because, by possessing Our Will, she possesses all possible and imaginable goods. All that is left to her is the delirium, the yearnings, the longings, for she wants my Will to embrace all and constitute Itself life of everything; and this because she sees that my Will wants it so, and so wants her littleness.”

Then, I continued to think about the Divine Will, and the great evil that doing the human will brings; and my beloved Jesus, sighing, added: “My daughter, one who does her own will sets herself apart from everyone and acts on her own; there is no one to help her or to give her the strength, nor anyone to give her the light to be able to make the best out of what she does. So, all leave her at the mercy of herself, isolated, without support and without defense; she can be called the derelict, the lost one in Creation. Just penalty for one who wants to do her own will – to feel all the weight of the loneliness into which she herself has cast herself, and the lack of help from anyone. And – oh! the sorrow I feel in seeing so many creatures apart even from Me! And I, to let them touch with their own hand what it means to act without my Will, remain as though far away, letting them feel all the weight of the human will, which never gives them rest and becomes their cruelest tyrant.

The complete opposite for one who does my Will. All are with her – Heaven, Saints, Angels – because out of honor and respect for my Divine Volition, all have the duty to help that creature and sustain her in those acts where my Will enters. My Will Itself places her in communication with everyone, and commands everyone to help her, defend her and form for her the cortege of their company. Grace already smiles at her, the light shines in her soul and administers to her the best, the highest beauty, into her act. I Myself remain committed in one who does my Will, and I make my acts flow within hers, to have the honor, the love, the glory of my acts in the act of the creature who has operated in my Will. Here is why she feels the connection with all, the strength, the support, the company, the defense of all. So, one who does my Will and lives in It can be called the regained one of Creation, the daughter, the sister, the friend of all. My Will acts like the sun, which pours light from the height of its sphere and, expanding, encloses everything within its light; it gives itself to all, it denies itself to no one; and like a faithful sister, it embraces with all things and gives its beneficial effect to each created thing as the pledge of its love, constituting itself life of the effects it gives: in some it forms the life of sweetness, in other created things the life of fragrance, in others the life of colors, and so forth. In the same way, my Will, from the height of Its throne, pours down Its light, and where It finds the creature who wants to receive It to let herself be dominated, It surrounds her, It embraces her, It warms her, It molds her, to make her mature and so enclose Its admirable life as if it were life of the creature; and with this life everything and everyone are with her, as everything belongs to my adorable Will.”

Fiat!!!

The first word that Adam pronounced. What the first lesson was that God gave him. The Divine Will operating in man.

I am always the tiny little ignorant one of the Supreme Being, and when the Divine Will plunges me into Its seas, I see that I just barely know the vowels, if at all, of Its Adorable Majesty. My littleness is such that I can just barely swallow a few drops of the much that the Creator possesses.

Then, while going around in the works of the Divine Fiat, I paused at Eden, in which I made present to myself the creation of man; and I thought to myself: ‘What could be the first word that Adam spoke when he was created by God?’ And my Highest Good, Jesus, visiting me with His short little visit, all goodness, as if He Himself wanted to tell me, said to me: “My daughter, I too feel the need to tell you what the first word was, pronounced by the lips of the first creature created by Us. You must know that as soon as Adam felt life, motion and reason within himself, he saw His God before him and comprehended that He had formed him. He felt within himself, in his whole being, still fresh, the impressions, the touch of His creative hands, and, grateful, in a surge of love, he pronounced his first word: ‘I love You, my God, my Father, the Author of this, my life.’ But it was not only the word, but the breath, the heartbeat, the drops of his blood that flowed inside his veins, the motion, the whole of his being united together, repeated as though in chorus: 'I love You, I love You, I love You'.

So, the first lesson that he learned from his Creator, the first word that he learned to speak, the first thought that had life within his mind, the first heartbeat that was formed in his heart, was 'I love You, I love You...'. He felt himself loved, and he loved. I can say that he never stopped his 'I love You'; it was so long, that only when he had the disgrace to fall into sin - then was it interrupted. So, Our Divinity felt wounded in hearing 'I love You, I love You...' on the lips of man; it was the very same word that We had created in the organ of his voice, that was saying to Us: 'I love You'. It was Our own love, created by Us in the creature, that was saying to Us: 'I love You'. How not to remain wounded? How not to requite him with a yet greater, stronger love, worthy of Our magnificence? As We heard 'I love You' being spoken to Us, so did We repeat to him 'I love you'; but in Our 'I love you', We made the operating life of Our Divine Will flow in his whole being. So, in man, as though inside a temple of Ours, We enclosed Our Will, so that, enclosed within the human circle, while remaining in Us, It might operate great things, and might be the thought, the word, the heartbeat, the step and the work of man. Our 'I love you' could not give a holier, a more beautiful, a more powerful thing, which alone could form the life of the Creator in the creature, than Our Will operating in him. And - oh! how pleasing it was for Us to see that Our Will held Its place of Actor, and the human will, dazzled by Its light, would enjoy its Paradise, and giving It full freedom, it would let It do whatever It wanted, giving It primacy in everything, and the place of honor that befitted a Will so holy.

See, then, how the beginning of the life of Adam was an act of His whole being full of love toward God. What a sublime lesson - how the beginning of love should run in the whole operating of the creature. The first lesson that he received from Our Supreme Being, as the requital of his 'I love You', was that, while loving him tenderly, replying to him: 'I love you', He gave him the first lesson in Our Divine Will; and while instructing him, He communicated to him the life of It and the infused knowledge of what Our Divine Fiat meant. And each time he said to Us: 'I love You', Our love prepared from him other lessons, more beautiful, about Our Will. He remained enraptured and We delighted in conversing with him, and made rivers of love and of perennial joys flow upon him. So, the human life was enclosed by Us within love and Our Will.

Therefore, my daughter, there is no greater sorrow for Us than to see Our love as though broken in the creature, and Our Will hampered, suffocated, without Its operating life, and as though subjected to the human will. So, be attentive, and in all things let love and my Divine Will be the beginning."

Fiat!!

December 18, 1933

How the creature was formed by God 'ab æterno'¹¹⁷, loved with eternal love. How the human will is the upsetting of the works of her Creator.

My poor mind continues to cross the infinite sea of the Fiat, and as much as one goes on, it never ends. In this sea the soul feels her God, who fills her completely, up to the brim, with His Divine Being, in such a way that she can say: 'God has given me all of Himself; and if it is not given to me to enclose His immensity within myself, it is because I am little.' Now, in this sea one can find, in act, the order, the harmony, the arcane mysteries of how God created man; and the prodigies are unheard-of, the love is exuberant, the mastery is insuperable. There is such mystery in it, that neither man himself nor sciences can retell with clarity on the formation of man. So, I remained surprised at the magnificences and prerogatives that the human nature possesses; and my beloved Jesus, in seeing me so surprised, told me: "My blessed daughter, your marvel will cease if, looking carefully into this sea of my Will, you will see where, who, how and when each creature was formed.

So, where? In the Eternal womb of God. Who? God Himself gave him origin. How? The Supreme Being Himself formed the series of his thoughts, the number of his words, the order of his works, the motion of his steps, and the continuous beating of his heart. So, God gave him such beauty, order and harmony as to be able to find Himself in the creature, with such fullness, that he would not find any space to put anything of his own, which had not been placed in him by God. In looking at him, We remained enraptured in seeing that in the little human circle Our power had enclosed Our divine operating; and in Our emphasis of love We said to him: ‘How beautiful you are, work of Ours. You are and you will be Our glory, the expression of Our love, the reflection of Our wisdom, the echo of Our power, the bearer of Our eternal love.’ And We loved him with eternal love, without beginning and without end. And when was this creature formed by Us? Ab æterno. Therefore, he did not exist in time, but in eternity he has always existed. He had his place in Us, his palpitating life, the love of his Creator. So, the creature has always been Our ideal for Us, the little space in which to carry out Our creative work, the shelf for Our life to lean on, the outpouring of Our eternal love. This is why, then, so many human things cannot be comprehended, cannot be explained: because there is the operating of the incomprehensible divine, there are Our mysterious celestial arcana¹¹⁸, Our divine fibers, such that We alone know Our divine secrets, the keys We need to touch when We want to do new and unusual things in the creature. And since they do not know Our secrets, nor can they comprehend Our incomprehensible ways which We have placed in the human nature, they reach the point of judging according to their ways and cannot make head nor tail of what We operate in the creature, while they should rather bow their foreheads before that which they do not comprehend.

Now, one who does not possess Our Will puts Our acts – ordered ab æterno in the creature - in disorder; therefore he disfigures himself and forms the void of Our divine acts, formed and ordered by Us in the human creature. We loved Ourselves in her, the series of Our acts formed by Our pure love, and by putting her out in time We wanted her as concurring to what We had done. But in order for the creature to have this ability, Our Will was needed which, giving her Its divine virtue, would make her do in time that which had been done by Us, without her, in eternity; nor would there be any wonder that the Divine Being had formed her in eternity - the same Divine Volition would confirm and repeat it in time, that is, would continue Its creative work in the creature. But without my Divine Will how can she ever elevate, conform, unify herself to, and resemble, those same acts which We, with so much love, have formed and ordered in her? Hence, the human will does nothing other than upset Our most beautiful works, break Our love, empty Our works, which remain within Us because We lose nothing of what We have done. All the evil remains for the poor creature, because she feels the abyss of the divine void; her works are without strength and without light, her steps are vacillating, her mind confused. So, she remains without my Will, like a food without substance, like a body that is paralyzed, like a field without cultivation, like a tree without fruit, like a flower that sends out a bad odor. Oh! if Our Divinity were subject to tears, We would cry bitterly over she who does not let herself be dominated by Our Will.”

January 2, 1934

When the soul does the Divine Will, God can freely do what He wants to do in her, and operate the greatest things, because He finds the capacity, the space for what He wants to give to the creature.

Though my little soul swims in the sea of the Divine Will, I still feel the piercing nail of the privation of my sweet Jesus. My God, what a harrowing pain, what a torture is my painful existence! Oh! how I would like to shed rivers of tears! If it were possible, I would like to transform the very immensity of the Divine Will into bitter crying, to move my sweet Jesus to pity, who flies away from me, but without even telling me the place of His dwelling, or showing me the way, the mark of His steps, that I might be able to reach me. My God! My Jesus! How can You not be moved to compassion for this little exiled one, tormented only for You, and because of You?

But while raving from His privation, I was thinking to myself about the Divine Will, and I feared that Its dominion, Its life, might not be present in me, and because of this my Eternal Love, Jesus, leaves me, hides, and does not care about me; and from the heart I was asking for His forgiveness. And my beloved Jesus, after much struggling of mine, having compassion on me for I could bear no more, came back for just a little, and looking at me with love, all goodness, told me: "My little daughter of my Will, it shows how you are little, and it is enough for Me to make a little pause, that you get lost, you fear, you doubt, you oppress yourself. But do you know where you get lost? In my Will. And I, seeing you in It, do not hasten my coming because I know that you are in a safe place.

Now, you must know that when a soul does my Divine Will, I can freely do whatever I want in the soul, and operate the greatest things. My Will empties her for me of everything, and forms the space in which I can put the sanctity of an infinite act of mine; and the soul places herself at Our disposal. Our Will has matured her, and has rendered her adaptable and fit for receiving the creative and operative virtue of Our Supreme Being. On the other hand, when one does not do Our Divine Will, We have to adapt Ourselves, restrict Ourselves, nor can We be generous according to Our divine manner. We have to give Our graces sip by sip, while We can give rivers. Oh! how heavy it is for Us to operate in one who does not possess Our Will! If We want to make Ourselves known, she is incapable, because the human intelligence without Our Will is like a foggy sky which, obscuring the beautiful light of reason, is as though blind before the light of Our knowledges. So, it may be there in the midst of the light, but incapable of comprehending anything; it will always be illiterate before the light of Our truths. If We want to give Our sanctity, beauty and love, We have to give them in small doses, as though broken into small pieces, because the human will is cluttered with miseries, with weaknesses and defects, therefore it becomes incapable and also unworthy to receive Our gifts and what We want to give her. Poor human volition - without Our Will it cannot adapt itself to receiving the virtue of Our creative works, the strong embraces of its Creator, Our loving stratagems, the wounds of Our love; and many times it tires Our divine patience and forces Us not to give it anything; and if Our love forces Us to give something, it is for it like a food that it cannot digest because, not being united with Our Will, it lacks the strength and the digestive virtue to digest what belongs to Us.

Therefore, it shows immediately when Our Will is not present in the soul: true good is not for her; before the light of my truths she goes blind and becomes more stupid; nor does she love to know them - on the contrary, she looks at them as if they did not belong to her. The complete opposite for one who does and lives in my Will."

Sweet enchantment on both sides - God and the creature. How she acquires the power to make the Divine Will her own. Pains smile before the glory, the triumphs, the conquests. Jesus, hidden by the pains.

I am under the rain of the Divine Fiat which, bathing me completely, inside and out, and penetrating even into the marrow of my bones, makes the whole of my poor being say: 'Fiat, Fiat, Fiat.' I feel I am in Its arms, and as I call It with my incessant plea for It to form Its life in my acts, Its heartbeat in my heart, Its breath in mine, Its thought in my mind, so is a flash of light unleashed from me and it would want to as though bind the Holy Divine Volition, to make It completely my own, so that it may be in my power to form Its life in me, all of Divine Will. So, I felt concerned about this way of acting of mine, and my highest Good, Jesus, repeating His short little visit, all goodness, told me: "My little daughter of my Will, you must know that as the creature invokes, calls, my Fiat, imploring Its life to be formed within hers, so does she unleash light and forms an enchantment to God, which enraptures His divine pupil which, enraptured, looks at the creature and forms in her the requital of Its sweet enchantment and the void in the act of the creature, to be able to give and enclose in her act the Divine Will. And while It forms and carries out Its life, the happy creature acquires the power to make It her own; and because It is her own, she loves It powerfully, more than her own life. My daughter, as long as my Will is not held as one's own life, exclusively one's own, which no one can take away from her - even though she knows that it is a gift received from God and, though something received, she is already fortunate and victorious to have the possession of it - she will never be able to love my Divine Will as befits It, nor feel the need of Its life; nor will my Will be able to carry out, fully, with all freedom, Its divine life in the creature. Therefore, your calling It disposes you; as you make It your own, It will make Itself known and you will feel the great good of possessing Its life, and you will love It as It deserves to be loved, and you will be jealous to keep It with such attention as to lose not even one breath of It."

Then, as I was a little more in suffering than usual, I was thinking to myself: 'Oh! how I would love for my pains to form for me the wings to let me fly to my Celestial Fatherland.' And instead of afflicting me, my little pains were making feast to me. I felt concerned about it, and my beloved Jesus added: "My daughter, do not be surprised; in the face of glory, the pains smile, they feel triumphant in seeing the conquests they have acquired. The pains confirm and establish the glory, more or less great, in the creature; and according to the pains, so does she feel, being painted within her, the most beautiful and various tints of beauty; and in seeing themselves being transformed into the rarest beauty, they make feast. So, on earth the pains cry, at the doors of Heaven begins their eternal smile that will never end. On earth the pains are bearers of humiliation, at the eternal gates they are bearers of glory. On earth they render the poor creature unhappy, but by the miraculous secret that they possess, they work - deep inside her inmost fibers and in the whole of the human being - the Eternal Kingdom, in such a way that each pain takes on its own distinct office: one acts as chisel, another as hammer, another as file, another as brush, another as color. And only when each pain has fulfilled its work, then do they leave the creature entrusted to them, and they lead her, triumphant, up to Heaven. And only when they see each pain changed into a distinct joy and perennial happiness, then do they let her go. However, only if the creature receives them with love, and feels and receives in each pain the kiss, the embraces, the tight squeezes of my Divine Will, then do the pains possess this miraculous virtue. Otherwise, they become as if they had no instruments apt to fulfilling their work.

But do you want to know who the pain is? The pain is I, who hide inside of it to form the arcane works for my Celestial Fatherland, and I requite at usury¹¹⁹ the brief dwelling that they have given Me on earth. I have imprisoned Myself in the small prison of the creature in order to continue my life of pains down here; it is just for this life of mine to receive its joys, its happinesses, its exchange of glory in the Celestial Region. Therefore, let your surprise cease in hearing that your pains smile before the victories, the triumphs and the conquests."

Fraternal bonding between the Supreme Being and the creature on earth; fraternal bonding in the glory. Power over Jesus Himself. How one who lives in the Divine Will acquires the unitive, communicative and diffusive force.

I was doing my round in the Divine Fiat, and my poor mind paused now at one point of Its divine acts, now at another, to watch in some the beauty, in some the power, in others the interminability, and so forth, of the creative Divine Will. It seemed to me that all the supreme qualities were exposed in the whole Creation, to love the creatures, to make themselves known, establish a fraternal bond with them and take them as though on their lap, to carry them into the womb of the ¹¹⁹ that is, with unimaginable disproportionate abundance

Creator, from which everything had come out. So, all the acts of the Divine Will are mighty aids, revealers, and for those who let themselves be dominated by them, they make themselves the bearers of the souls to the Celestial Fatherland.

So, I arrived at pausing when the Divine Fiat did the solemn acts of the creation of man, and my beloved Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My blessed daughter, let us pause together to look at with what mastery, sumptuousness, nobility, power and beauty man was created. All of Our divine qualities pour themselves upon man; each of them wanted to show off and pour itself, more than thick rain, over he with whom they wanted to establish a fraternal bond. All of them set to work: Our light poured itself upon him to form its brother in light; goodness poured itself to form its brother, all goodness; love poured itself to fill him with love and form its brother, all love; power, Our wisdom, beauty, justice, poured themselves upon him to form their brother - powerful, wise, just, and of an enchanting beauty. And Our Supreme Being rejoiced in seeing Our divine qualities, all at work, to fraternally bind themselves with man; as well as Our Will which, taking life in man, kept the order of Our same divine qualities, to make him as graceful and beautiful as possible. So, Our occupation was man, Our gaze was fixed upon him, to make Ourselves imitated, copied, and to bind him in a fraternal bond with Us. And this, not only in creating him, but during the whole course of his life - Our qualities exhibited themselves to the continuous work of maintaining the fraternal bond with he whom they loved so much; and after having established this fraternal bond on earth, they would prepare the great feast of the fraternal bonding to glory in the Celestial Fatherland - fraternal bonding of joy, of beatitude, of perennial happiness.

This is why I love him so much - because he was created by Us, therefore he is fully Our own; I love him because Our Divine Being constantly runs upon him and pours Itself over him, more than a mighty torrent, to leave something of Our own, and then resume the new races, to always give. So, it is because he possesses something of my own - this is why I love Myself in him; I love him because he is destined to populate Heaven and to be my brother in glory, as we will glorify each other. I will be his glory as life, and he will be my glory as the work of mine. Here then, the reason why I love so much for the creature to do and live in my Will - because with It my divine qualities find their place of honor and can maintain the fraternal bonding with the creature. Without It they find no place, nor do they know where to put themselves; the fraternal bond is broken, and my life remains suffocated. My daughter, what a gloomy change when the creature withdraws from my Will - I no longer find my image, nor my life growing in her; my qualities feel ashamed to remain bound as brothers and sisters with her, because the human will, disunited from the Divine, has made everything upset and sluggish. Therefore, take to heart never to get out of my Will; with It you will be fraternally bound with everything that is holy, you will be the sister of all Our works, and will hold in your power your Jesus Himself.”

After this, I continued my acts in the Divine Volition, and my Sovereign Jesus added: “My daughter, everything that is done in my Will remains identified with It, acquiring the unitive, communicative and diffusive force; and since Our divine acts extend to all, not one creature is put aside. So, one who operates in Our Will, together with Our act extends to all, wants to do good to all, and remains honored and glorified in having been the universal bearer of good to everything and to everyone.” And I: ‘My Love, yet one cannot see in the creatures the fruit of so great a universal good. Oh! if all were to receive it, how many transformations would occur in the low world! And Jesus replied: “This means that they do not receive it with love, and their hearts are like sterile earth, with no generative seed to which Our light could bring fecundity. It happens as to the sun which, though it illuminates and warms all the lands, yet, if it does not find the seed in order to fecundate it, cannot communicate its generative and productive virtue; and even though with its light and heat it has molded that land, it has received no good, what it was, so it has remained, in its sterility. But in spite of this the sun was left honored and glorified, having given its light; no one was able to escape it, and it remains triumphant for the mere fact that it gave its light in a universal way to all and over everything. Such are Our works, Our acts; their mere possessing the extendible virtue of being able to give themselves in a universal way to all, and of doing good to all, is the greatest honor, it is the greatest glory for Us. There is no greater honor, no greater glory, than being able to say: 'I am the bearer of good to all. In my act I hold everyone in my power, I embrace all and I possess the virtue of generating good over everything.' And since my ideal is the creature, this is why I call her in my Will - so that, together with It, she may become extendible to all, and may know with how much love and in what manner my Will operates."

Love of God hidden in the Virgin. The Divine Paternity gives Her the Divine Maternity and generates in Her the human generations as Her children. How the divine immensity renders all of Its works inseparable.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues, and finding everything that It has done in It¹²⁰, the little atom of my soul goes round and round, to give even just a little 'I love You' of mine, for everything It has done in the round of eternity for love of all creatures. And my lovable Jesus stopped me in the waves of interminable love of the Conception of my Celestial Mama, and all goodness told me: "Little daughter of my Will, your 'I love You', though little, wounds Our love, and from those wounds that it gives Us, it gives Us the occasion to release Our hidden love and make itself the revealer of Our intimate secrets and of how much We have loved the creatures. Now, you must know that We loved the whole of mankind, but We were forced to keep hidden in Our Divine Being all the immense ardor of Our love, because We did not find in it either the beauty that would enrapture Our love, or the love which, wounding Us, would make Our love pour out in order to inundate them, to make itself known, to love them, and make itself loved. On the contrary, they were immersed in the lethargy of sins, such as to cause Us to be horrified at merely looking at them. But Our love was burning, We loved them and wanted to make Our love reach all. How to do it? We had to use a great device of Our love in order to reach this - and here is how: We called to life the tiny Little Virgin Mary, creating Her all pure, all holy, all beautiful, all love, without original sin, and making Our very Divine Will to be conceived together with Her, so that between She and Us there might be free access, perennial and inseparable union.

Now, the Celestial Queen enraptured Us with Her beauty, and Our love ran and ran; with Her love She wounded Us, and Our love, overflowing, hid within Her; and looking at all creatures through Her beauty and Her love, Our love poured itself out, and We loved all creatures with love hidden in this Celestial Queen. So, We loved all in Her; seen through Her beauty, they no longer seemed ugly to Us; Our love was no longer restricted within Us, but diffused in the heart of a creature so holy. And by Our communicating to Her Our Divine Paternity and loving everyone in Her, She acquired the Divine Maternity, to be able to love all as Her children, generated by Her Celestial Father. As She felt that We loved all creatures in Her, so She felt that Our love formed the new generation of all mankind within Her Maternal Heart. Can there be greater device of love, more loving stratagems, than for Our Paternal Goodness to choose - in order to love creatures, and also those who offended Us - a creature from that same stock and form Her as beautiful as We could, so that Our love would not find hindrances to be able to love everyone in Her and make Her loved by all? In this Celestial Queen all can find Our love hidden in Her; more so since, possessing Our Divine Will, She dominated Us - to make Us love all. And We, with Our sweet empire, dominated Her - for Her to be the most affectionate Mother of all. True love cannot be without loving, and it uses all arts, and takes the occasion to love from the littlest things, just as from the greatest; Our love now hides, now makes itself manifest, now directly, and now through an indirect way, in order to make itself known - that We love with incessant love She whom We delivered from the depth of Our love. Greater gift We could not give to all generations, in giving them this incomparable creature as the Mother of all, and as the bearer of Our love hidden in Her, in order to feed it to all Her children.”

After this, I continued to think about the Divine Will. The thought that my Celestial Mama possessed in Her Maternal Heart the hidden love with which my Creator loved me filled me with joy, thinking that I was looked upon by God from within my dear Celestial Mother, through Her sanctity and Her enrapturing beauty. Oh! how happy I felt, and all trust, for I no longer was to be loved and gazed upon by myself, but loved and gazed upon together with my Mama. Oh! She - to make me loved more by my Jesus - will cover me with Her virtues, She will clothe me with Her beauty, and will hide my miseries and my weaknesses. But one thought wanted to gloom my joy: that Our Lord did this for as long as the Queen of Heaven lived on earth, but when He took Her into Heaven, this device of divine love ended. And my sweet Jesus, returning added: “My blessed daughter, Our works continue always and are inseparable from us; so, Our hidden love continues in the Queen of Heaven and will always continue. It would not be operating as God if everything We do could separate from Us and not have perennial life. Therefore We love, We pour Ourselves over the creatures, and it seems that Our love departs from Us - but no, it departs and it remains with Us, and the love that pours upon the creatures is inseparable from Us, and renders inseparable She who has received this love. So, all Our works - Heaven and earth, creatures that come out to the light of the day - seem to depart from Us, but no, they are all inseparable from Us; and this, by virtue of Our immensity, which is such that, enveloping everything, there is not one point where it is not present, rendering everything We do inseparable from Us. Therefore, neither can Our works separate from Us, nor can We from them. It can be said that they form one single body for Us, and Our immensity and power are like blood circulation which maintains the life for everyone and for everything. At the most, there might be works that are distinct, one from the other, but being separable - never.” And I, on hearing this, surprised, said: ‘Yet, my Love, there are the reprobates, already separated from You. They too are works come out of You. How is it then, that they no longer belong to You?’ And Jesus: “You are mistaken, my daughter, they do not belong to Me by way of love, but they do by way of justice. My immensity that envelops them holds its power over them, and if they did not belong to Me, my punishing justice would have no one to punish, because if things did not belong to Me, they would lose life instantly; but if this life exists, there is the One who preserves it, and who justly punishes it. Therefore, the Sovereign Lady, in Heaven, still possesses Our hidden love toward each creature; even more, feeling Her Creator loving all creatures from within Her Maternal Heart is Her greatest contentment; and She, acting as true Mother, how many times She hides them inside Her love, to make them loved; inside Her sorrows, for them to be forgiven; inside Her prayers, to obtain for them the greatest graces. Oh! She is the Coverer who knows how to cover and excuse Her children before the throne of Our Majesty. Therefore, let yourself be covered by your Celestial Mama, who will take care of the needs of Her daughter.”

One who lives in the Divine Will is raised in Its arms, and the Divine Will, with Its strength, makes of her the little winner. The creature is the little queen who, with her Jesus in her heart, repeats His life.

I feel I am the little daughter, but so little as to feel the extreme need for the Divine Will, more than Mother to me, to carry me in Its arms, feed me the words, administer the motion to my hands, sustain my step, form the heartbeat in my heart and the thought in my mind. Oh! Divine Will, how much You love me! I feel your life pouring into me, to give me life, and as though in waiting, wanting the atoms of my acts in order to invest them with Its creative strength and tell me: “The atoms of my daughter match Me because they possess my invincible strength.” But while my mind was amazed in seeing the loving and maternal devices of the Divine Will, my always lovable Jesus, who is always on guard, to be spectator of that which the Divine Volition does in me, told me: “My little daughter, you must know that my Supreme Volition looks upon one who wants to live in It as a birth from Itself, whom It wants to raise in Its arms, with Its maternal cares. And as It sees that Its tiny little one wants to give something of her own with her little works, to tell Her¹²¹ that she loves Her, this Divine Mother clasps Her daughter to Her breast, and fortifies with Her strength the motion, the word, the step of Her daughter. This fortitude invests her completely, it transforms her, and even though she is little, she appears as little and strong, little and winner; and this Mother takes delight in letting Herself be won by Her little daughter. So, she appears strong in love, strong in suffering, strong in operating – strength is the halo of this creature; she is the invincible one before God and over herself; her weaknesses and passions tremble before this little winner. God Himself smiles and converts justice into love, into forgiveness, in the face of the childlike strength of this creature. It is the strength of her Mother, Her perennial care, that render her strong and invincible. Therefore, if you want to be the winner over everything, grow in the arms of my Will; It will pour Itself into you, and you will feel Its life palpitating within you, and It will raise you to Its likeness, and you will be Its honor, Its triumph and Its glory.”

Then, I continued to think about the Divine Will, and before my mind appeared the most beautiful scenes of the divine operating, as though all in act of giving themselves to me, to make themselves known, to receive my little love, my gratitude and my thanksgiving; and my beloved Jesus added: “My blessed daughter, for one who lives in my Will all times are hers, and I love to hear, being repeated to me by her, that which the creatures have not done for Me, because with so much love I have operated for them; as well as that which they have done for Me. Therefore, one who lives in my Will finds, in act, the Creation, and in the azure heavens, in the refulgent sun, in the sparkling stars she gives Me her kisses, her filial love, and – oh! how happy I feel, that in so many created things I find the love, the kisses, the grateful act of my daughter; and I convert all things into joy for her, into defense and her own property. Oh! how beautiful it is to be recognized, loved, in those same works, because We have made them, and We have loved. She finds the brief epoch of innocent Adam, and together with him she gives Me his innocent embraces, his chaste kisses, his love as my son, and – oh! how happy I feel, for I see my Paternity recognized, loved, honored. Oh! how beautiful it is to feel Myself a Father and, as such, to feel loved by my children; and I requite her with my kisses, my paternal embraces, and I give her, as the right of her property, the infinite joy of my Paternity. What will I not give to my children, after I have been loved and recognized as Father? Everything, I will deny them nothing; and they give Me the right, the joy, of my children. Nothing can I deny to one who lives in my Will; if I did so, I would deny it to Myself. Therefore I give everything, and she repeats for Me the scenes of her giving Me everything. Therefore, in It there are exchanges of works, reciprocal love, which form such moving scenes as to form the Paradise of God and of the soul. Oh! thousands and thousands of times blessed, the one who comes to live in the celestial dwelling of my Will!

You must know that one who does the Divine Will enters into It as queen, and as such she comes before Us with the cortege of all Our works. So, she makes the conception of the Virgin her own, and identifying herself with Her and with Us, she gives Us what We gave to Her and what She gave to Us; and We feel We are being given the love, the glory of the immense seas with which We endowed this Virgin, and all of Her acts moving again, as if She were just repeating them to Us, and – oh! what abysses of graces are renewed between Heaven and earth. The soul in Our Will places It in the condition of acting as the repeater of Its works, and while It repeats them It endows the one who gave It the occasion. And since the creature is incapable of giving Us all in one act, which for Us is formed in one single act, her littleness keeps moving about within Our Will, and now she takes one of Our works, now another; and with the dominion that Our Will gives her, she descends into the Incarnation of the Word, and – oh! how beautiful it is to see her invested with His love, pearled with His tears, adorned with His wounds, possessing His prayers. All the works of the Word surround her inside and out, and, what’s more, converted for her into joys, into beatitude, into fortitude, with the inseparability of her Jesus whom she holds in her heart as in a sacred temple, to act as the repeater of

¹²¹ The Divine Will as Divine Mother

His life. Oh! what moving scenes she performs before God! With her Jesus in her heart she prays, suffers, loves together with Jesus, and in her childlike littleness she says: ‘I possess Jesus – He dominates me and I Him. Even more, I give Him what He does not have – my pains – to form His complete life in me. He is poor in pains because He is glorious – He cannot have them; and I make up for what He does not have, while He makes up for what is lacking in me.’ So, in Our Will the creature is the true queen – everything is hers, and she gives Us such surprise of Our works as to enrapture Us; and she forms Our happiness that the creature can give Us in Our Most Holy Will.”

The creature, by doing her will, loses the head, the divine reason, the order, the regime. Jesus is Head of the creature.

While I continued my round in the Divine Will, Its sweet empire, Its irresistible force, Its love and Its inextinguishable light pour upon my littleness which, as though enraptured, finds itself in the sea of the Divine Will. And, oh! the sweet surprises, Its ways ever new, Its enrapturing beauty, Its immensity that carries everyone and everything as though on Its lap. But that which strikes the most is Its love for the creature; It seems to be all eyes to look at her, all heart to love her, all hands and feet to carry her clasped to Its bosom, and to give her the step. Oh! how It yearns to give Its life to the creature, that she may live of Its life. It seems it is a delirium that It has, a commitment It has taken on, a victory It wants to achieve at any cost – that Its life may form the life of the creature.

So, my mind was wandering amid this show of love of the Divine Will, and my sweet Jesus, all tenderness, told me: “My daughter, man, by doing his will, lost the head, the divine reason, the regime, the order of his Creator; and because he lost his head, all the members wanted to act as the head. But since it is not the members’ office to have the virtue and the ability to act as head, they were unable to hold the regime or the order among themselves, and each member put itself against the other, and they separated. So, they remained as scattered members, because they did not possess the unity of the head.

But Our Supreme Being loved man, and seeing him without a head, We pitied him and he was the greatest dishonor of Our creative work, nor could We tolerate so great a havoc in the one We loved so much. Here then, Our Divine Will dominated Us and Our love conquered Us, and making Me descend from Heaven to earth, it constituted Me Head of man, and reunited all the scattered members under my Head. And the members acquired the regime, the order, the union and the nobility of the Head. So, my Incarnation, everything I did and suffered, and my very death, were nothing other than the way I covered to go in search of these scattered members, and make the life, the warmth and the resurrection of the members that were dead flow from the virtue of my Divine Head, so as to form of all human generations one single body, under my Divine Head. How much it cost Me – but my love made Me surpass everything, face all the pains, and triumph of everything. Now, my daughter, see then, what it means not to do my Will: to lose one’s head, to separate from my body, and like detached members, with difficulty and gropingly, walk down here like many monsters, such as to arouse pity. All the good of the creature is centralized in my Divine Will, and it forms Our glory and that of the human generations. Here is the reason, then, for Our delirium, Our commitment; and We want to win by way of love and of unheard-of sacrifices – that the creature may live in Our Will. Therefore, be attentive and make your Jesus content.”

The acts done in the Divine Will form the ways, embrace the centuries. What it is that forms the prison. The Divine Engineer and the insuperable Artisan.

My poor intelligence keeps going around in the Divine Fiat, to meet with Its acts, identify myself with them, court them, love them, and be able to say to It: ‘I hold the love of your acts in my power, therefore I love You just as You love me, and whatever You do I do as well.’ Oh! how beautiful it is to be able to say: ‘I have disappeared in the Divine Will, and therefore Its strength, Its love, Its sanctity, Its operating, are mine. We take one same step, have one same motion and one same love.’ And the Divine Will, all in feast, seems to say: “How happy I am – I am no longer alone; I feel within Myself a heartbeat, a motion, a will that runs within Me, and, fused together, never leaves Me alone and does what I do.”

So, while my mind was wandering in the Divine Volition, I thought to myself: ‘But, what is the good that these acts of mine done in the Divine Will do? While I do nothing, the Divine Will does everything, and because I am together with It, inside of It, It tells me that I do what It does. And It says so with reason, because being in It and not doing what It does is impossible – because Its power is so great as to invest my nothingness and make it do what the All does; nor is it able to, or capable of doing otherwise.

Then, my sweet Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, told me: “My little daughter of my Will, how beautiful it is – no greater honor can the creature receive than that of being admitted into It. Instants, the littlest acts done in It, embrace centuries; and since they are divine they are invested with such power, that whatever one wants to do with them, everything can be done and everything can be obtained. The Divine Being remains bound in these acts, because they are His own acts and He must give them the value which they deserve.

Moreover, you must know that the acts done in my Will form the ways that must serve the souls to let them enter into It; and they are so necessary, that if heroic souls who live in It don’t come out first, in order to form the main avenues of Its Kingdom, not finding the ways, the generations will not know what to do in order to enter into my Will. My daughter, in order to form a city the ways must be formed first, which form the order that a city must have, and then are the foundations laid to build it up. If the ways, the gates, the communications it must have are not formed, there is the danger for the citizens to form a prison for themselves rather than a city, because, not provided with ways, they would not know from where to get out. See how necessary the ways are.

Now, the city without ways is the human will which, enclosed in its own prison, has closed all the ways to enter into the celestial city of my Divine Will. Now, the soul who enters into It, breaks the prison, knocks down the unhappy city without ways, without exits, and united with the power of my Will, Divine Engineer, she forms the plan of the city, orders the ways, the communications; and my Will, acting as insuperable Artisan, forms the new citadel of the soul, with such mastery as to form the ways of communication in order to let others souls come in and form many citadels, so as to be able to form a Kingdom. The first will be the model of the others. See then, what the acts done in my Will serve for – they are so necessary to Me, that without them, the way would be missing to let It reign. Therefore, always in my Will do I want you – never go out of It, if you want to make your Jesus content.”

How one who does not live in the Divine Will casts It into loneliness and reduces It to silence. Who the Temple of God is. The Divine Will, Temple of the soul. The little Host. Sign in order to know whether one lives in the Divine Will.

I seem to hear the continuous echo of the Divine Fiat that booms in my soul, and with Its invincible power calls my little acts into Its own acts, to make them one; and It seems to delight with Its creature – It does not feel lonely, It has someone to whom to tell Its joys and Its sorrows. In sum,

It feels neither in loneliness nor reduced to silence. On the other hand, with one who does not live in the Divine Will It feels the weight of loneliness, and if It wants to speak and entrust Its secrets, It is not understood, because the light of Its Will is missing, which allows the creature to understand Its celestial language. And – oh! how sorrowful It remains, that while It is all voice and all word, It has no one to whom to speak even just one of them. Oh! Adorable Will, make me live always within You, that I may break your loneliness and give You the field to let You speak.

But while my mind was wandering through the vast horizons of the Divine Fiat, my sweet Jesus, repeating His little visit, all goodness told me: “My little daughter of my Will, it is really true that one who does not live in Our Will, casts It into loneliness and reduces It to silence. You must know that each creature is a new and distinct work that We have to do, and therefore new things to say. If she does not live in Our Will We feel that that creature is far away from Us because her will is not inside Our own, therefore, on her part, We feel lonely, hindered in Our work; and if We wanted to speak, it is as if We wanted to speak to the deaf, to the mute. Therefore, one who does not live in Our Will is Our cross, she hinders Our step, she binds Our arms, she knocks down Our most beautiful works; and I, who am the Word – I am reduced to silence.

Now, you must know that the soul in grace is the Temple of God; but when the soul lives in Our Will, God makes Himself Temple of the soul, and – oh! the great difference between the creature, Temple of God and God, Temple of the soul! The first is a temple exposed to dangers, to enemies, subject to passions; many times Our Supreme Being finds Himself in these temples as in the temples of stone, unattended, not loved as He should; and the little lamp of her continuous love, which she should keep in homage to her God who dwells within her, without the pure oil is extinguished; and if – heavens forbid – she falls into grave sin, Our temple collapses and is occupied by thieves, Our enemies and hers, who profane it and make havoc of it. The second Temple – that is, God, Temple of the soul - is not exposed to dangers, the enemies cannot get close, passions lose life. In this Divine Temple of Ours, the soul is like the little Host that holds her Jesus consecrated within It, and with the perennial love that she draws, receives and feeds on, she forms the little lamp, alive, always burning, without ever becoming extinguished. This, Our Temple, occupies Its royal place, Its fulfilled Will, and It is Our glory and Our triumph. And the little Host – what does she do inside this Temple of Ours? She prays, she loves, she lives of Divine Will, she substitutes for my Humanity on earth, she takes my place of pains, she calls the whole army of Our works to form Our cortege. Creation, Redemption – she holds them as her own and she commands over them, and now she places them around Us like an army in act of prayer, of adoration, now like an army in act of loving Us and glorifying Us. But she is always at the head of them, doing whatever she wants Our works to do; and she always concludes with her refrain, so very pleasing to Us: ‘Your Will be known and loved, and may It reign and dominate in the entire world.’ So, all the yearnings, the longings, the interests, the cares, the prayers, of this little Host that lives in Our Divine Temple, are for Our Fiat to embrace all, put all the evils of creatures aside, and with Its omnipotent breath form Its place in the hearts of all, so as to make Itself life of each creature.

Can anyone ever perform an office more beautiful, more holy, more important, more useful to Heaven and to the earth, than this little Host who lives in Our Temple? Moreover, Our love, Our power, makes all the shows, all the industries, all the stratagems with one who lives in Our Will: It makes Itself small and encloses Itself in this soul in order to form Its life, and nothing is left of her but the guises to cover It; It makes Itself immense, as It is, and shapes Itself as sumptuous Temple, to keep her safe inside of It, and enjoy her company. One who does Our Will is always occupied with Us, and We are always occupied with her. Therefore, be very careful to let yourself always be found in Our Will.”

After this, I continued to think about the Divine Volition, and my beloved Jesus added: “The sign that the soul lives in my Will is that all things, internal and external, are bearers of my Will. In fact, to say ‘I possess Its life’ and not to feel It is impossible; therefore she will feel It in the heartbeat, in the breath, in the blood that circulates in her veins, in the thought that forms in her mind, in the voice that gives life to her word, and so forth. So, the internal act, echoing on the outside, makes my Will to be found in the air that she breathes, in the water she drinks, in the food that she takes, in the sun that gives her light and heat. In sum, the internal and the external hold hands and form many acts, to form the life of my Will in them. One act alone does not form life, but continuous and repeated acts form the life.

Moreover, in my Will everything is present, as though in act of doing everything that has been done by Us, and, in It, the creature enters the power of Our present acts and does what We do; she remains invested by Our creative force, by Our love that always arises; she comprehends that it is precisely for her that It does everything, and – oh! how she loves, and how she wants to do everything for her Creator. On the other hand, outside of Our Fiat, what We have done is seen as past things, done for everybody, not for herself alone, therefore love does not awaken – it sleeps, it remains as though in lethargy, and thought of as a love far away, not in act.

Therefore, there is such a difference between one who lives in my Will and one who lives outside of It that there is no comparison that holds up. Therefore, be attentive, and thank Me for the great good I have done to you in letting you know what it means to live in my Will.”

How prayer in the Divine Will becomes the mouthpiece of the acts done in Divine Fiat. How the Humanity of Our Lord possesses the generative virtue. How Divine Love consists in Its reproducing Itself in all and in each one.

It seems that my poor mind cannot do without going in search of the acts done in the Divine Will. If it did so, it seems to me that I would lack the royal palace in which to reside, the food to nourish myself, the air to breathe, the step to be able to move freely within Its interminable boundaries. Ah! those are the acts of the Divine Will which, while I search, call me, and unifying themselves with me seem to whisper to my ear: “We are in your power, and with the power of these acts you have sufficient coins to ask for and impetrate the Kingdom of Our Supreme Fiat. In order to obtain a Divine Volition it takes divine acts, and as the creature lives in It Our acts extend around hers, and Our act holds her own as though in triumph, and asks together with her for the triumph, the dominion of Our Will upon earth.”

But while my mind enjoyed the enchanting sight of my little acts, surrounded by the seas of the divine acts, and my little love, encircled by the sea of the divine love, and with arcane and incessant voice they could but ask: ‘Fiat Voluntas Tua on earth as It is in Heaven’, my Sovereign Jesus, surprising me, all love, told me: “My blessed daughter, how sweet, consoling, powerful it is to hear my Will with all Its acts, in the little act, love and adoration of the creature, asking for the Fiat reigning upon earth. It makes use of the little love of the creature as the mouthpiece, to make her resound in all of Its acts, to make her ask for Its Kingdom. It does not want to do it alone, but wants her concurrence in order to do it. But do you want to know what this prayer serves for, which contains divine power, value and weapons that wage war against Us with incessant ways? It serves to call God upon earth, for Him to live life in each creature; it serves to make my very Divine Will and all Its works pray that It may come to reign upon earth; it serves to prepare the place for the creature within God Himself. It is a divine, prodigious prayer, which knows how to obtain everything.”

After this, I continued my abandonment in the arms of Jesus. His Divine Heart throbbed so very strongly with love, with joys, with happiness and with sorrow; and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, all the acts of my Humanity possess the generative virtue; therefore, the mind thinks and generates holy thoughts, it thinks and generates light, knowledge, wisdom, divine cognitions, new truths; and while it generates it pours like a torrent into the minds of creatures, without ever ceasing to generate. So, each creature has in her mind the receptacle of these children of mine, generated by my mind; with the difference that some keep them honored, courted, giving them the freedom to produce the good they possess, while others have them without caring for them, and as though suffocated. My gazes generate gazes of love, of compassion, of tenderness, of mercy – I never lose sight of anyone. My gazes multiply for everyone, and – oh! the power of my gazes, with how much pity it pours over the human miseries! It is so great that, in order to place them in safety, it encloses the creature in my pupil, to keep her defended and surrounded with affection and unspeakable tenderness, such as to astound the whole of Heaven. My tongue speaks and generates words that give life, sublime teachings, it generates prayers, it speaks and generates wounds and arrows of love, to give the generation of my ardent love to all and make Myself loved by all. My hands generate works, wounds, nails, blood, embraces, to constitute Myself works of each one, balm to soothe their wounds, nails to wound them and purge them, blood to wash them, embraces to hug them and carry them in my arms as though in triumph. The whole of my Humanity generates continuously, to reproduce It in each creature. Our Divine Love consists precisely in this: reproducing Itself in all and in each one; and if We did not possess the generative virtue, this could not be a reality but only a way of speaking, while We do deeds first, and if We use the speaking, it is to confirm the deeds. More so, since my Humanity is inseparable from the Divinity which, by nature, possesses the generative virtue and remains over the creature like a Mother with Her arms opened, and generates Her life in them in an admirable way.

But do you know who receives the effects, the complete fruit, of this continuous generating of mine? One in whom my Will reigns, who not only receives the generation of my acts, but reproduces them in a admirable way.”

How the Divine Will, in each act It does, calls all creatures in order to give the good which Its act contains. Example: the sun.

I am always in my dear inheritance of the Fiat. I feel Its sweet empire that keeps me absorbed and so invested as to leave me no time to grieve over the privations of my beloved Jesus, alas, too painful for me. The multiplicity and infinity of Its continuous acts impose themselves on me, to keep me present and to share with me the good which they contain, and to tell me how much It loves me. “And you? How much do you love us^{122?}”

So, my mind wandered and remained enraptured in seeing that It wanted to constantly give me from Its own, and therefore It wanted me present at Its acts. What goodness! What love!

Then, my Sovereign Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My little daughter of my Will, your Jesus has the task of manifesting the secrets of my Divine Will, and Its love, which reaches the point of being incapable of and unable to endure, if It does not give of Its own to the creature, in a continuous manner. You must know that when my Divine Will does an act, It calls all creatures into Its act – It wants them all with Itself, to give to each one the good which that act possesses. So, all are enclosed within Its act, and receive the good of the divine inheritance; with this difference: that one who is there in Our Will voluntarily and out of love becomes the possessor of it, while for one who is not, that good is not lost, but waits for its heiress – who knows, she may decide to live life in Our Will, so as to give her the possession of it; nevertheless, out of Our generosity, fully divine, We give her the interest of the good assigned to her – that is, the effects – so that she may not die of hunger for the goods of her Creator. In fact, Our Will, by Its own nature, possesses the universal virtue, and therefore in each of Its acts It calls all, It embraces all, It involves all, and It offers Its divine goods to all.

¹²² the acts of the Divine Will

Symbol and image of this is the sun, which, having been created by my Fiat with Its universal virtue, offers its light to all – it denies it to no one; and if anyone did not want to take the good of its light, the sun does not destroy the light that belongs to that person, nor can it destroy it, but it waits; and when that person decides to take the good of the light, it does not deny itself – it immediately gives itself; and until that one makes up his mind to take the good of the light directly, it gives him the interest by means of the other created things. In fact, in all created things the sun holds its prime act: to some it gives fecundity and maturation; to some development and sweetness – there is not one created thing to which the sun does not give something of its own. Therefore, the creature, in taking food, making use of the plants, takes the effects and the interests given to her by the light which belongs to her and which she, out of her will, does not take. My Will is more than sun; in all the acts It does, it calls all creatures, It keeps them all present, and offers Its divine goods to all of them.

Now, one who lives in Our Will, since she possesses, as her own property, the good that my Volition has given to her in each act, feels within herself the nature of good, because good is in her power. Goodness, patience, love, light, heroism of sacrifice, are at her disposal; and if she has the occasion to exercise them, she exercises them without effort; and if she does not have the occasion to exercise them, she still possesses them, like many noble princesses, which form the honor, the glory, of the properties that my Will has given to her. It happens as to the eye, which possesses the eyesight: if it is necessary for it to look, to help itself through the sight, it does so; if it is not necessary, it does not lose the vision, but keeps its eye as the glory and honor that its ‘seeing eye’ possesses. To possess my Will and not to possess the virtues as one’s own nature is almost impossible. It would be like a sun without heat, like a food without substance, like a life without heartbeat. Therefore, one who possesses my Will possesses everything, as gifts and properties which my Divine Volition brings with Itself.”

Primary purpose of Redemption: to restore the life of the Divine Will in the creature. How God does minor things in order to give the place to His major works.

I am under the gigantic waves of the Divine Fiat, which makes me see and experience how all things and all of Its divine acts take origin from the Divine Volition, and are all bearers of a Will so holy. So, the primary purpose of God, both in Creation and in Redemption, was no other intent than that of forming His palpitating life of Divine Will in each creature, and He wanted Its royal place in everything, and the transfusion of all things and of each act into His Will – and with justice, and with reason: It being the Author of everything and of all, what is the wonder if It wants Its place, by right, in everything?”

Then, following the Divine Will in Its acts, I arrived at Redemption, and my beloved Jesus, making me pause and sighing, told me: “My daughter, yet, in Our mind the primary purpose of Redemption was to restore the Kingdom of the Divine Will in the creature. This was something Divine that We had placed in her – Our Will operating, the most noble, the most beautiful act, by virtue of which We loved the creature to folly, because she had something of Our own. We loved Our very selves in her, and therefore Our love was perfect, full and incessant; it was as if We could not possibly get away from her. We felt Our very Will that from within the creature imposed Itself to loving her; and if I came down from Heaven to earth, it was the empire, the power of my Fiat that called Me because It wanted Its rights, and Its noble and divine act to be restored and placed in safety. We would have lacked order and would have acted against nature if, in descending from Heaven, I had saved the creatures, but had not rescued Our Will and restored Our Kingdom in them – that which is Divine, Our most beautiful act which We had placed in them; beginning, origin and end of everything. But who is it that does not think of saving himself first, and then others? No one. And if he cannot save himself it is a sign that he will have neither the virtue nor the power to save others. By restoring the Kingdom of my Will in the creature I did the greatest act, an act that only a God can do – that is, securing my very life in the creature. And by saving Myself, all were placed in safety – no more dangers, because they had a divine life in their power, in which they would find all the goods they wanted.

Therefore, my Redemption, my life, my pains, my death, will serve to dispose the creature to so great a good, and as preparation for the great portent of the Kingdom of my Will in the human generations. And if the fruits, the life of It, cannot be seen yet, this says nothing, because in my Humanity there is the seed, the life of my Fiat, therefore this seed possesses the virtue of forming the long generation of many other seeds in the hearts, to regenerate in them the restoration of the life of my Will in the creatures. Therefore, there is no act done by the Supreme Being which does not come out of Our Will, and Its love is so great that It places Itself as life of Our act and, as life, It claims Its rights, for It wants to carry out Its life. Hence, how could I come to reign, were I not to give back these rights to my Will? In order to come to redeem, these rights were restored in my Celestial Mother, in my Humanity; and only because my Will had these first rights could I come to redeem, otherwise I would have found neither the way, nor the place in which to descend. And my Humanity took on the commitment with It, by dint of pains, of giving back to It these rights - of letting It reign in due time in the human family. You, therefore – pray, and united with Me, do not spare the sacrifice of your life for a cause so holy and divine, and of most heroic and great love toward all creatures.”

Afterwards, I remained concerned about what is written above, and I thought to myself: ‘How can it be that while He says that His primary purpose of His coming upon earth was the establishment of the Kingdom of the Divine Will - though Redemption was connected together with It - the fruits of Redemption can be seen abundantly, while of His Fiat reigning almost nothing can be seen yet?’ And Jesus added: “My daughter, it would be absurd and against the divine order not to give the primacy to Our Will, as in fact We did. I can say that first began the Kingdom of the Divine Will in my Celestial Mother, then in my own Humanity, which possessed all the fullness of the Supreme Will, and then came Redemption; and since the Queen of Heaven and I, by virtue of this Kingdom which We possessed in Its full vigor, represented the whole human family as the heads, to reunite all the scattered members, it is because of this that Redemption could come. It was precisely from within the Kingdom of my Will that Redemption came out; if I and my Mother had not possessed It, It would have been a dream and would have remained in Our divine mind.

Now, I being the Head, the King, the Savior, and the true sacrificator of mankind, whatever is there in the Head, the members have a right over it; whatever the Mother possesses, the children have the right to inherit. Here then Redemption: the Head wants to heal the members and bind them by dint of pains and of death, so that they may avail themselves of the virtues of the Head. The Mother wants to reunite the children, make Herself known, to constitute them heirs of what She possesses. Here is the necessity of time, in such a way that, while Redemption came out of the Kingdom of my Will as prime act, Redemption will serve as powerful means in order to communicate to the members the Kingdom which the Head possesses – one and the other will hold hands. And besides, if I so much love, want and insist that creatures would have my Will alone as the sole principle in all things, I Myself, then, who possess the life of It, and was to descend from Heaven to earth, and it would cost Me so much – was I not to give primacy to my Will? Oh! my daughter, this says that my Will is not known in depth, while one act of my Will has more value than all creatures united together; and this is so certain, that it is from my Will that Redemption received life, while Redemption had no virtue to give life to my Will. My Fiat is eternal, It had no beginning, either in eternity or in time, while Redemption had Its beginning in time; and since my Volition has no beginning, and It alone can give life to everything, hence, by Its own nature, It holds primacy over everything; and there is nothing that We do in which We don’t have, as Our primary purpose, that Our Will have Its life, dominating, operating and reigning. But you say that the fruits of Redemption can be seen, while nothing appears of those of the Kingdom of the Divine Will; this says that Our divine ways are not comprehended – We do minor things in order to give the place to Our major works, and to realize Our primary intent.

Listen to Me, my daughter: in Creation Our primary purpose was man, but instead of creating man first, We created heavens, sun, sea, earth, air, winds, as the dwelling in which to place this man, and so as to let him find everything that was needed to make him live. In the very creation of man, first We made the body and then I infused in him the soul, more precious, more noble, and containing more value than the body. Many times it is necessary to do minor things first, in order to prepare with decency the place for Our major works. What is the wonder, then, if in descending from Heaven to earth, Our primary purpose in Our divine mind was to constitute the Kingdom of Our Will in the midst of the human family? More so, since the first offense that man gave Us was directed precisely against Our Will, therefore with justice Our first intent was to be directed to rejoining the offended side of Our Will and to returning to It Its royal place. And after this would Redemption come; and Redemption came indeed in a superabundant way, with such excesses of love as to astound Heaven and earth. But why before? Because It was to serve to prepare, with decency, with decorum, with sumptuousness, with the endowment of my pains and of my very death, as Kingdom, as army, as cortege, to let my Will reign. In order to heal man my pains were needed; it took my death to give him life; yet, one tear of mine, one sigh of mine, one single drop of my blood would have been enough to save all, because everything I did was animated by my Supreme Will. I can say that it was my Will that ran within all my acts, in my most harrowing pains, to seek man and place him in safety. How, then, can the prime purpose be denied to a Will so holy, so powerful, which embraces everything, and there is no life nor any good without It? Therefore, the mere thinking that is absurd. So, I want you to recognize It in all things as prime act of everything; in this way you will place yourself in Our divine order – that there is nothing in which We do not give primacy to Our Will.”

Extreme need of the abandonment in the Divine Will; the virtue of it. How we all revolve around God; only the human will keeps wandering about, and is the disturber of all.

My abandonment in the Fiat is for me an extreme need of my poor heart, because it makes me feel Its Divine Paternity and Maternity, which keeps me clasped to Its bosom with Its arms of light, so as to pour Itself into me as most tender Mother who loves Her daughter with inseparable love – but so much, as to want to generate Her life within Her daughter. It seems it is a delirium, a divine passion of this Holy Mother, which renders Her all eye, all attention and care, all heart, and in continuous act of working, in order to be conceived, be born and make Her life grow within Her daughter, who is all abandoned in Her arms. So, abandonment in the Divine Will facilitates the cures, and renders feasible the cares of this Celestial Mother, for Her to form Her life, all of Divine Will, in the creature.

My beautiful Mama¹²³, O please! do not detach me from your breast of light, that I may feel your life within me, which, retouching me continuously, may let me know how much You love me, Who You are, and how beautiful, lovable and adorable You are.

But while my mind was wandering in the total abandonment in the Divine Volition, my sweet Jesus, repeating His short little visit, told me: “My blessed daughter, the more one comprehends of my Will, the more one enjoys Its beauty and sanctity, and the more one shares in Its goods; and the abandonment in It destroys all obstacles and clasps the soul so tightly in Its arms, that without effort my Fiat can regenerate Its divine life in the creature. True and full abandonment says, with facts: ‘Do with me whatever You want - my life is yours, and I don’t want to know anything about it any more.’ So, the abandonment has the virtue of placing the creature at the mercy of my Divine Will. In fact, you must know that all things, and the very human nature, draw from the eternal motion of God, in such a way that everything revolves around Him. The whole of Creation, the breath, the heartbeat, the blood circulation, are under the empire of the eternal motion; and since everyone and everything receives life from this motion, they are inseparable from God; and as they have life, so do they revolve around the Supreme Being with a unanimous race. So, the breath, the heartbeat, the human motion – it is not in their power to breathe, to palpitate, to move; whether they want it or not, given the incessant motion of the Eternal One, they too feel the incessant act of breathing, of palpitating and of moving. It can be said that they live life together with God and with all created things, which revolve around Him without ever stopping.

Only the human will, as We had created it with the great gift of the free willing, that it might tell Us, freely, that it loved Us – not because it was forced, as the breath is forced to breathing, or the heart to beating and to receiving the motion of its Creator; but out of its wanted will, not forced, it might love Us and remain together with Us, to receive the operating life in Our Volition.... It was the greatest honor and gift We gave to the creature, and she, ungrateful, moves away from Our union and inseparability, and therefore from the union of all and of everything, and therefore she gets lost, she degrades herself, becomes debilitated, loses the one strength, and is the only one in the whole Creation to lose her race, her place of honor, her beauty, her glory, and goes wandering, shifted from her place that she has in Our Will, which calls her, longs for her to be at her place of honor. So, all have a place, even the human breath and heartbeat; and since everyone and everything has a place, they never lose life and their incessant motion – none of them feels poor, weak, but rich in the eternal motion of their Creator. Only the human will, because it does not want to be in the royal place of the Divine Volition is the lost one and the poorest of all; and because it feels poor, it feels unhappy, and is the disturber of the human family. Therefore, if you want to be rich, happy, never go down from your place of honor, which is inside Our Will; then will you have everything in your power – strength, light, and also my very Will.”

Fiat!!!

May 20, 1934

How the Divine Will devours, as though in one single breath, all the acts done in It, and makes of them one alone. How the Divine Will forms the guises of the Humanity of Our Lord, and makes It present to the creatures.

I felt so very poor in love, but with the will of wanting to love Him very, very much. I had received sweet Jesus sacramentally, and He was as though drowned with love; and I... only a few little drops. Yet, He was asking me for love, so as to give me love. But, what to do to be able to match Him in some way? So I thought to myself: ‘My Celestial Mama wants me to love my Jesus and Hers very much. Well then, these little drops of love of mine I want to pour into Her seas of love; in this way I will give Him and tell Him: “I love You so much, that I love You as your Mama loves You”.’

Now, it seemed to me that the Sovereign Lady rejoiced and felt happy because Her daughter was loving Jesus with Her love; and He was even more content, for He felt loved by me with the love of His Mama. And, all content, He told me: “My little daughter of my Will, you must know that one who lives in my Fiat is never alone in her acts. She is incorporated into everything It has done, does and will do, both within Itself and in all creatures. So, in the love of my Mother I felt the love of my daughter, and in the love of the daughter the love of my Divine Mother. Oh! how beautiful were your tiny little drops of love, invested by the seas of love of my Mama. With one who lives in my Volition I feel Heaven flow in her acts, in her love, in her will; and I feel the creature in Heaven; and her acts, her love, her will, investing the Empyreum, invading all, and forming one single act, one single love, and one single will. And the whole of Heaven feels loved, glorified, in the creature, and she feels loved by all Heaven. In my Will everything is unity, separability does not exist, nor does any distance between places or times; centuries disappear in my Volition, and with Its power It devours everything in one single breath, and of everything It makes one continued act. What fortune for one who lives in my Will, as she can say: ‘I do what they do in Heaven, and my love is not dissimilar from their love.’

Only for one who does not live in my Will her acts are separable, they suffer loneliness, and are dissimilar from Our acts; in fact, not being invested by Its power, which has the virtue of converting into light whatever is done in It, hence, not being light, they cannot incorporate themselves with the acts of Our Will which, being inaccessible light, knows how to convert everything into light; and it is no wonder that light and light become incorporated with each other.”

Then, I abandoned myself in the arms of Baby Jesus (He made Himself seen in that way), and He, drowned with love, abandoned Himself in my arms, to enjoy the love of His Mama and mine, which I was giving to Him. And then He added: “My daughter, if you see Me as a little Baby, it is by virtue of my Divine Will, which possesses within Itself all the periods of my life down here – my tears, my pains, and everything I did. So, in each instant my Will repeats the different periods of my life, to give to the creatures its admirable effects; and now It forms Me as a Baby, to give them the fruits of my infancy, my love, so very tender, that I reach the point of crying, to have love from them, and receive their tenderness and compassion at my tears. Now It forms Me as a boy, with an enchanting beauty, to make Myself love and captivate them to loving Me. Now as a young man, to chain them with inseparable union; now Crucified, to have them repair and compassionate Me; and so with all the rest of the life of my Humanity down here. Oh! insuperable power and love of my Will! What I did within the short round of thirty-three years - and finishing it up I went back to Heaven - my Will will be doing for centuries upon centuries, keeping my life ready, to give it to each creature.

Now, you must know that if the Holy Church has the great honor of having souls who have the good of seeing Me, of hearing Me speak, as if I were again living in their midst, it is all due to my Divine Will. It is my Will that forms my guises and makes Me as though present to creatures. My Humanity is enclosed within Its immensity and, by virtue of It, holds the present act, as if I were in act of being born, and It gives Me the guises of a Baby; I grow, and It gives Me the guises of a boy. The whole of my life lays in Its power, and whatever the form It wants to give Me, at whatever age It wants to show Me, It forms my guises and maintains my whole life as present act in the midst of creatures. My Will holds your Jesus as living, and according to their dispositions, so It shapes my guises and give Me to them, and It makes them feel how I cry, I suffer, I continue to be born and to die, and I burn with love for I want to be loved. What does my Will not do? It does everything. There is nothing over which It does not hold Its primacy, the preserving virtue and the perfect and continued balance, without ever ceasing, of all Our works. My daughter, to my sorrow I say this: that what is lacking is the knowledge of what my adorable Will does, the great good It constantly offers to creatures, and therefore It wants to be known. And because It is not known, It is neither appreciated nor loved, and creatures do not give It primacy over all Our works. While my Will is the primary fount, and all Our works are like many little fountains that receive and draw the life and the goods that they give to the creatures.

Oh! if they knew what Will of God means, and the good It offers to creatures, the earth would be transformed, and so drawn, as to remain with its gaze fixed on It, and on receiving Its perennial goods. But because It is not known, they don't give It a thought, and they disperse Its goods in part. In fact, whether they want or do not want, whether they know or do not know, whether they believe or do not believe, it is my Divine Fiat that gives life, motion and everything; It is the motive of all Creation. And this is why I so much yearn for It to be known – what It does and can do, all of Its divine history – to be able to abound with new gifts, and show off in love with greater abundance toward the creatures; so much so, that in order to do this I wanted the sacrifice of your life, a sacrifice I had not asked of anyone, a sacrifice that costs you so much; although you calculate this sacrifice when hindrances and circumstances arise. But I calculate it every day, I measure its intensity, its hardness, and the loss of daily life to which you submit yourself. Good daughter, this sacrifice of yours was necessary to my Will in order to make Itself known, to give Its knowledges; It wanted to make use of you as the channel through which to make Itself known, and of your sacrifice as the powerful weapon, to let Itself be conquered, reveal Itself, open Its womb of light and manifest Itself for what It is. More so, since by doing her human will, the creature rejected and lost the life of the Divine Will, therefore it was necessary that one creature would submit herself to the sacrifice of losing her life, losing any mastership over herself, so that my Will might be moved to making Itself known, so as to give back Its divine life. It is always so in Our operating: when We want to overabound more toward the creature, We ask for the sacrifice of one creature, as a pretext, and then We make known the good that We want to do; and this good is given according to the knowledges that they acquire.

Therefore, be attentive, and do not want to occupy yourself with useless thoughts on the reason for your state. It was necessary to Our Will, and that's enough; and you must be content, and thank It."

Fiat!!!

The human will, created as queen in the midst of Creation. How everything flows through the fingers of Our Creator.

I continue my abandonment in the Divine Fiat. Its acts are for me like many nourishments; and as they nourish me, I feel the growth of Its life within me; Its strength, which is such that, imposing itself on my human will, conquers it and captivates it into its own, to say to it: "Let us live together, and you will be happy of my same happiness. I have come out into daylight, not to keep you far away, but together with Me, in my same Will. If I created you, it is because I felt the need to love you and to be loved; hence, your creation was necessary to my love, the place on which my Will can lean, like a tiny little field of mine. I want to make a show of my works, of my mastery; and this, in order to form and give vent to my love."

Oh! Adorable Will, how lovable and admirable You are! So, You want me inside of You, to give life to your outpouring of love; but if You so much love for the creature to live in your Divine Volition, why did You not create us like the sky, the sun, without a will, that the creature would do whatever You want?

But while I was thinking this, my sweet Jesus, surprising me, all goodness, told me: "Blessed daughter, you must know that the most beautiful thing created by Us was the human will. Among all created things it is the most beautiful, the one that resembles Us the most, and because of this it can be called the queen among all, as in fact it is. All things are beautiful; beautiful is the sun which, with its vivifying light, gladdens and smiles at all; with its light it makes itself eye, hand and step of all. Beautiful is the sky, which covers all with its starry mantle. But as beautiful as are all created things, none of them can boast of having done for Us the littlest act of their own in order to love Us; there is no outpouring of a requital, everything is mute silence, and everything We do, We do on Our own; no echo responds to Us, in the face of the many seas of love which are present in all created things. Not even the littlest outpouring is given to Us. In fact, an outpouring is formed between two wills that possess a reason and know whether they are doing good or evil. Therefore, the human will was created as queen in the midst of Creation – queen of itself, outpouring of love with its Creator, queen of all created things. It can do, freely, a world of good, prodigies of value, heroism of sacrifices, if it places itself on the side of good; but if it puts itself on the side of evil, queen as it is, it can do a world of ruin, and can fall from the highest place down into to bottom of the greatest miseries. This is why among all things We love the human will – because We make it queen, it can tell Us that it loves Us, it can nourish Our outpouring of love, it can engage in a contest with Us – We, in loving it, and it, in loving Us. This is why We endowed it with such prerogatives, to the point of giving it Our likeness. It is nothing but a simple act, yet it is the hand, the foot, the voice of its human being. If the creature did not have a will, she would be like the beasts, the slave of all, without the imprint of the divine nobility. In Our Divinity, most pure spirit, there is not a shadow of matter, yet We invest everyone and everything, and We are the life, the motion, the foot, the hand, the eye, of all. The human life flows through Our fingers, as We are actor, spectator, breath and heartbeat of each heart; and what We are for everything and for everyone, the human will is for itself. It can be said that because of the prerogatives it possesses, it can reflect itself in Us, and We find Our little mirror in it; Our power, wisdom, goodness, love, can form its reflections in the simple act of the human will.

Oh! human will, how beautiful you have been created by your Creator! Beautiful is the sky, the sun – but you surpass them; and even if you had nothing else that is beautiful, only because you can tell Us that you love Us, you possess the greatest glory, the enchantment with which you can enrapture your Creator.”

One who lives in the Divine Will feels the divine heartbeat in her works, knows Its intent, operates together with It, and is the welcome one in the Divine Fiat.

I feel I am in the arms of the Divine Will, which, with an insuperable goodness, makes present to me everything It has done for love of the creatures, in order to receive the pleasure of making it known to me, and to receive, as renewed, the glory of everything It has done for love of us. And since It has done everything out of pure love, it seems It is not content if It does not feel known and loved back by the one who was the cause to make It operate so great a work, and of indescribable magnificence. But while my mind was wandering within the multiplicity of so many divine works, my always lovable Jesus, repeating His little visit, told me: “My little daughter, Our love, Our works, want to have life in the creature, they want to make themselves felt as palpitating, to give her the love and the fruits that Our works contain, which, as though giving birth within the creature, produce, they too, divine love and fruits.

Everything We have done is always in act, and We call the creature into the very act that We are performing, to make known to her Our works, how much love they contain, with how much wisdom and power they have been formed, and how, in everything We do, Our intent is always toward her. Nothing have We issued outside of Us which would not palpitate love and call the heartbeat of the creature to loving Us. We had need of nothing, because We possess within Ourselves, in Our own Divine Being, all possible and imaginable goods; and by possessing the creative virtue, as many goods do We want to create, so many of them are in Our power. Therefore, all Our external works were made for the creatures, to give them love, to make them know Who it is that has loved them so much, and, like stairways, let them come up to Us and give Us their little love. By one who does not know Us We feel robbed, and by one who does not love Us We feel betrayed.

Now, my daughter, do you want to know who receives Our heartbeat of the created things, Our intent, the knowledges, and gives Us her heartbeat and her requital of love? One who lives in Our Will. As the creature enters into It, with Its wings of light, like arms, It clasps her to Its bosom, and because It possesses Its incessant act, It says: ‘Look at Me, how I am operating. Or rather, let us do it together, that you may know what I do, my distinct love from one created thing to another; and you may receive all these degrees of my ardent love, in such a way as to cover you and keep you drowned with love; but so much, that you won’t be able to tell Me anything else but that you love Me, you love Me, you love Me...’. If you do not know it, you will not be able to receive the fullness of love, nor enjoy the fruits of Our works.’

Now I want to tell you another surprise: as the creature enters into Our Will, not only does she do what We did in Creation, in Redemption, in everything, and remains enriched in an admirable way with the works of her Creator, but she gives Us the new glory as if Our works were being repeated again. Everything We have done passes through the channel of the creature, for it is Our Will for this to happen, and by virtue of It We feel the glory being repeated to Us, as if We were stretching out a new heaven and were operating a new creation. And as We feel her coming into Our Volition, We welcome her, and overflowing with new love, We say to her: ‘Come, touch with your own hand what

We have done. Our works are alive for you, not dead, and by knowing them you will repeat the new glory and the new requital of love.’ It is true that Our works sing Our praises and glorify Us of their own – or rather, We Ourselves sing Our own praises and glorify Ourselves continuously – but the creature in Our Will gives Us something more; she give Us her will operating within Our works, her intelligence in order to know them, and her love to love Us. Hence, We feel the glory that a human will is repeating for Us the glory as if Our works were being repeated.

Therefore, always in my Divine Fiat do I want you, that you may receive Its secrets, and drink in large gulps Its admirable knowledges. By Its being known, the life is communicated, the works are repeated, and the goal is achieved.”

Attentiveness, eye of the soul. How in the Divine Will there are no blind creatures. The magnet. The coinage of the divine image in our acts. How God makes Himself Prisoner of the creature.

The Divine Will never leaves me alone. It seems It is constantly watching me in order to invest my little thought, my word, the littlest of my acts. But It wants my attention, It wants me to know that It wants to invest my acts, and that, as we look at each other, It gives and I receive. And if I am not attentive, It scolds me, but in a way so sweet that I feel my heart split; and It says to me: “Attentiveness is the eye of the soul who is able to recognize the gift I want to give and disposes her action to receive my investment. I do not want to give my goods to the blind; I want for you to see it and to know it. But do you know why? By seeing it, you appreciate my gift, and by being aware of it, you know it and you love it; and I make you feel, vividly, my light, my power, my love; and I feel, being repeated in your little thought, word and action, what my own Divine Will can do and how It is able to love. Therefore, the first thing I do to one who wants to live in It is to give her the eye with which to look at each other and know each other. Once We have known each other everything is done, the living in my Divine Will is assured with its full vigor.”

Then, my mind was wandering in a sea of light and of thoughts, and my sweet Jesus, surprising me, told me: “Ah! my daughter, the living in my Will is the living of Heaven, it is to feel in one’s soul the life of light, of love, the life of the divine action, the life of prayer. Whatever the creature does, everything for her is life palpitating within her acts. You must know that one who does the Divine Will and lives in It becomes the magnet of the divine acts; her little motion, thought and works remain magnetized, with a magnet so powerful as to magnetize her Creator, in such a way that this magnet draws Him so much that He cannot move away from the creature. Our Supreme Being feels His gaze being magnetized, and He is always fixed on looking at her; He feels the magnet to His arms, and He keeps her clasped to His bosom; the magnet to Our love, and We pour out so much as to reach the point of feeling that she loves Us as We love Ourselves.

Now, once the creature has formed this magnet over Us, Our love comes to excesses. As she forms her acts, even the littlest, We impress Our divine coinage on them and We make them pass as acts of Our own, with the imprint of Our supreme image, and We place them among Our divine treasures, as coins of Ours which the creature has given to Us. And if you knew what it means to be able to say that Our Supreme Being has received Our coins from the creature, which are guaranteed by Our image that We Ourselves have coined – your heart would explode out of pure love! Our giving to the creatures is a power that We have; as We possess everything, to give is nothing other than an outpouring of Our love. But to put the creature in the condition of being able to give to Us, and give Us Our own acts, not hers, coins with the imprint of Our image – this is the love that surpasses everything, such that, unable to contain it, in Our emphasis of love We say: ‘You have wounded Us, the magnet of your acts has captivated Us and has rendered Us sweet Prisoners in your soul. And We give you tit for tat by wounding you, captivating you and imprisoning you into Ourselves. Therefore, my daughter, I want you all eyes, that you may look and know well what my Divine Will wants to do in you.”

What it takes to form the life of the Divine Will in the creature. Veil that hides It. Exchange of life.

The Divine Volition seems to be constantly watching me with a searching eye, to see whether Its adorable Will flows as prime act in the whole of my interior. And with an admirable and divine jealousy It invests everything, It surrounds everything, nor does It look at whether the act is small or great; but It looks at whether in it flows the life of Its Will. In fact, all the value and greatness of an act depends on whether the Divine Will is present inside of it; everything else, as great as it might be, is reduced to a veil, extremely thin, just enough as to cover and hide the great treasure, the incomparable life of the Divine Will.

Now, while my mind was all occupied by the Divine Will, my highest good, Jesus, who seems to take an unspeakable delight when He wants to speak about His Will, all goodness told me: “My blessed daughter, so that an act may be pleasing to Me and my Will may form Its complete life in it, the whole of the interior of the creature must be centralized in my Fiat: the will must want It; the desire must ardently desire what the will wants; the affections, the tendencies, must aspire and tend only to receiving the life of my Will into their act; the heart must love and enclose within its heartbeat the life of my Will; the memory, remember It; the intelligence, comprehend It. So, everything must be centralized in the act in which my Will wants to form Its life. Just as it takes a will, a desire, a heart, affections, tendencies, memory, intelligence, in order to form a life, otherwise it could not be called whole and perfect life, the same with my Divine Will, as It wants to form Its life in the act of the creature, centralized in the act or life that It wants to form; otherwise it could not be called whole and perfect life.

This is why, then, my Will wants everything: to be able to exchange the life of Its love in the love of the creature, Its divine desires and tendencies within hers, Its uncreated heartbeat in the created heartbeat, Its eternal memory in the finite memory. In sum, everything – It wants to be free in everything, to be able to form a life that is whole, not halved; and as the creature gives up of what is her own, so does my Divine Will make the exchange with what is Its own. Then is Its life fecund, and it generates, within the veil of the creature that covers it, love, desire, tendencies, memory, all of Divine Will, and there It forms the great prodigy of Its life in the life of the creature. Otherwise it could not be called life, but simple adhesion to my Will – not even in everything, but in part; therefore it would not be able to bring about either the effects or the goods that my Will possesses. An image of this would be the sun: if its light did not possess heat, sweetnesses, flavors, fragrances, colors, it would not be able to form the beautiful rainbow of colors, the variety of sweetnesses, the sublimeness of flavors and fragrances. If it gives them to the earth it is because it possesses them; and if it did not possess them, it would not be true life of light, but sterile light, without fecundity. The same with the creature: if she does not give to my Will the place of the whole of her interior, she will not be able to possess Its love that is never extinguished, the divine sweetnesses and flavors, and everything that forms the life of my Will.

Therefore, do not keep anything of yourself and for yourself, and you will give Us the great glory of having a life of Our Will upon earth, veiled by your mortal guises; and for you, the great good of possessing it. You will feel, flowing within your guises, like rapid sea, the happiness, the joys, the firmness of good, the love that always loves; the sweetnesses, the flavors, the conquests of your Jesus will be yours too. Your guises will continue the office of pains down here, but will have a life of Divine

Will that will sustain them, which will make use of them in order to carry out the life of Its divine conquests and victories within the human guises. Therefore, always forward in my Will.”

One who lives in the Divine Will places herself in the condition of receiving and of being able to always give to her Creator. How one who prays disburses the money, forms the void, and acquires the capacity to possess what she asks for.

I was doing my round in the Divine Will, and my little human will, lost within It, burned with the desire to braid all of Its acts, to make them my own, to be able to exercise lordship over everything and hold in my power an infinite glory, an eternal love, innumerable acts, one distinct from the other, that never end, so as to be able to always give love, glory and works to my Creator. As daughter of His Will, I feel the need to possess everything, so as to hold the love that never says enough, and divine acts worthy of the Supreme Majesty. And my always adorable Jesus, almost to confirm to me what I was thinking, told me: “My daughter, for one who does my Will and lives in It, everything is hers; if It gives Itself to the creature, It does not give Itself alone, but there It brings all of Its works, because they are inseparable from It. And It makes use of them in order to let the one who lives in It range freely within It, and be nourished, delighted, enriched, by Its immense riches, and so as to put my Will in the condition of being able to always receive from the creature. If my Divine Volition were not able to give everything, and always give, and always receive from one who lives in Its Will, it would not be a true happy life in It, because the substance of happiness is formed by the new surprises, by the exchanges of gifts, by the diverse and manifold works, each possessing the fount of the multiple joys that one offers to the other. And they attest love to each other, one pours into the other, and in this pouring of oneself they communicate secrets to each other, and the creature makes new discoveries of the Divinity and acquires more knowledges of the Supreme Being. Life in my Will is not a joke, but operating life, and of continuous activity.

Even more, you must know that there is nothing that was done by God, by the Saints or by anyone, which does not give itself to one who lives in my Volition, because there is nothing good that does not belong to It; and just as you feel the need to possess everything, so do all feel the need to give themselves to you. But do you know why they want to pass through the channel of the human will? To give the good that they possess, and to have the good and the glory of their acts doubled for their Creator. So, as you desire to trace them up, so do Our works and those of the whole of Heaven desire to be tracked down. They seem to say, one after the other: ‘Don’t skip me, take me into your power, unite us all together, so that one be the love of all, and the glory to the Supreme Will that delivered us from within Its womb, and gave us life.’ Therefore, the living in my Will is the prodigy of prodigies, is the unity of everything, is to possess everything, to receive and give everything; and since I want to always give to the creature, I ardently long for her into my Fiat, to be able to give what I want and render my desires fulfilled.”

After this, I thought to myself: ‘But, what good comes to me, and what glory do I give to my God by always asking that His Will be known and take Its royal place, which is due to It, in the creatures? It seems to me that I am incapable of asking for anything else; it seems to me that Jesus Himself is tired of hearing me say the same story: “I want your Fiat as life, for me and for all”.’ But while I was thinking this, my sweet Jesus added: “My blessed daughter, you must know that when the creature prays incessantly to obtain a good, she acquires the capacity in order to possess that good; and by possessing it, she will have the virtue of making it possessed by others. Prayer is like the disbursement of the money to buy the good that she wants; prayer forms the esteem, the appreciation, the love that is needed to be able to possess it. Prayer forms the void in the soul in which to enclose the good wanted, otherwise, if I want to give it, she will have no place to put it. And besides, you cannot give Me greater glory than asking Me that my Will be known and reign. This is my own prayer, it is the longing and beating of my Heart; these are my ardent yearnings; and you must know that my love for wanting to make my Will known is so great, that unable to hold it back, it pours upon you, and I make you say: 'Thy Fiat come, Thy Will be known.' So, I am the one who is praying, not you; those are my outpourings of love, my loving outbursts, that feel the need to unify Me with the creature, so that I be not alone praying for so great a good. And to give more value to this prayer, I place in your power my works, the whole Creation, my life, my tears, my pains, that it may not be a prayer of mere words, but prayer given value by my works, life, pains, and tears of mine. Oh! how sweet does your refrain resound to my hearing, your loving singsong, echoed by my own: 'Thy Fiat come, Thy Will be known...' And if you did not do so, you would suffocate my prayer in you, and I would be left embittered, and would remain alone, alone, praying. But I must tell you, still: do you know why you feel the need to trace all of my works and pains, to ask Me that my Will be known and reign? One who has known It and loves It, in view of the great good, cannot abstain from asking, repeatedly, that all may know It and possess It. Therefore, think that I am with you and I pray together with you, when you feel that you cannot do without praying for the triumph of my Will."

Everything that comes out of God is all innocent and holy. How Creation is one act alone of Divine Will. Who the triumpher is in the space of the universe.

My little intelligence feels the irresistible force of the Divine Volition that calls it, that wants it in the midst of all Creation, to let it see and comprehend the harmony, the order of all created things, and how each of them gives its tribute to its Creator. There is not one created thing, be it small or great, destined to occupy the great space of the atmosphere, that does not give its distinct tribute to the One who created it; and even though they have no reason and are mute, yet, by never changing their action, by never moving from the place in which God placed them, it is perennial glory.

So, I was thinking to myself: 'I too occupy the space of the void of Creation; but can I say that I am at my place, wanted by God? Does my human will do always one single act of the Will of God as all Creation does?' But while I was thinking of this, my beloved Jesus, surprising me, all goodness, told me: "My blessed daughter, everything that comes out of Our Supreme Being, is all innocent and holy, nor could any being or thing with the slightest stain, or not containing the utility of a good, ever come out of Our Sanctity and infinite Wisdom. All created things feel in their own nature the creative virtue and therefore the continuous tribute and the glory that is due to Us, because We delivered them out into daylight, and We can do nothing that is stained, even slightly, or anything that is useless. So, everything that is created by Us – everything - is holy, pure and beautiful, and from all of them do We receive the tribute, and Our Will Its fulfilled act. My daughter, there is not one created thing, be it animate or inanimate, which does not begin its life by fulfilling Our Will and giving Us its tribute. Indeed, the whole Creation is nothing other than one act alone of Our Will; It is already at Its royal place, and though unconsciously, yet It holds Its operating life of light in the sun, Its operating life of fortitude and might in the wind, operating life of immensity in the immensity of the space. My Will carries out Its life in each created thing, and holds everyone and everything upon Its lap, in such a way that no one can move, or make any motion, if It does not want it; and the veils of the created things give Us the continuous tribute and the great glory of the great honor that they are dominated by Our Will.

Now comes the creature: who can say that, except for original sin, a newborn baby is not innocent and holy? And, once he is baptized, who can say that for a period of his life, until an actual sin enters into his soul, the child is not an act of my Will? And if he takes a step, if he speaks, if he thinks, if he makes his little hands move, as all these little acts are wanted and disposed by my Will, are they not tributes and glory that We receive? They might be unconscious, but my Will receives what It wants from that little nature. Sin alone is what makes one lose the sanctity, and puts the operating life of my Will out of the creature; in fact, if there is no sin, We carry her on Our lap, We surround her with Our Sanctity, and therefore she won't be able not to feel within herself the operating life of my Will.

See, then, everyone and everything takes origin and is born together with my Will as innocent, holy and worthy of the One who created them. But who preserves this innocence and sanctity? One who remains always at her place in my Will. She alone is the triumpher in the space of the universe; she carries the flag and reunites the whole army of Creation, to bring to God with speaking voice and with full knowledge, the glory, the honor and the tribute of everything and of everyone. Therefore, it can be said that my Will is everything for the creature – the very first act of her being born as well as the continuation of her preservation; nor does my Will ever leave her, either by way of love, or by way of grace; or by way of operating work, as with one who, voluntarily, lives and is aware of living in It. And if sin carries her away, not even then does It leave her, but It enwraps her with Its dominion within Its punishing justice. So, the creature and all things are inseparable from my Will. Therefore, take to heart my Will alone, recognize It as life, as the Mother that raises you and nourishes you, and wants to make of you Her greatest glory and honor.”

How God has established all the truths that He must manifest on His Divine Will. How the Divine Will bilocates, repeats and grafts the divine life. How Creation has not ended, but continues.

I was feeling all immersed in the Divine Volition; all the truths that had been manifested to me which regarded It were crowding my mind and wanted to speak, and speak again, to make themselves known. But, alas, their speaking was of Heaven, too high. I lack many of the terms to be able to repeat their celestial lessons. Only, I felt that they were bearers of ‘sanctity of Heaven’ and of divine joys.

But while I was feeling all immersed in the Fiat, my always lovable Jesus, with an unspeakable love, told me: “My little daughter of my Will, daughter of It as you are, I feel the need of love for my daughter to know Its secrets. If I did not do this often, I would remain drowned by the gigantic waves of love that are unleashed from Me; so, speaking to you of my Will is for Me refreshment, it is relief, it is balm, which mitigate my flames so that I may not remain suffocated and burned by my love. I am the Jesus-all-Love, and I manifest my greatest Love in speaking about my Divine Volition. But do you know why? The essence of Our Life is recognized by the speaking of my Will, and, in my word, my Fiat bilocates and repeats Our Life in the midst of creatures; nor is there greater glory for Us, or fullness of outpouring of Our excessive love, other than in seeing Our Life bilocated, in order to give Itself, graft Itself, centralize Itself in her as Our own dwelling, as much as the creature is capable of. It is one more Kingdom of Our Love and Will that We acquire.

Therefore, Our creative work has not ended, but continues, though not by creating new heavens and suns in the universe - no, no. Rather, Our Divine Fiat has reserved for Itself to continue the Creation by virtue of Its creative power; and as It pronounces Its Fiat of creating, bilocating, repeating Our Divine Life in the midst of creatures, there cannot be a more beautiful continuation of Creation. Therefore, pay attention and listen to Me.

Our Supreme Majesty has established ab eterno all the truths of the Divine Will that We have to manifest, and they remain like many queens within Our Divine Being, waiting with invincible love to set their way toward the earth so as to bring, as queens, the great good of these knowledges of Our Fiat to the creatures. And these will perform the role of teachers in order to form the creatures according to the truths that they announce. These queens, my truths, will give the first kiss of the life of the Fiat, and will be endowed with transforming virtues - transforming into the truth itself those who listen to it, and remaining with them, ready for their needs, to help them and instruct them. We will be all love for them, willing to give them whatever they want, as long as they listen to them and let themselves be guided and handled by them.

Now, of all the truths about Our Will, not all of them have yet come out, and those that are left are anxiously waiting to depart from within Our Divinity, to fulfill their office and be bearers and transformers of the good that they possess. And once all the truths We have disposed to issue are manifested, all together, these noble queens will assault Our Divine Being, and like an invincible army, with Our own divine weapons they will conquer Us and will obtain the triumph of the Kingdom of the Divine Will upon earth. Resisting them will be impossible to Us, and by conquering God, they will also conquer the creatures. This is why my speaking still continues - because not all the queens have come out of Our Divinity to fulfill their office. And since the speaking about my Will is continuation of the Creation from the Fiat that created the universe, just as, then, the creation of the universe was preparation for the creation of man, so today is my speaking about my Fiat nothing other than the continuation of Creation, to prepare the sumptuousness, the decorum, for my Kingdom and for those who will possess It. Therefore, be attentive and let nothing escape you, otherwise you would suffocate an act of my Will, and would force Me to repeat my lessons.”

Love story of God; the Creation enclosed in man. Sorrowful notes in the divine love.

I was doing my round in the acts of the Divine Will, and going from one work to another I reached the creation of man; and my sweet Jesus, making me pause, with an unspeakable love, such that He could not contain it, told me: “My daughter, my love makes Me feel the need to speak about the creation of man. Indeed, all Creation is pregnant with Our love, and It says so, though in a mute language; and if It does not speak, It says it with deeds and It is the greatest narrator of Our love toward man. And when in everything was Our love spread out, in such a way that he would not be able to find a single point left uncovered by Our love, running toward him and darting through him more than Sun; when the Creation was completed in everything - then did We create man. But before creating him, listen to the story of Our love toward him: Our Adorable Majesty had established to constitute man king of all Creation, giving him dominion over everything and making him the master over all Our works. But in order for him to be called a true king - with facts, not just words - he was to possess within himself everything that We had spread out in the Creation. Hence, for him to be king of the heavens, of the sun, of the wind, of the sea and of everything, he was to possess within himself a heaven, a sun, and so forth; in such a way that the Creation would be reflected in him, and he, possessing the same qualities, would reflect himself in the Creation and be the master of It. In fact, if he did not have an eye full of vision, how could he enjoy the light of the sun and take of it as much as he wanted? If he did not have hands and feet to move around the earth and take whatever the earth produces, how could he call himself king of the earth? If he did not have the respiratory organ in order to breathe the air, how could he make use of it? And so with all the rest. Therefore, before creating man, We looked at all Creation in Our emphasis of love and We exclaimed: ‘How beautiful are Our works! But among all, We will make man as the most beautiful; We will centralize everything in him, in such a way that We will find Creation outside and inside of him.’ And as We kept on molding him, so We enclosed in him the heaven of reason, the sun of the intelligence, the rapidity of the wind in his thought, the expanse of the space, fortitude and empire in his will; motion in his soul, in which We enclosed the sea of graces, the celestial air of Our love, and all the senses of the body as the most beautiful flowering. Oh! man, how beautiful you are! But, not yet satisfied, We placed in him the great Sun of Our Will and We gave him the great gift of the word, so that, with deeds and with words, he might be the eloquent narrator of His Creator. He was Our image which We delighted in enriching with Our most beautiful qualities.

But, not yet satisfied with all this, We were taken by such exuberant love toward him, that Our immensity enveloped him completely, everywhere and in each instant; Our all-seeingness looked at him in all things and deep inside the fibers of his heart; Our power sustained him, carrying him everywhere on Our paternal arms; Our life, Our motion, palpitated in his heartbeat, breathed in his breathing, operated in his hands, walked in his feet, and reached the point of making Itself footstool under his steps. Our Paternal Goodness, in order to keep this, Our dear child, safe, placed him in the condition of not being able to separate from Us, nor We from him. What else could We do that We did not do? This is why We love him so much - because he cost Us much. We disbursed for him Our love, Our power, Our Will, and We placed Our infinite wisdom in action; and We wanted nothing other that he would love Us back, and that, freely, he would live in Our Will in everything, and that he would recognize how much We have loved him and done for him. These are Our loving demands. Who, cruel one, would want to deny them to Us? But, alas, there are those who want to deny them to Us, forming their sorrowful notes in Our love. Therefore, be attentive and let your flight in Our Will be continuous.”

After this, I continued my round in the Creation and, incapable of doing anything else, I offered to God the expanse of the heavens to adore Him, the sparkling of the stars as deep genuflections, the light of the sun to love Him. But while I was doing this, I thought to myself: ‘But, the heavens, the stars, the sun, are not animate beings, they have no reason. How can they do what I want?’ And my beloved Jesus, always benign, added: ‘My daughter, in order to create the Creation, Our ‘wanted and determined Will’ to create It was needed first; and when this, Our Will, wanted it so, It then converted what It wanted into works. So, in each created thing there is Our Will, wanted and operating, which remained always in the act of wanting and operating. Therefore, by offering to Our Supreme Majesty the heavens, the sun, and other things, one offers not the material and superficial thing that can be seen, but the very ‘wanted and operating Will of God’ present inside each created thing. And if they have no reason, there is a divine reason inside, and a ‘wanted and operating Will of God’ that animates everything; and by offering them to Us, one offers the greatest act, the holiest Will, the most beautiful works, not interrupted, but continuous, in which there are the most profound adorations, the love most perfect, the greatest glory that the creature can give Us by means of Our Will, wanted and operating in all Creation. And if the heavens, the stars, the sun, the wind, do not understand anything, my Will and yours understand the way we want to make use of them - and that’s enough.”

How one who lives in the Divine Will becomes a member of It and acquires the inseparability with all the works of her Creator.

I feel as if I were swimming within the immense abyss of the Divine Will, and since I am too little, I go about taking, and I can manage to take but tiny little drops of It; and the few I take remain inside of me, as well as inseparable from the Supreme Fiat, and they make me feel the inseparability with It and with all of Its acts. Oh! Divine Will, You love so much one who lives in You, that You do not want to do anything, nor can You do anything without engaging the one who already lives in You. The ardor of your love is so great, as to say: “What I do, you too must do, as you live in Me.” It seems to me that You would render Yourself unhappy if You were not able to do and say: “What the creature does, I do; what I do, she does as well.”

But while my mind was wandering within It and I felt the strong bonds of Its inseparability, my sweet Jesus, repeating His little visit to my soul, told me: "My little daughter of my Will, you must know that for one who lives in my Will, her inseparability from It is such and so great that there is nothing It does, either in Heaven or in all Creation, without letting one who lives in It take part in it. Just as the body possesses the inseparability with its members, and whatever one member does, all other members centralize themselves in the member that operates - they are aware of everything and all of them participate - in the same way, one who lives in my Will becomes a member of It, and as though naturally, on both sides they feel this inseparability, and whatever one does, the other does as well. Hence, my Volition in Heaven makes all happy, It beatifies, with Its smiles of love It enchants the whole Celestial Court and makes all feel unheard-of joys; while on earth, with one who lives in Its Will, It carries out Its operating life, It sanctifies, It fortifies, and acting as her conqueror, It makes in her as many conquests for as many acts, heartbeats, words, thoughts and steps as she does in It.

Now, Heaven, the Blessed, feel and take part in the operating and conquering life that my Will carries out on earth in the souls who live in It; they feel the inseparability of their acts, breaths and heartbeats, and the happiness of my conquering Will; therefore they feel the new joys, the beautiful surprises that my conquering Fiat knows how to give in the creatures; and since these are conquests of a Divine Will, the Blessed, who already live of It, feel as conquerors of Its gifts and works, and - oh! how many new seas of happiness they enjoy. And, behold, Heaven feels inseparable even from the breaths of the creature who lives in my Will on earth; and the creature, by virtue of It, feels the inseparability with the joys and happinesses of Heaven; the peace of the Saints is hers; the firmness and confirmation in good convert into her very nature; she feels the life of Heaven flow within her members more than blood inside her veins. Everything is inseparable for one who lives in my Will - inseparable from the heavens, from the sun, from the whole of Creation; there is nothing that can separate from her. It seems that everyone and everything say to her: 'We are inseparable from you.' My very pains that I suffered on earth, my life, my works, say to her: 'We are yours.' They surround her, they invest her, they take the place of honor and they bind themselves to her with inseparable bonds. And here is how the creature who lives in my Will feels always little: because, feeling the inseparability with so many works of Mine - of my love, great and innumerable, from my light and sanctity, she is the true tiny little one in the midst of all of my works. But, fortunate little one! - loved by all, as she reaches the point of giving beautiful new conquests and new joys to Heaven. Therefore if you want everything, live always in my Will and you will feel as the happiest creature."

Reciprocal love between God and the creature. Exchange of action. Labyrinth of love in which one who lives in the Divine Fiat is placed. God, the Sower in the field of souls.

I am under the eternal waves of the Divine Fiat, and my poor mind feels Its sweet enchantment, Its power and operative virtue which, investing me, makes me do what It does. It seems to me that with Its eye of light, It gives life and gives rise to everything, and with Its empire It rules over everything, It keeps everything into account - not a single breath escapes It. It gives everything and wants everything, but with such love as to seem incredible; and what is most stupefying is that It wants the creature to know what It does, so as to have her, inseparable, with Itself, and let her do what the Divine Will Itself does. I remained enchanted, and my littleness felt lost; if it wasn't for Jesus who stirred me by making me His little visit, I would have remained there, who knows for how long. Then, all goodness and love, He told me: "My good daughter, do not be surprised, everything is possible for one who lives in my Will. There is reciprocal love from both sides - God and the creature - but so great that the human littleness reaches the point of making the acts of God her own, and, as her own, she loves them so much that she would lay down her life in order to defend, love and give all the glory, the first place of honor, to one alone of these divine acts. God, in exchange, makes the acts of the creature

His own, He finds His very Self in these acts, the display of His love, the height of His Sanctity; and - oh! how He loves them. And in this reciprocal love, they love each other so much as to remain imprisoned, One within the other; but a voluntary imprisonment, such that, while it renders them inseparable, they feel happy that God feels loved and finds His place inside the creature, and she feels loved by God and holds her own place within the Supreme Being. There is no greater happiness for the creature than to be able to say - and be certain of it - that she is loved by God; and there is no greater happiness for Us than to be loved by the one who was created by Us, and only to love Us and to fulfill Our Will.

Now, while the creature is found within her Creator, she would want everyone to love Him, to recognize Him, and by virtue of the Divine Fiat by which she is animated, she wants to give rise and recall all the acts of creatures within God, so as to be able to say to Him: 'I give You everything, and I love You for all.' Hence, together with the Divine Volition, she makes herself thought for each intelligence, gaze for each eye, word for each voice, heartbeat for each heart, motion for each work, step for each foot. What does one who lives in my Will not want to give Me? Everything and everyone. Therefore she says to my Will: 'I feel the need to possess your love, your power, to be able to have a love that says to You "I love You for all".' So, Our Will lets Us find in her the love and the requital of all the acts of creatures. Oh! my Will, what power you cast the soul into, and into what a labyrinth of love, the one who lives in You! It is such and so great that the human littleness feels drowned with love, and as a refreshment she feels the need to trace everyone, to speak her continuous refrain, 'I love You, I love You', as the outpouring of the great love that my Divine Will gives her. This is Life of Ours, all of love, Our history woven *ab aeterno*¹²⁴ - all of love; and so must be one who lives in Our Will; there is to be such accord between her and Us as to form one single act and one single love. Now, my blessed daughter, I want to let you know how We love the creatures, and Our continuous outpourings of love that We pour upon them. Our first act of Our happiness is love and to give love; if We do not give love We lack the breath, the motion and the nourishment for Our Supreme Being. If We do not give love - and it is by deeds that We love - We would stop the course of Our Divine Life, which cannot be. Here is why Our devices, Our industriousness, Our stratagems of love are innumerable, and a love not only by words, but by deeds, and operating works without ever ceasing.

Now, just as in Creation We created a sun which, with its operating light and heat, gives light to all, transforms the face of the earth, and keeps sowing in each plant, color in some, fragrance in others, sweetness in some - there is nothing into which the sun does not cast its effect, almost like seed of maturation, so as to render all plants apt to nourishing man and giving him pleasure with many tastes, almost innumerable; in the same way, Our Supreme Being, reserving for Himself the noblest part of man, which is the soul, more than sun We¹²⁵ are fixed upon her interior, We dart through it, We mold it, and as We touch it, more than solar light We cast the seed of the thought into the intellect, the seed of the remembrance of Us into her memory, the seed of Our Will into hers, the seed of the word into her voice, the seed of the motion into her works, the seed of Our love into her heart; and so with all the rest. Now, if man is attentive to Us, working the field of his soul together with Us - as We never withdraw Our Divine Sun, day and night, more than tender mother, We remain upon him, now nourishing him, now warming him, now defending him, now working together, and covering him and hiding him in Our love - We will then make a beautiful harvest which will serve him to feed himself of Us, and sing the praises of Our love, of Our power and infinite wisdom. While, if he is not attentive to Us, Our divine seed remains suffocated, without producing the good it possesses; man remains on an empty stomach, without the divine nourishments, and We remain empty of his love. How painful it is to sow without reaping. But in spite of this, Our love is so great that We do not give up, We continue to dart through him, to warm him, almost like a sun that never tires of spreading its coat of light, even if it finds no plants or flowers in which to cast the seed of its effects. Oh, how much more good the sun could do if it did not find so many sterile lands, stony, and abandoned by man. The same for Us: if We found more souls who would pay attention to Us, We would give so many goods as to transform the creatures into living saints and faithful copies of Us.

¹²⁴ From Eternity

¹²⁵ Our Supreme Being

But in Our Divine Will there is no danger that man would not receive Our daily sowing, or that he would not work together with his Creator in the field of his soul. Therefore, always in my Fiat do I want you; nor should you give a thought to anything else. In this way we will make a beautiful harvest, and you and I will have abundant nourishments, such as to be able to provide for others; and we will be happy of one single happiness.”

How the characteristic and property of the Divine Will is spontaneity. How all that is beautiful, holy and great is contained in It.

I am always on the way in the Divine Fiat. My little intelligence never stays still – it runs and runs always, so that I may be present, as much as it is possible for me, together with the race of the incessant acts that the Divine Will does for love of creatures. To think that It loves me always, nor does It ever cease loving me, and I am not running within Its love, to love It back – no, I can’t; I feel I would do wrong to It. Instead, I feel I am inside the maze of Its love, and without any effort I love It and I want to investigate Its love, to see how much more It loves me. And I remain surprised in seeing Its immense seas of love, and then my love, just tiny little drops, and what’s more, drawn by Its own love.

So, I am better off remaining inside Its own sea, saying to It: ‘Your love is mine, therefore let us love each other with one single love.’ In this way I calm down, and the Divine Volition is content. It is necessary to take of Its own, to be daring, otherwise one remains without giving anything, with a love so small that it dies on one’s lips.

But while my mind was pouring out nonsense, my sweet Jesus, my dear Life, making His short little visit, in a way that it seemed He took delight in listening to me, told me: “My little daughter, the love, the acts, the sacrifices that are spontaneous, with no strain, done by the creature for Me, are so pleasing to Me that in order to enjoy them more, I enclose them inside my Heart; and my contentment is so great that I keep repeating: ‘How beautiful they are! How sweet is her love! Ah, in them I find my divine way, my spontaneous pains, my love that loves constantly with no one forcing Me or begging Me to. You must know that one of the most beautiful characteristics that my Divine Will possesses by nature, as Its legitimate property and virtue, is spontaneity. Everything is spontaneous in It. If It loves, if It operates, if with one single act It gives life and preserves everything, It makes no effort, nor does It let Itself be begged by anyone. Its motto is: ‘I want, hence I do.’ In fact, an effort implies a necessity, while We have no need of anything, or of anyone. Effort implies lack of power, while We are powerful by nature and all hang upon Our power. In one instant We can do anything, and in another instant, if We want to, We can destroy everything. Effort says lack of love, while Our love is such and so great as to seem incredible. Hence, We created everything without anyone asking Us or saying anything to Us; and in the very Redemption, there was no law over Me, no one could force Me to suffer so much, even unto death, but my law was love and the operative virtue of my divine spontaneity; so much so, that the pains were formed in Me first, I gave them life, and then, investing the creatures, they would give them back to Me; and I, with that same spontaneous love with which I had given them life, so I received them. No one could touch Me had I not wanted it so. So, all that is beautiful, good, holy, great, is in the operating in spontaneous ways. On the other hand, one who operates and loves in a forced way, loses what is best, and his works and love can be called - and indeed are – lifeless; and as a consequence they are subject to mutability, while spontaneity produces firmness in good.

Now, my daughter, the sign that the soul lives in my Divine Will is her loving, operating and also suffering spontaneously; strain does not exist. My Will that keeps her with Itself communicates to her Its own spontaneity, so as to have her with Itself, within Its love that runs, inside Its works that never cease; otherwise it would be a bother for It to keep her inside Its womb of light without the characteristic of Its spontaneous way. Even more, the creature is all eyes to look at my Divine Fiat as she does not want to be left behind but wants to run together with It, to love with Its love and to be present inside Its works, in order to requite It and sing the praises of Its power and creative magnificence. Therefore, run, run always, and let your soul, with no effort, plunge itself into my Divine Volition, so as to go through Its ways together with It - loving ways, and filled with stratagems for love of creatures.”

True love in the creature forms its own little place inside the Divine works, to be able to enclose the life of the Divine Will.

I feel an irresistible force that never lets me stay still, and it seems that each created thing and all that my sweet Jesus has done and suffered, says to me: ‘I have created this for you, for love of you. And you? Don’t you want to put anything of your own for love of Me in what I have done for you? I have cried for you, I have suffered, I have died for you. And what about you? Don’t you want to put something inside my tears, into my pains, in my death? The whole of my Being seeks you. And you? Don’t you want to invest and search all of my things in order to envelop them and enclose them inside your ‘I love You’? I am all love for you. And you? Don’t you want to be all love for Me?’

I remain confounded, and my poor mind starts off the race of the acts done by the Divine Will, so as to be able to say: ‘I too have put something of my own into your acts, be it even a little ‘I love You’ of mine; but in that ‘I love You’ I place the whole of myself.’ But while I was doing my race, my sweet Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, all goodness, told me: “My blessed daughter, you must know that true love in the creature puts Me in the condition of forgetting everything, and of disposing Myself to concede that my Will come to reign upon earth. Not that I suffer forgetfulness – this cannot be in Me, it would be a flaw – but rather, I take such delight in the true love of the creature, when I find that all the particles of her being tell Me that they love Me, and pouring out this love for Me, she invests Me and runs through my whole Being, in my works, and as though kneading herself with Me she makes Me feel her love everywhere and in every place. And I, to enjoy this love of the creature, I put everything aside, and as though forgetting about it, she inclines Me so much as to dispose Me and impose herself over Me, to give her surprising things and whatever she wants, and even the Kingdom of my Will. True love holds such power as to call my Will as life into the human being.

You must know that when I stretched out the heavens and created the sun, even then, in my all-seeingness, I saw your love running through the heavens, investing the light of the sun, and forming in all created things a little place for you to love Me. And – oh! how I rejoiced; and from that time my Will ran toward you and those who would love Me, so as to give of Itself as life, within that tiny little place of love. See, then, how my Will covered all centuries, It gathered them into one single point, all of them in act, and I found the place of love in which to put Its life, so as to continue It with all of Its divine majesty and decorum.

Then I came upon earth; but do you know where I found the little place in which to enclose my life? In the true love of the creature. From that time I already saw your love which, surrounding Me like a crown, invested my whole Humanity and flowed within my Blood, through each little particle of Me, almost being kneaded with Me. Everything was in act for Me, and as though present, and my tears found the little place in which to pour themselves; my love, my pains, my life, the refuge in which to remain safe; and my death found even the resurrection within the true love of the creature; and my Divine Will found Its Kingdom in which to reign. Therefore, if you want my Divine Will to come and reign as life in the creatures, let Me find your love everywhere, in every place and inside each thing; let Me feel it always. With it you will form the stake on which to burn everything; such that, consuming all that is not my Will, it will form the place in which my Will can be enclosed. Then will all my works find a receptacle, their hiding place from which to be able to continue the good and the operating virtue they possess. And so, on both sides, we will exchange places – you will find your little place in Me and in all of my works; and I will find it in you and in all your acts. Therefore, always forward in my Divine Will, to form the stake of love on which you will burn, as well as all the impediments that prevent Its reigning in the midst of creatures.”

Love of God in the Creation. The glory that Creation would have given Him had It possessed reason. The sacrifice that Love makes of Its glory; Its continuous cry. The army armed with love; exchanges of love between God and the creature.

I am always in search of the acts that the Divine Will does continuously; and since It never lets Itself be found doing nothing, but always in operating act – oh! how beautiful it is to be able to say to my Creator that His Divine Fiat loves me so much that It is now stretching out the heavens, creating the sun, giving life to the wind and to all other things, because He loves me. And His love is so great, that He tells me – with deeds and with words: “For you I do this - not ‘did’, but ‘do’. For Us, creating Our works costs Us as much as preserving them.”

So, I was going around in the Creation, and the heavens, the stars, the sun and everything, seemed to come toward me with their refrain: ‘For you did our Creator create us, because He loves you. Therefore, come to love Him, who has loved you so much.’ I was wandering within created things, and my always lovable Jesus, coming toward me, making me pause, told me: “My little daughter of my Divine Volition, Our love in Creation was so great – and it still is – that if the creature paid attention she would remain drowned by Our love, and would be able to do nothing but love Us. Listen, my daughter, to what extent Our love reached for the creature: We created the Creation completely without reason. Oh! had We endowed It with reason, what glory would It not have given Us! A heaven always stretched out without ever moving from its place, because such was Our Will! A sun that, faithfully, while never changing, acts as the administrator of Our light, of Our love, of Our sweetness, of Our fragrances and of all Our goods, without ever changing its action, and only because so We wanted! If it had reason, what glory would it not have given Us? A wind that always blows, ruling within the great void of the universe; a sea that always murmurs... Had they possessed reason, how much glory would they not have given to Us? But, no! The cry of Our love cried out louder than Our glory, and almost prevented Us from giving reason to Creation; and crying out loudly it said to Us: ‘It is for love of the creature that We have created everything. Hence, to her give reason, that she may come into the heavens to requite Us with incessant love and perennial glory, because We stretched out a heaven over her head. And in each star, let Us hear her cry of love that loves Us with unmovable love. Let her come into the sun, and transforming herself into it, as if it were her own, let her requite Us with love of light, with love of sweetness, and give Us requital of love for the administration of Our goods that the sun gives to her.’

Therefore, We want the creature in all created things by right of justice, that she may give Us the requital that they would have given Us if all Creation had reason. This is why, then, We endowed her with reason, and We want Our Will to dominate her and hold Its royal place in her as It does in the Creation; so that, being unified with all created things, she might comprehend all of Our notes of love toward her, and would requite Us with her own notes of incessant love and of perennial glory. We never cease loving her, with deeds as well as with words, and she is obliged to love Us always and not to fall behind, but come toward Us and place her love upon Our same loving notes.

Furthermore, Our love that never says ‘enough’ wants to always give to the creature, nor is it content if it does not find new inventions of love in order to say to her: ‘I have loved you always, and with love operating.’ Therefore, Our Fiat placed inside each created thing and invested them with a love, one distinct from the other, so as to say to her: ‘I love you powerfully’; while in another it placed the sweetness of Our love, someplace else the loveliness, somewhere the gentleness, and somewhere else Our love that enraptures, that binds, that conquers, in such a way that the creature would not be able to resist Us. In sum, in each created thing We placed the weapon of Our distinct love. We can say that Our Fiat put out in Creation an army armed with love, with weapons, one more powerful than the other; and by endowing the creature with reason, she was to comprehend and receive these weapons of love by means of created things. And by remaining invested with these specialties of weapons of love, she would be able to tell Us, not only with words, but with deeds, just as We do: ‘I love You with powerful love; my love for You is sweet, it is lovable and gentle, so much so, that I feel myself languishing, I feel faint, I feel the need of your arms to sustain me; and, upheld by You, I feel that my love enraptures You, binds You, conquers You. These are the same weapons of love with which You armed me, that are loving You, and are waging battle in order for us to love each other.’

My daughter, how much hidden love does Creation contain! And since the creature does not elevate herself into Our Will, does not come to live in It, in spite of her possessing reason, she comprehends nothing about It, and We remain without the requital due to Us by justice. And Our love – what does it do? With invincible patience it waits and continues to cry out that it wants to be loved by the creature, because for love of her it would have sacrificed an interminable glory, had it given reason to all Creation, for love of the creatures. Therefore, be attentive to live inside Our Divine Will, so that, by making Itself the revealer of Our love, It may equip you with the weapons to make Us loved, with the qualities of Our own love; and – oh! how content I will be; and you too will be content.”

To live in the Divine Will is like the living between Father and son. The acts of the creature are visits to the Celestial Father. Divine abyss in which one who lives in the Divine Will is placed.

I am always back into the celestial inheritance of the Divine Fiat. In each act I do it seems to me that I return into the arms of my Celestial Father – but, to do what? To receive a gaze, a kiss, a caress, a little word of love, one more knowledge of His Supreme Being, so as to be able to love Him more, and not only to receive, but also to give Him the requital of His Paternal tendernesses. In the Divine Volition nothing else is done other than God carrying out His Paternity with a love tender and unspeakable, as though He were waiting for the creature in order to rock her in His arms, to say to her: “Know that I am your Father, and you are my daughter. Oh! how I love the crown of my children around Me. With them around Me I feel happier, I feel I am Father, and there is no greater contentment than possessing a numerous offspring that shows their love and sonship toward their Father.” And by entering into the Divine Volition the creature does nothing other than act as the daughter of her Father. On the other hand, outside of the Divine Will the rights of Paternity and of sonship cease.

But while my mind was wandering amid the crowd of so many thoughts about the Divine Fiat, the Celestial Sovereign, Jesus, my dear Life, surprising me, with a love more than Paternal, in act of taking me into His arms, told me: “Daughter of Mine, my daughter, if you knew my yearnings, my longing, and how I wait and wait again to see you return into my Will, you would be more attentive to come back to It more often. My love reaches the point of rendering Me restless when I don’t see you leap into my arms, that I may give you my love, my Paternal tendernesses, and receive yours. But do you know when it is that you leap into my arms? When, seeing yourself as so very little, you want to love Me and don't know how to love Me; you tell Me an 'I love You', and your 'I love You' forms the leap in order for you to fling yourself into my arms. And since you see that your 'I love You' is small, brave, you take my love and you tell Me an 'I love You' so very big; and I enjoy that my daughter loves Me with my love, and I greatly delight in exchanging my acts with those of the creature. After all, in my Will it is not to strangers that I give, such that I would have to use one weight and one measure; but I give to my own children, therefore I let them take whatever they want. So, each time you remember to let your acts flow in my Will, be it your prayer, your pains, your 'I love You', your work, those are little visits that you make to your Father – for you to ask for something, and for Him to say to you: 'Tell Me, what would you like?' And be sure that you will always obtain more gifts and favors."

Jesus became silent, and I felt the extreme need to rest in His arms, to be restored from the so many privations of Him; but to my surprise, I saw sweet Jesus with a brush in His hands, painting in my soul with such admirable mastery, vividly, the acts of the Divine Will done in Creation and Redemption. And then, resuming His speech, He added: "My Will encloses everything, inside and outside of Itself, and wherever It reigns It knows not how to be, nor can It be, without the life of Its acts. Indeed, Its acts can be called the arms, the step, the word, of my Will; therefore, for my Will to be present in the creature without Its works, it would be like a broken life – which cannot be. This is why I do nothing other than portray, by brushstrokes, Its works, so that, there where the life is, Its works may be centralized. See then, in what a divine abyss lies the creature who possesses my Will: inside of her she feels Its life, together with all of Its works, centralized within her littleness, as much as it is possible for a creature; outside of herself she feels Its endlessness, whose boundaries cannot be seen; and because of the communicative force It possesses, she feels as though under a pouring rain that pours onto her Its works, Its love, the multiplicity of Its divine goods. My Divine Will encloses everything and wants to give everything to the creature. It wants to be able to say: 'Nothing have I denied; everything I have given to one who lives in my Will'."

The living in the Divine Will makes the creature feel the Paternity of her Creator, and she feels she has the right to be His daughter. Three prerogatives that one who lives in It acquires.

My poor mind wanders within the Divine Volition, but so much, that I cannot repeat what it comprehends, or what I experience inside that celestial dwelling of the Divine Fiat. I can only say that I feel the Divine Paternity which, with all love, waits for me to come into Its arms so as to tell me: "We are just like between children and Father. Come to enjoy my Paternal tenderesses, my loving traits, my infinite sweetesses. Let Me be Father to you. There is no greater delight I experience than to be able to carry out my Paternity. And you, come without fear, come to give Me your daughtership; give Me the love, the tenderesses, of a daughter. My Will being one with yours, gives to Me the Paternity toward you, and to you It gives the right of daughter."

Oh! Divine Will, how admirable and powerful You are. You alone have the virtue of rejoining any distance or dissimilarity with our Celestial Father. It seems to me that the living in You is precisely this: to feel the Divine Paternity, and to feel oneself as the child of the Supreme Being.

But while my mind was crowded by so many thoughts about It, my sweet Jesus, making me His short little visit, told me: "My blessed daughter, to live in my Will is precisely this: to acquire the right of daughter, and for God to acquire the supremacy, the command, the right of Father. It alone can unite together one and the other, and make of them one single life.

Now, you must know that one who lives in my Divine Will acquires three prerogatives. First: the right of divine life. Everything she does, it is life that she feels; if she loves she feels the life of love and, as life, she feels it flow within her mind, in her breath, into her heart, in everything. She feels the vital virtue that forms within herself, not only the act, which is subject to ceasing, but the continuation of an act that forms the life. If she prays, if she adores, if she repairs, she feels the incessant life of prayer, of adoration, of reparation – not human, but divine, which is not subject to interruption. So, each act done in my Will is a vital act that the soul acquires. In It everything is life, and the soul acquires the life of the good that she does in It. How great the difference between a good that possesses life, and a good or act such that, as she does it, the life of that act ends. As life, she holds it in her power and she feels the continuation of the life of that good. On the other hand, as act, she will not hold it in her power, nor will she feel the continuation of it; and whatever is not continuous cannot be called life. And only in my Will can these acts full of life be found, because they have the divine life as their origin, which is not subject to ending and therefore it can give life to everything and to everyone. On the other hand, outside of It, all things, even the greatest works, find their end, and – oh! what a beautiful prerogative that only my Will can give: the soul feeling her acts changed into perennial divine life.

Now, after the first prerogative, the second one enters the field - that is, the right of property. But who endows her? Who constitutes her the owner? My same Will, because in It there is no poverty, everything is abundance – abundance of sanctity, of light, of graces, of love; and since she possesses these as life, it is right that she possess these divine properties as her own. So, she feels as owner of sanctity, owner of light, of grace, of love, and of all the divine goods. And only in my Will there is this ownership. Outside of It everything is given in measure, and without rendering them the owners. What difference between the two!

From the second prerogative the third arises: the right of glory. There is nothing she does, small or great, natural or supernatural, in which she is not given the right of glory – right to glorify, in each thing, even in the breath and in the heartbeat, their Creator; and the right to be glorified themselves, in the glory of the One who is such that there is no glory that does not come from Him. Therefore, in my Will you will find everything, and all at your disposal; and by right, not human, but divine, because my Will Itself loves to give you these, Its divine rights, loving the creature as Its own true daughter.”

Reason, the eye of the soul, is the light that makes the creature know the beauty of her good works. What the rights of the Divine Will are. How in It there are no intentions, but acts.

I am always in the arms of the Divine Will, and although amid the intense bitternesses of the privations of my sweet Jesus, which, more than sea, inundate my poor soul, Its light is inaccessible, and it is not given to me to be able to enclose it completely into my soul, or to comprehend it. It never leaves me; even more, surpassing the sea of my bitternesses, It makes use of them as victory and conquest It accomplishes over my poor human will. So, I was thinking to myself that all the value, all the good, it seems to me that it is all of the Divine Will, and nothing is left for me. But while I was thinking this, my sweet Jesus, my dear life, making me His short little visit, all goodness, told me: “My blessed daughter, you must know that We endowed the creature with reason, that she might know the good or the evil she would do; and in each act that she would do, if good, she might be endowed with new merit, new grace, new beauty and greater union with her Creator; if evil, she would suffer the penalty for it, a pain that would make her feel her weakness and her detaching herself from the One who had created her. Reason is the eye of the soul, and the light which, while leading the creature, makes her know the beauty of her good works, the fruits of her sacrifices; and which knows how to torment her when she does evil. Reason possesses this virtue: if the creature does what is good, her reason feels at its place of honor, and as king of the creature, it maintains the order, and by virtue of the merit she acquires, the creature feels strength and peace; while if she does evil, she feels all distraught, and the slave of her own evils.

Now, if the creature does her good acts in my Divine Will, by virtue of the reason she possesses, we give her the merit of the divine acts. Merit is given to her according to her knowledge, and depending on how her human will wants to operate. If it wants to operate in Our Will, it rises so high, leaving down below the plane of the human actions, however good; but rather, coming into Our Divine Volition, like a sponge it plunges itself into It, and remains soaked with Its acts of light, of sanctity, of love, in such a way that its act disappears within Our own, while Our divine act appears anew. Therefore, by justice, divine merit must flow in it, and since all human prestige is lost in Our Divine Will, it may seem that the creature has done nothing; but that is not true: if Our Will operates, it is by virtue of the thread of the human will It has received into Its hands, which forms Its triumph and Its conquests over the act of the creature; as well as by virtue of the human reason, which voluntarily comes to surrender the rights received, as homage and submission to the One from whom it had received. And this is more than doing, because God has received the requital of the most beautiful gifts He gave to the creature – that is, reason and the will. With these the creature gives Us everything she can give Us, she recognizes Us, she strips herself of herself, she loves Us with pure love; and Our love is so great that We clothe her with Ourselves, We give her Our works, in such a way that We and she can say: ‘Let us do this together’. We will put Ourselves in a condition such that the creature will not be able to do anything without Our Will. And Our goodness is so great, that even when the creature does good in a human way, since reason always runs within any good, We give her the human merit, because it is Our usual way not to leave any good act of the creature without its reward. It can be said that We are all eyes over her to see what merit We can give her.”

After this He remained silent, and I continued to think of how this Divine Will is all eyes over us, loves Us so much and never leaves us for one instant; and my sweet Jesus continued, saying: “My daughter, my Divine Will is everything for the creature. Without It she would not be able to live even for one minute. All of her acts, motions and steps can be called spoon-feeding and child-bearing that my Will does and the creature receives; she feels them inside of her and does not know either who it is that feeds her, or who gives life to her life. So, for many it is as if my Will did not exist for them, and they do not give It the rights due and befitting to It. Therefore, it is necessary to know what these rights of my Divine Will are, so that, by knowing them, the creatures may requite It and know Who it is that gives life to their lives, such that they are nothing but the wrapping, or the statues, animated by It.

Now, Its rights are innumerable: right of creation, right of conservation, of continuous animation; everything It created and which serves the wellbeing of man constitutes Its right over him. Therefore, the sun, the air, the wind, the water, the earth and everything, have been created and given to man by my Will; hence, as many things as It gave him, so many more are the right It holds over him. My Redemption, the forgiveness after sin, my grace, the upright operating, are greater rights It acquires over him. It can be said that the creature is as though kneaded within my Will; yet, It is not known. What sorrow, not to be recognized!

Now, in order to obtain the triumph, the life, of my Will in the creature, it is necessary for her to know what It did and what It does for love of her, and what Its just rights are. Once she has known this, she will put herself in order with my Volition, she will feel Who it is that gives her life, Who moves within her motion, Who palpitates inside her heart; and while receiving from my Will the life that forms her life, she will give back to It, as homage, love and glory, that very life which my Will forms in her. And so will my Will receive Its rights - receiving back into Its womb of light everything that belongs to It and which, with so much love, It had given to the creature. In sum, It will feel the creature, whom It had created with so much love, being reborn anew in Its arms. Oh! if all knew the rights of my Will, Its ardent and constant love, which is such that while It gives her life, more than Mother, putting her out to the light of day, Its jealousy of love is so great, that It does not leave her for one instant, It invests her inside and out, above and below, to the right and to the left; and even if the creature does not know It or love It, with divine heroism my Will continues to love her and make Itself life and bearer of the acts of the creature. Oh! my Will, You alone know how to love with heroic, strong, incredible and infinite love the one whom You created and does not even recognize You. Human ingratitude, how great you are!”

Then, I felt I could touch with my own hand the great love of the Divine Fiat, and I thought to myself: ‘How can one live in It? Perhaps by always placing the intention of living in It?’ And my always lovable Jesus added: “My good daughter, in the living in my Will there are no intentions. The intention is needed when acts cannot be done because that which has the virtue of giving life to all the good that the creature wants to do, is missing; and this is outside of the living in my Will; and to those I give the merit, not as acts, but as holy intentions. On the other hand, in my Will there is the vivifying, acting and operating virtue, in such a way that whatever the creature wants to do, she finds That which forms the life of her acts; she feels the vivifying force that vivifies her act and converts it into works. Therefore, in my Will all things change, all things possess the life: love, prayer, adoration, the good that one wants to do, and all the virtues, are full of life, hence not subject to ending or changing, because That which administers life to them keeps them with Itself, to live life together; and I give them the merit as works animated by my Will.

What difference between the intention and the works! The intention is symbolized by the poor, the sick, who, being unable to, would want at least with their goodwill to exercise charity, propagate what is good, and do who knows how many beautiful things. However, poverty and infirmity hinder them and render them almost like prisoners, unable to carry out the good that they want. On the other hand, the operating in my Divine Will is symbolized by a rich man who, having the riches at his disposal, gives no value to an intention, because if he wants to, he can do charity, he can go wherever he wants, he can do good to all, he can help all. Riches in my Will are such and so many, that the creature gets lost in It and, full-handed, she can take whatever she wants in order to help all; and, what’s more, without clamor or noise, almost like quiet light – she holds out the help, and withdraws.”

Whatever is done in the Divine Will does not remain at the low level of the earth, but departs for Heaven, to take its royal place in the Celestial Fatherland.

I am always back into the endless sea of the Divine Will, to take the little drops of It that nourish, preserve and raise the life of the Divine Will that I feel within me. So, each truth about It is a banquet that Jesus gives me – fully Celestial and Divine, to nourish me and the Supreme Fiat. Each truth is a hem of Heaven that descends into me, and surrounding me, He waits until I do my acts so as to take them up with Him to the Celestial Fatherland.

So, while I was wandering within Its divine light, my beloved Good, Jesus, repeating His short little visit, told me: “My blessed daughter, Heaven is always open for one who lives in my Will. My Will lowers Itself and does together with the creature whatever she does. It loves together, It works, It prays, suffers, adores, repairs and loves so much these acts done together with It, that It does not leave them at the low level of the earth, but takes them up with It into the Celestial dwelling, to let them take their royal place as conquests made in the low world, which belong to It and to Its beloved creature. Whatever is done in my Volition belongs to Heaven – the earth is not worthy to possess it. And – oh! the security, the happiness, that the creature acquires thinking that her acts are in the Divine Fiat’s power, and are present in Heaven as her properties, not human, but Divine, waiting for her, wanting to court her and form her throne of glory. The love, the jealousy, the identification that my Will feels with these acts done in It is so great, that It does not even leave them inside the creature, but keeps them with Itself as births of Its life and births of the creature, so as to enjoy them and feel the delight of being loved, and as an anticipation It must give her of the glory in the Celestial Fatherland. These acts done in my Will act as narrators of the love story between the Creator and the creature, and there is no greater delight than hearing the narration of how much I have loved, how my love reaches the excess, to the point of lowering Myself, wanting to do what the creature does together with her. Not only this, but she narrates to Me her love, as she has received my act into her own; therefore a reciprocal love is formed between one and the other, that makes us mutually happy. Oh! how beautiful it is to see that while she is still crossing the exile, her acts are in Heaven, as conquests of Mine, which I made in the human will. And each taking their office, some love Me the way I can love, some adore Me with divine adorations, and some form for Me celestial melodies, to sing hymns to Me, praise Me and thank Me for the great portent of the operating of my Will. Therefore, be attentive and let nothing escape you in which you do not call my Will, so that the acts you do may be animated by my Divine Will.”

Then, I continued to think about the Supreme Fiat. Many thoughts were crowding my mind, and my lovable Jesus added: “My daughter, the creature was created by Us fully in order with Us, therefore it is her sacrosanct duty, in everything she does, to call the One who created her, to give Him dominion and the royal place that is due to Him by right inside her act. In this way would the act of the creature receive the honor of possessing within itself a strength, a light, an act, which are Divine. It is Our Will for her to be filled completely with the Divine Being; and if she does not do so, she denies a right of Ours, she puts Us out of her acts; and her acts remain as human acts emptied of divine strength and light, with such thick darkness that her intelligence sees many black shadows, such that only gropingly can she take a few steps. Just pain, for one who can turn on the light but does not do it, one who can call upon strength and does not call; and while still making use of the preserving and acting act and work of God, she puts it out of her act.

Now, it is Our decree that no one can enter into Heaven if his soul is not filled up to the brim, all with Our Will and Our love – a little void of these is enough for Heaven not to open to the creature. Here then, the necessity of Purgatory – to be emptied, by dint of pains and of fire, of everything that is human, and be filled, by dint of longing, of yearning and of martyrdoms, with pure love and with Divine Will, so as to be able to enter the Celestial Fatherland; but still, without acquiring, in spite of so many pains, either any merit or any additional glory, but only to meet the necessary condition in order to be admitted into the Celestial dwelling. On the other hand, had they done this on earth, by calling Our life in all their acts, each act would be a greater glory, one more beauty, sealed by the works of their Creator. Oh! with how much love are these souls received, who in their acts have given the place to the divine act. In meeting with Us, We recognize Ourselves in the creature, and she recognizes herself in Us; and recognizing each other, the happiness on both sides is such and so great, that the whole of Heaven remains astounded in seeing the joys, the glory, the beatitudes that the Supreme Being pours over this fortunate creature. Therefore, always in my Will and in my love do I want you, so that love may burn up whatever does not belong to Me, and my Will, with Its brush of light, may form Our act inside your act.”

The Divine Will and the human will, two spiritual powers. How easy it is for one who wants to possess It as life. How Jesus does not teach nor wants impossible things.

I feel as though I am being swept into the eternal waves of the Divine Volition. I feel Its continuous motion, murmuring continuously as life. But what does It murmur? It murmurs love and gives love to all, It murmurs and gives happiness, It murmurs and fortifies, It murmurs and gives light, It murmurs and gives life to all, preserves all and forms the act of all, invests everything, envelops and hides everything within Itself, so as to give Itself to all and receive everything. Oh! Power of the Divine Volition – oh, how I wish to possess You as life inside my soul, live in You, to know no other life but Yours. But, oh! how far away I am from this. It takes too much to get to live of Divine Will.

But while I was thinking this, my sweet Jesus, my dear Life, surprising me, all goodness, told me: “My blessed daughter, tell Me – what do you want? Do you want my Will to reign and live in you as life? If you truly want this, everything is done. In fact, Our love and ardent desire for the creature to possess Our Will as life, to make her live of It, is so great that as soon as her human will truly wants it, so does Our own fill the human volition with Our Supreme Volition, to form in it Its life and live in her as in Its own center.

You must know that the Divine Will and the human will are two spiritual powers: the Divine, immense, of an unreachable power; the human, small power. But, however small, it does have its power. And since both are spiritual, one can pour itself into the other and form one single life. All the power is in the wanting, and, it being a spiritual power, it has the capacity to be able to place inside of itself the good it wants, and also the evil. So, whatever the will wants, that is what it finds within itself. If it wants self-esteem, glory, love of pleasures or riches, it will find inside the will the life of self-esteem, of glory, the life of pleasures, of riches; and if it wants sin, even sin will form its life. Even more so, if it wants the life of Our Will into its own – wanted, commanded by Us with such great longing – if it truly wants It, it will have the great good of possessing Our Will as life. And if it were not so, the sanctity of living in my Will would be a difficult sanctity, and almost impossible, while neither do I know how to teach difficult things, nor do I want impossible things. On the contrary, it is my usual way to facilitate, as much as it is possible for the creature, the most difficult things and the hardest sacrifices; and if needed, I put something of my own so that the small power of her will may be sustained, aided, animated by the invincible power of Mine, and in this way render easy the good or the life of my Volition that the creature wants to possess. And my love is so great, that in order to facilitate her even more, I whisper to the ear of her heart: ‘If you really want to do this good, I Myself will do it together with you, I will not leave you alone, I will place at your disposal my grace, my strength, my light, my sanctity; it will be the two of us doing the good you want to possess.’ Therefore, it does not take too much to live of my Will; the ‘too much’ is in wanting it, but if the creature makes up her mind and wants it, firmly and perseveringly, she has already won my Will and has made It her own.

Oh! how many things can the human will enclose. It being spiritual power, that collects much and disperses nothing, it resembles the light of the sun: how many things does the sun not enclose while one can see nothing but light and heat? Yet, the goods it encloses are almost innumerable, and it shows how as soon as it touches the earth, so does it communicate admirable goods. Yet, one sees nothing but light. Such is the human will: how many goods can it not enclose if it wants to? It can enclose love, sanctity, light, reparation, patience, all of the virtues, and even its Creator Himself. Being spiritual power, it has the virtue and capacity of enclosing everything it wants; and it has not only the power to enclose the good it wants, but that of being transmuted into the good it encloses. So, the human will changes into the nature of the good it wants; and even though it might not do many of the things it truly wants, in the will they remain as though done, and it shows how, when the occasion arises to do that good it wanted, by possessing the life of it, with promptness, with all love, without hesitating a bit, it does that good it had been wanting to do for a long time. This is symbolized by the sun which, finding neither the seed nor the flower, it does not give the good of maturing the seed, or the good of coloring the flowers; but as soon as it is given the chance to touch them with its light, by possessing the life, it immediately gives maturation to the seed, and color to the flowers. The human will possesses, with indelible characters, everything it does and wants to do; and if the memory forgets, the will loses nothing, it contains the deposit of all of its acts, unable to disperse anything. Therefore it can be said that the whole of man is in his will: if the will is holy, even the most indifferent things are holy for him; but if it is evil, maybe even good itself changes for him into a perverted act.

So, if you truly want my Divine Will as life, it does not take too much; more so, since united to yours there is Mine that wants it, there is a power that can do anything; and on your part it will show by deeds if in all things you will conduct yourself as the possessor of a Divine Will. Therefore, be attentive, and let your flight be always continuous in the Supreme Fiat.”

One who lives in the Divine Will lays down her remains, reduces herself to nothing, and the All forms Its life within that nothing. How the Celestial Queen loved us in Her Conception. Prodigies that the Divine Volition did in Her.

I feel I am the little atom, or rather, the ‘nothing’ dissolved in the All of the Divine Volition. Oh, how this All, within the ‘nothing’ of the creature, feels Its Life being free, Its Power operating, Its virtue creating, such that whatever It wants It can do inside this ‘nothing’. It can be said that this ‘nothing’ is the amusement of the Divine Fiat which, with Its dominion, invests it, attracts it, captivates it, fills it; and the ‘nothing’ lets It do anything, and not one thing does it disperse of the goods it receives.

Now, while I was thinking of this, my sweet Jesus, making me His short little visit, told me: “My daughter, when the soul lives in my Divine Will, she lays down her remains, she empties herself of everything, in such a way that what is left is the pure ‘nothing’, and my Volition invests it, fills it with the All, dominates it, and forms in it prodigies of sanctity, of grace, of beauty, worthy of Its creative power. But, what’s more, in this void of the ‘nothing’ It generates Its love and there It forms Its divine life, and It becomes dominator of the ‘nothing’ and of Its very divine life formed in It. And, oh! Its love for this ‘nothing’ reaches such extent as to render it dominating at the same time together with the Supreme Fiat. And since its dominion comes to it from the All it possesses, it feels Its same dominating virtue and dominates the very Divine Will. So, they are both¹²⁶ dominating, but with highest accord, possessing one same love and one same Will. The human will feels its life within Mine and does nothing if it does not feel my operating act that wants to operate, in order to do it together. And my Will feels my Life within its life, and with Its dominion It imposes Itself over the ‘nothing’, so as to let it operate within the All. Therefore, as soon as the creature makes up her mind, with firm will, of wanting to live in Mine, my Volition gives the start of forming Its life in it.

There is no will which does not possess its life, through which it carries out its goodness, its power, its sanctity, the fullness of its love. Life is the manifestation of the will it possesses, it is the garment that covers it, it is the sound of its voice, it is the narrator of its wonders, of its infinity, of its power. Therefore, my Divine Will is not content with making the creature live in It – the ‘nothing’ within the All. No, no, only then is It content when It encloses the All inside the ‘nothing’, forming in it Its life dominating and operating, and doing whatever It wants inside that ‘nothing’. This is why, when I speak to you about my Will, it is your Jesus that speaks to you, because I Myself am the life of It, Its representative, the narrator of my Fiat, which I hide within Me. Hence, the greatest prodigy is to form my Divine Life in the nothingness of the creature; and my Will alone has this virtue, because by possessing the creative power, It can create Itself, Its life, in one who wants to receive It. Now, by possessing my life, the soul takes part in my sanctity, in my love, and, oh! how beautiful it is to hear that the ‘nothing’ says together with the All: ‘Love! Glory!’ And with the dominating force it feels, it diffuses itself within the divine acts and dominates together with my Will. For Us there is no greater contentment: to hear the ‘nothing’ operating and dominating in Our Divine Being. Therefore, be attentive to live always in my Will.”

After this, I continued my round in the Divine Will, and as I arrived at the Immaculate Conception, my sweet Jesus made me pause, telling me: “My daughter, I want to make you penetrate deeper inside the Immaculate Conception of my Most Holy Mother; Its prodigies, how She loved Her Creator, and how for love of Us She loved all creatures. The little Queen, in the act of being conceived, began Her life together with the Divine Will, and therefore together with Her Creator. So, She felt the strength, the immensity, the ardor of the Divine Love; and these were so great that She felt dissolved, drowned in love, as to be unable to do nothing other than love the One who so much loved Her. She felt loved, but so much, to the point of being given His Will into Her power, to be kept as Her own life. This can be called the greatest love of God, the love most heroic, the love which alone can say: 'I have nothing left to give you – I have given you everything.' And the little Queen made use of this life in order to love Him back for as much as She was loved. She would not lose one instant without loving Him, and trying to match Him in loving.

Now, Our Divine Will which possesses the All-seeingness of everything, hid nothing from Her, It made all human generations present to this Holy Creature, and each sin they had committed and would commit; and even from the first instant of Her conception, the Celestial Little One, who knew no other life than the Divine Will alone, began to grieve with divine sorrow over each sin of creature, so much so as to form around each of their sins a sea of divine love and sorrow. My Will, which knows not how to do small things, formed inside Her beautiful soul seas of sorrow and of love for each sin and for each creature. Therefore, the Holy Little Virgin, from the very first instant of Her life, was Queen of Sorrow and of Love, because Our omnipotent Will gave Her such sorrow and love, that if It had not sustained Her with Its power, She would have died for each sin, and be consumed with love so many times for as many creatures as would exist. And Our Divinity began to receive, by virtue of Our Will, divine sorrow and divine love for all and for each one. Oh! how We felt satisfied and repaid for all; and by virtue of this divine sorrow and love We felt inclined toward all. Her love was so great that, lording it over Us, She would make Us love those whom She loved, so much so, that as soon as this excelling Creature came to light, the Eternal Word ran, to come and look for man, and save him. Who can resist the operating power of Our Will in the creature? And what can It not do and obtain when It wants it? Oh, if all knew the great good We did to the human generations by giving them this Celestial Queen! It was She who prepared Redemption, who conquered Her Creator, and was the bearer of the Eternal Word upon earth. Oh! all would cling to Her Maternal knees, to implore from Her that Divine Will, whose life She possesses.”

One who does the Divine Will has no need of the law. One who lives in It gives work to all - to the Celestial Father, to the Celestial Mother, and also to Jesus.

I am in the arms of my adorable Divine Volition, though immersed in the pain of the privation of my blessed Jesus. Hours are centuries without Him. What pain! What a continuous death, with no pity and no mercy. Justly does He punish me, because too ungrateful and uncorresponding have I been. But, O please! My Love, hide my miseries inside your wounds, cover me with your Blood. I unite my pains to Yours, that they may cry out, together, 'Pity! Forgiveness!' over this poor creature. But without You I can endure no more.

But while I was pouring out my sorrow, my sweet Jesus, moved to compassion for my long martyrdom, like flash that escapes made me His short little visit, and told me: “My blessed daughter, do not become alarmed, my Divine Will places everything in your power, in such a way that you can say: 'Everything is mine.' My pains, my wounds, my Blood – everything is yours. So, you have no need to ask Me for them - but take them, to use them for your needs. This is so true, that one in whom my Divine Will reigns, has no need of the law, but feels within herself her own nature changed into divine law. Just as by nature she feels the force of her breath, of her heartbeat, so does she feel the force of the law, as substantial to her life. And since my law is law of love, of sanctity, of order, thus she feels within herself the nature of love, of sanctity, of order. Wherever my Will reigns, Its love is so great that It transforms the goods It wants to give to the creature into her very nature, that she may be the owner of them. No one can take them away from her, and I Myself make Myself the custodian of the gifts in nature conceded to this creature.”

Sweet Jesus became silent, and my mind kept swimming in the sea of the Divine Will; and resuming His speech, He added: “My daughter, you must know that one who lives in my Will gives everyone work to do. My Celestial Father, seeing His creature in His Divine Volition, places Himself around her to form the work of His image and likeness; more so, since finding His Will in her, He finds the adaptable material suitable to receive His work, to form the most beautiful image that resembles Him. And, oh! His contentment, for with His work He can produce His own images.

She gives work to the Celestial Mother, because finding my Divine Will in the creature, She finds one who keeps Her company, who receives Her Maternity as daughter; She finds one to whom She can communicate Her fecundity, Her acts done in my Volition; She finds one in whom She can form Her model and Her faithful copy. And, oh! the contentment of this Celestial Mother, Her zealous work, Her cares, Her Maternal attentions, as She can act as true Mother and can give Her inheritance. And since the Will of the Mother and of the daughter are one, She can make Herself understood and place Her graces, Her love, Her sanctity in common. In Her work She feels happy, because She finds one who courts Her, who resembles Her and lives of Her same Divine Will. Those who live in It are Her favorite daughters, Her beloved ones, Her secretaries. It can be said that by virtue of my Divine Volition, they possess a powerful magnet which attracts the gazes of this Celestial Mother so much, that She cannot move them away from upon them. And the great Lady, to keep this creature safe, works by placing around her Her virtues, Her sorrows, Her love and the very life of Her Son.

But this is not all. I, your Jesus, as I see that the soul has put her will aside to live of Mine, I get down to work in order to form my members. My Head is Holy and I feel the need for holy members upon which to place my Head and therefore be able to communicate Its virtue to them. And who can ever form for Me these holy members if not my Will? Therefore my work is incessant for one who lives in my Will; it can be said that I put Myself on guard inside and outside of her, so that no one may enter and interrupt my work; and in order to form these members I repeat the work of being newly conceived in order to regenerate them; I am reborn in order to make them be reborn; I cry, I suffer, I preach, I die, to communicate my vital and divine humors to these members, that they may be fortified and divinized, worthy of my Head Most Holy. And, oh! my contentment, that, though I am working, I repeat my Life and I form the repeaters of It. What would I not do and give in one who lives in my Will? My Will encloses Me in the creature to let Me work and make Me form members worthy of my creative hands; and as the soul receives my work, I feel happy and repaid of the work of Creation and Redemption.

Now, the Angels, the Saints, in seeing the Celestial Father, the Sovereign Queen and their King, all intent on working in this creature, they too want to help Us in the work; and lining themselves up around the fortunate creature, they work by defending her, they drive away the enemies, they free her from dangers, and form walls of fortitude, so that no one may bother her.

See then, how one who lives in my Divine Will gives work to all, and all occupy themselves with her.”

Fear, human virtue; love, divine virtue. How trust captivates Jesus. One who does the Divine Will is present with all the divine works and remains confirmed in It.

Though I feel abandoned in the arms of the Divine Volition, I feel my mind filled with apprehension and fears, but I offered them to my sweet Jesus, that He would invest them with His Fiat and would change them for me into peace and love. And He, making me His short little visit, all goodness, told me: “My blessed daughter, fear, be it even holy fear, is always human virtue, it breaks the flight of love and gives rise to dread and hardship in walking on the way of good; it causes one to always look to the right and to the left, reaching the point of fearing the One who so much loves her; it takes away the sweet enchantment from the trust that makes her live in the arms of her Jesus; and if she fears too much, fear disperses Jesus and causes her to live of herself. On the other hand, love is divine virtue, and with its fire it possesses the purifying virtue to purify the soul from any stain; it unites her and transforms her into her Jesus, and gives her such trust as to let herself be captivated by her Jesus. The sweet enchantment of trust is such and so great that they captivate each other, so much so, that one cannot be without the other; and if she looks, she looks only to love the One who so much loves her. So, the whole of her being is enclosed in love; and since love is the inseparable child of the Divine Will, it therefore gives the first place of dominion to my Divine Will. My Will extends within all the acts of the creature, both human and spiritual; It ennobles everything, and even though the human acts remain in the shape and matter with which they were formed, and they undergo no external change, all the change lies in the depth of the human will, because everything she does, even the most indifferent things, is changed into divine and confirmed by the Divine Will. Its crafting is incessant, and It extends Its dwelling of peace over everything that the creature does.

Therefore, banish all fear. In my Will neither fear nor dread, nor lack of trust, have any reason to exist; they are things that do not belong to us, and you must do nothing other than live of my love and of my Will. You must know that one of the purest joys that the creature can give Me is trust in Me. I feel her as my daughter and I do with her anything I want. I can say that trust reveals Who I am – the immense Being, my goodness unending, my mercy with no limits; and the more trust I find, the more I love her and the more I abound toward creatures.”

Then, I continued my abandonment in the Divine Volition, and I prayed It to pour Itself into my poor soul and to make me rise again fully in the Divine Fiat Oh! how I wish to be one single act of Divine Will! And my sweet Jesus, resuming His speech, told me: “My daughter, you must know that all created things and everything I did and suffered in Redemption run toward the creature, to say to her: ‘We bring you the love of your Creator, so as to receive your own. We are His messengers that, while descending down below to the earth, rise up again, to bring, as though in triumph, your little love to our Creator.’ But do you know what great good comes to you? You remain confirmed in His love and in His works, in His life, in His pains, in His tears – in everything. So, my daughter, you are present and run in all Our works; Our Will brings you everywhere; and We remain confirmed in you. An exchange of acts and of life takes place: the creature in the Creator, and the Creator in the creature, as she becomes the repeater of the divine acts. Greater grace I could not give, nor the creature receive – this conformation in Our works reproduces all Our goods in her. Our sanctity, goodness, love, and Our attributes, are transmitted into her; and We, captivated, contemplate her, and in Our emphasis of love We say: ‘Beautiful, holy, perfect, is Our Being in Our immensity, light, power, wisdom, love, goodness with no end. But also beautiful also is it to see this, Our immensity of attributes, enclosed in the creature.’ Oh! how she glorifies Us and loves Us. She seems to say to Us: ‘I am little, nor can I enclose or contain the whole of your immensity, but just as You are, so am I - your Divine Will enclosed You inside of me, and I love You with your same love, I glorify You with your light, I adore You with your sanctity. I can give You anything because I possess my Creator.’

What can my Divine Will not do in the creature, when she lets herself be dominated by It? Anything. Therefore, be attentive, if you want to have everything and give everything.”

How the Divine Power has no limits. Certainty of the coming of the Kingdom of the Divine Will. How Redemption and the Kingdom are inseparable.

I am in the arms of my lovable Jesus who surrounds me so much with His Holy Volition, that I would not be able to live without It. I feel It inside of me, dominating over the whole of my interior with Its sweet empire; and with an unspeakable love It makes Itself life of my thought, of my heartbeat and breath, and It thinks, palpitates, breathes together with me. And It seems to say to me: “How happy I am that you feel, you know, that the life of your thought, of your heartbeat, of all of yourself, is I. You feel Me inside yourself, and I feel you within Me. We are both happy, the two of us, to be one. This is my Will – that the creature feel and know that I am there together with her. I lower myself to all of her acts, and I do them together with her, to give her the likeness of my life and of my divine acts. How much it grieves Me when they put Me aside and do not recognize my dominion, and that I am the One who forms their life.”

Meanwhile, I was thinking to myself: ‘It seems impossible to me that this Kingdom of the Divine Will may come. How can It come if evils abound in a horrifying way?’ And my sweet Jesus, displeased, told me: “My blessed daughter, if you doubt it, you do not believe and recognize my power that has no limits, such that when I want something, I can do anything. You must know that in creating man, Our life was placed in him, and he was Our dwelling. Now, if We do not bring to safety this life of Ours, with Its decorum, with Its dominion, with Our full triumph, making Ourselves known, that We are present in this dwelling, so that the creature would feel honored to be dominated and inhabited by a God – if We do not do this, it would mean that Our power is limited, that its might is not infinite, that it has no power to save itself, and even less can it save others. While, on the contrary, true good, the power that has no limits, serves and brings to safety itself first, and then it pours into others. Now, by coming upon earth, suffering and dying, I came to bring man to safety, that is, my dwelling. Would it not seem strange to you too that while I was saving the dwelling, the Owner, the Inhabitant of it, would be left without His rights, without dominion, and without the power to reach safety Himself? Ah, no, no, my daughter, it would be absurd and without the order of Our infinite wisdom. Redemption and the Kingdom of my Will are one single thing, inseparable from each other. My coming upon earth came to form the Redemption of man, and at the same time it came to form the Kingdom of my Will in order to save Myself, to take back my rights which by justice are due to Me as Creator. And in Redemption I exposed Myself to so many humiliations, to unheard-of pains, unto dying Crucified; I submitted Myself to everything, to bring my dwelling to safety and restore in it all the sumptuousness, the beauty, the magnificence with which I had formed it, so that it might be worthy of Me once again.

Now, when it seemed that everything was over and my enemies were satisfied for they had taken my life, my power which has no limits called my Humanity back to life, and by rising again, everything rose together with Me – the creatures, my pains, the goods acquired for their sake. And as my Humanity triumphed over death, so did my Will rise again and triumph in the creatures, waiting for Its Kingdom. Had my Humanity not risen again, had It not had this power, Redemption would have failed, and one could doubt that it was truly the work of a God. It was my Resurrection that made Me known for Who I was, and placed the seal over all the goods that I came to bring upon earth. In the same way, my Divine Will will be the double seal, the transmission into creatures of Its Kingdom, which my Humanity possessed. More so, since it was for the creatures that I formed this Kingdom of my Divine Will within my Humanity. Why not give It then? At the most, it will be a matter of time, and for Us the times are one single point; Our power will make such prodigies, lavishing upon man new graces, new love, new light, that Our dwellings will recognize Us, and they themselves, of their own spontaneous will, will give Us dominion. So will Our life be placed in safety, with its full rights in the creature. With time you will see what my power knows how to do and can do, how it can conquer everything and knock down the most obstinate rebels. Who can ever resist my power, such that with one single breath, I knock down, I destroy and I redo everything, as I best please?

Therefore, you - pray, and let your cry be continuous: ‘May the Kingdom of your Fiat come, and your Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven.’”

How one who lives in the Will of God holds God Himself in his power. The Queen of Heaven goes around through all nations to bring Her children to safety.

My poor mind continues its flight in the interminable light of the Divine Volition. There is not one thing, either in Heaven or on earth, which is not a birth from It, and everything and everyone have something to say about the One who generated them. Even more, they never tire of narrating Its eternal origin, Its unreachable sanctity, Its love that always generates, without ever ceasing, Its Fiat that always speaks – speaks to the mind, speaks in the heart, speaks on the tongue; and now It speaks with articulate voices, now with moans, now in supplication, now with might, now with such sweetness as to touch the hardest and most obstinate hearts. My God, what power does your Will contain! O please! make it so that I may live always of It.

But while I was thinking this, my sweet Jesus, making me His short little visit, with an unspeakable goodness, told me: “My daughter... my Will! My Will! It is everything, It does everything, It gives everything. Who could ever say he has not received everything from It?”

You must know that the creature herself possesses so much of sanctity for as much as she is in order, in relationship with my Will. She elevates to union with God insofar as she is united with It; her value, her merits, are measured by the relations she has kept with my Will. So, the whole foundation, the basis, the substance, the origin of the goods in the creature depend upon how many acts she has done of my Will, and on how much she knows of It. Hence, if in all of her acts she has let my Will enter, she can say: ‘Everything is holy, everything is pure and divine in me’; and We can give her everything, even Our life in her power. On the other hand, if she has done nothing of my Will, and knows nothing, We have nothing to give her, because she deserves nothing, because she lacks the seed to be able to generate the good that belongs to Us; therefore she has no right to receive the pay from her Celestial Father. If she has not worked in Our field, We can say: ‘I do not know you.’ So, if she has done nothing or not even something of my Will, Heaven is closed for the creature – she has no right to the Celestial Fatherland. This is the reason why We insist so much that Our Will be done always, that It be known – because We want to populate Heaven with Our beloved children; and since everything came out of Us, We want everything to return into Our divine bosom.”

Then, after this, I continued to think of the Divine Will, and I prayed that It would hurry, and with Its omnipotence, that can do anything, surpass all the obstacles and make Its Kingdom come and Its Will reign on earth as It does in Heaven. But while I was thinking of this, before my mind my sweet Jesus showed so many gloomy and horrifying things in the face of which even the hardest hearts were shaken, and the most obstinate were floored. Everything was terror and fright. I remained so afflicted as to feel myself dying, and I prayed that He would hold back so many scourges. And my beloved Jesus, as though having pity on my affliction, told me: “My daughter, courage, everything will serve for the triumph of my Will. If I strike, it is because I want to restore. My love is so great, that when I cannot win by way of love and of graces, I try to win by way of terror and fright. The human weakness is such that many times it pays no heed to my graces, it plays deaf to my voice, it laughs at my love. But it is enough to touch its flesh, or take away the things necessary to the natural life, that it lowers its pride, it feels so humiliated as to become a rag; and I make of it whatever I want. Especially if they do not have a perfidious and obstinate will, a chastisement is enough - seeing themselves on the brink of the sepulcher - that they return into my arms.

You must know that I always love my children, my beloved creatures, I would turn Myself inside out so as not to see them struck; so much so, that in the gloomy times that are coming, I have placed them all in the hands of my Celestial Mama – to Her have I entrusted them, that She may keep them for Me under Her safe mantle. I will give Her all those whom She will want; even death will have no power over those who will be in the custody of my Mama.”

Now, while He was saying this, my dear Jesus showed me, with facts, how the Sovereign Queen descended from Heaven with an unspeakable majesty, and a tenderness fully maternal; and She went around in the midst of creatures, throughout all nations, and She marked Her dear children and those who were not to be touched by the scourges. Whomever my Celestial Mama touched, the scourges had no power to touch those creatures. Sweet Jesus gave to His Mama the right to bring to safety whomever She pleased. How moving it was to see the Celestial Empress going around to all places of the world, taking creatures in Her maternal hands, holding them close to Her breast, hiding them under Her mantle, so that no evil could harm those whom Her maternal goodness kept in Her custody, sheltered and defended. Oh! if all could see with how much love and tenderness the Celestial Queen performed this office, they would cry of consolation and would love She who so much loves us.

Rain of love that Our Lord pours upon the creature from within the created things, and how He bilocates in her and sees Himself matched in His love.

I was doing my round in the acts of the Divine Will; but while I was doing this, I felt a rain of acts of love pouring upon me from my sweet Jesus. So, as I went round in the sun, in the heavens, in the wind and in all other created things so did a multiplicity of acts of love pour upon me. To be loved by God is the greatest happiness, it is the most beautiful glory that can be found in Heaven and on earth; and I too felt the extreme need to love Him; and - oh! how I would like to be Jesus Himself so that I too can make for Him my rain of love. But, no, I felt the great distance, because in Him it was real works that were made, while I, poor little one, had to make use of His works in order to tell Him that I loved Him. So, all my love was reduced to the will, and because of this I felt afflicted for I was not loving Him as Jesus could love me.

But while I was thinking about this, my Highest Good, Jesus, with an indescribable love and goodness, told me: “My blessed daughter, do not afflict yourself. Don’t you know that I have the power to remedy everything and to let Myself be matched in love by the creature? When it is about her wanting to love, I never render her discontent, because love is one of my passions. And do you know what I do to make one who loves Me content? I bilocate Myself and take my place in each created thing, and I pour love upon her; then I take my place in the creature and I give her the virtue of pouring her love upon Me. She makes the love I give her her own, and by right she can give it to Me as if it were her own; and I feel the contentment that she loves Me as I have loved her. And even though I know it is my own, I don’t care about this, I am not stingy, but I care about whether in her will she wants to love Me as I love her, and if she could, she would do what I have done for her. This is enough for Me, and I am happy to be able to say to her: ‘You have loved Me as I have loved you.’

Moreover, you must know that I created the whole universe to give it as gift to the creature, and I remained inside each created thing pouring love upon her. Now, with one who recognizes this gift as a great love from her Creator, the gift is hers, the rain of Our love is her own; therefore, in giving it back to Us, she loves Us with her whole being, and We feel matched in love by the creature and conquered by her love; and We give it back to her again to find the continuous exchange of Our love and of hers. And if you knew how happy I am and how my love is wounded in hearing you repeat that you want to love Me! And you love Me in each created thing, you love Me in my conception, in my birth, in each of my baby tears – I feel them pearled with your love; each pain, each drop of my Blood – I feel the life of your love. And I, to repay you, in each thing I did during my life down here, I do nothing other than form rain of love for you. Oh! if you could see how much love I pour upon you... It is such and so great that, taken by the folly of my own love, I embrace and kiss my love in you; and in seeing that you feel my embraces and my kisses, how happy I am; and I await yours to be repaid and requited of so much love.”

Then, I continued my abandonment in the Supreme Volition, and was going around within the expanse of the heavens, which serves as pavement and footstool of the Celestial Fatherland, and as vault for the pilgrims down here. It seemed to me that that azure vault performed a double office: it served as a sumptuous pavement for the Blessed, and as royal vault for the pilgrim souls, unifying one and the other, together, so that one might be the will and the love of all. Therefore, prostrating myself together with the heavens, I called those up there and those from the earth to adore my Creator, prostrating ourselves all together, so that one might be the adoration, the will, the love of all. Then, while I was doing this, my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, the first duty of the creature is to adore the One who created her. The first act that says sanctity is duty. Duty calls for order, and order gives rise to the most beautiful harmony between Creator and creature – harmony of will, harmony of love, of manners and of imitation. Duty is the substance of sanctity, and since all created things possess and hold as though by nature the imprint of true adoration, the creature, united with them, can pay the most perfect adoration to the One who created her. So, each created thing is a profound adoration that they send to He who created them; and the creature, uniting together, by virtue of Our Will, places them all in adoration, giving to God the duty of each one. And rising above all, she brings Us everyone and comes to palpitate in Our heartbeat and to breathe in Our breath. Oh! how sweet and pleasing is this heartbeat and breath within Our own; and We, in exchange, palpitate in her heart and breathe within her breath, giving her the divine heartbeat and breath as life, inheritance and growth of Our Supreme Being in her. And here is how, with the duty of adoration, arises the first duty of the act of creation – that of giving life to her Creator within her soul, giving Him the dominion, the freedom to be formed, to palpitate and breathe, filling her with love, so that I can say, by deeds: ‘This creature is the bearer of her Creator, and she lets Me do whatever I want, so much so, that I possess her heartbeat. She has nothing of her own - what is hers is Mine, and what is Mine is hers. I hold my place of love in her, and she holds her place of honor within Mine. Hence, Heaven and earth exchange the kiss of peace and of permanent union.’”

How God, by giving us the human free will, placed Himself at our disposal, feeling the creature, adapting Himself to her, as though being in need of her. Loving conditions in which God put Himself for love of the creatures.

I was doing my round in the Divine Volition, and I paused in everything that my Celestial Mama had done in the Divine Will. My God, what surprise – this Divine Fiat, bilocated, multiplied, operating, forming such enchantment of beauty, of grace, of works, as to stupefy not only Heaven and earth, but God Himself, as He sees Himself enclosed in the Sovereign Queen and operating as God in Her as He operated within Himself. And, oh! how I wished I could give to God, on my part, all that glory that the Sovereign Lady gave Him in all those acts that the Divine Will had done in the sacrarium, in the hiddenness, within the veils of the Immaculate Lady.

But while I was thinking of this, my Highest Good, Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, told me: “My little daughter of my Divine Volition, there is no greater prodigy, nor greater goodness and love, or boundless magnanimity on Our part, than to descend to the low level of the human will and operate in it as the God that We are, as if We were operating within Ourselves. And behold, in Our infinite wisdom, taken by excess of love toward the creature, We gave her the little human free will, independent from all. By giving her this free will, We placed Ourselves at her disposal - if she wanted for Us to descend into her littleness and lowliness to operate as God, and for Our Will to do in her what It can do in Our Supreme Being. This was the greatest prodigy, and the love which no other love could equal – giving the human will to the creature, almost to remain subject to her, as though wanting to depend on her in the good that We want to operate in her and in the works that We must carry out. Is this not an insuperable finesse of love? And then, giving her this will for her free willing, so that the creature might be able to say to Us: ‘You have come into my home, and I must come into your home. Hence, You do whatever You want in me, and You will let me do whatever I want in You.’ This was the agreement that We set between her and Us, and by giving her the free will, she could tell Us that she was giving Us something that was in her power. Is this not a magnanimity, a love, that surpasses everything, that only Our Supreme Being could do and wanted to?

But this is not all. Our love gazed fondly at this free will of the creature and formed as many centers in order to bilocate itself in them, and form as many kingdoms of dominion in which We were to show off Our divine works, multiplying them to infinity, without restriction, without limits, operating in these centers as God, as if We were operating within Ourselves. More so, since in the small human wills Our love showed off more, used more power, because it takes more art to restrict Our immensity within the small circle of the human wills, almost putting a limit to Our power, to lower it unto the low level of the human volition. And then, feeling the creature with Us in what We had to do, because We want her operating together with Us, almost adapting herself to Us, and We adapting Ourselves to her; and Our love is so great as to adapt itself also to her human ways... This gives Us more to do, Our love pours out more and loves unto the excesses this human will that gives it its royal place, its free dominion. On the other hand, in operating outside of the human circles, who doesn't know that We can do anything and We have an immensity that can reach anything, a power with no limits – if it wants it, it can do anything – a wisdom that disposes everything, a love that loves all and envelops all even if it is not loved back? Our Supreme Being is free, It has need of no one and can do whatever It wants; and since We can do anything, We do not work in doing the greatest works – it is enough to want it, and in one instant We do everything. On the other hand, when We want to operate in the creature, as though being in need of her, We must attract her, We must tell her how much We love her and what We want to operate. We don't want a forced will, therefore We want her to know it and spontaneously open the doors to Us, feeling honored to give Us the operating place within her will.

In such conditions did Our love put Us in the creation of man – it loved him so much as to reach the excess of giving him the free will, so that he might be able to say: 'I can give to my Creator.' Could Our love love him more? This is why the glory, the honor that the creature gives Me when she lets Me operate in her will is so great, that no one can comprehend it – it is Our same glory and honor that she gives Us; in all her acts runs Our life, Our love. She can say: 'I give God to God.' This is the highest point that the creature can reach; it is the most excessive love that a God can reach.

Oh! if the creatures would comprehend the love, the great gift that I gave them by giving them a free will! I elevated her above the heavens, the sun, the entire universe. I can do whatever I want over anything, without anyone knowing anything; but with the creature I lower Myself, I ask her with love for a little space within her will, to be able to operate in her and do good to her. But, alas! many deny it to Me and render my Will inoperative within their human will. My sorrow is infinite in the face of such great ingratitude of theirs.

Now, who would you admire more: a king who operates within his royal palace where he holds everything in his power - command over all, doing good to all, his palace equipped for anything the king wants to do; or a king who descends unto the low level of a hovel and carries out the same action he would do in the royal palace? Would it not be more admirable, would it not be a greater sacrifice, a love more intense, to operate as king in the little hovel rather than in the royal palace? In the palace all things are suited to let him operate as king, while in the hovel the king must adapt himself to it, and be so ingenious as to be able to do the same actions he would do in his palace.

So We are: to operate in the Royal Palace of Our Divinity, to do great things, is Our own nature; but to do them in the hovel of the human will gives of the incredible, it is the greatest excess of Our love.”

Inseparability of one who lives in the Divine Will with her Creator. The Queen of Heaven together with Jesus in instituting the Most Holy Sacrament. The children of the Divine Will will be suns and stars that will crown the Celestial Sovereign.

It seems to me that I can't find rest if I do not abandon myself in the arms of the Divine Will, which flings me into Its endless sea where I find what It did for love of the creatures. And now I pause at one point, now at another of Its multiple works; and I admire them, I love them, I kiss them, and I thank the Divine Will for such great magnificence and so many loving industries toward us, miserable creatures. But while going around, to my surprise, I found myself before the Great Lady, our Queen and Mother, the most beautiful work of the Sacrosanct Trinity. I remained here, contemplating Her, but I have no words to be able to say what I comprehended. And my beloved Jesus, with an unspeakable sweetness and love, told me: "My daughter, how beautiful is my Mama. Her empire extends everywhere, Her beauty enraptures and chains all; there is not one being that does not bend its knees to venerate Her. So was She made for Me by my Divine Will. It made Her inseparable from Me, in such a way that there was no act I did which the Sovereign Queen did not do together with Me. The power of that Divine Fiat, pronounced by Me and by Her, which made Me be conceived in Her virginal womb, giving life to my Humanity - that Fiat, always identical; and each time I operated, the Divine Fiat of my Mother held the right within my Divine Fiat to do what I was doing.

Now, you must know that when I instituted the Sacrament of the Eucharist, Her Divine Fiat was together with Mine, and together We pronounced the Fiat that the bread and the wine be transubstantiated into my Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity. Ah! just as in being conceived I wanted Her Fiat, so did I want It in this solemn act which gave origin to my Sacramental Life. Who would have had the Heart to put my Mama aside in an act in which my love showed off with such exuberant excesses as to seem incredible! Rather, not only was She together with Me but I constituted Her Queen of the love of my Sacramental Life; and She, with love of true Mother of Mine, offered Her womb to Me again - Her beautiful soul, to keep Me defended and sheltered from the horrendous ingratitude and enormous sacrileges which, alas, I would receive in this Sacrament of love.

My daughter, this is my purpose: I want my Divine Will to be life of the creature, so as to keep her together with Me, to let her love with my love, operate in my works. In sum, it is the company of the creatures that I want in my acts - I do not want to be alone. And if it were not so, why call the creature into my Will, if I were to remain an isolated God, and she, alone, without taking part in Our divine works? And not only in instituting the Most Holy Sacrament, but in all the acts I did during the whole course of my life, by virtue of the one Will by which we were animated, whatever I did, my Mama did as well. If I performed miracles, She was together with Me operating the prodigy; I felt in the power of my Will the Sovereign of Heaven calling the dead to life together with Me. If I suffered, She was together with Me, in pain. There was not one thing in which I did not have Her company, and Her operating and Mine fused together. This was the greatest honor that my Fiat gave Her: the inseparability with Her Son; the unity with His works. And it was the greatest glory that the Virgin attested to Me; so much so, that I placed, and She received, the deposit of the works done in Her Maternal Heart, jealous in keeping even the breath. This unity of Will and of works ignited such love between Us as to be enough to set the whole entire world aflame and consume it with pure love."

Jesus became silent, and I remained in the seas of the Celestial Sovereign. But who can say what I comprehended? And my Highest Good, Jesus, continued, saying: "My daughter, how beautiful is my Mama - Her majesty is enchanting. Before Her Sanctity the Heavens lower themselves; Her riches are endless and incalculable; no one can be said to be similar to Her. This is why She is Lady, Mother and Queen. But do you know what Her riches are? Souls. Each soul is worth more than an entire world. No one enters into Heaven if not through Her and by virtue of Her Maternity and of Her sorrows. So, each soul is a property of Hers, and this is why, indeed, She can be given the name of true Lady. See then, how rich She is; Her riches are special, are full of lives, speaking, loving, singing the praises of the Celestial Lady. As Mother, She has Her innumerable children; as Queen, She will have Her people of the Kingdom of the Divine Will. These children and this people will form Her most refulgent crown – some as suns, others as stars, they will crown Her august Head with such beauty as to enrapture the whole of Heaven. So, the children of the Kingdom of my Divine Will will be those who will render to Her the honors of Queen; and transforming into sun, they will form for Her the most beautiful crown. This is why She longs intensely for the coming of this Kingdom - because after Her refulgent crown with which the Most Holy Trinity crowned Her, She awaits the crown of Her people who, proclaiming Her Queen, would offer to Her their life transformed into Sun as attestation of honor and of glory.

Oh! if they comprehended what it means to live in my Will, how many divine secrets would be revealed, how many discoveries they would make about their Creator. Therefore, be content with dying rather than not live in my Will.”

Certainty of the Kingdom of the Divine Will upon earth. Mighty wind to purify the generations. The Queen of Heaven, placed at the head of this Kingdom.

My mind is always back into the interminable sea of the Divine Volition which, in murmuring, smiles with love to the creature and wants her smiles of love. It does not want for her to remain behind and not give It tit for tat. Not doing what the Divine Will does while one lives in It is almost impossible. But who can say what the creature feels in this divine sea? The purity of Its kisses, Its chaste embraces which infuse in her celestial peace, divine life, and such fortitude as to conquer God Himself. Oh! how I would love for everyone to experience it - to come to live in this sea... Surely they would never again get out of it.

But while I was thinking this, I said to myself: ‘But, who knows who will see this Kingdom of the Divine Fiat when It comes? Oh! how difficult it seems.’ And my beloved Jesus, making me His short little visit, told me: “My daughter, yet It will come. You measure what is human, the sad times that enwrap the present generations, and this is why it seems difficult to you. But the Supreme Being holds the divine measures, which are so extensive that what seems impossible to the human is easy for Us. We need to do nothing but a mighty wind, which will be so strong that they will let themselves be carried away by the currents of the wind, which will purify the sickly air of the human will; it will make a heap of all the sad things of these times, and will disperse them like dust swept by a mighty wind. Our wind will be so strong, mighty and operative, that it will not be easy to resist it. More so, since its waves will be crammed with graces, with light, with love, which will drown the human generations; and they will feel transformed. How many times a strong wind sweeps away entire cities and transports people, trees, soil and water to other places, and perhaps far away, without their being able to oppose it? Much more so will Our divine wind do – wanted, decreed by Us, with Our creative power. And besides, there is the Queen of Heaven who with Her empire prays continuously for the coming of the Kingdom of the Divine Will upon earth. And when have We ever denied anything to Her? Her prayers are mighty winds for Us, which We cannot resist; and the very strength of Our Will that She possesses is for Us empire, command. She has all the right to impetrate It, because She possessed It on earth and She possesses It in Heaven; hence, as possessor, She can give what is Hers; so much so, that this Kingdom will be called the ‘Kingdom of the Celestial Empress’. She will act as Queen amid Her children on earth; She will place at their disposal Her seas of graces, of sanctity, of power; She will put to flight all the enemies. She will raise Her children on Her lap, She will hide them within Her light, covering them with Her love, nourishing them with Her own hands, with the food of the Divine Will. What will this Mother and Queen not do in the midst of this Kingdom – Her children and Her people? She will give unheard-of graces, surprises never before seen, miracles that will shake Heaven and earth. We will give Her all the free field, that She may form for Us the Kingdom of Our Will upon earth. She will be the guide, the true model, and It will also be the Kingdom of the Celestial Sovereign Queen. Therefore, you too, pray together with Her, and in due time you will obtain the intent.”

The most intimate and most painful pains of Jesus are His waiting; His inventions, delirium and devices of love.

I am in the arms of the Divine Will, but with the nail inside my heart of the privation of my sweet Jesus. I wait and wait, and the mere waiting is the pain that tortures me the most. Hours seem centuries to me, days are interminable; and if, God forbid, the doubt shows up that my dear Life, my sweet Jesus, will never come again, oh! then I don't know what happens to me – I want to get rid of myself, and of the very Divine Will that keeps me imprisoned on this earth, and with rapid flight go off to Heaven. But not even this is given to me, because Its chains are so strong, that they are not subject to breaking; and I feel myself being bound more tightly, so much so, that I can just barely think about this, and I end up with a more intense abandonment in the Supreme Fiat.

But while I was delirious and could endure no more, my always lovable Jesus came back to His little daughter, making Himself seen with a wound in His Heart that poured out Blood and flames, as though wanting to cover all souls with His Blood and burn them with His love; and all goodness, He told me: “My daughter, courage, your Jesus is suffering too, and the pains that give Me more suffering are the most intimate, which make Me shed Blood and flames. But my greatest pain is the continuous waiting. My gazes are always fixed on souls, and I see that one creature has fallen into sin, and I wait and wait for her return to my Heart, to forgive her; and not seeing her coming, I wait with the forgiveness in my hands. That waiting renews my pain and forms such torment for Me as to make Me pour out Blood and flames from my pieced Heart. The hours, the days that I wait seem like years to Me. Oh! how hard it is to wait.

But, let us move on. My love loves the creature so much, that in delivering her to the light of day, I establish how many acts of love she must do to Me, how many prayers, how many good works she must do; and this, to give her the right to be loved always by Me, and to be granted the graces, the aids in order for her to do good. But the creatures use this to form for Me the pain of waiting. Oh! how much waiting from one act of love to another, if they even do it for Me. How much listlessness in doing what is good, in praying, if they do it at all. And I wait and wait, I feel the restlessness of my love that makes Me delirious, the yearnings... and it causes Me such an intimate pain, that if I were subject to dying, I would have died so many times for as many as I am not loved by the creatures.

In addition to this, there is my long waiting in the Sacrament of my love. I wait for all, I reach the point of counting the minutes, but, no! - in vain do I wait for many. Others come with such icy coldness as to increase the harsh martyrdom of my waiting to the utmost degree. Few are those who were waiting for Me as I was waiting for them, and only with these do I feel relieved; I feel as though repatriated into their hearts, and I give vent to my love and find a refreshment to the harsh martyrdom of my continuous waiting. To some it may seem that this pain is nothing, while it is the greatest, which constitutes the hardest martyrdom. And you yourself can say how much it costs you your waiting for Me; so much so, that if I had not come to put an end to it and to sustain you, you could not have endured.

Moreover, there is another waiting, even more painful – the longing, the ardent desire, the prolonged yearning for the Kingdom of my Divine Will. It is about six thousand years that I have been waiting for the creature to re-enter into It. I love her so much that I want, I long to see her happy; but in order to obtain this we must live of one single Will; and so, each act opposed to my Will is a nail that pierces Me. But do you know why? Because it renders her more unhappy and dissimilar to Me; and I, seeing Myself in the immense ocean of my happinesses, while my children are unhappy, oh!

how I suffer; and while I wait and wait, I remain around them, I abound with graces and with light upon them, so that they themselves may run, to live life together with Me; and with one single Will, their lot will be changed; we will have common goods, and happiness without end.

The other pains give Me some respite, but the pain of waiting never ceases for Me, it keeps me always on the lookout, it makes Me use the most excessive devices, it makes Me form such inventions of love as to leave Heaven and earth astounded. It makes Me reach the extent of praying the creature, begging her not to keep Me waiting any longer, for I can take no more - it is too heavy for Me.

Therefore, my daughter, unite yourself together with Me, waiting for the Kingdom of my Will, and in the face of all the waiting that creatures make Me suffer, there will be at least the two of us, and your company will give Me relief in a pain so harsh.”

The divine love invests each act of the creature. How God in all of His works calls all and does good to all. How the divine life is formed in the creature; how it is nourished and raised.

I was following the acts of the Divine Will, which transported me into an interminable sea of light, in which It made present to me with how much love God had loved the creature. It is so great, that if the creature could comprehend it, her heart would explode with pure love, unable to resist the impetus, the stratagems, the industries, the finesses, of this love of God. Too little as I am, these flames devour me, and my beloved Jesus, visiting my little soul, to sustain me, told me: “My blessed daughter, let Me give vent to my love, listen to Me. You must know that the creature has always been with Us, in Our divine mind; she has always kept her place within the bosom of her Creator, and each of her acts, thoughts, words, works and steps were sealed ab aeterno with a special love of Ours. So, in each of her acts there is the chain of many acts of love of Ours which envelop the act, thought, etc. of the creature; and this, Our love, gives life and nourishes the repetitions of all of her acts; and - oh! how beautiful she is in Our divine mind, because she is formed by the continuous breath of Our love - wanted love, not forced, not a love of necessity, but rather, generative virtue of Our Supreme Being that always generates and places Its continuous love upon Its works. This is the virtue of Our omnipotent Fiat - that if It did not generate new works and did not maintain the continuous act of loving, It would feel as though suffocated in Its own flames and paralyzed in Its continuous motion.

Now, wanting to issue the creature from Our divine bosom, We let her walk her little way in time, and Our love does not stop assailing, investing, courting all her acts with its special love. If this were missing, the generative, vivifying and moving force of the human being would be missing. Oh! if the creatures knew that in each of their thoughts runs a distinct love of Ours, and so in their words and works, and even in their breath and heartbeat - oh! how they would love Us and would not profane with unworthy acts Our love so great. See then, how your Jesus loves you and knows how to love you. Therefore, learn from Me how to love Me. This is the prerogative of Our love: to always love everything that has come out of Us; to make all the acts of the creature arise from within Our love.”

Jesus became silent, and I remained to think about the excess of the divine love; and my beloved Jesus added: “My daughter, keep listening to Me: Our love is so great, that in each work that We do We call everyone, as if they were one alone, in order to give to each one the good of the work that We do. We would not operate as God, if Our acts did not have the virtue of being able to give themselves to all, to give the good that they contain. Listen then: my conception in the womb of a Virgin was the greatest work of the whole history of the world. By Our Fiat just wanting it so, It incarnated Itself, without anyone one forcing Us, or deserving it, and with no need on Our part. The need was Our love, and only because it wanted it so. It was an act so great as to enclose and embrace all, and it contained so much love as to seem incredible, so much so, that Heaven and earth are still astounded and enraptured, and all felt invaded by so much love as to be able to feel my Life conceived within all. See then, where my love leads Me – to be conceived in each soul, in each instant and always; conceived once, I conceive always. Is this not like being conceived in the consecrated Host, in each act of creature that loves Me and does my Divine Will?

Now, this is not all yet, until my love gives unto excesses as to be able to say: ‘Do you see how much I have loved you? I had nothing left to do and to give you in order to love you. Aren’t you happy?’ Listen to where I reach: just as in the womb of the Holy Virgin I breathed through Her breath, warmed by Her warmth, nourished by Her blood, so do I expect the breath, the warmth, the growth from the creature that possesses Me in order to develop my Life. But do you know in what constraints my love puts Me? When the creature loves Me, she gives Me breath, she gives Me warmth; each good she does, if she prays, if she suffers for Me, if she adores Me and glorifies Me, she makes Me grow, she gives Me motion and contributes to form Me inside her soul. So, if she does not love Me and gives Me nothing, I feel out of breath, with no warmth or nourishment, and I do not grow. Alas! in what conditions does my love put Me, and the ingratitude of the creature!

Now, if she gives Me the good of letting Me grow, in such a way as to let Me fill her soul completely with my Life, then do I carry out my Life in her, I walk in her feet, I work in her hands, I speak in her voice, I think within her mind, I love inside her heart, and I receive my contentment. How happy I am! Nothing is left of the creature other than a veil that covers Me – I am the Master, the Actor, I form my field of action, I can do whatever I want; my Divine Will repeats Its omnipotent Fiat continuously; my love has received its conception, it goes into follies for it has formed its life in the creature. Therefore, there is nothing I do, whether in Creation, in Redemption, in the Sanctification, in my Sacramental Life, or in Heaven and on earth, in which my love, with rapid flight, does not run to give to all the good that I do, the sanctity of my works. Hence, no one can say: ‘He did not do this for me. This good I have not received.’ If then, ungrateful, they do not receive it, it’s all their fault, but my part is not lacking to anyone. But see where my love reaches: even if they do not let Me grow, leaving me without the breath of their love, the nourishment of my Will, and they make Me shiver with cold because their wills are not with Me, and I remain even without clothing, like the most perverted and abject, because their works are not upright and holy, and are far from pleasing Me alone, whom they should serve in order to clothe Me – yet, I do not leave; bearing such great human ingratitude and waiting with invincible patience and preparing a surprise of love, a grace that would strike man more, to have him give Me what is necessary to let Me grow in his soul, because at any cost I want to form my life in the creature. I use all arts to obtain my intent, and many times I am forced to lay hand to the scourges, to make Myself known – that I am present in her soul.

My daughter, compassionate Me and repair for such great human ingratitude. I am everything for them, I give them continuous breath and heartbeat, motion, warmth and nourishment; and they, ungrateful, deny Me that which I give to them, after I gave them the great honor of making of them my living temple, my royal palace upon earth. What pain, what sorrow! Therefore, I recommend to you – don’t leave Me without the breath of your love; give Me at least what is needed to let Me grow; let my Will be your life, so as to let Me dwell in your royal palace with decorum and with the sumptuousness that your Jesus deserves.”

All the glory, the love, is in being able to say, with facts: I am a continuous act of the Will of my Creator. Necessity of the diversity of offices and of actions.

I was doing my round in the Divine Will, in order to trace all of Its acts done in Creation, to place my little ‘I love You’ and unite myself with all created things to glorify my Creator and be able to say: 'I am at my place of honor, I am doing my office, I am a continuous act of Divine Will. I can say that I am nothing, I do nothing, but I do everything, because I do the Divine Will.'

But while I was thinking this, my Highest Good, Jesus, making me His short little visit, all goodness, told me: "My blessed daughter, each created thing occupies a distinct office, and even though the will of all is one, not all of them, however, do the same thing. It would not be order, nor virtue of Divine Wisdom if one created thing repeated what another does; but since one is the Will that dominates them, the glory It receives from one, another gives Me as well, because all the substance they possess and the good and the value with which they are invested is the fact that they can say: 'I am a continuous act of the Will of my Creator. Greater glory, honor and virtue He could not give me than for me to be an act of Divine Will.' This is so true, that the little blade of grass, with its littleness, the little space it occupies of the earth, seems to do nothing, no one looks at it; yet, because so did my Will want it, nor does it try to do more than what a blade of grass can do, by doing my Will, it matches the glory that the sun gives Me, which, with such majesty, lords it over the earth, so much so, that it can be called continuous miracle of all Creation. And since all created things are united among themselves, the sun, with all its majesty, with its light, kisses and warms the little blade of grass, the wind caresses it, the water waters it, the earth gives it its little place in which to form its life. Yet, what is a blade of grass? One can say: nothing. But because it possesses my Will, it will have its virtue of doing good to the human generations. In fact, I having created everything out of love and to do good to the creatures, all of them hold a secret virtue of giving the good that they possess.

See then, how everything is in doing my Will - never go out of Its divine and interminable boundaries. By just doing my Will, though it may seem that one does nothing, it is not true – the creature already finds herself together with the divine operating, and can say: 'What God does, I do as well.' Does this seem nothing to you? God does everything, and the soul takes part in everything. So, it is not the diversity of the actions or the offices that can make the creature say that she does great things, but it is my Will that gives them value, It nullifies them, It puts them in the divine order and places Its image on them, as the seal of Its works.

As for the diversity of offices and actions, it is rather order and harmony of my infinite Wisdom. Also in Heaven there are diverse choirs of Angels, diversity of Saints – one is martyr, another is virgin, another is confessor. Upon earth my providence maintains many different offices – one is king, another is judge, another priest; some form the people, some command, some others are dependent. If all did one single office, what would be of the earth? A complete disorder. Oh! if all understood that my Divine Will alone knows how to do great things; though they may be small and insignificant, oh! how they would all be happy, and each one would love the little place, the office in which God put them; but since they let themselves be lorded over by the human will, they would want to give of themselves, do some great action, which they cannot do. And so they are always discontent of the condition or the place in which my Divine Providence put them for their good.

Therefore, content yourself with doing little united with my Will, and not something great without It; more so, since It being immense, It will find in you all of Its acts, and you will find yourself in Its love, inside Its power, into Its works, in such a way that you will not be able to do anything without It, and It won't be able to do anything without you. Here is how, then, with the living in my Will, such prodigies run together as to seem incredible: the 'nothing' of the creature at the mercy of the All; the 'nothing' prey to a Will that can do anything. What will It not do of this nothing? It will make works worthy of a Supreme Fiat. Hence, the act most beautiful, most solemn, most pleasing to Us is the 'nothing' of the creature, given to Us freely, to let Us do whatever We want."

One who does not live of the Will of God forms his living Purgatory on earth, and in prison. The Divine Love. A mighty storm; heart-rending scenes.

My poor mind feels the need to pour itself into the Divine Volition as into its own center; and flinging itself into It, it feels the divine breath, heartbeat, love and life as its own. Who could say he can live without breath, without heartbeat? No one. In the same way, my poor soul would form its own most harrowing purgatory without the Fiat, and my human will would cast me into the abyss of all evils. But while I was thinking of this, my beloved Jesus, surprising me, all tenderness, told me: “Blessed daughter of my Will, how happy I feel that you have understood that you cannot live without my Fiat. One who does not live in It not only forms her own living purgatory, but hinders all of my goods prepared for her; she shuts them into my Heart, and causing Me spasms of pain, forms the purgatory to my love. She suppresses my flames, without the relief of being able to communicate my breath, my life; therefore I feel my breath being suffocated, my life hampered, without the good of being able to communicate Myself to the creature.

Now, you must know that there is nothing I did which does not have as my primary purpose that of making her live of my Will. The Creation serves precisely for this - making the creature live of my Will; and because she does not, she suffocates this life of Mine in the created things. My very coming upon earth was the life of my Will that I came to give her. Even more, you must know that as soon as the soul decides that she wants to live in my Will, my Most Holy Humanity takes Its place in her; my Blood, like pouring rain, pours upon her; my pains, like impregnable wall, surround her, fortify her, embellish her in such an admirable way as to captivate this Divine Will of Mine to live in her. My very death forms the continuous resurrection of the soul to live in It. So, the creature feels regenerated continuously in my Blood, in my pains, in my love, and even in my breath, in which she finds sufficient grace in order to live of my Divine Will. In fact, I place everything at her disposal; just as I kept my Most Holy Humanity at the disposal of my Divine Volition, so do I place It inside and outside the creature, to give life to my Will in her.

Now, until she decides to live in It, my Blood does not rain down because it has nothing to regenerate into divine; my pains do not form the wall of defense because the human will forms the continuous collapse of my works, and renders my death as though powerless for her rising again completely in my Will. And so my Life, my pains, my Blood, if the soul does not live of my Will, remain at the door of the human will, waiting with invincible patience to enter, to assail her from all sides, to give her the grace of living of my Will; and unable to enter, everything remains suffocated in Me – my Blood, my pains, my Life – and oh! how I suffer in seeing that she gives Me no freedom to give her the good I want. My love tortures Me; my pains, my wounds, my Blood, my works, like many pitying voices, tell Me constantly: ‘This creature hinders us, she renders us useless and as though lifeless for her, because she does not want to live of Divine Will.’ My daughter, how painful it is to want to do good, being capable of doing it, and not doing it.”

After this, I continued my abandonment in the Divine Volition, which transported me outside of myself; and – oh! how horrifying it was to look at the earth! I would have wanted to withdraw into myself so as not to see anything, but my sweet Jesus, as though wanting me to see scenes so heart-rending, made me pause and told me: “My daughter, how painful it is to see such great human perfidy. One nation deceiving another, and both dragging each other’s poor peoples into torment and into fire. Poor children of Mine... You must know that the storm will be so strong that it will happen as when a mighty wind transports rocks, soil and trees with its force, in such a way as to leave the area totally emptied, so much so, that new plants can more easily be placed there. In the same way, this storm will serve to purify the peoples, and to make the serene day of peace and of fraternal union arise. You – pray, that everything may serve for my glory, for the triumph of my Will, and for the good of all.”

The love of Jesus is so great, that He feels the need to pour Himself out with the creature. He, in the middle, between His Celestial Father and the creatures, remains struck for love of them.

I was feeling all abandoned, according to my usual way, in the arms of my sweet Jesus, who felt the need to pour out His ardent love. To speak about His love is an outpouring; to make us comprehend in what pains, constraints, hindrances, His love puts Him is the greatest relief for Him. And – oh! how tormenting it is to hear Him with His voice suffocated in crying, fatigued, whispering: “Love Me, love Me, I want nothing but love. Not to be loved is the greatest of my sorrows... And why am I not loved? Because they don’t do my Will. My Will is the bearer of my love, and lets the creature love Me with divine love; and I, feeling my love, feel relieved from the intensity of my flames and I feel the sweet refreshment, the rest, the relief of my own love that the creature gives Me.”

Now, while I was thinking of this, my Highest Good, Jesus, visiting my little soul, made Himself seen enveloped in His own flames, and told me: “My daughter, if you knew in what constraints my love puts Me... Listen to Me: my Celestial Father was Mine, I loved Him with such intensity of love that I would consider Myself happy to lay down my life so that no one would offend Him. I was one with Him – my very Life; I could not be without loving Him, nor did I want to. Our divine virtue formed one single love with my Celestial Father, therefore I was inseparable from Him. From the position of my Humanity creatures were Mine, incorporated in Me; I could say that they formed my very Humanity – how not to love them? It would be like not loving one’s own life. Oh! in what conditions, entanglements, hindrances, did my love put Me! I loved my Father - to see Him offended was the greatest of my martyrdoms; and I loved the creatures – they were my own, I felt them inside Me, and yet, there was no offense they did not give, nor ingratitude they did not commit. My dear Celestial Father justly wanted to strike them, get rid of them; and in-between one and the other I remained struck by the One whom I loved so much, suffering their pains, feeling sorry for them. And while with the Father I too was offended, I still loved them to folly and laid down my life to save each creature. I could not subtract Myself from my Celestial Father, nor did I want to, because He was Mine and I loved Him; even more, it was my duty, as His true Son, to give Him back all the glory, the love, the satisfaction that all creatures owed Him; and although struck by indescribable pains, I Myself wanted to let Myself be struck, because I loved Him, and I loved those for whose sake I was being struck. Ah! Only my love, because it is divine, knows how to form such loving inventions, such hindrances as to be incredible; and it forms the heroism of true love, so much so, that one ends up burned, consumed, on the stake of love for His beloved ones, whom He kept as though incorporated within Himself, as they formed His very life. Ah! in what constraints my love puts Me. It fills Me so much, that I feel the need of an outpouring, issuing from Myself surprising works, pains, light, graces, to give vent to my love; and it is such and so great that I remain always inside and outside the creature, to serve her; and now I serve her with light, in the sun, to be able to communicate this outpouring of love; now I serve her in the air, to let her breathe; now I serve her in the water, to quench her thirst; now in the plants, to nourish her; now in the wind, to caress her; in the fire, to warm her; there is nothing done by Me, whether in Creation or in Redemption, in which my love, unable to contain itself within itself, did not come out to make an outpouring of love toward the creatures.

Now, who can tell you how much I suffer in seeing that I am not loved back! How my love remains tortured by human ingratitude! I reach the point of making her sins my own, to grieve over them as if they were mine, unto making the penance that is due. I take upon my shoulders all of her evils, to change them into good; I make the creature my own, fully mine, to the point of giving her a place inside my Humanity, as a member most dear to Me; I keep inventing ever new devices of love to make her feel how much I love her; and seeing Myself unloved – what pain, what sorrow! Therefore, my daughter, love Me! Love Me! When I feel loved, my love finds its rest, and its torments of love are changed into sweet refreshments.”

Love and Divine Will go hand in hand. Love forms the raw material adaptable to form the Life of God in the creature.

My poor mind feels the need to rest in the Divine Volition, to feel loved by He alone who knows how to love it. It feels the life in It, and the greatest happiness with Its sweet company; but while it feels the need to be loved, it feels the ardent fever for loving It, and would want to be consumed with love and get out of the exile, so as to be able to love It with more perfect love in Heaven. My Jesus, when will You have compassion on me?

But while I was thinking this, my beloved Jesus, repeating His short little visit, told me: “My daughter, Love and Divine Will go hand in hand, they never separate, and form one single life. So, my Divine Will created, did many things, but It created and operated while loving; nor would they have been works worthy of Our infinite wisdom, if We did not love what was being created by Us. Therefore, each created thing, even the smallest, possesses the fount of Our Love, and has a continuous sigh, heartbeat, voice: ‘Love. I am Divine Will and I am holy, pure, powerful, beautiful. I am Love and I love, nor will I ever cease loving, until I convert everything into Love.’

See then, my daughter, my Divine Will loved first and then It created what It loved. Love is Our breath, Our heartbeat, Our air; and just as air is communicative and there is not one person or one thing that can escape from the air, in the same way Our Love, true air, invests all, adorns everyone and everything, by right It wants to lord it over everything and wants to be loved by all. And It feels Its breath, Its heartbeat, Its air, Its life being taken away when It is not loved, and Its communicative virtue is hampered. Now, if the creature does my Will but does not love, it cannot be said with facts that she does my Will; it might perhaps be Will of God of circumstance, of necessity, for a time, because only the Divine Love possesses the unifying virtue that unites and centralizes everything in my Divine Will, so as to form the life of It. Moreover, if my Love is missing, which alone is capable of rendering and transforming the creature into adaptable material, to make of her the life of the Divine Will, she would remain like a hard object, which cannot receive any impression of the Supreme Being. It is my Love that, like cement, can fill up all the cracks of the human will, and can render it soft, in such a way as to give it the shape It wants and be impressed in it as the seal of the Divine Life. Therefore, Divine Will and Love are inseparable; if you do my Will, you will love, and if you love you place my Will in safety within you. One and the other hold hands: my Will creates, Love offers Itself as material to receive the creating act, so that We can issue Our most beautiful works. This is why, when We are not loved, We become delirious, We feel Our arms being broken, Our creative hands cannot find the material with which to form Our life in the creature.

So, then, let us run together in loving each other, let us love always, and we will be happy, on both sides. Even more, if you live in my Will, I will place my Love at your disposal, and you will have in your power the heroic and incessant Love, that never says enough.”

How the Divine Will descends into the human act and creates Its life palpitating in it. How It anticipates Purgatory for one who lives in It.

I feel in me the power of the Supreme Volition, but so much, that It wants me to undergo, in my little acts, the power of Its divine act; and while It wants it, It wants to be called by the creature, It does not want to be an intruder, nor enter by force, but It wants the creature to know it. And the human will, giving its kiss to the Divine Volition, surrenders its place to the operating of It, and places itself as cortege of the divine act, feeling honored that a Divine Will has operated in its act.

My mind was wandering, and – oh! how many things it comprehended; but I am incapable of repeating them with words. And my beloved Jesus, all goodness, told me: “My blessed daughter, you have not understood yet what it means that my Will is operating in the human act of the creature. It descends into the human act with Its creative power, with Its majesty, with Its light and with Its lavishness of innumerable graces; and pouring into the human act, It makes use of Its power and creates Its own act in it; and the human act remains as the material It used to create Its act. To create means that It creates as many acts as It wants to create, and sometimes It creates so many of them, for as many creatures as are disposed, who can receive Its act, which contains unheard-of prodigies of graces, of light, of love; it contains the palpitating and creating life of a Divine Will. This is why, then, having to do an act so great, It does not want to do it without the creature knowing it, and without her longing, wanting, calling It, to receive into its act the creating Will of so Holy and Mighty a Volition. What a difference, my daughter, from one who does good, prays, because he feels the duty to do so, or the necessity imposing it, or he suffers because he cannot free himself. As good as they may be, these are always human acts without the virtue of multiplying themselves for as many as one wants; they do not possess the fullness of goods, or of sanctity, or of love; and many times they are a brawl of most vile passions, because the creative power of one who creates what is good is missing, one who knows how to get rid of anything that does not belong to his sanctity.

So, the soul who lets my Divine Will operate in her act gives It the field for continuous creation, and – oh! how glorified and loved It feels, because It can create whatever It wants in the act of the creature. It feels the sovereignty, Its dominion, Its royalty being recognized, loved and respected. Therefore the Heavens tremble and all stand at attention and in act of profound adoration when they see my Divine Will creating in the act of the creature.

Oh! if the creatures knew what it means to live in my Divine Volition, they would compete among themselves to live in It, and It would be populated with the children of my Will. And since in my Will the human will feels incapable of operating, it would do nothing other than receive the continuity of acts of Divine Will; and it is the continuation of the acts of a good that forms the order, the harmony, the diversity of beauties, forming the enchantment and the formation of the life and of the good that one wants to acquire. Isn't Our very Life a continuous repetition? We love always, We maintain the conservation of the universe, and with this We maintain the order, the harmony, the life of the universe. Oh! if We did not always repeat, even just for one instant, one would see chaos in all things. Therefore, always repeat your continuous refrains in my Will, always receive my Will into your acts, so that It may repeat in you Its creating act, and in this way It will be able to form, not only the act, but the fullness of Its life.”

After this, I was thinking about everything that regards the Divine Will, and I said to myself: ‘Is it possible that the creature can reach such extent?’ And my sweet Jesus, returning to speak, told me: “My daughter, you must know that as soon as the creature truly decides that she wants to live in my Divine Will, and at any cost never to do her own, my Fiat, with an unspeakable love, forms the seed of Its life in the depth of the soul. This has such power, such sanctity, that it does not grow if it does not reorder the soul first, freeing her of her weaknesses, miseries and stains, if there is any. It can be said that It forms an anticipated Purgatory, purging her of anything that might prevent that a life of Divine Will be formed in her. In fact, my Will and sins cannot exist or live together; at the most, there might be some apparent weakness, which is purified at once with Its light and heat. My Will always holds the purifying act in Its hands, so that there may be no hindrance in the soul that might prevent It, not only from growing, but from carrying out Its acts in the acts of the creature. Therefore, the first thing that my Will does is to get Purgatory out of the way, making the creature go through It in advance, so as to be more free to let her live in It and to form Its life as It best pleases. So, if the creature dies after an act, determined and wanted, of wanting to live in my Volition, she will take flight toward Heaven; even more, my Will Itself will carry her in Its arms of light as Its triumph, as a birth from Itself, and as Its dear child. And if it were not so, one could not say: ‘Your Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven.’ It would be a way of speaking, not a reality. In Heaven, because my Will reigns in

It, there can be neither sins nor Purgatory; so on earth, if It reigns in the soul, there can be neither sin nor fear of Purgatory. My Will knows how to rid Itself of everything, because It wants to be alone in Its place, ruling and dominating.”

One who lives in the Divine Will possesses her Jesus in a perennial way, and He repeats the miracle He performed in instituting the Most Holy Sacrament, of receiving Himself.

My abandonment in the Divine Volition continues, but the more I walk within Its sea, the more I feel the need of Its life in order to continue to live; and having received Holy Communion, I felt the need to love Him. But my poor ‘nothing’ did not have sufficient love in order to love He who so much loves me; my love was so scarce, that I felt ashamed in the face of the love of Jesus, who had so much of it, that its boundaries cannot be seen. Yet, I wanted to love Him. And my sweet Jesus, encouraging me, told me: “My blessed daughter, do not lose heart, one who lives in my Will keeps her ‘nothing’ within the All; and wanting to love Me, she loves Me with my own love. I find in it my powerful, wise, attractive, immense love, in such a way that this ‘nothing’ of the creature takes Me from all sides, and I feel bound by her love, which is my own love, in such a way that I cannot escape from her; and now she wounds Me; now she darts through Me, to the point of making Me feel faint; and I feel the need to rest in the arms of her love.

But this is not all. One who lives in my Will possesses your Jesus in a perennial way, because my Will has the virtue of forming, raising and feeding my life in the creature; and as she receives Me in the Sacrament, I find another Jesus – that is, Myself, loving Me, adoring Me, thanking Me, repairing Me. I can say that I repeat the great miracle I did in instituting the Sacrament of the Eucharist, when I communicated Myself – that is, your Jesus received Jesus. Receiving Myself was the greatest honor, the satisfaction most complete, the requital of the heroism of my love; nothing I lacked of everything that was due to Me in my Sacramental Life – a God matched God Himself. I could say that what I gave was given back to Me. Now, for one who lives in my Will it is impossible not to possess her Jesus, therefore, as she receives Me in the Sacrament, I can say: ‘I am going to find Myself in the creature; and I find that which I want – my Life, which, unifying with hers, forms one single life. I find my royal dwelling, I find the love that always loves Me, I find the requital for the great sacrifice of everything I do and suffer in my Sacramental Life.’ My excessive love leads Me with an irresistible force to repeat the miracle of receiving Myself; but I can only do this in the creature in whom my Divine Will reigns.”

Everything that is done in the Divine Will takes its place in God.

I feel I am in the arms of the Divine Will. It seems to me that It waits for me in order to operate in my little act, to give me rest within Its works, and also to be able to rest. And my sweet Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, told me: “My daughter, as the creature operates in my Will, so do her acts take their place in Our Divine Being. Our goodness is so great, that it keeps many voids in order to receive all the human acts that possess the creative virtue in Our Volition. They come to their Creator all festive, and fill these voids that Our love keeps on purpose, formed within Us, so as to be able to say, with facts: ‘These are Our acts. Whatever We do, the creature does as well.’ Of all that is done in Our Will nothing remains outside of Us, nor could it remain outside; if it could be so, it would be as if Our Life were subject to separate, which cannot be, because We possess not only the inseparability of Our Supreme Being, but also that of all Our acts and of those who live in Our Volition. We have room for all of them, and We make of everything one act alone.

Now, these acts find in Us not only their place of honor, but perennial life and their rest; and We feel the happiness, the joy, that the creature is enclosed within her act. By her doing it in Our Will, We feel that Our Fiat loves Us, glorifies Us, delights Us, beatifies Us in the act of the creature, as We deserve. Oh! how happy We feel! To feel happiness is Our own nature, but in feeling the happiness that the creature can give Us, We feel the requital of the work of Creation. And do you think it is trivial that We give to the creature the virtue of being able to delight her Creator? The joy We experience is such and so great, that We abandon Ourselves in the arms of the creature, and clasping her between Our arms, We rest in her, and she rests in Us. And only when she surprises Us with more acts of hers, then is Our rest interrupted, to enjoy the happiness that she brings Us. So, We do nothing other that go from happiness to rest, and from rest to happiness. Blessed is the creature who, living in Our Divine Will, can delight He who possesses the ocean of infinite joys and happinesses without end.”

True love always calls the Beloved and encloses Him within itself. How without the Divine Will everything is veiled. Example.

My poor mind finds itself under the mighty waves of the Divine Volition – mighty, but peaceful with happiness, so much so, that the poor creature feels small and incapable of receiving them all. And while I was following the acts of the Fiat, I arrived at the moment of the creation of man, and was thinking to myself with how much love was innocent Adam capable of loving the Lord, before sinning. And my beloved Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My daughter, he loved Me as much as it is possible for a creature. He was a complex of love, not even a fiber of his was empty of the love toward His Creator. He felt, vividly, the life of His Creator palpitating in his heart; and true love calls the Beloved in each instant, and giving Him his life with his love, he receives back as life the One whom he loves.

Now as the creature loves, the Divine Will finds Itself in her, and this facilitates Its ruling, nothing opposes Its dominion, Its noble place is that of a dominating King, and It forms Its longed-for Kingdom within her. When the creature loves Me as much as she can, no void of God can be found in her; but rather, with her love she encloses Me in the center of her soul, in such a way that I cannot get out, nor can I free Myself of her. And if I were able to leave – which I never do – she would come after Me, without our being able to separate – either I from her, or she from Me – because I Myself am love. Therefore, one who truly loves Me can say: ‘I have conquered He who created me. I have Him inside of me, I possess Him, He is fully mine, no one can take Him away from me.’

Now, my daughter, love in Adam before sinning was perfect, total. My Will had Its life, in such a way that he felt It more than his own life. As soon as he sinned, the life of my Fiat withdrew, but left to him Its light, because without It he could not live, he would have returned to nothing. In creating him We acted like a father who places his goods and his very life in common with his son. Now, the son disobeys, he rebels against his own father, and the father with sorrow is forced to put him out of his house, no longer allowing him to possess either his goods in common, or his life. But his love is so great, that even from afar he does not let the necessary things, or the means of strict necessity, to be lacking to him, because he knows that if the father withdraws, the life of the son is ended. So did my Divine Will: It withdrew Its life, but left Its light as help, support and as the necessary means so that Its son would not perish completely.

Now, by withdrawing Its life, all things and works of God remained veiled for man. He himself – his intelligence, his memory, his will being veiled – remained like those poor unhappy dying ones who, the pupils of their eyes being covered by a thin veil, can no longer see the life of light clearly.

My very Divinity, in descending from Heaven to earth, veiled Itself with my Humanity. Oh! if the creatures possessed my Will as life, immediately they would have recognized Me, because my Will Itself would have revealed Who I was. My Will in the creature and that same Divine Volition in Me, immediately would have recognized and loved each other, and the creatures would have thronged around Me, nor would they have been able to separate from Me, recognizing Me, underneath my likeness to their guises, as the Eternal Word, He who loved them so much, and had clothed Himself like one of them. So, I would have had no need to manifest Myself; but my Will, residing in them, would have revealed Me; nor would I have been able to hide. But, instead, I had to tell them Who I was – and how many did not believe Me? Therefore, until my Will reigns in the creatures, everything is veiled. The very Sacraments, which, more than a new Creation I left in my Church with so much love, are veiled for them. How many surprises, how many beautiful secrets and marvelous things does a veiled pupil prevent them from comprehending, from seeing, from enjoying. More so, since it is the human will that forms this veil and prevents them from seeing things as they are in themselves.

Only my Will reigning in the creatures as life will remove this veil, and all things will be revealed. Then will the creatures see the caresses that We give them by means of created things, and the kisses, the loving embraces. In each created thing they will feel Our ardent heartbeat loving them; they will see Our Life flowing in the Sacraments, to give Itself continuously to them, and they will feel the need to give themselves to Us. This will be the great prodigy that my Divine Will will do: to tear all the veils, abounding with unheard-of graces, taking possession of souls as Its own life, in such a way that no one will be able to resist It; and so It will have Its Kingdom upon earth.”

Jesus, hurry, and fulfill everything You say and want, and may your Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven.

How the Divine Will darts through the creature and forms in her the divine nobility; and performing the role of Actor, It renders God and the creature inseparable. Example: the sun.

My King of love, Jesus, and my divine Queen Mama, O please! braid my will with Yours and make them one. Even more, enclose me inside your Hearts, that I may write, not outside of You, but either inside the Heart of my Jesus, or on the lap of my Celestial Mother, so that I may be able to say: 'It is Jesus who is writing, and my Mama who is feeding me the words.' Therefore, help me, and give me the grace to conquer the great repugnance I feel in starting yet another volume, You who know my state. I feel the need to be sustained, fortified and totally renewed by the power of your Divine Fiat, to be able to do, in everything and always, your Divine Will.

So, I was feeling immersed in the Divine Volition, which took the aspect of Actor, to be able to enter into the inmost receptacles of my soul, and form Its operating act in me. I remained surprised, and my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness, told me: "My blessed daughter, when the creature does and lives in the Divine Will, Our Supreme Being darts through her with Its light continuously. It darts through her mind, and casts into it the nobility of the divine thoughts, in such a way that she feels in her intelligence, memory and will, the Sanctity, the remembrance of her Creator, the Love and the Will of He who, assuming the role of Actor, forms in it the divine order and wisdom; and darting through it, with Its kisses of light It casts the divine substance into her mind, in such a way that everything is noble, everything is holy, everything is sacred in her. This Actor of my Volition, forming Its dwelling in the created intelligence, with Its power and mastery forms in it Its image. It darts through her heart, and forms the nobility of love, of the desires, of the affections and heartbeats. It darts through her mouth, and forms the nobility of the words. It darts through her works and steps, and forms holy works, and the nobility of the steps. And It darts not only through the soul, but also through the body, and with Its light It invests her blood and ennobles it, in such a way that the creature feels the fullness, the sanctity, the substance of divine nobility flow within her blood and through her members. This Actor of my Divine Will takes the office of insuperable Artisan, of transforming God in the creature and the creature in God. When my Will has reached this, which is the greatest act It can do – that is, to form of God and of the creature one single life, rendering them inseparable from each other – It rests in Its work and feels such happiness in it, because It has conquered the creature, It has formed Its work in her, and has fulfilled Its Will. Then It seems that in the emphasis of Its love It says: 'I have done everything, there is nothing left for Me to do other than possess her and love her.'

I remained pensive in hearing this, and my lovable Jesus added: "My daughter, why do you doubt? Doesn't the sun also do this office? As it darts through the flower with its light, so does it give it the substance of its color and fragrance; as it darts through the fruit, so does it infuse in it sweetness and taste; as it darts through the plants, so does it communicate to each of them the substance and the effects that befit them. If the sun does this, much more so does my Divine Will, which can do anything and knows how to do everything; and just as the sun keeps looking for the seed in order to give what it possesses, so does my Divine Will keep searching for creatures who want to live of my Will, darting through them immediately, communicating divine substance and nobility, forming and making Its life grow in them."

Prodigies of the Immaculate Conception. Communication of divine rights. How God does not want to do anything without His Celestial Mother.

I was doing my round in the acts of the Divine Will, and as I arrived at the act in which the Omnipotent Fiat created the Immaculate Virgin I stopped, and – oh! what a surprise of unheard-of prodigies united together! The enchantment of the heavens, of the sun and of all Creation could not compare to it. Oh! how they were left behind in front of the Sovereign Queen! And my sweet Jesus, in seeing me so surprised, told me: “My blessed daughter, you must know that there is no beauty, nor value, nor prodigies, that can be compared to the Immaculate Conception of this Celestial Creature. My Omnipotent Fiat made of Her a new Creation - oh! how much more beautiful and more prodigious than the first. My Divine Volition in Itself has no beginning and no end, and the greatest prodigy was that in this creature it was as if It were reborn; and not only this, but It grew in each instant, act and prayer that She did; and in this growth my Will multiplied Its prodigies in an infinite way. The creation of the universe was done by Us in an admirable way, and it was kept by Us under the empire of Our creating and preserving act, without Our adding anything. But in this Virgin We maintain the creating, the preserving and the growing act. This is the prodigy of prodigies – the Life of Our Will being reborn in Her, and Its continuous growing in each act that She did; and in order to be reborn in Her, Our Fiat pronounced Itself in the act of Her Conception; and once It is pronounced, Our act possesses such sumptuousness, sublimeness, height, immensity and power, as to catch everyone in the net of Its love. It puts no one aside; everyone can take the good that Our operating Fiat possesses, unless someone did not want to.

Our Divinity, in seeing this Holy Creature as though reborn in Our Will, shared with Her Its divine rights, in such a way that She was the owner of Our love, power, wisdom and goodness, and Queen of Our Fiat. With Her growing act in Our Volition She captivated Us, She loved Us so much, to point of loving Us for all. She covered all creatures, She hid them inside Her love, and She made Us hear the echo of the love of all and of each one. Oh! how We felt bound and made as though prisoners by the love of this Most Holy Virgin. More so since, as She loved Us, adored Us, prayed and operated with the growing act of Our Fiat that She possessed, so did She enclose Her Creator within Herself; as She loved Us, so did We feel absorbed into Her, unable to resist Her. Her power was so great, that She dominated Us and enclosed Our Sacrosanct Trinity within Herself; and We loved Her so much, that We let Her do whatever She wanted. Who would have the heart to deny Her anything? Rather, We felt happier in contenting Her, because a soul that loves Us is Our happiness, for We feel the echo, the joy of Our happiness in her; and one who possesses Our Will as life is everything for Us.

This is the great prodigy of one who possesses Our Will as life: to feel herself as sharing in Its very divine rights; and with this she feels that her love never ends, and she has so much of it as to be able to love for all and give love to all; with her growing act, she never says enough to her sanctity. More so since, by possessing Our Will as life, the Sovereign Queen, had always something to give Us, always something to say; She kept Us always occupied, and We had always something to give, and always Our loving secrets to communicate to Her, so much so, that We do nothing without Her: We deal with Her first, then We deposit that good in Her maternal heart, and from Her Heart it descends into the fortunate one who must receive that good. Therefore, there is no grace that descends upon earth, there is no sanctity that is formed, there is no sinner that is converted, there is no love that departs from Our throne, which is not deposited in Her Heart of Mother first; and She forms the maturation of that good, She fecundates it with Her love, She enriches it with Her graces and, if needed, with the virtue of Her sorrows; and then She deposits it in the one who must receive it, in such a way that the creature who receives it feels the Divine Paternity and the Maternity of her Celestial Mother. We can do it without Her, but We don't want to. Who would have the heart to put Her aside? Our Love, Our infinite wisdom, Our very Fiat impose themselves on Us and don't let Us do anything that would not descend through Her.

See then, to what extent Our love reaches, for one who lives of Divine Will – to the point of doing nothing without her. It is the harmony of Our infinite wisdom that, just as the creation of the universe always revolves around Us, and as it revolves, the earth is fecundated and the natural life of all creatures is maintained, in the same way, this new creation of the Conception of the Immaculate Lady revolves always around God, and God revolves around Her, and this revolving maintains the fecundity of good, forms the sanctity of souls, and the calling of creatures to God.”

How true love wants to make itself known, it expands and flies in search of the beloved, because it feels the need to be loved in return. Power of the creating act that one receives when going around in the Creation.

My poor mind is transported constantly into the sea of the Divine Will, which makes present to me, and keeps as though in act, everything It has done for love of the creatures; and It longs for them to recognize what It has done, how much It has loved us; and It awaits us into Its acts in order to tell us: “Let us do this together, don't let Me operate by Myself, so that what I did you may do as well, and in this way we will be able to say, with equal love: We have loved each other.” How beautiful it is to be able to say to each other: ‘You have loved me and I have loved You’ – it is the reward for the greatest works and the most painful sacrifices.

Then, my mind was going around in the Creation, within that act in which the Omnipotent Fiat, pronouncing Itself, created and stretched out the azure heavens as well as my eternal love, so as to have me together with It in this act; and my sweet Jesus made feast, because He had company, and making me pause, told me: “My good daughter, to love without making oneself known is against the nature of true love. In fact, true love of its own expands and runs – it flies in search of the beloved; and only when, finding her, encloses her and hides her within itself, then does it stop; and transforming her into its own flames, it wants to find its same love in her, and its same works done by the beloved as the requital of its love. And since the creature can never do what We do for her, Our love, in order to obtain the intent, calls the creature to itself, it hides her within its own love, and it lets her operate together with Our creating and preserving act. In this way, the creature can say, in reality: ‘I have loved You. What You have done for me, I have done for You.’ And We, in reality, feel loved back by her with Our love and with Our same works.

You must know that as the creature rises with her will into Our own, inside the works created by Us, Our Supreme Being renews upon her the creating act, and – oh! the wonders We perform, of graces, of sanctity, of heavens and suns, inside her soul! Our act delights in repeating itself, and as she goes around in the created things, Our love wants to make itself known, it wants her to touch with her own hand how much it loves her, and it repeats upon her Our creating act which is never subject to ceasing, in such a way that she feels all the ardor of Our love, the power of Our works, and taken by awe, she loves Us with Our own creative strength that We infused in her. And, oh! Our contentment in seeing Ourselves known and loved by the one We love so much. Indeed, this is why We created so many things – because We were waiting for the creature in order to make known how much We love her, and to give her, in each created thing, the potential of Our love in order to be loved back. When it is not known, love becomes unhappy, and when it is not requited by the beloved, it feels its life being lost, hindered, its steps broken, and its most beautiful works being put into oblivion. On the other hand, when it is known and loved, its life is multiplied; and here comes Our creating act upon the creature, so as to be loved back as We love her; Our steps are free, or rather, they fly, to capture Our beloved creature, clasp her to Our bosom, to love her and be loved by her; Our love feels the happiness of the love that she brings to it. Therefore, there is no greater honor that she can give Us than for her to come into Our Divine Will. As soon as We see her coming, We place all Creation at her disposal – because It is hers, It was made for her; and as she goes around in each created thing, she finds Our creative power which, investing her, communicates Our love that each of them possesses; and she can love Us with Our same creative strength that springs up, and she can love Us the way she wants and how much she wants. And in this way the love of the Creator and of the creature exchange the kiss, one rests within the other, and both feel the contentment of truly loving each other.

Oh! how beautiful is the company of the one who loves Us. Our contentment is so great, that Our love rises and invents new works, more beautiful, and new industries of love, to love and be loved.”

The royal place of the creature in the union of the Divine Unity. How she remains enclosed in It, and how she can form the rarest beauties and the enchantment for her very Creator.

I am in the arms of the Divine Fiat, which attracts me so much, that my little ‘nothing’ feels dissolved within the All; and even though dissolved, it feels its life sustained, nourished, vivified by the All; and if – God forbid – I wanted to subtract myself, which can never be, because I would find not even a hole where to enclose myself without finding my All – oh! then I would feel my little ‘nothing’ without life.

So, I felt that the Divine Volition was blowing Its breath over my ‘nothing’, and made me feel Its Life, Its Love, Its Power; but while my mind was swimming in the All, within Its interminable light, my beloved Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness, told me: “My little daughter of my Will, how surprising, marvelous, sublime is the operating in my Divine Volition. As the creature does her act in It, her act remains stripped of what is human, and unifying itself, it acquires the union of the Unity of the divine act.

Now, the creature holds her royal place, her act in the Unity of Our single act, and therefore if she loves, she loves in Our Unity; if she adores Us, if she blesses Us, it is inside Our Unity; if she comprehends Us, she does so within Our Unity. She sees, does and feels nothing outside of Us, but everything inside Our Divine Being. She can say: ‘I do not know, nor do I love or want anything but the Divine Will alone – that Its Unity keep me enclosed inside.’

Now, the greatest fortune, the grace most sublime for the creature, and the greatest glory and honor for Us is to possess the human will – its act inside Our Unity. And do you know why? Because We can give love, as much as We want, and be loved, as much as We desire; We can enrich her with grace, with sanctity, with beauty, so much as to feel enraptured by the very goods and beauty We have infused in her. In sum, We can interact with the creature, love her, entrust the All to the ‘nothing’, because she possesses something of Our own, and she will feel such power and love as to be able to defend the All; and We feel safe in this ‘nothing’, because We have surrendered to it Our weapons to keep Us safe and defended. But this is not all. Everything that the creature can do – her natural actions, the most indifferent acts, the words, the works, the steps – by possessing her act within Our Unity, becomes the effect of her act united with Ours - symbolized by the sun which, with the effects of its light, forms the beauty, the flowerings, the enchantment for all Creation. In the same way, as the creature is invested by the light of my Fiat, everything becomes the effect of It: one is the act, one is the Will, but the effects are innumerable, such that they can form the beauties most rare and the enchantment most seducing for the One who created her, and Who possesses her within His Unity.

My daughter, Our Supreme Being possesses one single act, therefore the whole Creation and all creatures are nothing other than the effect of the Unity of Our act; hence, the human will, unified with Ours, becomes Our continuous effect. And do you know what this means? Giving always to the creature and receiving always from her.”

Now, I remained stupefied and fixed in the Divine Volition, and I comprehended many things of this union of the Divine Unity; and while It was one, It enclosed all Creation and all were enclosed in this Unity and had sprung out from It, but sustained, unified, bound within this Unity; and since It is one and all, It sustains and gives life to everything. At that moment, I looked at the sky, and I could see many lights of diverse beauty, which possessed all the variety of colors, but in such an admirable way as to be enrapturing. These lights meandered in the azure vault, and while they were many, they formed a single one, penetrated into the Heavens and descended down below; they wanted to give life of light to all, they never stopped, they ran - they flew; and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, these lights are the marvels of the acts done in my Divine Will. How beautiful they are – they carry the imprint of their Creator.”

One who lives in the Divine Will forms the little Life of the Divine Will in the creature. How she is loved with new and doubled love by God.

My little and poor will feels the extreme need of the Divine Volition; without It I feel I am on an empty stomach, without strength, without warmth and without life; even more, I feel death at each instant, because if I am deprived of It, there is no one who can take Its place in nourishing Its Life in me. Therefore I keep repeating: ‘I am hungry – come, oh Divine Will, to give me your Life to satiate me of You; otherwise I will die.’ But while I was raving for I wanted to feel in me the fullness of the Divine Will, my sweet Jesus, repeating His short little visit, all goodness, told me: “My blessed daughter, your raving, your hunger, feeling the extreme need to feel in each instant the Life of my Will, are wounds to my Heart, are tearings of love that, using violence on Me, make Me run – fly, to come to you and make the Life of my Will grow in you.

You must know that as the creature wants to do my Will in order to live and emit her acts in It, she calls her Creator, Who feels called by the power of His own Volition in the creature, in the face of which He cannot resist, or even just slightly hesitate. On the contrary, since We never let Ourselves be surpassed in love, as soon as We see that she is about to call Us, We give her no time, but We Ourselves call her, and she runs into Our Divine Being as into her own center, she flings herself into Our arms, and We clasp Her so tightly as to transform her into Ourselves. A perfect accord takes place between Creator and creature, and Our emphasis of love is so great, that We love her with new and doubled love. But this is not enough. We give her such communication of Our Supreme Being, as to make Ourselves loved by her with new and doubled love; and if you knew what it means to be loved by God with new and doubled love, and to be able to love Him with new and doubled love... Only in Our Divine Will there are these wonders and prodigies. God loves Himself in the creature, everything is His, therefore it is no wonder that He puts in the field His love ever new, He doubles it, He multiplies it a hundredfold as much as He wants, and He gives her the grace to love Him with His own love. If it were not so, one would see great disparity between One who can love and one who cannot love, and the poor creature would remain as lowly, annihilated, without enthusiasm and union of love with her Creator; and when two beings cannot love each other with equal love, the inequality already produces unhappiness; while Our Will is unity, and It freely gives Its love to the creature in order to be loved, It gives Its sanctity in order to make her holy, Its wisdom in order to make Itself known. There is nothing It possesses that It would not want to give to her.

More so, since by her living in Our Fiat, as she has put her will aside in order to give life to Ours in her acts, she has formed the little Life of Our Volition within her, which claims and longs for Its growth; and one more act in It is enough to make It grow, a sigh to be satiated, a total desire for my

Will to run in all of her being is enough to form sufficient food for her to feel completely satiated of what belongs to her Creator. It take highest attention, and my Will will do everything that is needed in order to form Its Life in the creature.”

One who lives in the Divine Will forms the theatre of the works of her Creator, and repeats within herself the moving scene of Redemption.

I was doing the round in the acts of the Divine Will, and I was trying to invest with my little love the heavens, the sun and all Creation; and the Divine Fiat, to requite me, formed the place in my will in which to enclose the heavens and all Creation. Then I went round in the acts of Redemption, and sweet Jesus enclosed His acts in me, and repeated the most moving scenes to repay me of my little love. I remained surprised, and my beloved Jesus, all tenderness and love, told me: “My good daughter, daughter of my Will, you must know that my love is so great, that in order to pour it out I want to repeat my works. But in whom can I repeat them? In whom can I find the place to enclose them, to feel Myself being loved? In one who lives in my Will. As the creature goes around in my works in order to know them, love them and call them into herself, they are reproduced in her, and she forms the theatre of Our works. How many moving scenes: now are the heavens stretched out, now the sun rises with all its majesty, now the sea murmurs, and as it forms its waves, she would want to inundate her Creator with her love; and now she forms the most beautiful flowery field, and in each flower she makes them say to Us her refrain: ‘I love You, I glorify You, I adore You – and may your Fiat come to reign upon the earth.’ There is not one being which she does not call into herself, to make them say to Us her singsong: ‘I love You, I love You’. My daughter, Our love is not content if it does not give itself completely and does not repeat Our works in one who lives in Our Will.

But this is not all – keep listening. If by going around in the acts of Creation she repeats my works and I take highest pleasure and delight in assisting at the most splendid scenes of Creation within the creature, when she goes around in the acts of Redemption in order to make them her own, then I repeat my life. So, I repeat my conception, my birth, at which the Angels repeat the ‘Glory in the highest and peace to people of good will’. And if human ingratitude forces Me to cry, I go and cry within her, because I know that my tears will be requited and pearled with her ‘I love You’. And so I move on, repeating my life, my steps, my lessons; and when the sins renew my pains, my crucifixion, my death, I never suffer it outside of this creature, but I go into her to suffer my pains, my cross, my death, because she will not leave Me alone, she will take part in my pains, she will remain crucified with Me, and will give Me her life as the requital for my death. Hence, in one who lives in my Will I find the theatre of my Life, the moving scenes of my childhood and of my passion; I find speaking heavens, suns that love Me, winds that moan with love for Me; in sum, all created things have a little word to say to Me, an ‘I love You’, an attestation of gratitude. But who is it that renders them speaking to Me? Who is it that feeds all things with a voice? One who lives in my Will. My Will transforms her so much, that there is no love It does not make her give to It, nor works It cannot repeat in her. Therefore, these souls can be called Its living lives, and the repeaters of the works of their Creator.”

Prodigies of the Incarnation of the Divine Word. How the Heavens were stupefied and the Angels remained mute. Prodigies when the Divine Will operates in the creature. The Divine Trinity, called into Council. How God, in creating us, places a dose of His love in the creature.

I am under the press of the privation of my sweet Jesus. I feel squeezed, undone, as if my life wanted to end. But the Divine Volition, triumphant over my little being, rises within my soul, and calls me to live my day in Its Will. It seems to me that while I feel myself dying without dying, the Divine Will forms Its victory, and this is Its triumph, and Its Life rises again over my dying human will – more beautiful, all full of majesty and of doubled love. Oh! Divine Will, how much You love me! You make me feel death so as to centralize more your Life in me.

So, I continued my day within Its divine acts, and as I arrived at the Incarnation of the Word, such love could be felt as to feel oneself burning, being consumed, in its divine flames. And my highest Good, Jesus, as though drowned within His flames of love, told me: “My blessed daughter, my love in incarnating Myself in the womb of my Celestial Mother was so great, that Heaven and earth could not contain it. The act of incarnating Myself took place in an act of love so intense, so strong, so great, as to be more than enough to burn up everyone and everything with love. You must know that before incarnating Myself my Celestial Father looked into Himself, and in the ardor of His love, unable to contain it, He poured out of Himself torrents and seas of love. In this ardor of love He looked at His Son, and I was there in the same flames of love; and He commanded Me to incarnate Myself. I wanted it so, and in a surge of love, without leaving my Father, nor the Holy Spirit, the great portent of the Incarnation took place. I remained with my Father, and at the same time I descended into the womb of my Mother. We, the three Divine Persons, were inseparable, nor subject to separating; therefore I can say: ‘I remained in Heaven, and I descended upon earth; and the Father and the Holy Spirit descended with Me upon earth and remained in Heaven.’ Hence, in this act, so great, Our Divine Being overflowed so much with love, that the Heavens were stupefied and the Angels remained astounded and mute – all enwrapped with Our flames of love. The Incarnation was none other than an act of Our Divine Will. What can It not do, or is It not able to do? Everything. With Its Power and infinite Love It reaches the point of operating the prodigy never heard or done before - of making Us remain in Heaven and descend into the prison of the Maternal womb. So did Our Will want, and so It did.

Now, my daughter, each time the soul wants to do my Will, my Celestial Father looks inside of Himself first, He calls the Sacrosanct Trinity as though into Council in order to fill that act of Our Will with all possible and imaginable goods; then He unleashes it from Himself, and has the creature invested with His operating, communicating, transforming Will; and just as in the Incarnation the Three Divine Persons remained in Heaven and descended into the womb of the Immaculate Virgin, in the same way, my Will with Its Power transports with Itself, within Its operative act, the Divine Trinity into the creature, while leaving It in Heaven, and forms Its divine act in the human will. Now, who can tell you the wonders that are enclosed in this act of Our Will? Our Love rises and diffuses so much as to find no place where to put Itself; and when It has filled everything, It withdraws into Our source; Our Sanctity feels honored with a divine act by Our very Will operating in the creature, and It spreads with surprising grace in order to communicate Its Sanctity to all creatures. These are unspeakable prodigies which It performs when the creature calls It to operate in her. Therefore, let everything disappear in my Will, and We will give you everything in your power, and you will be able to give Us everything – even Ourselves.”

After this, I felt my little intelligence so filled with Divine Will, that I was unable to contain It, and I continued my round in Its divine acts; and as I reached the act in which the Immaculate Queen was conceived, I comprehended how the Supreme Being, before calling Her to life, poured so much love into Her, that as soon as She felt the life, She felt the need to love Her Creator. She felt inside of Herself that love which She expressed outside. I remained surprised, and my beloved Jesus added: “My daughter, do not be marveled, it is Our usual way, when We deliver each creature to daylight, in the act of creating her, to give her a dose of love, therefore giving her part of Our Divine Substance; and according to Our designs that We make upon her, so do We increase the dose of Our love. So, each creature possesses within herself the particle of the Substance of Divine Love. Otherwise, how could she love Us if We Ourselves did not put something of Our own in order to make Ourselves loved? It would be like asking for something she would not possess. We already know that the creature has nothing of her own, and this is why We must enclose in her, as though in a sacrarium, Our Love, Our Will, to ask her to love Us and to do Our Will. And if We ask, it is because We know that she has Our Love and Our Will in her power, which We Ourselves have placed in the depth of her soul. Now, if she loves Us, this dose of Our Love rises, it increases, and she feels, more powerfully, the need to love Us and to live of the Will of her Creator. If she does not love Us, it does not grow, and the human weaknesses, the passions, will form the ash over Our Love, in such a way that she reaches the point of feeling no need to love Us at all. Ash has covered and suffocated Our divine fire, and while the fire exists, she does not feel it. On the other hand, every time she loves Us, she does nothing other than blow her breath in order to dispel the ash; and in this way she will feel the living fire that burns within her bosom, and will increase it so much as to be unable to live without loving Us.

Now, my daughter, the Immaculate Queen, from the very first instant of Her Conception, because She felt within Herself the love for Her Creator and Our Will operating more than Her own life, She loved Us so much that She did not lose an instant without loving Us; and by loving Us and loving Us again, She increased so much this dose of love as to be able to love Us for all and give love to all, and to love everyone always without ever ceasing. You must know that Our Love is so great, that by placing this dose of love within the creature, We placed the seed of happiness within her, because true happiness must hold its royal place inside the soul. The happiness from outside, if it does not reside within, cannot be called true happiness; on the contrary, it embitters the poor creature and it is like a mighty wind that quickly disperses it, leaving only traces of it, converted into thorns that embitter her. Not so with the happiness from inside, placed by Us; it is lasting and it always grows. And besides, to love is to become happy and to make Us happy; one who does not love can never be happy; one who does not love has no purpose, nor any interest in doing any work, nor does he feel the heroism to do good to anyone; the sacrifice that confers the most beautiful tints to love does not exist for him. So, the Most Holy Virgin possessed the sea of happiness because She possessed as many lives of love for as many existing creatures; not only this, but by never doing Her will, but always Mine, She formed as many lives of my Divine Will within Her, in such a way that She can give a life of Love and a life of Divine Will to each creature; and this is why – by right – She is Queen of Love, and Queen of the Supreme Will. Therefore, the Sovereign Queen loves and longs to deliver these lives in order to deposit them inside the creatures and form the Kingdom of pure Love and the Kingdom of Our Will; and in this way She will reach the highest point in loving Her Creator, and the highest point in loving and doing good to creatures.”

Divine display for one who lives in His Will. How God renders her participant in His works. How He has always something to give and to operate together with the creature.

I am always in the sea of the Divine Volition, in which I find the strength, the peace, the love; even more, as I enter into It, on seeing my littleness - that I am good at nothing - the Divinity, who loves so much for Its Will to operate in my littleness, arms Its Sanctity around me, Its Wisdom, Goodness, Strength, Divine Light, so that Its Will may find in me Its divine qualities, in order to be able to carry out Its operating act in me. Therefore, It puts something of Its own, to give grace to the creature to let her operate in It. So, I was following the acts of the Divine Will, and It carried me in Its arms, It sustained me, It breathed upon me, to let me receive the participation of Its acts. Then I arrived at the act of the Conception of the Virgin, and I found myself inside the little Heart of the Virgin newly conceived. My God, I don't know how to say it, I am unable to continue on... But my sweet Jesus, in order to let me comprehend, told me: “Blessed daughter of the my Volition, you are right, the waves of my Will inundate you, drown you, and your little capacity remains lost; and you need your Jesus to explain to you better that which you see but cannot express. Now, know, my daughter, that Our love for one who wants to live, and does live in Our Divine Volition is such and so great, that We want to render her participant in all Our works, for as much as it is possible to a creature, giving her also the merit of Our divine works. As the creature enters into Our Will, Our Will calls Its divine works in act, as if It were operating in that very instant; and identifying the creature within Its act, It lets her see the prodigies of Its operating, and receive and be confirmed in that good, making her feel the new life of Its act.

You have seen the Conception of the Sovereign Queen, and how you, being present in my Will, found yourself as conceived within Her maternal Heart. See the great difference: for one who lives in my Will the prodigies of the Immaculate Conception were unheard-of; my Will – which animated this Conception and from which no one can escape – called all creatures to be present, that they might remain conceived within Her virginal Heart, and receive Her maternity, Her help, Her defense, and find refuge and the support of this Celestial Mother. Now, one who lives in Our Will finds herself in this act of conceiving; she is the daughter who, spontaneously, of her own will, seeks Her Mama and takes her place, enclosing herself in Her Maternal Heart, to let the Celestial Queen be her Mama. This creature will take part in the riches of the Sovereign Lady, in Her merits, in Her love; she will feel within herself Her nobility, Her sanctity, because she knows to Whom she belongs, and God will let her participate in the infinite goods and exuberant love He had in the Conception of this Holy Creature. And so with all Our works: as the creature in Our Will seeks them and calls them in order to know them and love them, We call Our works in act, We place her in the center of them, We make her feel and experience all Our Love and the Power of Our creative Strength; and the littleness of the creature receives and becomes filled, up to being unable to contain any more. My daughter, not to let one who lives in Our Will participate in Our works is impossible for Us, nor would Ours be true love, because We possess by nature the communicative force, and would want to communicate Our divine goods to all. It is the creatures that reject them from Us; but for one who lives in Our Volition We show off in communicating Our goods, We find no opposition in her; and if it were not so, We would hinder Our Divine Being; while, on the contrary, ‘to love, to give, to abound with Our creatures’ is one of Our happinesses.

Now see, then, the great difference from one who lives in Our Will: the other creatures are present in Our works, in the Conception of the Holy Virgin, in the Incarnation of the Word, in my pains, in my death, and even in my Resurrection; but they are there by virtue of Our Power and Immensity; I could say, almost by necessity, not out of love, nor because they know Our goods or love to make their dwelling in them in order to enjoy them – not at all. It is because no one can escape Our Divine Being. On the other hand, with one who lives in Our Will it is the creature herself that seeks Our works, knows them, loves them, appreciates them, and comes to take her place inside of them, and she loves and operates together with Us, therefore, as a consequence, she participates, acquires new knowledges and new love; while the others are there but do not know Our works, they do not love Us, they have not a word to tell Us. They are there – if one could say this – only to clutter Our immensity; and many to offend Us. Therefore, this is Our ardent longing – that the soul live in Our Will; We have always something to give, and always to do with her, and she has things to do together with Us. We give each other no time, one act calls for another, and We know each other well; Our Will makes Us known, makes Us loved first, and then forms the perennial union of the creature in Our Will.”

Difference that passes between one who calls the Divine Will into her acts, and one who does good works without It. The Ascension; how Jesus departed for Heaven, still remaining on earth.

My poor mind continues to go around in the acts of the Divine Will; and I thought to myself: ‘What is the difference between one who calls the Divine Will into her acts, and those who do good works but do not call It, do not give It the first place in their acts.’ And my sweet Jesus, making me

His short little visit, told me: “My daughter, there is no comparison between the two. The first, by calling my Will into her acts, strips herself of what is human and forms the void in her human will in which to give place to Mine; and Mine embellishes, sanctifies, forms Its light within that void; then It pronounces Its creating Fiat and calls to life Its divine operating within the human; and the creature not only participates, but becomes the owner of the divine act, which possesses the Power, the Immensity, the Sanctity and the Divine value that is never extinguished. Therefore, in one in whom Our Will reigns We look and find Our very Selves and Our own acts that honor Us and form a crown around Us. On the other hand, with those who do good works, but are not animated by Our Will, We do not find Ourselves, but the finite act of the creature; and since We can’t really keep anything of whatever good they may do, We give them the merit as recompense. A recompense is not a property that can always produce, therefore they are symbolized by those who live one day to the next, who, though they may get by with the salary they receive, never become rich; they have always the need to get paid for their work in order to live; and if they don’t work, they are in danger of dying of hunger – that is, of not feeling the satiety of good, the life of the virtues, but rather, the squalid misery of passions. On the contrary, for one who lives in Our Volition, everything is abundance. We say to her: ‘Take whatever you want, and as much as you can take. Even more, We place at your disposal Our riches, Our light, Our Sanctity, Our Love, because what is Ours is yours, and what is yours is Ours – there is nothing left to do than for Us to live and operate together’.”

After this, I was accompanying the Ascension of Jesus into Heaven. How beautiful He was – all majesty, clothed with most refulgent light that enraptured and chained the hearts to loving Him. And my sweet Jesus, all goodness and love, told me: “My blessed daughter, there is not one trait of my life that does not symbolize the Kingdom of my Divine Will. On this day of my Ascension, I felt victorious and triumphant; my pains were now ended, or rather, I was leaving my pains, already suffered, in the midst of my children, leaving them on earth as help, as strength and support, and as the refuge for them in which to hide in their pains, in order to draw from my pains the heroism in their sacrifices. I can say that I left my pains, my examples and my very Life as seeds which, maturing and growing, would sprout the Kingdom of my Divine Will. So, I left and I stayed: I stayed by virtue of my pains, I stayed in their hearts in order to be loved; after my Most Holy Humanity would ascend into Heaven, I felt, more closely, the bond of the human family, therefore I would not have adapted Myself to not receiving the love of my children and brothers, whom I was leaving on earth; I stayed in the Most Holy Sacrament in order to give Myself continuously to them, and for them to give themselves to Me, that they might find rest, refreshment and the remedy to all their needs. Our works do not suffer any mutability - whatever We do once, We repeat always.

Moreover, on this day of my Ascension I received the double crown: the crown of my children whom I was taking with Me to the Celestial Fatherland, and the crown of my children whom I was leaving on earth – these too, symbol of the few who would form the beginning of the Kingdom of my Divine Will. All those who saw Me ascended into Heaven received many graces, such that all of them laid down their lives in order to make known the Kingdom of Redemption, and laid the foundations on which to form my Church, so as to gather in Her maternal bosom all of the human generations. In the same way, the first children of the Kingdom of my Will will be few, but the graces with which they will be invested will be such and so great, that they will lay down their lives in order call everyone to live into this Holy Kingdom. A cloud of light invested Me, removing my presence from the sight of my disciples, who remained as though ecstatic in contemplating my Person, for the enchantment of my beauty was such as to keep their pupils enraptured, so much so, that they were unable to lower them in order to look at the earth. In fact, it took an Angel to stir them and have them return to the Cenacle. This too is a symbol of the Kingdom of my Will: the light that will invest Its first children will be such and so great, that they will bring the beauty, the enchantment, the peace of my Divine Fiat, in such a way that creatures will easily surrender to wanting to know and love so great a good.

Now, in the midst of the disciples there was my Mama, who was present at my departure to Heaven; and this is the most beautiful symbol. Indeed, She is the Queen of my Church; She attends to Her¹²⁷, protects Her, defends Her. She will then sit in the midst of the children of my Will; She will be the engine, the life, the guide, the perfect model, the Teacher of the Kingdom of the Divine Fiat, which She so greatly cherishes. Hers are the longing, the ardent desires, the delirium of maternal love, for She wants Her children on earth in the same Kingdom where She lived. She is not content with having only Her children in Heaven, in the Kingdom of the Divine Will, but She wants them also on earth; She feels that the task given to Her by God - as Mother and Queen - She has not yet fulfilled, that Her mission is not ended until the Divine Will reigns on earth in the midst of creatures. She wants Her children to be like Her and to possess the inheritance of their Mama. Therefore the great Lady is all eyes to look, all Heart to love, to help whomever She sees somehow disposed to wanting to live of Divine Will. So then, in the difficulties, think that She is all around you, sustaining you, fortifying you, taking your will into Her maternal hands, to let it receive the Life of the Supreme Fiat.”

How the Divine Will encloses all the acts of the life of Jesus as though in act of repeating them always for love of creatures. The life of Jesus symbolizes the calling of the Kingdom of the Divine Will upon earth.

My poor intelligence was following the life of my sweet Jesus in the Divine Will, in which I found Him in act of continuing His life when He was on earth; and – oh! how many wonders, how many surprises of love never thought-of before! So, the Divine Fiat encloses all the acts of the life of Jesus as though in act of repeating them always for love of creatures, to give to each one His whole life, His pains, His ardent love. Then, my sweet Jesus, all goodness, told me: “My little daughter of my Volition, my love wants to pour itself out, it feels the need to make known to one who wants to live of my Will that which I did, and I do, in order to make It return to reign and dominate in the midst of creatures. You must know that my entire life was no other than the continuous calling of my Will into their midst, and the calling of creatures into my Supreme Fiat. In fact, as I was conceived, so did this symbolize the calling and the return of It, to make It be conceived in the creatures, who had so outrageously cast It out of their souls; and It also called them to be conceived in It. As I was born, so did I call my Volition to be reborn in all the human works. In all my baby tears, wailing, prayers and sighs, I called with my tears and sighs my Will into the tears, pains and sighs of the creatures, so that they might do nothing in which they would not feel the strength, the empire of my Will reigning in them, which, moved to pity by my tears and by theirs, would give them the grace of the return of Its Kingdom. Also my exile symbolized how creatures had exiled themselves from my Will; and I wanted to be exiled in order to call back my Will into the midst of the poor exiled ones, in order to call them back and convert the exile into fatherland, in which they would no longer be tyrannized by enemies, by strangers, by vile passions, but live with the fullness of the goods of my Will. And my return to Nazareth – how well it symbolizes my Divine Will. I lived in It hidden, Its reigning was in full vigor within the Holy Family; I was the Word, the Divine Will in Person, veiled by my Humanity; and that same Divine Will that reigned in Me diffused to all, embraced all, It was motion and life of each one; I felt within Me the motion and life of each one, as my Fiat was the Actor. What pain, what sorrow – not to be recognized, nor receive a ‘thank You’, an ‘I love You’, an act of gratitude, either from the entire world, or even from the very Nazareth, where not only my Will, but also my Holy Humanity lived in their midst, never ceasing to give light to whomever could see Me and approach Me, in order to make Myself known; while in my sorrow I remained always the hidden God.

Such is the lot of my Divine Volition: man was created with the Creative Power of my Fiat, he was born, he was kneaded, soaked in It; my Will administers to him continuous motion, warmth, life; he will end his life in the Fiat. Yet, who knows It? Who is grateful to this divine act so continuous, never tiring, enveloping with so much love the life of the creature in order to give her life? Almost no one, my daughter. To do good, to be the primary cause of conservation, giving perennial life to the creature; to maintain the order of all created things around her, and only for her sake – and not to be recognized... This is the sorrow of sorrows; and the patience of my Will gives of the incredible. But do you know the reason for this patience so invincible and constant? Because It knows that Its Kingdom will come, Its Life palpitating in the midst of creatures will be recognized, and in view of the great glory It will receive in being known as Life of each life – and while It is Life, It will receive each life in order to reign in them – It will no longer remain hidden, but will be unveiled and recognized. In view of this It bears such great lack of recognition, and only a divine patience could tolerate the length of so many centuries of such great human ingratitude.

From Nazareth I went to the desert, where there was extreme solitude and, for the most part, fierce animals deafening the desert with their roars, surrounding Me – symbol of my Divine Will which, since It is not known, forms Its desert around the creature, and a solitude that strikes horror and fright. What is good is deserted, and the soul feels surrounded by more than fierce animals – that is, her brutal passions that send out roars of rage, of bestial furies, of cruelty, of every sort of evil. My Holy Humanity kept re-tracing, step by step, all the sorrows that my Divine Will had suffered, in order to repair and call It back again to reign in the midst of creatures. I can say that each of my heartbeats, breaths, words, steps and pains was the continuous calling of my Will to make Itself known by creatures in order to reign; and it also called them into my Will, to let them know the great good, the sanctity, the happiness of the living in the Fiat.

From the desert I moved on to my public life, in which few were those who believed that I was the Messiah, especially the learned – almost none of them; and I wanted to use my power, sowing miracles in order to form my people, so that, if they would not believe my words, they might believe in the power of my miracles. Those were my divine and loving industries, for at any cost I wanted to make Myself known – that I was their Savior; because if they did not know Me, they could not receive the good of Redemption. Therefore it was necessary to make Myself known, so that my coming upon earth would not be useless for them. Oh! how my public life symbolizes the triumph of the Kingdom of my Fiat in the midst of creatures, which I will make known by means of surprising truths; and in order to obtain the intent I will perform miracles and prodigies; with the power of my Will I will call back to life those who are dead to grace, I will repeat the miracle of the resurrection of Lazarus – such that even though they have become putrid in their evil, rendered as stinking cadavers like Lazarus, my Fiat will call them back to life, It will make the stench of sin cease, It will make them rise again to good; in sum, I will use all of my divine industries to have my Volition dominate in the midst of the peoples.

See, then, how in each word I spoke, in each miracle I performed, I called back my Will to reign in their midst, and I called the people to live in It. From the public life I passed on to my Passion, symbol of the Passion of my Will which for many centuries had suffered the so many rebellious wills of creatures who, by not wanting to submit to It, had closed Heaven, broken the communications with their Creator, and had rendered themselves unhappy slaves of the infernal enemy. My Humanity, lacerated, beaten up to death, crucified, represented the unhappy humanity without my Will before Divine Justice; and in each pain I called my Fiat to exchange the kiss of peace with the creatures in order to render them happy, and I called them into It, to make the sorrowful Passion of my Will cease. Finally, my death, which matured the Resurrection, which called all to rise again in my Divine Fiat; and – oh! how vividly does my Resurrection symbolize the Kingdom of my Will. My Humanity, wounded, deformed, unrecognizable, rose again whole, of an enchanting beauty, glorious and triumphant. It prepared the triumph, the glory, for my Will, calling all into It and impetrating that all might rise again in my Volition – from dead, alive; from ugly, beautiful; from unhappy, happy. My risen Humanity ensured the Kingdom of my Will upon earth; It was my only act full of triumph and of victory; and this befitted Me, because I did not want to depart for Heaven without first providing all the aids to creatures, for them to reenter into the Kingdom of my Will; as well as all the glory, the honor, the triumph to my Supreme Fiat, to let It dominate and reign.

Therefore, unite yourself with Me, and let there be no act you do, or pain you suffer, which does not call my Will to take Its royal and dominating place, and conquer all as the winner, to make Itself known, loved and wanted by all.”

God and His Will; His Will in relationship with Creation; His Will in relationship with the Celestial Beings. His Will in disaccord with the human family.

The Divine Volition, with powerful strength, calls me into the interminable sea of Its Will; and – oh! how well one feels in It, how many surprises, how many beautiful things one comprehends, which produce infinite joys, divine lives, love that never says enough. But what makes one the happiest is to see and feel that everything is Divine Will; the whole of Creation forms one single act of Supreme Volition. But while my mind was wandering within It, sweet Jesus, making me His short little visit, with an unspeakable love, told me: “Blessed daughter of my Will, you must know that at the head of the Kingdom of my Divine Will there is God Himself; Our Divinity does nothing other than a continuous act of It; We never do the will of anyone, but always Our own; the crown of Our attributes are dominated by Our Fiat; Its Kingdom is inside of Us and extends outside of Us in Our Immensity, in Our Love, Power and Goodness – in everything. Hence, for Us everything is Our Will.

In the second place comes the Creation – heavens, suns, stars, winds, waters, and even the little blade of grass; they do nothing other than a continuous act of the Fiat. Between the created things and Us there is a respiratory act; We emit the breath of Our Will and the Creation receives it; and emitting it again, It gives Us the breath We have given to It – that is, all the effects that Our Will, breathed by It, has produced; and It unites with Our one and single act. How much glory and honor do We not receive! How extolled is Our Supreme Being, only because We let Our Will be breathed by all Creation, and It gives Us back the breath We gave It. There is such unity of Will with all Creation, that everything that comes out of It, or enters into It, forms one single act of Supreme Will, and the multiplicity and diversity of the things that can be seen and take place are nothing other than the effects that Our one and single act produces. In fact, Our Fiat never changes, nor is It subject to mutating; all of Its Power lies precisely in this – to do one single act in order to produce all possible and imaginable effects.

In the third place come all the Angels, Saints and Blessed of the Celestial Fatherland. They revolve around Our Supreme Being and they breathe the Strength, the Sanctity, the Love, the infinite joys, the innumerable happinesses of the Divine Volition. They form one single life with It - they feel this life inside as their own life, and they feel it outside, bringing them the ocean ever new of divine happinesses. But one is the act that is formed in Heaven: Divine Will. One is the breath; only one thing is wanted: Divine Will. If – God forbid – even just one act or one breath alone could enter Heaven which is not Divine Will, the Celestial Fatherland would lose the whole enchantment, the beauty, the awe with which It is invested. But this can never be.

See, then, how all the supremacy is held by my Fiat. The Blessed, by just merely breathing It, remain filled with seas of joys and incomprehensible happiness; and as they emit the breath, Our Divinity feels the happiness that all the Saints enjoy; and We all magnify Our Supreme Volition as the beginning, fount and origin of all goods.

In the fourth place comes the human family. It revolves around Us, but since their will is not one with Ours, they do not breathe Our Volition that establishes the order, the sanctity, the union, the harmony with their Creator, and because of this they remain scattered, disordered and as though lost, away from Us. They are unhappy beings; the peace, the happiness, the abundance of goods, is far from them; and all the evil comes from the fact that Our Will is not theirs - we do not breathe each other, and this hinders the communication of Our goods, the perfect union with Our Supreme Being. Our Creative Hand, which was to form Its masterpiece, and the most beautiful one, in each creature, is stopped because Our Will is missing; It does not find their souls as suitable, adaptable in order to render Our divine art doable; wherever Our Will is lacking, We don't know what to do with that creature. Here is the reason why We so long for Our Divine Will to reign and form Its life in them – because Our creative work is hampered, Our works suspended, the work of Creation is incomplete. And in order to obtain this, one must be the Will of Heaven and of the earth, one the life, one the love, one the breath – and this is the greatest love We have for the creatures. We still have many beautiful works to do, but the human will hinders Our step, binds Our arms, and renders Our Creative Hands inoperative. Therefore, one who wants to do Our Will and live in It gives Us work to do, and We make of her whatever We want.

Now, you must know that as the creature decides to live of Divine Will, she secures her salvation and her sanctity. We dwell in her as in Our home, and her will serves Us as material by which, in each of her acts, We pronounce the Fiat in order to form Our works worthy of the One who inhabits her. We act like a king, who makes use of stones, tuff, bricks and lime in order to form for himself a sumptuous royal palace, such as to leave the whole world astounded. If he did not have the stones, the necessary material to build his palace – poor king, in spite of all the goodwill he might have and money to spend for the edifice, yet, lacking the raw material, he would remain without his royal palace. So are We – if We don't have the will of the soul, with all Our Power and Will that We have, lacking the material, We cannot form in the soul the beautiful royal residence worthy of Our dwelling. Therefore, when the creature gives Us her will and takes Ours, We are safe, We find everything at Our disposal – small things and big things, natural things and spiritual things – everything is Ours, and We make use of everything in order to let Our Omnipotent Fiat operate. And since Our Will cannot be without Its works, It recalls all of Its works into the royal residence It has formed with so much love in the creature; It surrounds Itself with all the works of Creation – heavens, sun and stars pay It homage; and It places in order within her everything I did in Redemption – my life, my birth, my baby tears, my pains and prayers – everything. Wherever my Will is present, nothing must be missing, because everything came out of It, everything belongs to It by right, and therefore wherever It reigns It forms the centralization of all Its works. And, oh! the beauties, the order, the harmony, the divine goods that can be seen in this creature... The Heavens are stupefied, and all admire the Love and Power of the Divine Will, and, trembling, they adore It. So then, let yourself be worked by It, and It will do great things as to leave you astounded.

Moreover, Our Love and Our eternal Wisdom have established all the graces that We must give to the creature, the degrees of sanctity she must acquire, the beauty with which We must pearl her, the love with which she must love Us, and the very acts she must do. Wherever Our Fiat reigns, everything is realized, the divine order is in full vigor, not a single comma is misplaced, Our operating is in full harmony with the works of the creature; and – oh! how We delight! And once We have given her Our final love in time and she has fulfilled Our final act of Divine Will in her mortal life, then Our Love will make her fly to the Celestial Fatherland, and Our Will will receive her in Heaven as triumph of Its operating and conquering Will which, with so much love, It conquered on earth. Hence, her final act will be the entrance she will make into Heaven, to then begin in Our Will-bearer-of-happiness, which will have no end. On the other hand, there where Our Volition does not reign, the divine order does not exist – how many works broken and not fulfilled; how many divine voids, maybe filled with passions, with sins. There is no beauty, but such deformity as to arouse pity. Therefore, be attentive, and let Our Will reign and live in you.”

How an act of the human will can spoil the Divine Order and Its most beautiful works. The first thing that God wants is absolute freedom. How the Divine Will will form many Jesuses wherever It reigns.

My poor mind cannot be without going around and flying in the Divine Volition, and my poor human will feels as though under the pressure of the Divine Will; and I thought to myself: ‘Ah, yes, it is beautiful - one feels the victory, the triumph, the dominion, the happiness, the beautiful conquests of the living in the Divine Volition; but the human will, while it feels alive, must die continuously. It is true that it is the greatest honor, the greatest love of God – His deigning to descend into the will of the creature, and with His Majesty and Power operate and do whatever He wants, while the human remains in its place – it can only do what God does; but it must stop anything of its own. This is the sacrifice of sacrifices, especially in certain circumstances – oh! how painful it is to feel one’s own life, and to keep it as if one did not have it, because the Divine Fiat does not tolerate even one fiber of the human will to act in Its Will...’; and a crowd of thoughts kept crowding my poor mind. And my sweet Jesus, compassionating my ignorance and the painful state I was in, with unspeakable tenderness, placing His most holy hand upon my head, told me: “Blessed daughter, courage, do not lose heart; my Divine Volition wants everything, because It knows that even just one small act, one desire or one fiber of the human will would spoil Its most beautiful works, the Divine Order. Its Sanctity would remain hampered, Its Love restricted, Its Power limited; this is why It does not tolerate even just one fiber of the human will to keep its life. It is true that this is the sacrifice of sacrifices – no other sacrifice can equal the weight, the value, the intensity of the sacrifice of living without a will; so much so, that it takes the perennial life, the continuous miracle of my Divine Volition in order to be able to endure this sacrifice, which is such that, in the face of it, other sacrifices can be called shadows, pictures, paintings, or a game for children who cry for nothing. In fact, there is the human will which, in the pains, in the sorrowful encounters or in the works, does not feel undone, without life, without satisfactions; therefore the sacrifices are felt - oh! how much lighter, but emptied of God, of sanctity, of love, of light, of true happiness, and perhaps not even exempt of sins, because the human will without Mine can never do good and holy things.

Besides, if my Fiat did not have the virtue of keeping the human will with Itself without giving it life - but rather, enclosing Its Life within it, so that it would not be able to find either the place or the time to be able to act – It would not be able to operate with that lavishness, opulence and divine pomp which We are used to displaying in Our works. If in Creation there had been another will, it would have prevented Us from using the sumptuousness, magnificence and divine pomp We had in the whole Creation; it could have hindered the expanse of the heavens, the multiplicity of the stars, the vastness of the light of the sun, the variety of so many created things – it would have set a limit before Us. This is why Our Will wants to be alone, in order to do what It can do, and wants to do; and therefore It wants the human will with Itself, concurring as spectator and admirer of what It wants to do in it. But it must be convinced – if it wants to live in my Will – that its will cannot act, but must serve to enclose Mine in it, to let It do Its works with all freedom, with all the sumptuousness, with the opulence of grace and with the pomp of Its divine varieties. The first thing We want is absolute freedom – We want to be free, my daughter, whatever the sacrifice might be that We ask, or the works that We want to do. If it were not so, the living in my Will would be a way of speaking, but would not exist in reality.”

Dear Jesus became silent, and I kept thinking of all that Jesus had told me; and I said to myself: ‘He is right that the human will cannot act before the Sanctity and Power of His Will. Of its own, it already puts itself in its place of nothingness; it takes too much to act in the face of a Will that is Divine; it feels incapable, and by itself it would pray the Divine not to give it the great misfortune of letting it form even a single motion, or a fiber, of its own will. But my cross... and You know what a maze You put me into... I feel hampered and humiliated unto dust... Being in need of, You know who... without being able to help myself – and not for one day, or one year. Oh! how hard this is. I know that only your Will gives me the strength, the grace, for by myself I could not have endured.’ And I felt such bitterness as to feel myself dying. And my always lovable Jesus, compassionating me, continued: My daughter, when my Divine Will wants to do a fulfilled act in the creature... And do you know what a fulfilled act of my Will means? It means a complete act of God, in which He encloses sanctity, beauty, love, power and light, such as to leave Heaven and earth astounded. God Himself must feel enraptured, but so much, as to form His dwelling, His throne of glory in this, His complete act, which will serve Him, and will descend like beneficial dew for the good of all creatures. Well then, in order to do this fulfilled act, I had to dispose a new cross upon you, given to no one else, in order to mature you and make arise in you the dispositions that were needed – for you to receive, and for God to do this, His fulfilled act of His Will. With nothing one can do nothing, therefore in order for you to receive and for Us to give, We had to dispose new crosses which, united to the continuous crafting of Our Will, would prepare everything for an act so great.

You must know that my Fiat has never left you, and this is why you feel Its sweet impression; and ruling over each fiber, motion and desire of your will, jealous of you and of Its own fulfilled act It wanted to do, It kept and maintained Its royal dominion. But do you know why? Here is a sweet and dear secret – listen to Me: as my Will dominated your mind, your gaze, your word, so did It form your Jesus in your mind, His gaze in yours, His word in yours; as It dominated your fibers, motion and heart, so did It form His fibers, the motion and the Heart of your Jesus in you. And as It dominated over your works, steps and your entire being, so did It form His works, His steps, the whole of Jesus within you. Now, if my Will had given you the freedom to let yours act, even in the smallest and most innocent things, It would not have been able to form your Jesus in you; and I cannot, nor do I want to live of a human will. Nor would my Volition have taken on the commitment of forming Me in your soul, had It not been certain that I would find my own Will, which animated my own Humanity. Its Kingdom on earth will be precisely this – to form as many Jesuses for as many creatures as want to live of Divine Will. With Jesus in the souls Its Kingdom will have Its sumptuousness, sublimeness, and Its opulence of things unheard-of; and It will be secured. Then, in the Kingdom of my Divine Fiat, will I have as many living Jesuses that love Me, glorify Me, and will give Me complete glory. This is why I so much long for this Kingdom; and you too – long for It, and occupy yourself with nothing else. Let Me do, trust Me, and I will take care of everything.”

After this, I continued to think of the Divine Will; and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, the light – symbol of my Divine Will – the very nature of it, is to spread as much as it can; and whomever it finds, it denies its light to no one, whether they want it or not. At the most, it may happen that those who want the light make use of it, and may use it in order to do even great works, while those who do not want it don’t do any good, but still cannot deny that they have received the good of the light. Such is my Will – more than light It expands everywhere, It invests everyone and everything; and the sign that the soul possesses It is her feeling the need, together with It, to give herself to all, to do good to all. With her acts she runs to all and would want to make as many Jesuses in order to give Him to each one. My Will belongs to all, I am the Jesus of all, and therefore only then am I content - when the creature makes my Will, my Life, her own, and wants to give Me to everyone. She is my joy and my continuous feast.”

Fiat!!!

August 23, 1936

The little field assigned to the creature within the immensity of the Divine Will. Jesus places His life at the creatures’ disposal, as long as He obtains that they live in the Divine Will. The greatest prodigy of Creation is the Virgin.

I continue my abandonment in the Fiat. My poor mind swims within Its Divine Sea, and comprehends celestial secrets – but I am unable to repeat them, because those are not words from down here. While I am inside this Divine Sea I look at Its immensity - there is not one being or anything that can escape It, everyone and everything form their life and receive it in the Divine Volition. But what can the creature take of this immensity? Just little drops, such is her littleness. But while she takes the little drops, she cannot go out of this immensity; she feels it flowing inside and out, to the right and to the left – everywhere, unable to sneak out of it even just for one instant. Oh! Divine Will, how admirable You are! You are all mine, You raise me within You, I find You everywhere, You love me always, unto forming the life of my life.

But while my mind was wandering within this Sea, my sweet Jesus, all goodness, came out from within this Sea, and drawing near me, told me: “Daughter of my Volition, did you see how the immensity of my Fiat is unreachable? No created mind, as holy as it might be, can embrace It and see where Its boundaries end. All have their place in It; even more, each creature has her little field within the immensity of my Divine Will. But who works this little field that was assigned to the creature? One who lives in It, because by her living in It, my Will makes Itself the first worker, and taking the creature upon Its lap, It keeps her occupied, identified with the work It wants her to do in the tiny little field that was given to her in my Will. And since she possesses Its Creative Strength, whatever the creature might do in a century, together with It she does in one hour. So, in an hour she can acquire a century of love, of works, of sacrifices, of divine knowledges, of profound adorations; and after the work my Will calls the soul to rest in order to delight each other and rest together; and then, seeing the beauty of the little field and the joy that they experience, in order to delight each other more they return to work. It is an alternation of work and of rest; in fact, among the many qualities that my Divine Will possesses, there is continuous motion and attitude. It is never idle; on the contrary, to each creature It gave Its continuous work in order to be glorified and to do good to all. Lazy beings do not exist in my Will, but rather, in It everything is work: if she loves, that is work; if she applies herself to getting to know Us, it is work; if she adores Us, if she suffers, if she prays, that is work – and divine work, not human, which, converting into a little coin of infinite value, lets her acquire the value with which to make her little field bigger.

Now, my daughter, you must know that it is my absolute Will for the creature to do my Will. How I long to see her reigning and operating in It; how I wish to hear her say: ‘The Will of God is mine, whatever God wants I too want; whatever God does I do as well.’ Now, because it is my Will for her to live in It, I had to give her the means, the necessary aids; and here comes my Humanity, placing Itself at the creatures’ disposal in the tiny little field of the immensity of my Will assigned to her, as I display my strength in order to sustain her weakness, my pains as help of hers, my Love so as to hide hers inside Mine, my Sanctity with which to cover her, my Life as prop and support of hers, and to make of It the model for her; in sum, my Divine Will must find as many Jesuses for as many creatures as want to live of my Will. Only then will It no longer find any hindrance on their part, because I will keep them hidden within Me, and my Will will have to deal with Me more than with them; and the creatures will find all the aids, necessary and overabundant, in order to live of my Will. This is God’s usual way – that when He wants something He gives everything that is needed so that what He wants may have its fulfillment.

Therefore, I would want creatures to know that I place Myself at the disposal of those who want to live of my Will; they will find my Life that will make up for everything that is needed in order to have them live in the sea of my Divine Volition. Otherwise, their tiny little field within my immensity will remain without work, and therefore without fruit, without happiness and without joy; they will be like those who live under the sun, doing nothing – the sun will serve only to burn them and give them such ardent thirst as to feel themselves dying. So, all creatures, by right of creation, find themselves all within this immensity, but if their will does not deal with Mine, they live off of themselves, they will feel all goods burning for them, and will have a thirst for passions, for sin, for weaknesses, that will torment them. Therefore, there is no greater evil than not to live of my Will.”

After this, I was doing my round in the acts done by the Divine Will in Creation, and as I arrived at the Conception of the Most Holy Virgin, my sweet Jesus made me pause and told me: “My daughter, the greatest prodigy of Creation is the Virgin – the Divine Volition that subdued Her human will from the very first instant of Her Conception, and the will of this holy creature that subdued the Divine Fiat. One conquered the other - both of them were winners; and as the Divine Volition entered as dominating King into Her human will, so did the chains of the great divine prodigies begin in this excelling creature. The Uncreated Power poured Itself into the created power, but so much, that She could sustain the whole Creation as if It were a bunch of straw; and all created things felt the created power within the Uncreated Power sustaining them and contributing to their conservation. Oh! how honored they felt – and happier, because a created power was flowing in everything as their Queen, to sustain them and preserve them. Her power was such that She ruled over all – even over Her Creator; She was the Invincible One, who, with the Power of the Divine Fiat conquered everyone and everything; even more, all let themselves be conquered by this Divine Empress, because She held a powerful and enrapturing force that no one could resist. Even the demons felt debilitated and did not know where to hide from this insuperable Power.

The whole of the Supreme Being poured Himself into this created will, which had been subdued by the Divine Will; and the Infinite Love poured Itself into the finite love, and everyone and everything felt loved by this holy creature. Her love was so great that, more than air, it let itself be breathed by all, in such a way that this Queen of love felt the need to love all, as Mother and Queen of all. Our Beauty invested Her, but so much, that She possesses the strength, the love, the goodness, the enrapturing grace, such that, while She loves, She makes Herself be loved by all, even from things that possess no reason. So, there was no act, love, prayer, adoration, reparation, which would not fill Heaven and earth; She exercised Her queenshipship over all, and Her love, and everything She did, flowed through the heavens, in the sun, in the wind - in everything; and Our Supreme Being felt loved, prayed, in all created things, by this holy creature. A new life was flowing everywhere – She loved Us for all, and made Us be loved by all. It was the Uncreated Will that had had Its place of honor in the created will, and could give Us everything, and requite Us for Our having placed the whole Creation at Her disposal. Hence, with the Conception of this Great Queen began the true Life of God in the creature, and the life of the creature in God, and – oh! the exchanges of love, of strength, of beauty, of light, between One and the other!

Therefore, the prodigies were continuous and unheard-of, alternating in Her; Heaven and earth were stupefied, the Angels remained enraptured before my Divine Will operating in the creature. My daughter, this Great Lady, by living in the Divine Volition felt, by deeds, as Queen of everyone and of everything, and also Queen of the Great Divine King; but so much, that She Herself formed the door in Heaven, to make the Eternal Word descend; She prepared for Him the way and the room of Her womb, in which He was to form His dwelling; and in the emphasis of Her ruling love She would say to Me: ‘Descend, Oh Eternal Word – You will find in me your Heaven, your joys, that same Will that reigns in the Three Divine Persons.’ Not only this, but She formed the door and the way in order to let souls ascend unto the Celestial Fatherland; and only because this Virgin lived on earth of Divine Will as It is lived in Heaven could the Blessed enter into the celestial regions and enjoy Its delights, because this Celestial Mother keeps them covered, enveloped and as though hidden within Her glory and in all the acts She did in the Divine Will. So, the Blessed feel within their joys the love, the works, the power of this Mother and Queen, which render them happy. What can my Will not do? All possible and imaginable goods; and in the creature in whom It reigns It places such power as to reach the point of saying to her: ‘Do whatever you want – command, take, give; I will never deny you anything. Your strength is irresistible, your power debilitates Me. Therefore I place everything into your hands, that you may act as Owner and Queen.’

Now, you must know that this holy creature, even from Her Conception, felt the heartbeat of my Fiat within Hers, and in each heartbeat She loved Me; and the Divinity loved Her back with doubled love in each heartbeat of Hers. In Her breath She felt the breath of the Divine Volition, and She loved Us in each breath; and We requited Her with Our love, doubled in each breath of Hers. She felt the motion of the Fiat in Her hands, in Her step, in Her feet; in all of Her being She felt the Life of the Divine Will and what It did; and in everything She loved Us, for Herself and for all; and We loved Her always - always; in each instant Our love ran like rapid torrent. Therefore She kept Us always attentive and in feast, to receive Her love and give Our own; so much so, that She came to cover all sins and the creatures themselves with Our love. This is why Our Justice remained disarmed by this invincible lover, and We can say that She did whatever She wanted with the Supreme Being. Oh! how I wish that all would comprehend what living in the Divine Will means, so as to render all happy and holy.”

Reflections between Creator and creature. Inseparability from each other. How in each instant God asks the creature to receive the Life of His Will. How with one who decides to live of It, God covers everything she has done with His Divine Will.

I am always in the arms of the Divine Volition. I felt Its Creative Power inside and outside of me, such that, giving me no time for anything else, I want and I ask, for myself and for all, for nothing other than the coming of the Divine Will to reign upon the earth. My God, what a magnetic force It possesses; such that, while It gives Itself completely and invests you from all sides, at the same time It takes everything that belongs to the littleness of the poor creature.

But while my mind was immersed in the crowd of so many thoughts concerning the Divine Fiat, my always lovable Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness, told me: “My blessed daughter, Our infinite Love is always excessive and gives of the incredible. It is enough to tell you that It is so great, that We do nothing other than reflect Ourselves continuously in the creature – she lives under Our continuous reflections: if We move, Our incessant motion reflects itself in her, in order to give her life; Our Love reflects Itself in her in order to tell her, constantly: ‘I love you’; Our power reflects itself in her in order to sustain her. In sum, Our wisdom reflects itself and directs her; Our light reflects itself and illumines her; Our goodness reflects itself and compassionates her; Our beauty reflects itself and embellishes her; Our Supreme Being pours Itself without ever ceasing over the creature. But this is not all. As We reflect Ourselves in her, so does she reflect herself in Us; so, if she thinks, We feel the reflection of her thoughts; if she speaks, she reflects her word in Us; We feel the reflection of her heartbeat deep inside Our bosom; the motion of her works, the treading of her steps. Such inseparability passes between the Divine Being and the human, that One pours Himself constantly into the other.

Our Love is so great, that We place Ourselves in the condition as if We could not be without the creature. But this is nothing yet – if Our Love does not give unto excesses, It is not content: now, knowing that if the creature does not possess the life of Our Divine Volition, there is a great difference between her reflections and Ours, assuming the attitude of supplicating Love, as she prays, It prays her to let Our Will reign in her mind; if she speaks, It begs her to let It reign in her words; if she palpitates, works and walks, It beseeches her to let my Divine Will reign in everything. In sum, in each thing she does, It has a moan, a sigh, a plea, which, enveloping her, says to her constantly: ‘Receive my Fiat; let yourself be invested by my Fiat. O please! possess my Fiat; let Me see in you the life of my Fiat reigning, dominating and celebrating. I pray you – do not deny Me your will, and I will give you Mine.’ And if It obtains this, as though having obtained the most precious thing, It encloses her within Its Love, It veils her with Its light, and gives rise to Its perennial feast in the creature. It changes Its moans and sighs into joys, and placing Itself as her guard, my Will, triumphant, hears in her the notes of Its love, saying on both sides: ‘We love each other of one single love; we have and live the same Life – Your Fiat is Yours and mine.’ So, in her arises the harmony, the order of her Creator. Our Will, Our Love, has obtained Its purpose; there is nothing left for It but to enjoy Its beloved creature.

This is why, my daughter, We so much take to heart giving the gift of Our Will as life, which is Our deep longing from all centuries - or rather, Our eternal longing - that We have been yearning for the creature to be with the portent of Our Will in her; We felt the joy, the happiness of the many lives of Ours bilocated, multiplied and formed in them. Otherwise, the Creation would not have been so great after all; and if We created so many things and issued them to the light of day, it was because this was to serve for the portent of portents – that of forming, by virtue of Our Fiat, Our life in the creature. And if it were not so, it would be for Us as if We had done nothing. Therefore, content your Jesus, give peace to my Love that is constantly delirious; and, unifying yourself with Me, long, pray and ask that my Will may reign in you and in all.” And as He was saying this, He took a veil of light and covered me completely, and I could not come out from within it.

After this, I continued to think of the Divine Will, and – oh! how many sweet and dear surprises passed through my mind. Oh! if I could express them with words, I would make the whole world astounded, and all would love to possess the Divine Will; but, alas! the language of Heaven does not adapt itself to the language of the earth; and so I am forced to move on. And my beloved Jesus, coming back to His little and poor ignorant daughter, with an unspeakable love, told me: “Daughter of my Volition, listen to Me, pay attention to Me – I want to tell you of the act most beautiful, most tender, and of love most intense, of my Fiat. Now, you must know that all the acts, thoughts, words - past, present and future - are all present before the Supreme Being; hence, the creature did not yet exist in time, and her acts were dazzling before Us. And why this? Because the prime act of the creature is done by my Fiat; there is not one thought, word or work, which my Fiat does not initiate. It can be said that the creature is formed in God first with all of her acts, and then We issue her to the light of day.

Now, the creature, by doing her will, detaches herself from the divine acts, but cannot destroy the fact that the life of her acts has had the Fiat as its beginning – all of them were Its properties, but by using her own free will she has exchanged the divine acts with the human. But if man denies the One who gave life to his acts, my Will does not deny Its own acts. Therefore, listen to the greatest excess of the Love of my Will: as soon as the creature decides with immutable firmness to want to live of my Will, letting It reign and dominate within her, Our infinite goodness is so great, and so is Our Love, which knows not how to resist a true decision from the creature – more so, since It does not want to see acts dissimilar from Ours in her – listen to what It does: It covers with my Will everything she has done up to that point, It molds them, It transforms them with Its light, in such a way that It sees everything through the prodigy of Its transforming Love – that everything is Its Will in the creature; and with Love, fully Divine, It continues to form Its life and Its acts in the creature. Is this not an excessive and astounding Love of my Volition; and together with this, Its making everyone decide – even the most ungrateful ones – to let my Will live in them, knowing that It wants to put everything aside and cover and make up for all that is lacking in them of my Will? This also says the absolute Will of Ours, of wanting to reign in the midst of creatures, as It does not want to look at anything, or at what the creature lacks, wanting to give to her, not as recompense, checking on whether she deserves it or not, but as a free gift from Our great generosity, and as the fulfillment of Our own Will – and to fulfill Our Will is everything for Us.”

How the Queen of Heaven, in Her Conception, was conceived in the merits, in the life, in the love and pains of the future Redeemer, to then be able to conceive the Divine Word within Her, for Him to come and save the creatures.

My poor mind, immersing itself in the Divine Fiat, found in act the Conception of the Immaculate Queen. It¹²⁸ was all festive, and called all around Itself, Angels and Saints, to show them the unheard-of prodigy, the graces, the love with which It called out of nothing this excelling Creature, that all might know Her and sing Her praises as their Queen and Mother of all.

¹²⁸ The Divine Fiat

But while I remained surprised and would have stayed there who knows for how long if my sweet Jesus had not called me, He said to me: “I want to honor my Celestial Mother, I want to narrate the story of Her Immaculate Conception. I alone can speak of It, because I am the Author of so great a prodigy. Now, my daughter, the first act of this Conception was a Fiat of Ours, pronounced with such solemnity and with such fullness of graces, as to enclose everything and everyone. Everything did We centralize in this Conception of the Virgin; Our Fiat, in which there is no past or future, held the Incarnation of the Word as present, and made Her to be conceived and incarnated within the very Incarnation of Me, future Redeemer. My Blood, which I was as though in act of shedding, watered Her, embellished Her, confirmed Her, fortified Her constantly in a divine manner. But this was not enough to my Love. All of Her acts, words and steps, were conceived in my acts, words and steps first, and then received life. My Humanity was the refuge, the hiding place, the embodiment of this Celestial Creature; so, if She loved Us, Her love was incarnated and conceived in my Love, and – oh! how She loved Us! Her love enclosed everything and everyone; I can say that She loved Us as a God knows how to love. She had Our same follies of Love, toward Us and for all creatures, such that, by loving once, It loves - loves always, without ever ceasing. Her prayer was conceived in my prayer, and therefore it had an immense value, such power over Our Supreme Being. And who could deny Her anything? Her pains, Her sorrows, Her martyrdoms, which were many, were conceived in my Humanity first, and then She felt within Her the life of pains and martyrdoms so excruciating – all animated by divine strength. Therefore it can be said that She was conceived in Me; from Me came Her life, and everything I did and suffered lined up around this Holy Creature, to court Her and to pour Myself constantly over Her and be able to say to Her: ‘You are the Life of my Life, You are all beautiful, You are the first Redeemed One. My Divine Fiat has molded You, It has blown Its breath upon You and made You to be conceived in my works, in my very Humanity.’

Now, my daughter, this conceiving of this Celestial Creature in the Incarnate Word, was done by Us with highest wisdom, with unreachable power, with inexhaustible love, and with the decorum that befits Our divine works. I, Word of the Father, having to descend from Heaven in order to incarnate Myself in the womb of a Virgin, the mere virginity, and Our having made Her exempt from original sin, was not sufficient to the Sanctity of my Divinity; therefore it was necessary for Our Love and Our Sanctity that this Virgin be conceived in Me first, with all those prerogatives, virtues and beauties which the Life of the Incarnate Word was to possess; and because of this I was then able to be conceived in She who had been conceived in Me, and in Her I found my Heaven, the Sanctity of my Life, my very Blood which had generated Her and watered Her many times. I found my very Will which, communicating to Her Its divine fecundity, formed the Life of Her Son, and Son of the Father. My Divine Fiat, in order to render Her worthy to conceive Me, kept Her invested and under Its continuous empire that possesses all acts as if they were one act alone, so as to give Her everything; It called into action all of my foreseen merits, the whole of my Life, and poured It constantly into Her beautiful soul.

This is why I alone can tell the true story of the Immaculate Conception and of the whole of Her life – because I conceived Her in Me and I am aware of everything; and if the Holy Church speaks of the Celestial Queen, they can only tell the first letters of the alphabet of Her sanctity, greatness and gifts with which She was enriched. If you knew the contentment I feel when I speak of my Celestial Mother, who knows how many questions you would ask Me, to give Me the joy of speaking of She whom I love so much, and who has so much loved Me.”

Fiat!!!

December 20, 1936

The Divine Fiat made the Virgin to be conceived in each creature, so that each one might have a Mother for himself. Endowment that God gave to the Virgin. Triumphs and victories of God; triumphs and victories of the Virgin, with which all creatures are endowed.

My Highest Good, Jesus, keeps me as though immersed within the great prodigy of the Sovereign Queen, and it seems He has the intent of wanting to speak of what God operated in this Great Lady. And assuming a festive attitude, and with unspeakable joy, He says to Me: “Listen to Me” – continuing on with the same topic that is written above – “my blessed daughter, the prodigies are unheard-of; the surprises I will narrate to you will cause all to be astounded; I feel the need of love to make known what We have done with this Celestial Mother, and the great good that all generations have received.

Well then, you must know that in the act of conceiving this Holy Virgin, Our Divine Will, which possesses everything and embraces all with Its immensity, and possesses the all-seeingness of all possible and imaginable beings, as well as Its exclusive virtue, that whenever It operates, It does universal works – as soon as It conceived Her, with Its creative virtue It called all creatures to be conceived in the Heart of this Virgin. But this was not enough for Our Love; giving unto the most incredible excesses, It made this Virgin to be conceived in each creature, so that each one might have a Mother all for himself, and they might feel Her Maternity, Her Love, in the depth of their souls, such that, while She keeps them conceived within Herself, as more than Her own children, bilocating Herself, She is conceived in each creature, to place Herself at their disposal, to raise them, guide them, free them from dangers, and with Her maternal power, feed them the milk of Her Love and the food with which She Herself is nourished – that is, the Divine Fiat.

Our Will, having free life in Her, Its total dominion, with Its power called all into this Celestial Creature, to have the joy of seeing all enclosed in Her, so as to hear Her say: ‘My children and Yours are all enclosed in Me already - therefore I love You for all’. Then Our Will bilocated Her in all and in each one, so as to feel in each soul the love of this, Our daughter, all beautiful and all love. We can say: ‘There is not one creature within whom She did not take on the commitment of loving Us.’ Our Fiat elevated Her so high as to give Her everything, and from the very first instant of Her life, We constituted Her Queen of Our Fiat, Queen of Our Love. And when She loved Us, in Her love We could feel Her Maternity, harmonizing the love of all creatures, and – oh! how beautiful She was, as She formed one Love out of all. How She wounded Us! She delighted Us unto making Us feel Ourselves languishing. Her Love disarmed Us, It made Us see all things – heavens, sun, earth, seas and creatures – covered and hidden within Her Love. Oh! how beautiful it was to see Her and hear Her, acting as Mother in each creature. And forming in them Her sea of love, She would send Her notes, Her arrows, Her loving darts to Her Creator; and acting as true Mother, She would bring them to Us, unto the foot of Our Throne, within the sea of Her love so as to make Us look at them, to incline Us toward them; and with the strength of the Our Divine Volition, She would impose Herself on Us, She would place them in Our arms, She would make Us caress them and kiss them, and would make Us give surprising graces. How many sanctities were formed and impetrated by this Celestial Mother! And in order to be sure, She would leave Her love as their guard.

Furthermore, you must know that from the very first instant of the life of this Celestial Creature, Our Love was so great that We endowed Her with all Our divine qualities; hence, She had Our Power, Wisdom, Love, Goodness, Light, Beauty, as Her endowment, and all the rest of Our divine qualities. Indeed, to all creatures, in issuing them to the light of day, We give Our endowment – none of them is born if she is not endowed by her Creator; but because they move away from Our Will, it can be said that they don’t even know it. On the other hand, this Holy Virgin never moved away; She lived perennial life within the interminable seas of Our Fiat, therefore She grew together with Our attributes, and as She formed Her acts within Our divine qualities, so did She form seas of power, of wisdom, of light... We can say that by living with the knowledge of Us, We gave Her continuous lessons on Who Her Creator was, and She grew in Our knowledges and got to know so much of the Supreme Being, that no Angel or Saint could reach Her; on the contrary, they are all ignorant compared to Her, because no one grew and lived life together with Us. She entered into Our divine secrets, into the innermost hiding places of Our Divine Being with no beginning and with no end, into Our joys and everlasting beatitudes. And with Our Power, which She held in Her power, She dominated Us and exercised lordship over Us; and We let Her do it, even more, We delighted in Her lordship, and in order to render Her more happy, We gave Her Our chaste embraces, Our smiles of love, Our condescension, saying to Her: ‘Do whatever you’d like.’

The Love of Our Will toward the creatures and Its great desire to have them live in It is so great, that if It obtains this, It launches them into an abyss of graces, of love, to the point of drowning them; so much so, that the human littleness is forced to say: ‘Enough, I am drowned now. I feel I am being devoured by your own Love – I can take no more.’ Now you must know that Our Love is not yet content, It never says ‘enough’ – the more It gives, the more It wants to give; and when We give it is Our feast, We set the table before one who loves Us and press her to stay with Us, to live life together.

Now, my daughter, listen to another prodigy of Our Fiat in this Celestial Creature, and how She loved Us and rendered Her Maternity extendible to all creatures: in each act She did – if She loved, prayed, adored, if She suffered, in anything, even the breath, the heartbeat, the step – because Our Fiat, Our Supreme Being, was present, it was triumphs and victories that It achieved in the acts of the Virgin, and the Celestial Lady triumphed and was victorious in God, in each instant of Her admirable and prodigious life. These were triumphs and victories between God and the Virgin. But this is nothing; in fact, acting as true Mother, She called all Her children, and covered and hid all of their acts within Hers, and She covered them with Her triumphs and with Her victories, endowing them with all of Her acts together with all Her victories and Her triumphs. And then, with a tenderness and a love such as to break hearts and make Us feel conquered, She would say to Us: ‘Adorable Majesty, look at them, they are all my children. My victories and my triumphs belong to my children - these are my conquests that I give to them; and if the Mama has won and triumphed, so have Her children won and triumphed.’ And She obtained so many triumphs and victories in God, for as many acts as all creatures would do, so that all might be able to say: ‘I am endowed with the acts of my Queen Mama; and as a seal, She has invested them for me with the triumphs and victories that She achieved with Her Creator.’ Therefore, whoever wants to become a saint finds the endowment of his Celestial Mother and Her triumphs and victories, to be able to reach the greatest sanctity: one who is weak finds the strength of the sanctity of his Mama and Her triumphs in order to be strong; one who is afflicted or suffering finds the endowment of the pains of his Celestial Mother in order to obtain the triumph and victory of resignation; the sinner finds the victory and triumph of forgiveness. In sum, all find in this Sovereign Queen the endowment, the support, the help for the state they are in. And, oh! how beautiful it is - it is the scene most moving, enrapturing and enchanting – to see this Celestial Mother in each creature acting as their Mama; We feel Her loving and praying in Her children. This is the greatest prodigy between Heaven and earth – a greater good We could not give to the creatures.

Now, my daughter, I must tell you of a sorrow of the Celestial Mother: in the face of so much love, the ingratitude of creatures. This endowment that She gives with so many sacrifices, unto the heroism of sacrificing the life of Her Son-God, with so many atrocious pains – some don’t even know it; some take only a small interest¹²⁹ and conduct a life poor in sanctity. Oh! how She suffers in seeing Her children poor! To possess immense riches of love, of grace, of sanctity – because Hers are not material riches, but the riches of this Celestial Mother are riches such that She laid down Her life in order to acquire them – and for Her to see that Her children do not possess them, and keeping them without the purpose for which She acquired them, is a continuous sorrow; and this is why She wants to make known this great good to all, because if it is not known it cannot be possessed. And since She acquired these endowments by virtue of the Divine Fiat that reigned in Her and loved Her so much as to let Her do whatever She wanted, and reach wherever She wanted to reach for the good of creatures, it will therefore be my Divine Will reigning that will make creatures aware of these celestial endowments and will let them take possession of them.

Pray, then, that so great a good may be known and wanted by creatures.”

The Celestial and Divine Mother, and the human Mother. Fast race of love of God, in which He makes this Mother, by virtue of the Fiat, generate Her Jesus in each creature.

Continuing the same topic on the Most Holy Virgin. A light descending from the bosom of the Eternal One invests my poor mind; but it is a speaking light, speaking so many things about the Celestial Sovereign, that I don't know how to be able to repeat them all. But my beloved Jesus, with His usual goodness, says to me: "Courage, my daughter, I will help you – I will administer to you the words. I feel the irresistible need to make known Who this Mother of Mine is, the qualities, the privileges, and the great good that She does and can do to all generations. Therefore listen to Me, and I will tell you things never before thought-of either by you or by others, such as to stir the most incredulous, ungrateful and sinful ones; I will tell you to what extent Our Love can reach.

Well then, Our Love gave Itself no peace – It ran and ran, but with such rapidity as to engage the whole of Our Divine Being into giving unto such excesses as to astound Heaven and earth, and make all exclaim: 'How is it possible that a God has loved the creatures so much?' And so, listen, my daughter, to what Our great Love does: the creatures had a Celestial Father, but Our Love was not content – in Its delirium and folly of love It wanted to form for them a Celestial Mother and a terrestrial Mother, so that, if the cares, love and tendernesses of the Celestial Paternity should not be enough for them in order to love Him, the love and unspeakable tendernesses of this Celestial and human Mother would be the link of connection which, banishing any distance, fear or apprehension, would make them abandon themselves in Her arms, to let themselves be conquered by Her love, so as to love He Who had formed Her for love of them and in order to be loved. Therefore the most astounding portents were needed, and a Love that never says 'enough' and that only a God can do. In order to obtain this intent, listen now to what It does: We called out of nothing this Holy Creature and making use of the same seed of the human generations, though purified, We gave Her life. From the first instant of this life, the celestial virtue of Our Divine Fiat united to it, and together with it, It formed Divine Life and human life, It raised Her Divinely and humanly, and sharing with Her the divine fecundity, It formed in Her the great prodigy of being able to conceive a Man and God: with the human seed She was able to form the Humanity of the Incarnate Word, and with the seed of the Fiat She could conceive the Divine Word. With this any distance ceased between God and man; by being human and Celestial, this Virgin brought man and God closer, and gave the Brother to all of Her children, Whom they could all approach, and live life together; and seeing in Him and in Her the same guises, invested by the same human nature, they would have such trust and love as to let themselves be conquered, and love She who so much loved them. How much love does a good mother not win from her children? More so, since She was powerful, rich, and would lay down Her life in order to rescue Her children. And what did She not do to render them happy and holy?

So, the Humanity of the Word and the Mother, Celestial and human, are like pledges in order to conquer the love of all, and tell them with all love: 'Do not fear, come to Us, We are like you in everything. Come, and We will give you everything.' 'My arms will always be ready to embrace you; and in order to defend you, I will keep you enclosed inside my Heart, to give you everything. It is enough to tell you that I am your Mother, and that my Love is so great that I keep you conceived inside my Heart.'

But all this is nothing yet. I was God, I was to operate as God. Our Love kept running and running, and went on inventing new devices of love, yet more excessive. You yourself will remain stupefied in hearing them; and when the human generations will hear them, they will love Us so much as to repay Us, for the most part, for the great race of Our Love. Now, pay attention to Me, and thank Me, my blessed daughter, for what I am about to tell you: for Our Love it was not enough, as I said before, that by virtue of Our Fiat all be conceived in the Heart of this Virgin, to have the true Maternity, not by words, but by deeds; nor was it enough that She be conceived in each creature, so that each one might have a Mother all for himself, and have the full right and possession, all being Her children. Now Our Love moved on to another excess. First you must know that this Celestial Queen, by possessing all the fullness of Our Divine Fiat – which possesses by Its own nature the generative and bilocating virtue – together with the Divine Fiat She can generate and bilocate Her Son-God as many times as She wants. And so Our Love imposes Itself on this Celestial Creature and, delirious, by virtue of my Fiat that She possessed, gives Her the power to generate Her Jesus in each creature; She makes Him be born, She nurtures Him, She does for the creature everything that is needed in order to form the Life of Her dear Son. She makes up for all that the creature does not do for Him: if He cries, She dries His tears; if He is cold, She warms Him; if He suffers, She suffers together with Him; and while She mothers and raises Him, She mothers and raises the creature. It can be said that She raises them together, She loves them with one single love, She guides them, nourishes them, clothes them; and with Her maternal arms She forms two wings of light, and covering them, She hides them inside Her Heart, to give them the most beautiful rest.

Therefore, it was not enough for Our Love that the Word would incarnate Himself in order to generate one single Jesus for all and give one single Mother to all the human generations – no, no, Our Love would not have been excessive. Its race was so fast as to find no one to stop It; and only when, with Its Power, It generated this Mother in each soul, and let Her generate Her Jesus, so that each one would have Mother and Son at his disposal – then did It somehow calm down. Oh! how beautiful it is to see this Celestial Mother, all love, and all intent, in each creature, on generating Her Jesus, in order to form a portent of love and of grace. And this is the greatest honor and glory that Her Creator has given Her, and the strongest love that God could give to creatures. Nor should anyone be marveled: Our Fiat can do anything and can reach anywhere; everything is in Its wanting it so – if It does want it, it is already done. Rather, the marvel should be in knowing unto what excesses Our Love toward man carried Us.”

The Celestial Heiress. How She calls Her children to inherit Her goods. How She reaches the point of endowing souls with Her Maternal Love in order to form more mamas to Jesus.

Continuing with the same topic. I was concerned about what is written above, and was saying to myself: ‘Is it possible? All this excessive chain of love that seems to never end?! I know that Our Lord can do anything, but, getting to this point, up to making this Celestial Mother descend from the height of Her Sanctity into the depth of our souls, and nurture us like most tender children of Hers; and not only this, but for Her to generate Her Son Jesus and raise us together with Him – this seems incredible.’ And even though I felt my heart split with love and joy - more so, since I felt Her inside of me, concealed within Her light, nurturing me as Her daughter with an unspeakable love, and together with me nurturing Her dear Son – yet, I felt I shouldn’t speak of it or write it, also so as not to stir up difficulties and doubts. But my dear Jesus, assuming an imposing look, such that I could not resist Him, told me: “My daughter, I want you to write what I told you. In what I told you there are seas of love by which the creatures will be invested, and I do not want to be suffocated. Therefore if you don’t write, I will withdraw. Have you forgotten that I must win man by dint of love – but a love, such that he will find it hard to resist Us?”

Immediately I said Fiat, and my beloved Jesus, assuming His usual sweet and lovable appearance, with such love that I felt my heart crack, added: “My blessed daughter, there is nothing to doubt, my Being is all Love, and when it seems that I have given unto such excesses of love as to be unable to show any more excesses of love, as though starting anew, I come up with more and new excesses of love, more devices, as to surpass – oh! how greatly, the other excesses of love.

Now listen, my daughter, and you will be convinced of what I am telling you. Adam, by sinning, caused all human generations to inherit all evils, and having gone out of the beautiful inheritance of the Divine Will in which he lived in the opulence, lavishness and sumptuousness of the goods of His Creator, he lost the right to Our goods, and with him, all his descendants. But these goods were not destroyed – they exist and will exist; and when a good is not destroyed there is always the certainty that someone will come who will have the good of possessing it. Now, the Great Queen began Her life within the inheritance of this Divine Will – and with such abundance that She felt drowned in the goods of Her Creator; but so much, that She can render all other creatures happy and rich. Now, in this inheritance of the Fiat She inherited the fecundity, the Maternity, human and Divine; She inherited the Word of the Celestial Father; She inherited all human generations, and these will inherit all the goods of this Celestial Mother.

Therefore, as Her heirs, and as their Mother, She has the right to generate Her children in Her Maternal Heart. But this was not enough to Our Love and to Hers – She wanted to generate in each creature, and since She is the Heiress of the Divine Word, She has the power to have Him generated in each of them. How? If evils, passions, weaknesses, can be inherited, why should it not be possible to inherit the goods? And this is why the Celestial Heiress wants to make known the inheritance that She wants to give to Her children – She wants to give Her Maternity to the creatures, so that, as She generates Him, they may act as mamas to Him, and may love Him as She loved Him. She wants to form as many mamas for Her Jesus in order to place Him in safety, and so that no one may offend Him any more. In fact, the Love of Mother is so very different from the other loves; it is a love that burns always, a Love that lays down Its life for Its dear Son. See, She wants to endow the creature with Her Maternal Love and make them heirs of Her own Son. Oh! how honored She will feel in seeing that the creatures love Her Jesus with Her same Love of Mother. You must know that Her Love toward Me and toward creatures is so great, that unable to contain It any longer, She prayed Me to manifest to you what I have told you - Her great inheritance; that She is waiting for Her heirs, and what She can do for them - saying to Me: ‘My Son, do not wait any longer, hurry – manifest my great inheritance, and what I can do for them. I feel more honored, more glorified, if You Yourself reveal what your Mama can do, than if I said it Myself.’ However, all this will have its full effect, its palpitating life of this Sovereign Lady, when my Will is known and the creatures, within the inheritance of their Mother, will take possession of it.”

Then, afterwards, my sweet Jesus gave me a kiss, telling me: “Through the kiss one communicates the breath; and this is why I wanted to kiss you – to communicate, by my omnipotent Breath, the certainty of the goods and the great prodigy that my Mother will make for the human generations. My kiss is confirmation of what I want to do.” I remained surprised, and He added: “And you – give Me your kiss, to receive the deposit of all these goods and to re-confirm your will in Mine. If there is no one who gives and who receives, a good can neither be formed, nor can it be possessed.”

The feast that the Queen of Heaven prepared for Her Son Jesus at His birth. How love is a magnet that transforms and embellishes.

I was thinking of the Incarnation of the Word and the excesses of love of the Divinity, that seemed like seas which, enveloping all creatures, wanted to make them feel how much they loved them, to be loved in return; and investing them inside and out, they murmured continuously, without ever ceasing: ‘Love, love, love.... love do We give, and love do We want.’ And Our Celestial Mother, feeling wounded by the continuous cry of the Eternal One giving love and wanting love, appeared all attentive in requiting Her dear Son, the Incarnate Word, by forming, Herself, a surprise of love. Now, at that moment, the Celestial Infant came out of the Maternal womb, and I – oh! how I longed for Him; and He, throwing Himself into my arms, all festive, told me: “My daughter, see - My Mama prepared for Me the feast at my birth – but do you know how? She was aware of the seas of love that were coming down from Heaven in the descent of the Eternal Word; She heard the continuous cry of God, wanting to be loved in return; and Our yearnings, Our ardent sighs. She had felt my moans inside Her womb; often She heard Me cry and sob. Each of my moans was a sea of love that I sent to each heart, in order to be loved back; and in seeing Myself unloved, I cried, unto bursting into sobs; but each tear and sob doubled my seas of love in order to win the creatures by dint of love. But, no! they would convert these seas into pains, while I made use of the pains in order to convert them into yet more seas of love, for as many pains as they gave Me.

Now, my Mama wanted to make Me smile upon my being born, and prepare the feast for Her Baby Son. She knew that I cannot smile if I am not loved, nor can I take part in any feast if love does not run in it. Therefore, loving Me as true Mother, and possessing by virtue of my Fiat seas of love, Queen as She was of all Creation, She enveloped the heavens with Her love, and sealed each star with the ‘I love You, O Son, for myself and for all’. She enwrapped the sun within Her sea of love and impressed in each drop of light Her ‘I love You, O Son’; and She called the sun to invest its Creator with its light, so that, being warmed, He might feel in each drop of light the ‘I love You’ of His Mama. She invested the wind with Her love, and in each breath of it She impressed the ‘I love You, O Son’; and then She called it, so that it may caress Him with its breeze and make Him feel in each blowing of its breath: ‘I love You, I love You, O my Son’. She enveloped all the air within Her seas of love, so that, in breathing, He might feel the breath of love of His Mother. She covered the whole of the sea with Her sea of love, and each dart of the fish. And the sea murmured: ‘I love You, O my Son’; and the fish darted: ‘I love You, I love You’. There was nothing She did not invest with Her love; and with Her empire of Queen She commanded all to receive Her love, to give back to Her Jesus the love of His Mama. So, each bird – some trilled ‘love’, some twittered, some warbled ‘love’. Even each atom of the earth was invested by Her love. The breath of the animals reached Me with the ‘I love You’ of my Mother; and the hay was invested by Her love. Therefore, there was not one thing that I saw or touched in which I would not feel the sweetness of Her love. With this She prepared for Me the most beautiful feast upon my birth – a feast all of love. It was the requital of my great love that my sweet Mother made Me find; and it was Her love that calmed my crying, warmed Me while I was numb with cold in the manger. More so, since I found in Her love the love of all creatures, and for each of them She kissed Me, clasped Me to Her Heart, and loved Me with love of Mother on behalf of Her children; and I, feeling in each of them Her Maternal love, was drawn to love them as children of Hers and as dear brothers of Mine.

My daughter, what can the love animated by an Omnipotent Fiat not do? It makes itself magnet and draws us to each other in an irresistible way; it removes any dissimilarity; with its warmth it transforms and confirms the creature into the Beloved; then it embellishes her in an incredible way, so much so, that heaven and earth feel drawn to love her. Not to love a creature that loves Us is impossible for Us; the whole of Our divine power and strength become powerless and weak before the winning force of one who loves Us. Therefore, you too – give Me the feast that my Mother gave Me upon my birth; envelop heaven and earth with your ‘I love You, O Jesus’; let nothing escape you in which your love would not run – make Me smile. In fact, I was not born only once, but I am reborn always, and many times my births are without smile and without feast, and only my tears, sobs and wailings are left to Me, and an icy cold that makes Me shiver and all my limbs numb. Therefore, clasp Me to your heart in order to warm Me with your love, and with the light of my Will form for Me the garment to clothe Me, so that you too will make feast for Me; and I will make it for you by giving you more love and new knowledge of my Will.”

How each creature, from the beginning of his existence, holds an act of Divine Will, wanted and decided, which creates him, nurtures him, forms him. Feast of Jesus in each act of the creature that does His Will.

I am in the arms of the Divine Fiat, which surrounds me with Its light and recalls upon my poor existence Its continuous act of Its Will – but an act that gives me life, that loves me, without which I could not live, nor find anyone who really loves me. Therefore It wants me all intent on receiving this act of life of Its Will, that I may not expose It to not fulfilling what It wants to do upon me and to hindering Its Love. In fact, Love and Divine Will compete with each other – one cannot be without the other. Now, while I was under this act of the Fiat, my beloved Jesus, with a goodness that I cannot express, all tenderness, clasped me to His Divine Heart and told me: “My blessed daughter, my Will is everything for the creature; without It he could not even have life. You must know that each single creature, from the beginning of his existence, holds an act of my Will, wanted and decided, which carries with itself an intense act of Love toward him, or her, who begin their life. See then, how the creation of the creature begins – under the empire of an act of Love and of Divine Will, wanted with all the fullness of knowledge, so much so, that these two acts – Love and Divine Will – are equipped with all the graces, of power, wisdom, sanctity and beauty, from which the creature will live and carry out his life. Now, having formed Its first wanted act, It never moves away from upon the creature – It creates him, forms him, nurtures him, carries out Its operating act in order to strengthen him in Its wanted act. So, my Will and my Love run in each human act, they make themselves life, support, defense, refuge; and surrounding it with their power, they nourish this life: my Love embraces it and keeps it clasped to Its bosom; my Will surrounds it from all sides, more than a home, to keep Its wanted act safe, which my Fiat pronounced in order to call the creature into existence.

Now, this act, wanted by Our Fiat, is the greatest, the most powerful act and that which most glorifies Our Divine Being, so much so, that not even the Heavens can contain it or comprehend it. Does it seem trivial to you that Our Will runs in each act of creature and says to him, not with words, but with facts: ‘I am yours, at your disposal O please! recognize Me, I am life of yours, act of yours. If you recognize Me, you will give Me your little requital of love, and, though little, I want it, I demand it, to find refreshment from my continuous crafting, and the life I lay down for you.’ And my Love, so as not to remain behind my Fiat, feels the irresistible need to run in order to love each act of creature, saying to him, in each of his acts: ‘I love you’ and ‘Love Me’.

Moreover, everything is in whether this act, wanted by my Fiat, is recognized; then it makes unheard-of prodigies of sanctity and of beauty which will form the most beautiful ornaments for the Celestial Fatherland and the most refulgent lives that resemble their Creator. In fact, Our Will knows not how to make beings that do not resemble It; the first thing It casts into them is the likeness to Us, because It wants to find Itself in the operating act It carries out in the creature; otherwise It would say: ‘He is not like Me – hence he does not belong to Me.’ If, on the other hand, It is not recognized and not loved, then the creature forms the sorrow of my Volition, even though It runs in each act of the creature; and if It did not run, It would take his life. Therefore, in Its sorrow, It feels Its divine life rejected, the sanctity It wants to unfold hindered, and the seas of graces that were to inundate him, the beauty that was to cover him, being shut inside Its wanted act. So, my Will can say: ‘There is no sorrow similar to my sorrow.’ More so, since there was no good It did not want to give him, there is no act of his in which I have not placed of my own. Therefore, my daughter, be attentive, think that each act of yours hangs upon a Divine Will that envelops it, forms it and gives it life; and because It loves you, It wants you to know the life It gives you; and this, as confirmation of Its acts in you. So, content yourself with dying rather than hindering this act, wanted by my Will from the very beginning of your existence. How beautiful it is to be able to say: ‘I am Will of God, because It has done everything in me – It created me, It formed me, and will carry me in Its arms of light into the celestial regions as victory and triumph of the Omnipotent Fiat and of Its Love’.”

After this, my mind continued to swim in the sea of the Fiat, and - oh! how beautiful it was to see It, standing at attention, and as I breathed, palpitated, loved, so did It invest my breath in order to form Its divine breath, the divine heartbeat, and upon my little love It formed Its sea of Love; and It delighted so much, as to anxiously await my little human acts in order to form Its divine crafting. And my beloved Jesus celebrated the triumph, the work of the Fiat in my little soul; and, all goodness, told me: “Daughter of my Volition, how I delight in seeing that my Divine Will places something of Its own in the act of the creature; and since her act is small, It delights in dissolving it within Its great act, which has no boundaries; and as though triumphant, It says: ‘I have won – the victory is Mine’; and I, in each act of my Will in her, make my feast. Now, you must know that the satisfaction of Our Supreme Being in seeing the little human act dissolved – dissolved and identified as if it had lost its life to give life to Our Life – is so great, that We elevate this act, which We called ‘Our act’, unto the height of Our Eternal Act. Eternity, the whole of It, draws around and surrounds this act, and everything that has been done and will be done within the round of It identifies itself with this act in such a way that all Eternity belongs to this act; and this act remains in the bosom of the Eternal One and forms one more feast for Our Supreme Being, therefore one more feast for the whole of Heaven, and help, strength and defense for the whole earth. The creature doing Our Will, Our making her live in It, is the only satisfaction that We feel, it is the true requital that We receive for having created the Creation, it is a contest of love between Creator and creature, it is for Us to move in order to give ever new surprises of graces, for her to receive. Therefore, if the creature runs into Our Fiat, to give It free field of action, in Our emphasis of love We say: ‘The creature is repaying Us for everything We have done. After all, did We not make all things and the very creature so that she would do Our Will in everything? As she does this, it is enough for Us, even if she did nothing else.’ And if this is enough for Us, more so should it be enough for them – doing and living always in Our Will. By this, the creature is Ours, and We are fully hers; and do you think it is trivial for her to be able to say: ‘God is mine – all mine; nor can He escape me, because His Omnipotent Fiat keeps Him clasped to me?’”

Intertwinement between the Divine Will and the human. Tenderness of Jesus for one who lives in His Will, unto feeling happy for having cried and suffered. The refuge of the works of God.

I feel I am under the waves of the Eternal Fiat, and my poor mind runs, runs always, to be invested, and the waves run to invest me; and this investing of each other forms the most beautiful rest on both sides. But while I was running, my Highest Good, Jesus, making me pause, told me: “My daughter, how beautiful is the race of my Fiat with the daughter of my Divine Will. An intertwinement takes place between the two: in all created things, in which runs my Volition, one can see the little thread of the human will intertwining everything; and my Fiat, intertwining with it, renders it extendible in all of Its acts. It seems It is not content if It does not see this thread of the human will in the heavens, in the sun, in everything. It is a contest that takes place: the Divine Will wants to invest the human, and the human will wants to let itself be invested.” Surprised, I said: ‘But how can it be that the human will, so small, can extend in all created things and, together with the Fiat, embrace the great vastness of all Creation?’ And my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, do not be marveled; since all things were created for the creature, it was right and decorous that the soul and the human will be able to invest and embrace everything, exercise lordship over everything, and possess greater marvels than those of the very Creation. More so, when the creature is united with my Will – where can she not reach then? She cannot embrace Our immensity because to no one is it given to be able to embrace it, but of everything that was made for her, as long as she remains in Our Fiat, she was given by Us the right to be able to enter everywhere, to embrace everything, and to make Our works her own. My Fiat would not be able to tolerate it – It would feel Its purpose being snatched away – if It did not find within Its works the human will which, wanting to live together with It, recognizes them as Its works, and recognizes how much the Fiat has loved it and how It wants to be loved. Therefore my Will is all eyes, almost on the lookout to see when the creature is about to do a little act – an act of love, a breath, a heartbeat – in order to invest it with the power of Its Fiat and say to her: ‘I have done my works for you, and you must operate for Me. Therefore, what you have done is Mine, it is my right, just as my works are your right.’

These are the laws of the living in my Will – ‘yours’ and ‘mine’ cease on both sides, they form one single act, and possess the same goods. But this is not all; for one who lives in Our Fiat, this thread of the human will runs within my Conception, in my birth, in my baby tears, in my pains. Listen to this, something so very tender: when this thread of the human will intertwines with Mine, and Mine with it, investing all the acts and pains of your Jesus, I feel the joy and the purpose of being conceived and born, I feel happy for having cried for love of the creature; even more, my tears stop on my face, and seeing that the human volition pearls them with itself, kisses them, adores them, loves them – oh! how happy and victorious I feel that my tears and pains have conquered the human will, as I feel it flow in all my acts, and even in my very death. So, just as there is nothing We have not done for love of creatures, in the same way, there is nothing in which my Will does not call the human will; and to be more sure It intertwines it with Itself and with Its works – there is no danger It might leave it behind. And with unspeakable emphasis of love, It says to it: ‘My Will is yours, my works are yours. Recognize them, love them – do not stop, run, fly, let nothing escape you. You would lose a right in what you do not know or possess, and you would give Me the sorrow that in my Will I would not find yours intertwined within my works, and would feel my purpose snatched away, betrayed in my love, and like a father who, while having children, does not find them in his works, in his possessions, in his house, as they remain far away and lead a life of poverty and unworthy of so great a father. This is why the longing, the sighs, the yearnings of my Fiat are incessant – It would move Heaven and earth, It would spare nothing, as long as the creature would live in intimacy with It and be possessor of Its same goods.

Moreover, everything We have done, both in Creation and in Redemption, is all in act of giving itself to man; they hang upon his head, but are as though suspended, unable to give themselves, because he does not know them and does not call them, and does not love them so as to enclose them in his soul and receive so great a good. Now, one who possesses Our Will, Our works, the whole of my life that I carried out down here, finds the refuge, the space, the room in which to be able to continue my life, my works; and the soul acquires the practicing act and converts into her own nature my works and my life. So, this creature is the refuge of Our Sanctity, of Our Love, and the Life of Our Will. And when Our Love, unable to contain Itself, wants to give into excesses, We take refuge in her and give vent to Our Love, and We pour such charisms of graces, that Heaven and earth are stupefied and, trembling, adore Our Divine Will operating in the creature.”

For one who lives in It, the Divine Will forms the repeater of Its Life and of Its Love, and forms and extends in her the whole Creation and everything that Jesus did. How It will give her a new name, calling her: ‘My Fiat’.

I am at the mercy of the Supreme Fiat that wants to always give me of Its own, to keep me occupied and have always something to do for my poor soul; and if It detects any little void that is not Its Will, with an admirable and inimitable activity It sees what is missing in me of all Its acts It did for love of creatures, and, all festive, It impresses it in my soul, giving me a tiny little lesson. I remained surprised, and my always lovable Jesus, visiting His little daughter, told me: “My good daughter, do not be marveled, the Love of my Will is exuberant, but with highest Wisdom, because for those who live in Its Will It wants to make works worthy of It – the little repeaters of Its Life, of Its Love – and hide in them the sanctity and multiplicity of Its works. It wants to continue Its creative work, It wants to form, repeat and extend the whole Creation and even more, in one who lives in Its Will. Listen to where my Love reaches: my Fiat created the Creation, and in each created thing It placed a value, a love and a distinct office, from which to produce a distinct good for the creatures, so much so, that the heavens possess a value, a love and an office fully unique; the sun, the wind, the sea, possess another and perform distinct offices; and so with all created things.

Now, listen to what my Will does for one who lives in It: anything she does belongs to It, therefore in one act It encloses the value, the love and the office that the heavens do, and gives to the creature the love and the value of the heavens; in another act It pronounces Its Fiat and encloses in it the value, the love It had in creating the sun, and makes it do the office of sun; in another It encloses the value of the wind, Its ruling love, and pronouncing Its Fiat, it makes that act do the office of wind; in another It encloses the value of the sea, and pronouncing Its Fiat, It makes it do the office of the sea, and gives it the virtue to always murmur: love, love, love. In sum, there is not one act that the creature does in which It does not delight in pronouncing Its Fiat; and in one It encloses the value of the air, in another the sweet singing of the birds, the bleating of the lambs; in another the beauty of the flowers. And if the acts of the creature do not reach the extension of the work of Creation, It makes use of her heartbeat, of her breath, of the rapidity of her blood circulating in her veins, and It animates everything with Its Fiat, forming in her the complete Creation. And when It has completed everything of what It did in Creation for love of the creatures, It lays Its dominion over it, and with Its Creative Power It preserves everything, It maintains the order of the new Creation It has formed in the acts of the creature, and It feels so loved and glorified, because It does not find a Creation without reason, without a will and without life, but It finds the power of a reason, of a will and life which, voluntarily, has undergone the Power of Its Fiat inside its acts, Its creative virtue, Its very Divine Life, Its ruling and untiring Love – in a word, the creature has let It make of her, even of her breath and of her acts, whatever It wanted.

My blessed daughter, keep listening to Me, let Me give vent to my Love – I can no longer contain It; I want to tell you where my Love reaches, and where It can reach and what It can do for one who lives in my Fiat. Do you think that my Will was satisfied and said ‘enough’ because It has enclosed the value, the love and the different offices of all Creation in the creature that lives as though identified with It from one single Will? No, no. You must know that I came upon earth, and in the ardor of my Love, I offered my Life, my pains and my very death in order to purchase back my Divine Will for the good of creatures, who, with so much ingratitude, had rejected It and therefore lost It. So, my Life served as the disbursement of the price that was needed in order to buy It back and give It in possession to my children; hence, a God was needed to be able to pay a sufficient price in order to purchase a Divine Will. See, then, how certain it is that the Kingdom of my Will will come – because the purchase was made by Me.

Now, my Will, after having formed the order of Creation with all the sumptuousness and sublimeness of Its creative work, as the creature keeps repeating her acts, in one act It pronounces Its Fiat and forms in it my Life, enclosing the value of It; in another It pronounces Its Fiat and encloses in her pains the value of my pains; It pronounces Its Fiat over her tears and places in them the value of mine; Its Fiat continues in her works, in her steps, in her heartbeat, and encloses in them the value of my works, of my steps and of my Love. There is not one prayer or act, even natural, that she does, in which It does not enclose the value of my acts. So, in one who lives in my Will I feel my Life being repeated, and she redoubles the price in order to purchase my Divine Will for the good of the human generations. It can be said that there is a contest between she and I, to see who can give more, so that my Will may be possessed again by the human family.

But this is not all yet. If It does not do fulfilled works It is not content: to the value of Creation and Redemption It has enclosed in the soul, It adds on with an incredible love - It encloses in her the Celestial Fatherland and makes Its glory, Its joys, Its eternal beatitudes resound in her, as the seal and confirmation of the Creative and Redemptive work It has formed in her. After this, in order to be more sure, It creates in her Its heartbeat, Its breath, It makes Its life, Its light, circulate more than blood, and, as though triumphant, It gives her a new name, calling her: ‘My Fiat’. This name is the most beautiful name, which will make all Heaven smile and the whole of Hell tremble – a name which I cannot give other than to one who lives in my Will and has let Me do in her whatever I want. My daughter, what can my Omnipotent Fiat not do or give? It reaches such extent as to give Its own rights over Its own Power, over Its Love, over Its Justice. It incorporates with Itself the will of the creature and says to her: ‘Be attentive, I want nothing else from you other than for you to do what I do. Therefore, it is necessary that you remain always with Me, and I with you.’”

The Kingdom of the Divine Will will be the Kingdom of the Queen of Heaven. Her ardent desires and incessant prayers. Assaults of love that She makes upon the Divinity in order to obtain It. How She will place Her life at the creatures’ disposal, to give them the grace of making them live of Divine Will.

I felt all immersed in the Divine Volition. It seemed to me that Heaven and earth are longing and praying for the coming of Its Kingdom upon earth, so that one may be the Will of all and It may reign on earth as It does in Heaven. To this did the Queen of Heaven unite Herself, who, with Her ardent sighs, invested everything, moved and united all to Herself – Angels, Saints and all Creation – to ask with Her same sighs and with the same Divine Will that She possesses for the Fiat to descend into hearts and form in them Its Life. But while I was thinking of this, my always lovable Jesus, making Himself seen all love, sighed deeply; His Heart was beating so strongly, as if It wanted to burst; and He said to me: “Daughter of my Volition, listen to Me, my Love is about to submerge Me, I can no longer contain It; at any cost, even if It should overwhelm Heaven and earth, I want my Will to come to reign upon earth. And to this unites my Celestial Mama who, without ever ceasing, says to Me - repeats to Me: ‘Son, hurry, delay no more, use your stratagems of love, act as the Powerful God that You are, let your Will invest all and, with Its Power and Majesty, together with a Love that no one will be able to resist, take possession of all and reign on earth as It does in Heaven.’ And She says this to Me with such ardent sighs, with flaming heartbeats, with Her stratagems of love of Mother, such that I cannot resist Her – to the point of adding: ‘My Son, Son of my Heart, You made Me Queen and Mother. And my people, and my children – where are they? If I were capable of unhappiness, I would be the most unhappy Queen and Mother, because I possess my Kingdom, but I do not have my people that would live of the same Will as their Queen. And if I don’t have my children, to whom to entrust the great inheritance of their Mother, where will I find the joy, the happiness of Maternity? Therefore, let your Divine Fiat reign – then will your Mama be happy, and I will have my people and my children who will live together with Me, with the same Will as their Mother.’

Do you think that at this speaking of my Mother, which resounds constantly to my ear and sweetly invests my Heart with continuous darts and wounds of love, I can remain indifferent? No I can not, nor do I want to. More so, since She has never denied anything to Me, therefore I lack the strength to deny Myself to Her; my Divine Heart pushes Me to make Her content. You – unite yourself to Us, and long and pray that my Will be known and come to reign upon earth; and in order to confirm you more in this, I want to let you hear my sweet Mama.”

At that moment, I felt Her near me; and hiding me under Her azure mantle, holding me on Her maternal lap, with a love I cannot express She said to me: “Daughter of my Maternal Heart, the Kingdom of the Divine Will will be my Kingdom – to Me has the Sacrosanct Trinity entrusted It. Just as They entrusted to Me the Eternal Word, when He descended from Heaven to earth, so did They entrust to Me Their Kingdom and Mine; therefore my yearning is ardent, my prayers incessant, I do nothing other than assault the Most Holy Trinity with my love, with the rights of Queen and of Mother that They gave Me, so that what They entrusted to Me may come out to light, may form its life, and my Kingdom may triumph on the face of the earth. You must know that the desire that ignites Me is so great, that I feel as if I had no glory - while I have so much of it that Heaven and earth are filled with it – if I do not see the Kingdom of the Divine Will formed in the midst of my children, because each of these children that will live in It will give Me so much glory as to redouble the glory I possess. So, seeing Myself deprived of it, I feel as if I did not have the glory of Queen and the love of Mother from my children; and this is why in my Heart I call them constantly and I keep repeating: ‘My children, my children, come to your Mama, love Me as your Mother, as I love you as my children. If you don’t live of that same Will from which I lived, you cannot give Me the love of true children, nor can you get to know the extent of my love for you.’

You must know that my love and my ardent longing for this Kingdom to exist on earth is so great, that I descend from Heaven, I go around from soul to soul to see who is more disposed to live of Divine Will; I spy on them, and when I see them disposed I enter into their hearts and form my life in them as preparation, honor and decorum of that Fiat which will take possession of them and will form Its Life in them. Therefore I will be inseparable from them, I will place my life, my love, my virtues, my sorrows at their disposal as a wall of insurmountable fortitude, that they may find in their Mother whatever is needed in order to live in this Kingdom so holy. Then will my feast be complete, my love will rest in my children, my Maternity will find those who love Me as children of Mine; and I will give surprising graces, and will put all Heaven and earth in feast – I will act as Queen, lavishing unheard-of graces. Therefore, my daughter, remain united with your Mama, that you may pray and long with Me for the Kingdom of the Divine Will.”

What one more act is, which the creature does in the Divine Will: it is harmony and music; it is to overwhelm Heaven and earth; it is for her to settle in God, and God in her.

I feel my little and poor soul being surrounded by the Divine Will, inside and outside of me, to the right and to the left – It flows even under my feet; It runs everywhere around me, to say to me: “It is I who form your life, who warm you with my warmth, who form your motion, your breath. Recognize Me – recognize that your life is animated by Mine, and I will do things worthy of Me in you.”

But while my mind was wandering in the Fiat, my sweet Jesus, making me His short little visit, as though He felt the need of love to speak to me about His Will, told me: “My little daughter of my Volition, my Love, constrained inside of Me, feels the need to pour out; otherwise It causes Me such delirium as to feel suffocated by my own flames. Therefore my speaking is an outpouring of love, it is a relief for my Heart; and in order to feel refreshed, I keep looking for one who wants to listen to Me.

Now listen to where my Love reaches and the great prodigy of the operating life of my Will in the creature. One more act that the creature does in my Will is one more harmony that she launches between Heaven and earth; it is new celestial music that she forms for her Creator, which is so pleasing to Him, more so, since it comes to Him from the earth. In fact, the things of Heaven are all Our own, no one in the Celestial Fatherland can say that he gives anything to Us, but We are the Ones who give to them, as We delight and beatify all. On the other hand, the soul from the earth can say: ‘I give to my Creator?’; and We, feeling captivated, give again Our Will as life operating in her, so that she may form for Us more beautiful and new melodies. How beautiful it is to hear Our Heaven on earth – to hear the new celestial melodies that are unleashed from the pilgrim soul. All Heaven makes new feast, and We feel that the earth is Ours too, and We love it more. Each additional act that is done in my Divine Will is like drawing Heaven and earth into it, because all – Angels and Saints – run into that act, even the Creation Itself, to take their place of honor in the operating act of my Will. No one wants to remain outside of the act of my Divine Fiat.

The true centralization takes place - of everything and of everyone; nor could my Will do without letting all those who live in It participate in that act. Whenever It operates, my Will wants to enclose everything and give everything, because It knows not how to do incomplete acts, but rather, fulfilled, and with the fullness of all goods. But who can tell you my daughter, what happens in this drawing of Heaven and earth into that operating act of my Will in the creature? That motion of all, each one wanting its place in that act – such marvels take place, such unheard-of prodigies, such moving scenes, that the Heavens are stupefied and remain ecstatic before the operating power of my Will. But where? In the little circle of the creature. And they remain with the yearning to be drawn again into the operating act of my Will in her. Oh, how they long for It – they feel more embellished, and experience the beautiful happiness of the conquering act of my Will in the creature, which they don't have in Heaven, because up there there are no conquests, nor can they acquire them – what they have done on earth sets for them a 'that's it' and 'no more'.

But this is not all yet. One additional act done in my Will is like God incorporating Himself in the creature, and the creature in God; it is their settling within each other, and the life of One flows within the other almost like blood in the veins; it is the fusion of the human heartbeat in the Eternal Heartbeat, and the creature feels within herself as life, the Love, the Sanctity, the Life of her Creator, and the Eternal One feels the little love of the creature flowing within Himself, which, living in Him, forms one single love and one single Will. Each breath, heartbeat and motion are wounds, arrows and darts of love that she gives to He who created her; and – oh! the whole of Heaven remains as though stupefied, as they look to God and find the creature fused in Him, loving with His love, and a conquering love; and they look to the creature on earth and find their Creator who, while keeping His throne in her, lives together with her.

These are the greatest excesses of Our Love toward one We so much love. When We find the creature being disposed, and she denies nothing to Us, We do not look at her littleness, but rather, We look at what We Ourselves know how to do and can do. Indeed We can do anything, and making a display of Our Love and of all Our Divine Being, We invest the creature and let Ourselves be invested, and We do great things worthy of Us, but with such magnanimity, that all remain astonished and stupefied. It is enough to tell you that for one more act that is done in Our Will, as if We were in need of the creature, We give so much, that We increase greater bonds of union and of love on both sides, and We reach the point of giving her new rights over Our Divine Being, and We over her. This operating act of Our Fiat in her is so great, that 'the centuries' are not enough to tell what happens in It, nor can the Angels or the Saints tell all the good it contains. Only your Jesus can tell you all the good that is formed in this act, because, I being the Operator, I can tell what I do and the great value I put into it. Therefore, be attentive – greater content, love and glory you could not give Me than by lending Me your little acts, your little love, to let my Will descend into them and let my Will operate. Its Love is so great, that It feels the need to have Its field of action in the little acts of the creature.”

Creation, first means of help in order to form the Life of the Divine Will in us. Second: God Himself directly. Third: the circumstances of life.

I continue to swim in the immense sea of the Divine Volition; and I thought to myself: 'But, how can the creature form this Life of the Fiat within her? I feel so small that it seems impossible to me. Perhaps to live inside of It is easier, because I find so much space that I cannot see where Its boundaries reach; but to enclose It inside of me, I feel I lack the space to be able to do this.' And my always lovable Jesus, with His usual goodness, told me: "My daughter, you must know that Our Power is so great, that We take delight in forming Our Life within the littleness of the creature, as long as it is not cluttered with other things that do not belong to Us. Even more, many times We do the greatest things over sheer nothingness, and since it is Our Will for the creature to form and possess this Life of Our Will in her soul, everything We have created and that exists in Heaven and on earth, they all have the mandate from Us to help and serve the creature as means in order to form and grow this Life in her.

So, the first thing that is there to communicate and make the creature feel the Power, the Love of my Will, is the whole Creation. Creation has this virtue, given by Us: that while It increases, nourishes, helps and sustains the natural life, in the same way, penetrating inside the soul by means of the human acts, It penetrates into the soul and performs a double office; and if It finds the little Life of my Will, then my same Will that is found in the created things kisses my Will present in her, molds her, blows Its breath into her, expands her capacity, and finding Its little paradise, It rests and administers the aids and means which that created thing contains so that nothing may be lacking in order to raise and maintain the Life of my Will in the creature. So, the heavens are always stretched out over her head in order to guard her, that nothing may enter into her which is not Will of God. The sun gets closer, and displaying yet more love, it makes her feel its warmth, it fills her eyes with light, it invests her hands and feet; and making a way into her soul it fills her with the love, the light, the fecundity of which it is filled by my Will. And it leaves the deposit of its warmth, of its light, so that the creature may live only of love and of light, things which belong to my Will; and this sun, following its course, forms the beautiful flowerings, the variety of colors, and all the rest, for love of one who possesses my Will. It can be said that each time the sun invests the creature, my Will visits the creature to see whether she wants anything, to make sure she lacks nothing in order to make Its Life grow in her. What have I not done and would not do in order to obtain my intent, of forming the Life of my Fiat in the creature? Therefore the air, while it serves to give breath to the body, serves to give the breath of my Will to the soul; the wind, while it serves to purify the air of her nature, serves to give the caresses, the kisses, the might of my Will to my Life that she possesses. Hence, there is not a created thing - my Will unleashing from within them - which does not run within the interior of the soul as help and defense, and to make her grow as I want. But this is not all. My Will in the created things remains veiled, to form Its Life in them, but how many do not receive It, and It remains behind Its veils, repressed, unable to give the goods It possesses.

Now, there is the second way, more splendid, more lavishing with Love. The love that burns Us, Our desire for the creature to possess Our Will as life is so great, that each act, thought, word, heartbeat, work and step that she does, is a divine emanation that We give her - Our Divine Being runs in each of her acts in order to give her from Our own; We surround it, We vivify it so as to make it be reborn in Our Will; We can say that We place Ourselves at her disposal in order to form this Life. But do you know the reason for so much interest on Our part? Because We want Our Will to form the beautiful generation of the Divine Will in the will of the creature. Then will We have as many Lives of Ours that love Us, that glorify Us. How beautiful will Creation be - everything will be Ours, everywhere will We find Our throne, Our palpitating Life.

Now, there is the third way: the circumstances of life, the occasions, the order of Our providence for each one, the mortifications, the sorrows - these are all means to make and develop in an admirable way this Life of my Will in them. Therefore, there is nothing in which It does not prepare Its prime act of life to give it to creatures. Oh! if all paid attention, how happy they would feel - secure, under the rain of a Will so holy, that loves them so much as to reach the excess of wanting to form Its Life in the poor creature.”

Fiat!!!

March 14, 1937

The Divine Will is life and, as life, It forms the generation of Its Life in the acts of the creature who will live in It, forming the long generation of the children of Its Divine Fiat.

The Divine Volition never leaves me. It seems to me that in order to confirm me more and make me long to live in It – and not only me, but all those who will want to – It wants to say new things and what it means to do one more act in His Most Holy Will. And my sweet Jesus, who acts as the crier of a Will so holy, visiting my little soul, told me: “My blessed daughter, I want to tell you again of the good that is enclosed in one more act that the creature can do in my Volition. My Will is life and knows not how to operate or do anything if It does not generate life, nor can It help but doing so. Now, each additional act that is done in It encloses the generative act It possesses; the creature, by doing her act, lends to It the veil in which to form and hide this divine birth. As the act is performed, so does my Will go around the whole world in order to find the souls who are more disposed, and It deposits in them the birth It has generated, forming one more child of the Kingdom of Its Fiat. See then, what one more act is: to form one more child in my Kingdom. Hence, the more acts are done in It, the more populated will the Kingdom of my Will be. My daughter, this is a delirium of Our Supreme Being – that We want the creature to live in Our Will; and We will use all Our devices of love in order to obtain Our intent. How beautiful it is to see that Our first children of Our Fiat will serve, with their acts, to form the new generation of the Life of Our Will in the creature. Our Love is so great, that We take the occasion of the act of the creature in order to give this great good that encloses Heaven and earth.”

While He was saying this, my sweet Jesus showed how He held inside His Divine Heart all the acts done in His Will, including those of the Celestial Mama, which were many; and inside each act the Life of the Divine Will, generated in it. As though unable to contain them any longer, He moved His step to go around all generations, and wherever He found a soul who was more disposed, He approached her, embraced her, whispered to her ear, blowing His breath into her, as though wanting to renew the new creation. Then, as though in feast, He deposited the Life of His Will together with the act – He did not want to detach the act from the Life of His Volition; in fact, it being the primary act in which He had generated His Life, He did not want to detach it, wanting to make use of it as custody for His own Life. On seeing this, I remained surprised and, pensive, I said to myself: ‘Is all this possible? It seems rather incredible to me.’ And my sweet Jesus continued: “Daughter, why are you marveled? Can my Will perhaps not do whatever It wants? It is enough to want it, and everything is done. And besides, the sun does this, which can be called the shadow of my Fiat: as it finds the flower, the plants, by the touch of its light it generates color and fragrance, it matures the plants and generates sweetness in the fruits, and so many colors and such great diversity of sweetness for as many flowers and fruits as it touches with its light and warms with its heat; but if the sun does not find flowers or fruits, and does not invest anything with its light and with its heat, it gives nothing, it keeps all the goods it possesses within itself. Such is my Will: more than sun, as It finds the creature who wants It and calls It into her act, It descends into the lowliness of the human act, It invests it, warms it, transforms it; and since It possesses life, It generates life and forms in it a divine portent. And, like the sun, if It does not find anyone who wants to live in my Will to form his acts in It, in spite of the many Divine Lives of Mine that I could give, they remain inside of It, waiting with invincible and divine patience for one who would let Me generate my Life in his acts.

My Will is like a tender Mother, who feels within Her the long generation of Her Lives that She wants to issue to daylight, to form for Herself the long generation of Her children, who must form Her Kingdom; and therefore my Will keeps looking for those who would lend It their acts. But do you know why It keeps looking for the acts of the creatures? Having to descend into the lowliness of the human acts in order to form Its Life, It wants to make Its way by means of the acts in order to give Its own Life to the creatures; more so, since life cannot be formed outside of a person, but always inside, otherwise it would lack the necessary things, the vital humors to form a life. In the same way, my Will cannot form Its Life from Heaven or outside the creature, but must descend inside of them, and the human will must surrender its place to the Divine – it must concur with It, because We do not want things done by force. And once We have found this creature - who can tell you what We do, the graces We pour, the love We have for her? This is not about works, but Life of Ours that We want to develop, therefore We hold nothing back, and only in Heaven will it be known what We have done. Therefore, be attentive and live always under the rain of my Volition; in this way, investing all your acts, It will animate them with my Life, and you will give Me as many children for as many acts as you will do.”

The Divine Will gives all Its works as gift to one who lives in It. The breath of God in His works and in all the holy works of creatures. The Divine Will acts as the supplier of all that the creature lacks.

I was doing my round in the Divine Fiat, in order to follow, as much as it is possible to me, Its divine acts – that is, the Creation and all the holy acts of the creatures, not excluding either those of my Celestial Mother or those of my dear Jesus. But the great thing was that as I tracked them down they became mine, the Divine Volition gave them to me as gift; and I, as though having the right over everything, offered them to my Creator as the homage most beautiful, the love most intense, the adoration most profound, to He who had created me. I felt invested by the sun, by the heavens with all the stars, by the wind, by everything – everything was mine, because everything belonged to the Divine Will. I remained surprised, and my sweet Jesus, repeating His short little visit, told me: “My blessed daughter, why are you surprised? You must know that anything that is holy and good belongs to my Fiat, which wants to give everything to one who lives together with It. An exchange takes place on both sides: the creature does not want to hold anything for herself, she wants to give It everything; and my Will wants to give everything to her, even Itself. More so, since Creation, Redemption, the Queen of Heaven, all good and holy acts, are nothing other than the breath of God. He breathed and said ‘Fiat’, and created the whole Creation; He breathed and called to life the Most Holy Virgin; He breathed and made the Word descend upon earth; He breathes and gives life to the good works of all creatures.

Now, one who lives in my Will does nothing other than track down all of Its works, so as to find Its divine breath and bring them back to God as fruits and power of the breath of her Creator. Oh! how glorified and loved He feels, because He find His own breath, His very Life, in the works offered to Him by the creature; and as many times as she goes around in His works, so many times does He feel His Life, His glory, His Love, being given back to Him. And, oh! how He longs for these presents, because He feels that which He gave being returned to Him, He feels loved back in His works as He has loved; He feels His Love and Power being recognized, and His divine satisfaction is so great that He pours torrents of love and of graces into the one who has known His works and His Love. Here is why, my daughter, as the creature lives together with It, my Will, with incomparable love, gives her all It possesses as gift, renders her the owner of everything; in fact, if one does not possess something he does not have the right to give it to others, and therefore my Will, giving her everything as gift, gives her the power to be able to give to her Creator, and to receive, redoubled, His requital. But only when she recognizes Our works, esteems them, loves them, then is she granted this gift; Love gives her the right to make what belongs to the Eternal Will her own. If my Will were unable to give to the creature as gift everything that belongs to It, It would feel hindered in Its love, separated in Its works, because It would not be able to say: ‘What is Mine is yours; whatever I do, you do as well.’ My Will would not tolerate this; It would say: ‘Living together, forming the same life, and not being able to give her everything – this is impossible for my Love. It would be as if I could not trust her.’ No, no, I want to give everything to one who lives in my Will.

You must know that the Love of my Fiat toward one who lives in It is so great, that if the creature, not out of her own will, but out of weakness and impotence, does not follow all the acts of my Will, or due to necessity of sufferings or else, her life does not flow in It, Its Love is so great that It does what the creature should do, It makes up for her in everything, It calls her back to the attitude, the order, the Love of my Will, so that the soul may be stirred and resume her life together with It. And It does this so that the human life may not be divided or separated from Its own. If It did not do so, a divine void would be left, but Its Love does not tolerate this, and acts as the supplier of what the creature lacks, because It wants Its Divine Life never to be missing in her, but to be continuous. Can there be greater love – such as to reach the extent of saying: ‘Courage, do not fear, come with full trust to live with Me. Trust Me; and even if you should fall short of flowing constantly in my Fiat, I will compassionate you and I Myself will take on the operating part that you cannot do, and I will make up for you in everything.’ The Kingdom of my Will is Kingdom of love, of trust, of accord on both sides.”

Need of love that the Divine Fiat feels of being loved back. How to one who lives in It the Divine Will gives so much love as to make her love in all hearts and in all Creation, in order to be requited with the love of all. How the soul without the Fiat is like soil without water. Evils of disturbance.

My flight in the Divine Volition continues. It seems to me that It does nothing but pour love over the creatures, who, feeling so intensely loved, unable to contain this love so great, feel the need to love He who so much loves them. It can be said that the Divine Love is so great, that It stirs and moves the creatures in an irresistible way to love It back. The arrows of love It sends in order to wound the creatures serve them to dart through the One who had pierced them. Now, while I was under this abyss of love, my dear Jesus, my sweet Life, surprising me, told me: “Daughter of my Will, you must know that Our Love is so great, that if unhappiness and restlessness could enter Our Divine Being – which cannot be – the Divine Being would become the most unhappy and restless being. Since We love with infinite and incessant love, such that We can drown everything and everyone with Our Love, We then feel the need to be loved in return. But, no, in vain do We wait, and Our Love moans, becomes delirious, and instead of stopping, It runs more. But do you know where Our Love goes to unload Itself and, pausing, It rests a little to then resume Its flight immediately and pour Its continuous love? In the souls who live in my Will. In fact, being already drowned in my Love, they feel my moans, my need to be loved back, and promptly they requite Me in love; and just as We feel the need to be loved in return, so do they feel the necessity, the need, to be loved by the One who so much loves them.

Now, my daughter, Our Will circulates like blood in all the hearts of creatures and in all Creation – there is not one point where It is not present, Its dwelling place is extendible everywhere, and with Its powerful and creating Love, as though in one single breath, It preserves and gives life to everything and to everyone, and in each thing It carries out Its life of love. So, why does It create? Because It loves. Why does It preserve and circulate in all? Because It loves. Now, with one who lives in Our Will We want to feel her loving Us in all hearts. How beautiful is the note of love of the creature in each heart, such that, if these do not love Us, there she is – loving Us; in all hearts, past and future, We want to feel her loving Us. In the heavens, in the sun, in the wind, in the sea – in everything do We want her note of love. More so, since Our Will carries her everywhere; by her living in It, the first gift It gives her is love; but It gives out so much of it as to be able to receive the requital of the love of all and of everything. The delirium of love of Our Divine Fiat is so great, that It carries this note of love of the creature even into the Empireum, and says to all the Blessed: ‘Listen, how beautiful is the note of the love that lives on earth in my Will.’ And It makes this loving note resound in the Saints, in the Angels, in the Virgin, in the Sacrosanct Trinity, in such a way that all feel their glory doubled and celebrate the Divine Will operating in the creature; and they also celebrate the creature who let It operate. So, she is on earth and she is celebrated in Heaven. My Divine Will would not tolerate that one who lives in It would not give It the requital of the love of everything and of everyone. My Divine Fiat finds whatever It wants in the love of the creature – It finds her life as Its own, It finds the glory she owes It, It finds the appreciation and the esteem that is due to It, It finds true filial trust so as to be able to give her everything. Hence, love is generative, as to generate all divine goods. Therefore, my daughter, be attentive – love, and love in my Will, and you will find so much love as to be able to love all, and love for all the One who so much loves you.”

After this, because of the miserable circumstances of my life – which it is not necessary to say here on paper; it is better if they become known in Heaven – I felt oppressed, bothered and almost disturbed, without my usual peace and full abandonment in the Divine Fiat. And my sweet Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My daughter, what are you doing? Don’t you know that the soul without the fullness of my Will and full abandonment in It is like soil without water, like the plants without the sun, like the body without the soul? And the poor creature - just like soil with no water, which is incapable of producing a single blade of grass - dies of thirst and is incapable of doing even the slightest good; she burns with thirst and there is no one who can quench it; and lacking the Sun of my Fiat, she will die in the dark, which will obfuscate her vision, rendering her unable to look at what is good in order to know it and do it; nor will she have any warmth with which to mature that good. Besides, without my Will, she will feel without Divine Life; and just as the body without the soul becomes putrid and gets buried, in the same way, without the Life of my Volition passions make her putrid and bury her in sin. Moreover, oppressions and disturbances block her flight in my Will, she loses speed and cannot follow all of Its works; and therefore, if she has not followed all Our works, I cannot carry her to take rest in the bosom of Our Divinity. So, be attentive, place any oppression, bother or anything that disturbs you in the hands of your Jesus, and I will place them in the light and heat of my Fiat, that they may be burned; and you, feeling free, will continue with greater speed your flight in my Volition. Nor do I want you to worry about it – I will take care of everything. My daughter, let us preserve our peace, otherwise I will not be able to carry out and develop as I want the Life of my Will in you; and this will be the greatest sorrow for Me – I will not feel free to breathe and palpitate, I will feel hindered in continuing my Life in you.”

Fiat!!!

March 26, 1937

The Creation and the Humanity of Our Lord are the fields in which one who lives in the Divine Will carries out her acts. How the Divine Will forms the Humanity of Our Lord and Paradise on earth for Jesus.

My flight in the Divine Fiat continues, and in It I feel that everything is mine, and I feel the need to know, to love what belongs to me and was given to me with such great love. And while I was going around in the works of the Divine Volition, my dear Jesus, my sweet Life, repeating His short little visit, all goodness, told me: “My little daughter of my Divine Volition, how true it is that in order for love to arise, one must possess what one loves. If one does not possess, love does not arise; not to love what one possesses is almost impossible – it is only natural and just for a love to love what it possesses. This is why I so much love the creatures, I preserve them, I give them life – because they are my works, I created them, I issued them to daylight, they are Mine, I am the Heartbeat of their heartbeat, their breath, the Life of their life; I can’t help loving them. If I did not love them, my Love would give Me continuous reproaches, and say to Me: ‘Why did You create them since You would not love them?’ This is a right of love – to love what it possesses. My Justice would condemn Me; all of my attributes would wage war against Me. This is why, in order to be loved by creatures, I say: ‘I am your God, your Creator, your Celestial Father – I am all yours’ – as indeed I am. And this is also the reason why I say to one who wants to live in my Will: ‘Everything is yours – the heavens, the sun and all Creation is yours; my Life is yours; my pains and even my breath are yours.’ Here is why, then, you feel the need to love – just as I feel it – to love what is yours, that which your Jesus gave you as your possession.

Now, you must know that the Creation and my Humanity are the fields in which the soul who does and lives in my Divine Will carries out her acts. Having them in her possession, she feels the need to circulate, like blood in the veins, within the works of her Creator; she wants to know the value, the good that they do, the office they occupy, also to love them more, to appreciate them, and also to feel happier and richer of the many goods she possesses. And so now she draws near the sun in order to know the secrets of its light, the iris of its colors, the virtue of its heat, the continuous miracle it performs over the face of the earth, such that, by merely touching it with its light, it vivifies, it colors, sweetens and transforms. And – oh! how she loves the sun because it is her own, and she loves He who created it more. And she does so with all other created things – she wants to know the secret virtue they contain in order to love them more, and to be more grateful and love more the One who gave her the possession. Therefore, it is no wonder that one who lives in my Divine Fiat is called the heiress of all Creation.

Now, from the field of Creation move on to the field of my Humanity. What to tell you now, my daughter, of the wonders that take place in this live field, not of mere works, like in Creation, but of life, human and Divine! These souls take my place, nor can I oppose Myself, because I belong to them, they have a right over Me, and I am happy that they possess Me, because they will love Me more. Now, these creatures in this field of Mine repeat my Life, love with my same Love; their acts fused with Mine form many suns, heavens and stars - oh! how much more beautiful than those of Creation, as they fill the field of my Humanity. Oh! how loved and glorified I feel, because these suns, heavens and stars are not mute like those of Creation, but they are speaking, with fullness of reason; and how well they speak of my Love. They speak and love Me, they speak and narrate to Me the story of souls and that of my Love, and so they impose themselves on Me, to have Me place them in safety. They speak and cover themselves with my pains in order to repeat my Life, and I feel these souls flowing in my tears, in my words, in my works and steps, and in them I find refreshment from my pains; my prop, my defense, my refuge; and my Love for them is so great that I reach the point of calling them 'my Life'. Oh! how I love them – I possess them and they possess Me. To possess and to love unto folly is all the same.

Now, these souls who live in my Will are disposed to receive all the pains of my Humanity; in fact, since my Humanity is incapable of suffering - as It is now glorious in Heaven – with Its omnipotent breath my Will creates the pains and sorrows and forms in them my living Humanity, as they stand in for Me in everything. They are the new saviors that lay down their lives in order to save the entire world. So, from Heaven I look at the earth and I find as many Jesuses, who, taken by the same folly of my Love, lay down their lives at the cost of pains and death, to say to me: 'I am your faithful copy. The pains make me smile because I enclose souls.' And I – oh! how I love them, I no longer feel lonely, I feel happy, victorious, because having company in carrying out the same life, in suffering the same pains, in wanting what I want, is my greatest happiness and my Paradise on earth. See then, how many great and portentous things can my Divine Will do, as long as they live in It. It forms for Me my very living Humanity and procures for Me the same joys of my Celestial Fatherland. Therefore, take to heart living always in my Will – be concerned with nothing else, because if you don't, I feel my Love broken in you; and if you knew how much it costs Me not being loved, be it even for one moment... In fact, in that moment I remain alone, you break my happiness, and in my delirium of love I keep repeating: 'How can this be? I love her always – and she doesn't?' Therefore, be attentive, for I never want to remain alone."

Fiat!!!

April 4, 1937

As the creature gives her will to God, so does God acquire His divine rights over it. How three walls of fortitude are formed so as not to let her get out from within the Fiat.

I am under the eternal waves of the Divine Volition, and if a thought escapes me, these waves become stronger and suffocate my thought and my fears, in such a way that I am immediately pacified and I run together with the Divine Fiat. So, my thought often torments me – that I might be getting out from within It. My God, what pain, I feel myself dying at the mere thought of it. It seems to me that I would no longer be the sister of the created things, I would move my place away from their midst, they would no longer be mine. And I, what would I then give to my God? Nothing but pure nothing would be left to me. I felt so bad in thinking of this, that I felt tortured; and my sweet Jesus, having compassion on me and on the state to which I had reduced myself, ran to sustain me in His arms and, all goodness, told me: “My daughter, what are you doing? Courage, you oppress yourself too much, and your Jesus does not want this. And besides, the very pain you feel means that you do not want to get out of my Divine Will; and to Me your will is enough, it is the surest pledge, and I keep it enclosed in my Divine Heart as the most precious thing, so that nobody may touch it. The feeling of the creature I take into no account; it is as if it did not exist for Me, and many times it serves her in order to throw herself into my arms, that I may free her of this enemy that makes her lose peace.

Now, you must know that when the soul has given me her will with firm decision, and with sure knowledge of what she has done, without ever wanting to know it again, she has already taken her place in Mine; and I, by right, am the Owner of her will, and she is the owner of Mine. So, do you think that I easily surrender these rights? Not at all. I will use all arts, I will put in the field my own Power, so that what interests Me so much may not be taken away from Me. You must know that this is the strongest bond between Creator and creature – her surrendering her will; in this way she becomes inseparable from Us as to no longer be able to detach herself; We feel her life as Our own, because one is the Will that animates us. Now, do you think that with one thought, with one feeling, these bonds can be broken, our inseparability lost, and We would surrender what is Ours, without any resolute and repeated acts on her part, that she wants her will back? My daughter, you deceive yourself. More so, since Our Love for her is so great, that as soon as she gives Us her will, We wall the creature up, first with a wall of light, in such a way that if she wanted to get out, the light eclipses her and she does not know where to move her step, because she finds light everywhere, and not knowing where to go, she draws back and hides in the bosom of her Creator. The second wall is everything that my Humanity did while on earth: my tears, my works, steps and words, my pains, my wounds, my Blood, form a wall around this happy creature to prevent her exit. In fact, my Humanity contains the secret, the strength, the life in order to give life to one who lives in the Divine Volition; and do you think that after having obtained the intent of conquering this will by dint of pains, I would let what costs Me blood, life and death escape from Me?

Ah! You have not yet understood my Love well. If it was about mere resignation, it is easy to do and not to do my Will, because these creatures have never really surrendered their rights to Me; they keep holding on to their will, and therefore now they are resigned, now impatient; now they love Heaven, now the earth. But for one who has given me her will, she has taken her place in the divine order, she wants and does what We want, she feels herself queen; therefore it is almost impossible for her to get out of Our Fiat, nor would she adapt herself to becoming a servant, a slave, if she went out of Our Will.

The third wall is the whole Creation, which feels in her the operating virtue of the Divine Volition, whose life all created things possess; and in order to pay her homage they form a wall around her: the sun with its light, the wind with its might... In sum, all created things feel the creative power, the operating virtue, ever new, that operates in the creature, while they cannot do more than what they are doing; so they run around her to enjoy the works of that Fiat by which they are animated. Therefore, don't you worry – enjoy the peace of that Will that possesses you, and your Jesus will take care of everything.”

Fiat!!!

April 8, 1937

Everything that is done in the Divine Will constitutes a right for all, and all can do that good. These rights were given by Adam, by the Queen of Heaven, by Our Lord, who prepared for us the royal garment.

My poor mind does nothing other than plunge itself into the sea of the Supreme Fiat; and as much as I feel in me the Heaven of the Divine Volition, many times I lose sight of Jesus within the immensity of this Heaven, and I do not find Him, and His privation is the hardest martyrdom of my poor existence down here. And how hard it is to find Him! – to the point of reducing myself to such a pitiful state that I feel I am dying. And only then does He come, either with a stratagem of love, or with a more surprising truth, such that I feel life come back to me, to the point of forgetting of the pains suffered. Ah! Jesus, how much You can come up with! So, I was thinking: ‘And why doesn’t Jesus take me into His celestial regions? Why let me struggle so much? I seem to see the harbor and I am about to take a leap to get in - but, no, a powerful force makes me draw back and I return to be the poor exiled one.’ Then, while I was thinking this, my sweet Jesus, all goodness, compassionating me, told me: “My blessed daughter, courage – courage knocks down the strongest bastions, defeats the fiercest armies, debilitates Our Power; or rather, it appropriates It and, courageous, the soul wins what she wants; and We, in seeing that she doesn’t have the slightest doubt to obtain what she wants – because doubt decreases courage – We give her more than what she wants. My daughter, courage, trust, insistence, without ever ceasing, love in Our Will, are the weapons that wound Us, such that, debilitating Us, We let her take by herself whatever she wants.

Now I want to tell you why I am still keeping you on this earth. You know that Our Divine Will is immense, and the creature lacks the capacity, the space to be able to embrace It all together; therefore it is more suitable for her to take It sip by sip – and you take them, now when you do your acts in my Volition, now when It manifests to you a truth that belongs to It. If you pray, if you desire for my Kingdom to come, if you suffer in order to obtain It – these are all sips that expand your capacity and form the space in which to enclose the sips of It. And while you do this, you come to enclose now one generation, now another, which must possess the Kingdom of the Divine Fiat. Now, you must know that since the generations are like one family, such that all have the right to the inheritance of the Father, and, like members, they form one single body, of which I am the Head, when a member does some good, obtains it and possesses it, the other members acquire the right to do and to possess that good. Now, you have not yet enclosed all those generations that must possess my Will as life, therefore more is needed of the chain of your acts, of your insistence, your pains, so as to drink more sips in order to form the space to give the right to those who, wanting it so, might possess my Kingdom. As soon as you have done the last act that is needed, immediately I will take you into the Celestial Fatherland.

Now, my daughter, with Its immensity my Divine Will envelops everyone and everything – there is not one being that does not swim in It; therefore everything that is done becomes a right of all, and all can repeat that act. At the most, there might be some who do not want to repeat it and possess it, and do not want to recognize that they live within It and their lives are animated by the Divine Fiat. These are like the blind who, while the sun darts through them, can see nothing and lie there as if it were nighttime for them. They are as though paralyzed, such that, while they can receive the use of their limbs in order to do good, they content themselves with remaining immobilized. They are like the mute, who cannot talk; but voluntary blind, paralytics and mute. As for all the rest, since my Will is life and is in communication with all, everything that can be done in It is life and good and right of all, and all can repeat that act in order to form the life of the Divine Will operating in them.

The first rights to have the Kingdom of my Will possessed by the human generations were given by Adam, because during the first period of his life his acts were done in the Divine Will, and even though he sinned and lost voluntarily the operating life of the Divine Will within himself, and he in Us, however his acts remained, because what is done in Our Volition never gets out – those are Our gains,

Our victories over the human will, therefore they are Our own, and We never put out what is Ours. So, one who enters into It finds the first love of Adam, his first acts, which give her the right to possess Our Fiat and to repeat the same acts that he did; in fact, his acts are still speaking, his love is still fused within Ours and loves Us incessantly with Our own Love. Therefore, the operating in Our Divine Will becomes eternal with Us and is not subject to ending, and it places itself at everyone's disposal, in such a way that only one who is ungrateful does not take it and does not want to avail himself of the life in order to receive life.

These rights to possess my Will as life were given by the Queen of Heaven because She too was of human offspring, but in a more extensive way and with greater sacrifice, because it cost Her the life of Her very Son and God to give the possession of the Kingdom of Our Fiat to the human generations; and because it cost Her so much, She is the one who longs and prays the most that Her children may enter into this Kingdom so Holy.

Then came my descent from Heaven to earth. As I took on human flesh, each act of Mine, pain, prayer, tear, sigh, work and step, constituted a right to let the Kingdom of the Fiat be possessed by the human generations. I can say: 'My Humanity is yours and belongs to all, and whoever wants to enter into this Kingdom will find in It the door, the rights and the royal garment in order to get in.' My Humanity is the garment that must cover and clothe with decency all those who will possess It. My Love is so great, that I call other creatures, and with portentous graces and with the sacrifice of their lives, I let them live in my Will; and they constitute the new rights, laying down their lives in order to give the possession of my Kingdom to the human family. Therefore, let your will run always in Mine, so that, once your acts are complete, you may take flight to the Celestial Fatherland."

Fiat!!!

April 18, 1937

Continuous encounters between the Divine Volition and the creature. How one who lives in It has formed the tiny little sea of the Fiat. How It runs always in each thing in order to give new graces and new love.

My flight in the Fiat continues. Or rather, I feel It runs toward me in each instant, in each thing I touch or do, in the pains and in the joys, in each created thing, which It places around me to let me be served by them. It seems to me that It remains as though on the lookout, to make Itself known and say to me: 'I am here. Tell me – what would you like? You will make Me happier if you put Me in the condition of being able to abound more, so that, making you happy, I may feel happier because of the happiness of my daughter.' Now, while my mind was drowned within Its divine sea, my beloved Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, with a love He could not contain, told me: "My blessed daughter, the excessive Love of my Divine Will gives of the incredible. When the creature lives in It, she has formed her little sea of the Fiat within her soul; and my Will, drawn by Its own power, wants to constantly expand this, Its little sea, within the circle of the soul. Listen to what It does: taken by irresistible love, It runs and runs always, in each act that she does; and if It sees that she must make use of the word, It runs to meet her, It invests her word with Its Fiat and increases Its Divine Power within the word of the creature. If It sees that she must operate, It runs, takes her hands, clasps them to Itself, invests them with Its Fiat, and increases Its Divine Power in her works. If It sees that she is about to take a step, It runs, invests her steps, and gives her such power as to be able to run always toward He who always runs toward her. If she loves, It runs to give her new love; if It sees that she desires to be ever more good, It runs and increases her goodness. There is not one thought, heartbeat or breath which It does not invest with Its Fiat, to make Its Wisdom, Its Beauty, the heartbeat of Its eternal Love increase.

But this is not all. Do you think that my Will can take a break from running always toward one who possesses Its Volition? Not at all. And in order to run, It makes use of everything. If the sun invests her, It runs to give her more light, and since the creature is more than sun, It gives her the properties that the light contains; or rather, It increases them, It gives her Its divine sweetness, Its fecundity, the variety of Its celestial fragrances, the taste of Its divine flavors and Its supreme qualities, like the most beautiful varieties of colors, and with the Power of Its Fiat It makes it so that of Its beloved creature, more than sun, nothing may be left other than light and heat, to invest her and let Itself be invested. If the wind blows upon her, It runs, It invests her and with Its Fiat It increases the power of Its ruling Love, Its divine moans, to let her moan with Its own moans and sighs, that Its Kingdom may come upon earth. It kisses her, caresses her, clasps her tightly to Itself to let her feel how much It loves her and how It wants to be loved back. If she drinks water, It runs to invest her with Its freshness and celestial refreshments. If she takes food, It runs to nourish her with the food of Its Will, so that the Divine Life may grow in the creature, and It may be consolidated and confirmed more in her. In sum, there is nothing in which my Will does not run, and – oh! the feast It makes when It sees that she receives this sweet encounter and receives the good It wants to give to her unceasingly. And if the creature also runs in each thing toward He who runs to her – oh! my Fiat is taken by such love then, that Its interminable sea swells, forms its gigantic waves and unloads them into the tiny little sea, expanding in an admirable and prodigious way the capacity and expanse of Its sea within the tiny little sea of the soul.

My daughter, these are Our divine ways – to love always without ever ceasing; to give without ever stopping to give. If it were not so, We would have to set a limit to Our Power, an ‘enough’ to Our Love; but We cannot even do this because, since Our Being is infinite; of Its own It runs in search of the beloved and wants to be loved in return. Hence, limits have no value, and ‘enough’ does not exist for Us. At the most, there are those who, ungrateful, do not want to recognize Us, and because they do not recognize Us, it happens with them as to the blind man who, in spite of the fact that the sun does not deny its light to him, but rather, it invests him everywhere, cannot see it, nor does he know it, yet cannot deny that he feels its warmth. But this cannot happen with one who lives in Our Will; Our Will Itself already keeps her watchful, in act of constant waiting to receive Our encounters, to meet each other; Our races, to run to one another. And if Our Love, in order to make her run more, hides from her Our racing, though We are racing anyway – oh! how she fidgets, the poor daughter; to the point that We are forced to immediately break the veil that hides Us and say to her: ‘We are here, calm down, do not fear, for We will never leave Our daughter - the daughter of Our Will.’ And in order to calm her We let her feel Our Love more vividly, and We lavish greater graces upon her.”

Fiat!!!

April 25, 1937

Prodigy of the operating act of the Divine Will in the creature. How one who lets It operate within herself is the longed-for creature, the welcome one, the beloved of all Celestial Court. Everything that is done in It acquires the virtue of producing Divine Life.

I was thinking of the Divine Will operating in the creature... My God, how many surprises, how many touching scenes, how many wonders and prodigies, which only a God can do! And the human littleness remains stupefied, enchanted, in seeing the immensity of the Divine Fiat which, while remaining immense, encloses Itself within her little act, and with the Creative Power forms in it Its operating act with a chain of divine prodigies unheard-of; but such and so many, that the Heavens are astounded and the earth trembles before the operating act of the Divine Will in the creature. But while my mind was wandering amid these surprises, my Highest Good, Jesus, repeating His short little visit, all goodness, told me: “My little daughter of the Supreme Fiat, Our Love is so great, that as soon as the creature calls Our Volition into her act, It runs and descends into it. To even just call It is nothing other than to prepare the little place for It to operate; to call It means to love It, and that the creature feels the need of the operating act of my Will, so that her own would not only not operate, but remain as a footstool for, and an admirer of so Holy a Volition. So, in descending, It brings with Itself Its creative virtue, Its celestial joys and beatitudes, the very Sacrosanct Trinity as Spectator and Actor of Its operating; and while pronouncing Its Fiat in the little space of the creature, It forms in it such prodigies and wonders that heavens and sun remain behind; It surpasses the whole beauty of Creation; It creates in it Its divine melodies, the suns most refulgent; It creates in it Its Life operating, Its joys ever new. This act is such and so great, that the Angels, the Saints, would want to empty the celestial regions in order to enjoy the operating act of their Fiat-Creator.

The beauty, the sumptuousness, the vivifying virtue of this divine act is such and so great, that my Divine Volition brings it to Heaven as conquest and triumph of the soul in whom It has operated, so as to gladden the whole Celestial Court with new joys and beatitudes. And the joy and glory they receive is such, that they do nothing but thank my Divine Will for having operated in the creature with so much love, because there is neither glory nor joy greater than Its operating and conquering act in her.”

On hearing this, surprised, I said: ‘My Love, but if the Divine Will takes this act with It into Heaven, the poor creature remains without and as though empty of this act.’ And Jesus added: “No, no, my daughter, the act is always hers, no one can take it away; and while it gladdens the Celestial Fatherland, it remains as basis, foundation and property in the depth of the soul. The conquest is hers, and while it delights the Celestial Court, she loses nothing; on the contrary, she feels within herself the creative and continuous virtue of my Fiat in act of making ever new conquests; and while it remains in the soul, at the same time It bring it into Heaven as new glory and joy of the Saints, and as beneficial rain for all pilgrim souls. More so, since the human family is linked to Heaven, and Heaven to the earth; there is a bond among them, such that all have the right to participate in the good that they do; they are members united to one another, and as though naturally any good runs to give itself to all. Moreover, as my Will operates in the soul, Heaven places Itself in waiting; in fact, since they swim in the Fiat, they can feel that It is about to operate, and therefore they stand at attention, they claim and yearn to receive the new conquests and joys of the Life of the Divine Will that they possess. My Will is primary life of the Saints in Heaven, therefore all of them concur in the acts It does, and, by right, they want to receive the new joys and the beautiful conquests that my Will knows how to make. Hence, one who lets It operate in her acts is the new joy of Heaven, the welcome one, the beloved and longed-for of the whole Celestial Court. More so, since there are no joys of conquests up there, and therefore they expect them from the earth. Oh! if all knew all these secrets of my Divine Fiat, they would lay down their lives in order to live of It and let It reign in the entire world.”

After this, I continued to think about the Divine Will, nor can I help doing so, for I feel It inside of me giving me life, I feel It outside of me as the most tender mother, carrying in Its arms, nourishing me, nurturing me and defending me from everything and from everyone. And my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, how beautiful is my Will. No one can boast of loving the creature as It loves her. Its Love is so great, that It wants to do everything for her, It does not want to entrust her to anyone. With Its Fiat It creates her, It raises her, It nourishes her, It carries her always in Its arms of light; It acts as her Teacher, teaching her the most sacred sciences; It reveals to her the secrets most obscure and hidden of Our Supreme Being; It makes her aware of Our Love, of the flames that burn Us, to make her burn together with Us in each act that she does. It never leaves her alone; It runs to place Its Life in her. So, each act is animated by Its Divine Life, and possesses the virtue of being able to produce Divine Life; and my Will takes these lives from within the acts of the creature in order to give Divine Life, life of grace, life of light, life of sanctity to the other creatures, as well as life of glory to the whole Celestial Court. My Will is the true All-Doer; It wants to give Itself to all by means of one who lives in Its Will. And when It has formed the fullness of Its masterpiece, It takes her into Heaven as triumph and victory of Its power and divine art, which knows how and can do anything in the creature, as long as she is disposed to living with It and lets herself be carried in Its arms. Therefore, be attentive, and let yourself be worked by a Will so Holy, that loves you so much, and wants to be loved.”

How Jesus doesn't know what to do with a soul who does not possess peace. To one who lives in the Divine Volition God gives all His works as gift, and even His very Life, to show her how much and in what way He wants to be loved.

My abandonment in the Divine Will continues. My poor mind, oppressed because of the incidents of life, too painful for me, seeks my refuge in the center of the Fiat, in which I feel as though being reborn to new life, rejuvenating, restored from my painful stages. But as I soon as I move away from the center of It, my oppressions rise again, so much so that I get the just reproaches of my dear Jesus, to the point of telling me: "My daughter, mind it, for I don't know what to do with a soul who is not peaceful. Peace is my celestial dwelling. The little bell that calls my Will to reign with its vibrating and sweet sounds is peace. Peace possesses such powerful voices as to call the whole of Heaven, and make It stand at attention to be spectator of the beautiful conquests of the operating of the Divine Volition in the creature. Peace puts to flight the frightening storms and makes arise the sweet smile of the Saints, the most beautiful enchantment of a springtime that never ends. Therefore, don't give Me this sorrow – of not seeing you at peace."

So, I tried as much as I could to plunge myself in the Divine Will, to no longer feel myself, following Its acts of Creation as well as of Redemption; and my beloved Jesus invested my intellect, and with His creative voice, all love, told me: "My daughter, leave yourself and come into my Will. We feel the extreme need to make known where Our Love reaches for one who lives in It; and Our Love is so great, that We anxiously wait for her to unite herself - to identify herself with Our works, so as to give her the right as if they were her own. And since Our Creative Power is always in act, as she identifies herself with Us, as though renewing Our works, We give them to her as gift and say to her: 'These are your works – do with them whatever you want. With Our works in your power you can love Us as much as you want, you can give Us glory in an infinite way, you can do good to whomever you want. You acquire the right, not only of Our works, but of He who created everything; and We take Our right over you, who are already Ours.' How sweet are these rights of the human littleness in Our Divine Being; they are sweet and loving chains that make Us love Our creative work with more intense and stronger love; and in Our emphasis of love, We keep repeating: 'How beautiful she is! She is Ours, fully Our own; and We are all hers. There is nothing left for us to do other than to love each other: We will love her with love eternal, and she will love Us with eternal love.'

I remained surprised, as if I wanted to doubt it; and Jesus added: "Daughter, do not be marveled – your Jesus is telling you the sheer truth: wanting to be loved, I want to make known where the creature can reach and how much I love her; and as if I were not content with Our endless joys, We want the contentment that she may possess what We possess, and may love Us as We can love. See, for one who lives in Our Divine Will this is almost natural: she finds Our Fiat in act of creating the heavens, the sun, and she unites herself to that act in order to do what It does. Our goodness is so great, that by Our union with her We have formed our marriage together, and in Our Will We have formed the resolute act of giving heavens and sun as gift to the creature. With this gift she gives Us the glory of a heaven, stretched out; she loves Us in every point of it; she does to the creatures the good of letting them possess and enjoy a heaven. And since she holds the sun in her power, she gives Us the glory that the terrestrial globe possesses the light; each man that remains invested by the light and heat of the sun is one more glory that she gives Us, it is a little love sonata that she plays for Us, that captivates Our Love to love more. Each plant, each fruit, each flower, fecundated and warmed by its heat, is one more cry of glory and love that she makes for Us. The little bird that sings at the rising of the sun, the little lamb that bleats, are all accents of glory and of love that she sends to Us. And the merit of so much good that the sun does to the earth – which is incalculable – whose merit is it? Of one who lives in Our Will. In It what is Ours is hers, and since We have no need of merits, having given her the gift,

We leave to her the meritorious part, and in exchange We want her cry of love, always and in each thing. The same with the good that all created things do: the wind, the air, the water, and everything.”

On hearing this, not only was I marveled, but I wanted to raise many difficulties, and moving on to the acts of Redemption, I found myself immersed in His pains; and my always lovable Jesus, perhaps to convince me, made Himself seen in my interior in act of suffering the painful Crucifixion. I took part in His pains and died together with Him. His Divine Blood was flowing, His wounds were open; and He, with a tender and moving tone, such that I felt my heart split, told me: “I am inside of you – I am yours. I am at your disposal. My wounds, my Blood, all my pains are yours – you can do with Me whatever you want. Or rather, be magnanimous, be brave, act as lover and true imitator of Me – take my Blood to give It to whomever you want; take my wounds to heal the wounds of sinners; take my Life to give life of grace, of sanctity, of love, of Divine Will to all souls; take my death to make many souls who are dead in sin rise again. I give you all the freedom - do as you please. See to it, my daughter - I have given Myself and that’s enough. You will make sure that everything may come back to my glory and to make Me loved. My Will will make you fly to bring my Blood, my wounds, my kisses, my paternal tendernesses to my children and brothers of yours. Therefore, do not be marveled, the divine operating is precisely this – to constantly remain in act of repeating Its works, to give them as gift to the creatures. Each one can say: ‘Everything is mine – even God Himself is mine.’ And, oh! how We enjoy seeing them endowed with Our works – the possessors of their Creator. These are the excesses of Our Love – that in order to be loved, We want the creature to find out for herself how much We love her and the gifts We want to give her. Besides, with one who lives in Our Will, We would feel as if We were defrauding the creature, if We did not give her everything as gift – and this We cannot do.

Therefore, be attentive, let your soul be embalmed with Our divine peace - for We do not know what disturbance is – and all things will bring you the smile, the sweetness, the love of your Creator.”

How God makes Himself food for the creature. Their mutual exchange, their harmonizing, their speaking to each other, form the most beautiful works. How the Queen of Heaven continues Her office of Mother and raises Her Son in the creatures.

The sea of the Divine Will continues to inundate me, and since I am incapable and unable to do anything, It seems to delight in feeding me, tiny little one, with Its own hands, more than maternal, the food of Its Fiat, and in teaching me, word by word, syllable by syllable, the first vowels of the science of the Divine Will. And when it seems that somehow I have understood It – oh! how It celebrates, because It feels all the certainty of forming a soul all of Divine Will. And I, in seeing Its maternal cares, how happy I am, and I thank It wholeheartedly. And my beloved Jesus, as the Speaker of His Volition, all goodness, told me: “My little daughter of my Will, each truth I manifest to you about my Fiat is one more growth of It that you go through, it is one more bite of food that serves to strengthen you, warm you and conform you more in It, it is one more sip you drink of the immense sea of my Will, it is one more divine property you acquire. Now, you must know that for each additional act you do in It, We set before you Our celestial table, and if you love, It feeds you Our Love; if you move on to comprehend Us, It feeds you Our Wisdom; and – oh! how many beautiful news and knowledges It gives you of your Creator. So, your God becomes your exquisite food. Therefore, in everything you do, now It feeds you with Our Power, now with Our Goodness, now with Our Sweetness, with Our Strength, Light and Mercy of Ours. So, the human littleness, by living in Our Eternal Volition, absorbs Us sip by sip, bite after bite, because, being little, it is not given to it – even as much as possible for a creature – to take, all together, what it must take of Our Divine Being. More so, since this serves to delight each other – We, in giving, she, in receiving; We, giving of Our own; she, giving Us her littleness; We, working her as We want, and she, letting Us work. It is our mutual exchange, our harmonizing, our speaking to each other, that form Our most beautiful works, as We carry out the Life of Our Will in the creature. In doing nothing, nothing is accomplished, therefore it is necessary to operate, to speak, to let Ourselves be comprehended, to work, in order to make the beautiful statues - the repeaters of Our Life. So, when We find one who wants to listen to Us and give herself to Us in order to receive, We hold nothing back of what We can and know how to do for the creature.

Now, my daughter, when the creature has nourished herself from Our Fiat, unto knowing no other food, and has formed the chain of her acts, all sealed by the characteristics of the divine virtues, God remains imprisoned within His own divine virtues inside the creature; and if she loves then, it is God that makes a display of the power of His Love, of His Goodness, Sanctity, etc., in the acts of the creature. So, the power unleashed through these acts that God does in His creature is such as to invest Heaven and earth, hover over all souls, invest them and overwhelm them with Its powerful Love, making them receive the kiss of the Divine Will, in such a way that the human family will feel Its Power and Its Love, wanting to reign. More so, since this right is given to them by God hidden by means of a creature that belongs to their human race. Hence, they won't be able to disown these rights, except for some perfidious ones; but still, my Power will know how to knock them down and conquer them. So, let me accomplish the work of my Will in you, don't stand in the way, and you and I will be happy to see It reigning in the other creatures."

After this, I received Holy Communion, and in my interior my dear Jesus made Himself seen as so very little, while the Celestial Mother laid Her azure mantle over me and the Divine Little One. Then, I don't know how, I felt Her inside of me, kissing, caressing, taking Her dear Son into Her arms. She clasped Him to Her Heart, nurtured Him, nourished Him, did to Him a thousand stratagems of love; and I was spectator, and marveled. And the Sovereign Celestial Mama, with an astounding love, told me: "My daughter, there is nothing to be marveled about; I am inseparable from my dear Jesus – wherever the Son is, there must be the Mother. This is my task – to raise Him within souls. He is tiny, and souls don't know much about the way they must raise Him, nor do they have the milk of love with which to nourish Him, calm His crying, warm Him when they make Him numb with cold. I, who am the Mother, know the little needs of my Divine Baby, nor could He be without His Mama – We are inseparable from each other. I repeat within the souls what I did in His tender age; and while I raise my Son, offering all the care to render Him happy, at the same time I take care of the daughter, to raise her according to the way my Son wants her. This is my mission, more than celestial: as soon as I see my Son in the souls, so do I run and descend into them, and I occupy Myself with His growth. More so since, one being the Will of my Son with Mine, as though naturally wherever He is, there I am as well, and as a consequence my love imposes itself in carrying out the office of Mother for He who so much loves Me, and for those whom We so much love. Indeed, I feel them like twins born of one labor – my Son-God and the creature. How not to love them?"

Then, with a more tender and moving tone, She added: "My daughter, how beautiful, great and prodigious is the virtue of the Divine Will. It empties everything that is not light or divine, It unites the farthest distances, It repeats in act what was done over centuries and centuries, and It renders as though natural the human act in the divine. It is Its Creative Power that reaches the extent of bilocating, of multiplying, of transforming Its very Life in the creature. Therefore, love It very much, and deny nothing to It."

The truths: divine birth, the greatest miracle that God can make, and the good it brings to creatures.

I am always back into the sea of the Divine Volition. The many truths manifested to me were crowding my little mind like many refulgent suns; and each of them wanted to tell the story of the Divine Fiat, but one distinct from the other: one wanted to tell the story of Its eternal light, another of Its sanctity, another of the way It forms Its Life in the center of the soul. In sum, all of them had something to say about a Will so Holy, and all had a special task – to be bearers of the good that each of them enclosed, in such a way that, united together, they formed one single life. However, in order to be able to deposit the good they enclosed, they wanted to be listened to, to be received through the doors of the soul, to be recognized, and almost begged and appreciated, so that they would deposit the Life which they contained.

I kept wandering in the midst of so many messengers, as all of them wanted to tell the eternal story of the Fiat; and my Highest Good, Jesus, repeating His short little visit, with an unspeakable love, told me: “My little daughter of the Divine Volition, you must know that the greatest miracle that Our Divine Being can make is to manifest a truth that belongs to Us. In fact, each truth is formed and matured within Our bosom first, and then We issue it outside as a birth from Us, to be bearer of Divine Life for the good of creatures. And only when Our Love raises Its flames so high, that in order not to remain suffocated We feel the need to issue Our divine births – only then do We deliver of this birth. See then, what We put out by manifesting a truth – not heavens, sun or wind, but Life of Ours as bearer of Divine Life to the creatures. The other miracles, even Creation Itself, are works of Ours, not life; but the truths are perennial life, and if they find one who receives them, they bilocate, they multiply in an incredible way for each creature, so much so, that each creature can keep them for herself, as life that belongs to her.

These truths, as births from Us, resemble Our Supreme Being in everything: they are not voice, yet they speak and make others speak; they have no feet, yet they walk, but so fast that no one can reach them or prevent their step; they enter into the intellects and form the thought in order to make themselves known; they transmute the will to let themselves be possessed; they renew the memory so as not to be forgotten; they walk through the avenues of the heart to make themselves loved. So, they have no hands, and they operate; they have no eyes, and they look; they don't have a heart, but generate love. The truths are nothing other than palpitating lives of Our Divine Being in the midst of creatures – heartbeat without a heart, because Our heart is the creature, while We, as most pure Spirit, present everywhere, are the heartbeat that can be felt, though it cannot be seen; and We form the life and give it to all the human generations. Hence, there is no miracle similar to the great miracle of when We issue a truth from Ourselves. It is a Life of Ours that We expose, which, more than sun, will become light of the creatures, such that, darting through them with its vital warmth, will mature its life, first in the creature to whom it is directed, and then by diffusing among those who want to receive it. And if Our truths find ungrateful creatures who do not want to receive so great a good, they are not subject to either dying or losing life, but they wait with invincible patience, even centuries if needed, for new generations to whom they will give the goods they possess, and will accomplish the purpose for which they came out of Our divine bosom. In issuing Our truths, We look at the centuries, and when We are certain that they will bilocate and multiply Our lives in the midst of creatures, then do We issue them, to give the good that they possess and to receive the honor and divine glory that Our truths possess.

We never do useless things. Do you think that the many truths We have manifested to you about Our Will with so much love will not bear their fruit and will not form their lives within souls? Not at all. If We have issued them, it is because We know with certainty that they will indeed bear their fruit and will establish the Kingdom of Our Will in the midst of creatures. If not today – because it seems to them that it isn't food adaptable for them, and perhaps they even despise what could form Divine Life in them – the time will come when they will compete to see who can get to know these truths more. By knowing them, they will love them; love will render them food adaptable for them, and in this way my truths will form the life that they will offer to them.

Therefore, do not be concerned – it is a matter of time. I, who know how things will unfold, do not stop; I continue to manifest my truths. And you, follow your flight, be ready to listen to Me, and to put them into practice.”

How the Divine Will is order and peace, and this is the sign wherever It reigns. One who lives in the Divine Volition is constantly renewed in the divine sanctity, love and freshness, and in her act runs the creating and growing act of the divine goods.

The sea of the Divine Volition murmurs continuously, but with such harmony, order and peace... Its waves, though gigantic, are always peaceful, and as they invest the creatures and Heaven and earth, first they give them the embrace and the kiss of peace, and then they enter into their souls. If they do not receive the kiss of peace, it seems that they pass over them, because the Divine Will does not adapt to a place where there is no peace – it is unfit for It.

But while my mind was wandering within this sea, my always lovable Jesus, visiting my little soul, with divine sweetness and peace, told me: “My blessed daughter, my Will is order, and the sign It reigns in the soul is perfect order, which generates peace. Hence, peace is a daughter of order, and order is a direct child generated by my Fiat. But you don’t know the great good that order produces. Order gives dominion to the creature and renders her dominator of herself and dominator of all created things; and since her dominion is divine – because it is generated by my Will – she dominates over my Will Itself and over all. But this is not all yet. The virtue of order is admirable, it binds itself to all, it gives itself to all, and with its peaceful and dominating waves it takes and appropriates the strength of Creation and that of the Saints that are in Heaven; even the very Divine Strength – she makes It her own. Her manners, orderly and peaceful, are so penetrating and insinuating, that all let her operate; more so, since she has given herself to all, she has kept nothing for herself, therefore it is right that all give themselves to her. So, she feels within herself the peace, the joy, the happiness of the celestial dwelling. All feel unified and bound with inseparable union, because what my Will unites is not subject to separation. Hence, true order brings the union and the accord with all; the creature has a place in everyone, and all will find a little place in her, who will love them with that same love with which their very Creator loves them. These are the prodigies that my Omnipotent Fiat knows how to do – wherever It reigns It can but do works that resemble It and generate in the soul the effects that form Its very Life, so much so, that no one will be able to find fault in her, and I must be able to say: ‘Nobody touch her’. Indeed, no one will be able to touch her, because she is Will of Mine; and if anyone dared to, I will know how to defend Myself, my Love will convert for them into fire of justice, and I will humiliate them unto dust. Therefore, be attentive that everything be order and peace in you. If you perceive anything contrary, put yourself on guard, and pray Me – press Me – that I may knock down with my dominion anything that is not order and perennial peace.”

Afterwards, I continued to think about the Divine Will, and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, as the creature calls my Will into her acts in order to live in It, my Will invests the creature and her act with Its Creative Strength, and renews Its Divine Life. Suppose that she calls It while she is operating – listen to what my Will does: It calls in act all the times she has operated, It unites them together as if they were one single act, and putting in Its Creative Strength, It transforms everything she has done and is doing into divine, It seals on it the sanctity of Its works, and gives her the new merit and glory as if she had done everything anew for love of It. If she loves, It calls back to life all the times she has loved and makes of them one single love. If she suffers, It calls to life all the times she has suffered, unites them together, places on them the seal of divine pains, and gives her the new merit for as many times as she has loved and suffered. In sum, everything that she has done and that she repeats, it all returns in act by uniting together in order to receive the new beauty, sanctity, grace, freshness, love and new merit. In my Will there are no separated or divided acts, but highest unity – everything must resemble Me, with this difference alone: that in the creature there is Our creating and growing act, while Our Supreme Being is not subject to either growing or decreasing; Our fullness, immensity and infinity is such, that in order to give vent to Our Love We feel the need to give, to love the creatures, and to be loved; but without decreasing a tiny bit. This is why We are all eyes, We are as though on the lookout to see when she wants to live life in Our Will, so as to have the occasion to love her more and enrich her with Our Love, to receive love.

We can say that We cover her with Our Divine Being, We harmonize her with Us in order to enjoy her and give her from Our own. And when she, stirred by the fever of Our Love, and by Our burning breath that tells her constantly, 'I love you, I love you, O daughter' – when she makes Our echo her own and repeats to Us, 'I love You, I love You, Life of my life, Love of my love, my Father, my Creator, my All... I love You', she puts Us in feast and gives Us the pure joys that We want, for having given her life. This is why We want her in Our Will – to keep her as We want, to give her what We want to give her, and to receive what We want from her. Outside of Our Fiat Our Love remains hampered for her; there is such distance between she and Us, that she ends up feeling far away from Us, and We far away from her; and she reaches the point of fearing Us and of being afraid of Us. Human will, where does it cast my creature, whom I so much love!"

The Queen, bearer of Jesus. The great gift that was delivered to Her. Task that She received from the Supreme Being.

The living in the Divine Will continues. Its Love is so great, that It hides me inside of Its light, that I may see, feel or touch nothing but Its Most Holy Will. Even more, this morning my Celestial Mother gave me a dear and sweet surprise: after I had received Holy Communion, She made Herself seen in my interior as She was as though harmonized with Baby Jesus, holding Him tightly to Her Maternal Heart, keeping Him covered with Her arms, so much so, that in order for me to look at Him and cheer Him with my little love, I had to abandon myself in Her arms so that I too could remain harmonized with them, and love like Jesus and the Queen Mama loved each other Oh! how happy they were that I wanted to live life together with them.

Now, while I was there, clinging to them, the Sovereign Queen, all goodness and tenderness, told me: "My beloved daughter, you must know that I am the bearer of Jesus. This is a gift that the Supreme Being entrusted to Me; and when He was certain that I possessed grace, love and power, and the very Divine Will to keep Him safe, defended and loved – only then did He deliver the gift to Me, that is, the Eternal Word. As He incarnated Himself in my womb, They told Me: 'Daughter of Ours, We give You the great gift of the Life of the Son-God, that You may take ownership of Him and give Him to whomever You want. Be careful, though, to keep Him protected - never leave Him alone, whomever You may give Him to, so as to make up for them if they don't love Him, and repair if they offend Him. You will make it so that nothing may be lacking to Him of the decency, the sanctity, the purity that befit Him. Be attentive, this is the greatest gift that We give You, and We give You the power to bilocate Him as many times as You want, so that whoever wants it, may receive this great gift and possess it.'

Now, this Son is Mine, He is my gift, and because He is Mine I know His loving secrets, His yearnings, His longing, such that He reaches the point of crying, telling Me with repeated sobs: 'My Mama, give Me to souls – I want souls.' And I want what He wants; I can say that I sigh and cry together with Him, because I want everyone to possess my Son; but I must keep His Life safe - the great gift that God entrusted to Me. This is why, if He descends sacramentally into the hearts, I descend together with Him for the security of my gift – I cannot leave Him alone. Poor Son of Mine, if He did not have His Mama who descends together with Him... How poorly they treat Him! Some don't even say to Him an 'I love You' from the heart, and I must love Him; some receive Him in a distracted way, without thinking of the great gift they are receiving, and I pour Myself upon Him so as not to let Him feel their distractedness and coldness; some reach the point of making Him cry, and I must calm His crying, and give sweet reproaches to the creature, that she would not make Him cry. How many touching scenes take place in the hearts that receive Him sacramentally. There are souls who are never satiated with loving Him, and I give them my love, and even His own love, to let them love Him. These are scenes of Heaven, and the very Angels remain enraptured, and We feel restored from the pains that other creatures have given Us.

But who can tell you everything? I am the bearer of Jesus, nor does He want to go without Me; so much so, that when the priest is about to pronounce the words of the consecration over the holy host, I make wings with my maternal hands, that He may descend in-between my hands to be consecrated, so that, if unworthy hands touch Him, I let Him feel my own that defend Him and cover Him with my love. But this is not enough. I am always on guard, to see if they want my Son; so much so, that if a sinner repents of his grave sins and the light of grace dawns in his heart, immediately I bring him Jesus as confirmation of the forgiveness, and I take care of everything that is needed to make Him stay inside that converted heart. I am the bearer of Jesus, and I am so because I possess in Me the Kingdom of His Divine Will. The Divine Will reveals to Me who it is that wants Him, and I run, I fly to bring Him, but without ever leaving Him. And not only am I the bearer, but the spectator and listener of what He does and says to souls. Do you think that I was not present, listening to the many lessons that my dear Son gave You on His Divine Will? I was present, I listened, word by word, to what He was telling You, and in each word I thanked my Son, and I felt glorified twice as much for He was speaking of the Kingdom which I already possessed, which had been all my fortune and the cause for the great gift of my Son. And in seeing Him speak, I could see the fortune of my children grafted with Mine. Oh, how I rejoiced! All the lessons He gave you, and even more, are already written inside my Heart, and in seeing them being repeated to you, in each lesson I enjoyed one more Paradise; and each time you were not attentive and would forget them, I asked forgiveness for you, and I prayed Him to repeat His lessons; and He, to make Me content – because He is unable to deny anything to His Mama – would repeat to you His beautiful lessons.

My daughter, I am always with Jesus, but sometimes I hide within Him, and it seems that He does everything as if He did it without Me; while I am inside of Him, I concur with Him, and I am aware of what He is doing. Other times He hides within His Mama and lets Me operate, but He is always concurring along. Other times both of Us reveal Ourselves together, and the souls see the Mother and the Son who love them so much, according to the circumstances and the good needed for them; and many times it is the love that We cannot contain, that makes Us reach excesses toward them. But be sure that if my Son is there, there I am as well; and that if I am there, there is my Son. This is a task that was given to Me by the Supreme Being, from which I cannot, nor do I want to withdraw. More so, since these are the joys of my Maternity, the fruits of my sorrows, the glory of the Kingdom which I possess - the Will and the fulfillment of the Sacrosanct Trinity.”

Interest that God has for the creature to live in His Will. Dowry that He will give. The sentry of Jesus to make up for what the creature lacks; and if needed He will even make miracles. Example of a king.

I feel I am in the arms of the Divine Volition; and I thought to myself: ‘It seems difficult to me that one could live perfectly in It. Life is full of obstacles, of pains and circumstances, such that the creature remains as though absorbed by them, and she escapes her rapid course in the Divine Fiat, which should flow like the breathing and the beating of the heart, just as It flows constantly within us, like breath and heartbeat, to give us life without ever stopping.’ And my sweet Jesus, compassionating my ignorance, all goodness, told me: “My blessed daughter, you must know that the first thing, most interesting, is that Our Supreme Being wants the creature to live life in Our Will, this being the only purpose for which We gave her life. Now, when We want something, We give her all the means, the aids, the necessary things that are needed so that she may give Us what We want from her; and if a continuous miracle on Our part is needed, We make it, as long as We obtain Our intent. You do not know what an act wanted by Us and fulfilled in the creature means; its value, the glory it gives Us is so great, as to reach the extent of forming Our crown, embracing the Eternal; and the contentment it gives Us is such that We place Our Divine Being at the creature’s disposal, so that Our wanted and fulfilled act may have its life in her.

Now, the first dowry We give to one who wants to live in Our Divine Will, the first support, the sure defense, are the truths. The truths open the gate, they pave the way for her and, jealous, they place themselves as faithful sentries around the one who wants to live in my Fiat. The light of Our truths concerning my Fiat no longer moves from upon the fortunate creature; it invests her, caresses her, molds her, kisses her, and gives itself sip by sip to her intelligence in order to let itself be comprehended; and this, as the cortege of the Life of my Will that reigns in her. When they are unleashed from Our bosom, the truths carry with them the task of the good that they must do – the souls that they must enclose into the light they possess; and therefore they are all eyes upon them, they fix on them so intently that they cannot escape them; nor do they become tired – even if centuries should pass, they remain always at their post. See then, what great dowry I will give to one who must live in Our Eternal Volition: all the knowledges I have manifested about It; the immense value of It, Its qualities, Its love, and the love that compelled Me to manifest them – this will be the great dowry, and divine dowry, I will give to those who will want to live in my Fiat, in which they will find all the aids, superabundant, in order to become rich and happy. In these truths they will find the tender mother who, taking them onto her lap like little children, swaddles them with light, feeds them the food, and makes them sleep upon her breast. In order to keep them safe, she walks in their steps, works in their hands, speaks in their voice, loves and palpitates in their hearts; and in order to keep them attentive and amused, she acts as their teacher, narrating to them the most enchanting scenes of the Celestial Fatherland. In these truths they will find she who cries and suffers together with them, and who knows how to put to good use even their breath. The littlest things, even their trifles, she will change into divine conquests and eternal values.”

And I: ‘My Jesus, You are right, but the human weakness is great, and I am afraid it may make its little escapes from inside your Will.’ And Jesus, resuming His speech, added: “My daughter, your concern sorrows Me. You must know that my interest, and the love that burns Me for I want the soul to live in my Will is so great, that I Myself take on the commitment of everything, I make up for her in everything. However, I do this when there has been a firm and constant decision of wanting to live in It, and on her part she is not at fault and does as much as she can. Listen to a secret of Mine, my daughter, and where my Love makes me reach - listen to what I do: when, out of strict necessity of the human life, this life, which is also Mine, due to pains that I Myself dispose, causes the creature to remain as though dazed and dismayed, and therefore she is unable to follow the acts of the Life that reigns in her, I, who want this Life not to be broken, because It is Life indeed, not virtues which can be practiced at intervals and circumstances, but with Life there is the whole necessity for a continuous act – I, who keep guard and maintain my jealous sentry, as soon as I see that she interrupts her course, I Myself do what she should be doing. Then my operating in my Fiat stirs her, and she comes back to herself and continues her course in my Volition; and I, without even telling her anything about her stop, I bind it from where she left and where my act followed, so that the Life of my Fiat may not remain broken in her, because I Myself have made up for everything; more so, since in her will she wanted, but her weakness interrupted it. Here then, my Love for creatures to live in my Will is so great, that at any cost, even if it should take continuous miracles, I will make them.

But, have you noticed my tenderness, my strong Love? After she has failed to follow her course, I do not scold her, I don't say anything to her; and if I see that she realizes her falling short, I encourage her, I compassionate her so that she may not lose confidence, and all goodness I say to her: 'Do not fear, I Myself have made up for you; and you will be more attentive, won't you?' And she, in seeing my goodness, loves Me more. I know that I must give of my own so that the creature may live in my Will; this is why I will act like a king who greatly desires for his kingdom to be populated: he lets the whole world know that if anyone wants to come into his kingdom, he wants to know it, so that he can send them money for the trip, and will let them find a home at their disposal, as well as clothing and abundant food. The king commits to giving them such riches as to make them rich and happy; and the goodness of this king will be so great, that he will conduct his life together with his people, who loves him so much for he has ransomed them with his riches from the miseries and unhappinesses of life.

So I am. I will let the entire world know that I want the people of my Divine Will, and as long as they give Me their names and make known to Me that they want to come into my Kingdom, I will give them all goods. In It unhappinesses will have no place; each one will possess his Kingdom, will be king of himself, and all will live together with their Creator. I will make such great display in giving, that all will remain captivated. My daughter, oh! how I long for this living of the creature in my Will. And you - pray and long for it together with Me; and may it be sweet for you to lay down your life for a Kingdom so Holy."

What one obtains and what it means to submit oneself to the Divine Will. Exchange of abandonments between the Divine Will and the soul; merit that she acquires. Outpouring of love. How in each created thing there is the deposit of love for us.

I was following the Divine Volition in Its acts and – oh! how many surprises, how many consoling things. One feels so much love as to remain drowned within the divine flames. And my sweet Jesus, wanting to let me know better what one submission, one more act in the Divine Will means, all goodness told me: "My daughter, if you knew how my Love feels an extreme need to pour Itself out and make known what It pours into the creature when she submits to my Will and comes as Our daughter to live in It. As she submits and We see her within Our divine boundaries, which are interminable, We feel captivated and We pour into her a new sea of love, but so great that she feels drowned, and unable to contain it all, she makes it a gift to all - to all created things, to the Saints, to the Angels, to her very Creator, and even to the hearts on earth who are more disposed – the gift of the sea of love that she has received. We feel Ourselves being given to all, to make all love Us. What traffic, what loving industries – We feel Our surprises of love being repeated, Our divine modes exchanged. As soon as the creature submits to Our Will to let It reign, she forms for Us the place within her own, to let Us operate as God inside her tiny little field; and the prodigies We make, Our industries of love, are such and so many, that the Heavens lower themselves, they are shaken and, astounded, admire what We do in the creature in whom reigns Our Divine Fiat.

You must know that Our Creation did not end with man, because It was interrupted by his withdrawing from Our Will. Since It was not reigning in him, We could not trust him, and therefore the continuation of Our creative work remained as though suspended. This is why We anxiously await his return into the arms of Our Fiat, that he may let It reign; then will We resume the continuation of Creation, and – oh! how many beautiful things We will do. We will give surprising gifts, Our Wisdom will put out all of Its divine art, and - oh! how many beautiful images that resemble Us will It issue from Its divine light; all beautiful, but distinct, one from the other, in sanctity, in power, in beauty, in love, in the gifts. Our Love will no longer be hindered; finding Our Will, It will be able to do and give whatever It wants, and therefore It will make such great display in giving, to be repaid of Its constrained Love. And since We will be free in giving, We will call them 'Our temples', We will make known to them Who We are, how much We love them and how they must love Us. We will place Our Love at their disposal, that we may love one another other with one single Love. So, one who lives in Our Will will be Our triumph, Our victory, Our divine army, the continuation of Our Creation, and the fulfillment of It.

Do you think that wanting to give and being unable to give is nothing for Us? Being able to create innumerable prodigies of graces, of sanctity, but because Our Will does not reign in the souls We are as though rejected and prevented from creating Our most beautiful works? This is the highest of Our sorrows. Therefore, by never doing your will, you will be able to soothe this sorrow of Ours, and in this way captivate Our Fiat, to make It reign in the midst of the human generations."

Afterwards, I continued to think about the Divine Will, and was saying to myself: 'Is it not enough to give oneself prey to the Divine Fiat just once? What can be the good of giving oneself always?' And my always lovable Jesus added: "My blessed daughter, you do not know the secrets of Our Love and Our infinite stratagems that reach unto the excess. One must truly love to be able to find many devices of love by which to give oneself and receive from the beloved. You must know that each time the creature gives herself to Us, prey to Our Volition, We give Ourselves to her, as though abandoning Ourselves in the bosom of the creature. And if you knew what this abandoning of Ourselves means – the grace, the good that We leave to her, the renewing of Our Life that We repeat for her – your heart would explode with joy, with happiness and with love. But this is nothing. Each time she gives herself to Us, We give her the merit that she has given Us her life; and if she gives herself ten, twenty, a hundred, a thousand times and even more, so many times do We give her the merit as if she had given Us so many lives for as many times as she has given herself to Us; and We give her Our Life, We renew her in It, We repeat the good for her, or rather, We increase it, for as many times as she has given herself to Us. Our satisfaction, the delight that We experience when the creature gives herself to Us is so great, that We abound so much toward her as to give her the merit of possessing as many Divine Lives; and bilocating her life, We give her the merit of so many lives for as many times as she has given herself.

This is Our divine commerce: We want in order to give Ourselves; We give Ourselves in order to receive the life of the creature into Our Supreme Being. This exchange of lives maintains the conversation, We make Ourselves known for Who We are, We let her feel the ardent heartbeats, the love that consumes Us, how We love her, and how We want to be loved. And besides, if she did not feel the need to give herself constantly to Us, it is a sign that she does not love Us, and her heart is not in possession of Our irresistible Love. This is the sign of true Love: wanting to give oneself always, almost at each instant, to the beloved. But while the creature gives herself, the power of love imposes itself, for it wants to receive; and if it did not receive, it would feel suffocated and would burst into cries of sorrows as to deafen Heaven and earth. This is why, in order not to reach such pangs of sorrow, my Love awaits the creature's giving herself to Me, and immediately I give Myself to her, with all the infinity of Our Will."

Later, I was continuing my round in Creation, and – oh! how many beautiful surprises! Each created thing was telling me how much God loved me; each of them possessed a space that contained a deposit of love that was to tell me always: 'He loves you, your Creator loves you...' I remained surprised, and my sweet Jesus, coming back, continued: "My daughter, you know that Creation was an outpouring of Our Love, and as We issued the Creation to the light of day, We kept everyone present, not a single creature escaped Us, and We placed for each of them, in each created thing, a deposit of love that was to love her and always say to her: 'He loves you, your Creator loves you...' So, if the created things run in order to give to creatures the good that they possess, it is Our Love that makes them run. If the heavens extend above everyone's head, it is Our deposit of love that gives them the right. If the sun gives its light to all, that is the inheritance of love that each one holds in the sun of their Creator. If the earth is stable under her steps, it is Our deposit of love that makes mother earth take the creature as though onto its lap, and securing her step, makes it say to her, under her feet: 'He loves you, He Who created you loves you...' If water quenches your thirst, it is Our cry of love that runs in the water and quenches your thirst, washes you, gives sap to the plants, and the so many other benefits it produces. If the fire does not burn you, it is Our deposit of love, which is the property of creatures, that cries out: 'Warm Our daughter, do no harm to her...' And so with all other things.

Now I want to tell you something consoling: if the creature enters into the created things, recognizes this, Our deposit of love in each of them, and makes her love resound within Ours, she prepares a banquet for her Creator. Look at how much diversity of foods of love you can prepare for Us even just in the sun: in that light there is the sweetness of Our Love; and you, by loving Us, at the touch of Our Love, sweeten your own love and give Us the food of the love that sweetens Us. In that light there are the flavors of Our Love; and you, by loving Us, give Us the joys of the many flavors of Our Love. In that light there is Our fecund Love, the Love that wounds, burns and consumes; and you, by loving Us, will acquire into your love the divine fecundity, the virtue of wounding Us, and of burning and being consumed for Us. There is also the variety of colors that embellishes everything; and you, by loving Us, will acquire the virtue of the beautiful love in which you will remain as though wrapped with an enchanting beauty; and – oh! how enraptured We will feel. Daughter, if I wanted to tell you the multiplicity and diversity of love that We have placed in each created thing for each creature - and how she has the duty to know this multiple Love of Ours in order to find the model by which to love Us with many distinct loves as We have loved her - I would never end. But, alas! Our Love remains isolated, without the company of the love of the creature, and this a sorrow for Us – that Our Love is not recognized in each created thing, while all of them have the mandate from Us to love her with a distinct love. In the wind runs the blowing of Our kisses, the waves of Our loving caresses, the moans of Our suffocated Love; in the might of the wind runs Our ruling Love that wants to make Itself known in order to rule over all; and at times It reaches the point of nearly speaking, almost with deafening screams, so that the creature may hear nothing but Our Love that loves her.

Oh! if the creature recognized Our Love that runs in the wind, she would return Our kisses and Our caresses with hers. After all, why do We kiss her and caress her? Because We want to be kissed and caressed by her. She would moan together with Our Love so as not to let Us suffocate; she would love Us with Our ruling love and hers; and screaming together with Our Love, she would deafen all by saying: 'Let us love, Let us love He Who so much loves us!' Even in the air that all breathe, how much love does not run? But no - not at intervals, like in the other created things; rather, in each instant, in each breath - if she sleeps, if she works, if she walks, if she eats, Our Love runs always, but with a Love that is distinct and new compared to all other created things. In the air runs Our Love that gives life, with an enchanting rapidity such that no one can resist It; It runs in the heart, in the blood, in the bones, in the nerves, in everything, and constitutes Itself vital act of the human being, tacitly saying to him: 'I bring you the continuous Love of your Creator, and because It is continuous, I can give you life.' Oh! if she would recognize Us in the air that she breathes – the act of life We have placed in it, the ardor of Our Love that runs, runs always without ever stopping – she would give Us her life in exchange in order to love Us, to narrate to Us Our love story and repeat Our little refrain: 'I love You, I love You always, in everything and in each thing, just as You have loved me.' From the greatest thing to the littlest there is a Love of Ours, new and distinct, for the creatures; and because they do not know It, they do not requite Us; or rather, with highest ingratitude they return Our Love with offenses. This is why We await Our Will to be known and dominating in the midst of the human generations - because It will make Itself the revealer of Our Love; then will We be repaid and we will love each other with one single love. How happy We will be; and in seeing Ourselves loved, We will add more new and distinct loves. In this way Our Love will no longer be constrained, but will have Its outpouring of love and of being loved in return.

Therefore, pray that Our Kingdom may come; and you - recognize Our Love; and if you want love, love Us. If We do not find Our Love in the creature, We don't know what to give her, nor what to do with her, because the prop is missing on which to lean Our graces, and the first element that forms Our Life in her.”

What God does to the creature when she decides to live in His Will. As she decides to live in It, her name is written in Heaven, she remains confirmed in the divine good, love and sanctity, and she is enlisted in the Celestial Militia. Example.

My flight in the Divine Volition continues. I feel I am being carried in Its arms, but with such love and tenderness as to feel confounded in seeing myself so loved, and surrounded everywhere by Its maternal goodness. And my sweet Jesus, repeating His short little visit, with such love that I felt my heart explode, all goodness, told me: “My daughter, daughter of my Will, if you knew what Our contentment is in seeing the soul enter into Our Will... It can be said that she runs toward Us, and We toward her; and as we meet, Our Will invests her with light, Our Love kisses her, Our Power takes her into Its arms, Our Wisdom directs her, Our Sanctity invests her and impresses Itself like a seal, Our Beauty embellishes her; in sum, the whole of Our Divine Being surrounds her, in attitude of giving her of Our own. But do you know why? Because by her entering into Our Will in order to live, not of her will, but of Ours, We receive what came out of Us, We feel We are given back the purpose for which We created her, and therefore We make feast. There is no act more beautiful, no scene more enchanting, than the creature’s entering into Our Will; and each time she enters, so do We renew her within Our Divine Being, giving her new charisms of love. Therefore one who lives in Our Will keeps Us in feast; she feels the need to live in It in order to be cuddled by her Creator; and We feel the need to be cuddled by her, and to give her new charisms of grace and of sanctity.”

Jesus remained silent, and I felt sunken inside the Eternal Volition, and marveled from hearing how much we are loved by God if we live in His Will. A thousand thoughts were crowding my mind, and my beloved Jesus, resuming His speech, told me: “My daughter, do not be marveled by what I told you; rather, I will tell you even more surprising things. But how I wish that all would listen, so that all would decide to live in my Will! Listen to how consoling and beautiful is what my Love pushes me to tell you – my Love is so great, that I feel the need to tell you where We reach for one who lives in Our Will:

Now, you must know that as the soul decides – repeatedly and firmly – to no longer live of her will, but of Ours, her name is written in Heaven with indelible characters of light, and she is enlisted in the Celestial Militia as heiress and daughter of the Kingdom of the Divine Will. But this is not enough for Our Love. We confirm her in good, in a way that she will feel such horror toward the slightest sin, that she will no longer be capable of falling into it. Not only this, but she will remain confirmed in the goods, in the Love, in the Sanctity, etc., of her Creator; she will be invested with the prerogative of the Blessed – no longer will she be looked upon as an exiled one; and if she is on earth, she is there as a officiant of the Celestial Militia, not as an exile. She will have all goods at her disposal. She will be able to say: ‘Because His Will is fully mine, what belongs to God, is mine.’ Even more, she will feel as the possessor of her Creator, and since she no longer operates with her will, but with Mine, all the barriers that prevented her from feeling her Creator have broken, distances have disappeared, dissimilarities between she and God no longer exist. She will feel so loved by He who created her as to feel her heart explode with love, to love the One who loves her; and to feel loved by God is the greatest joy, honor and glory for the creature. My daughter, do not be marveled – these are Our aims, the purpose for which We created the creature: to find in her Our Life, Our Will reigning, Our Love in order to be loved and to love her; and if it were not so, the Creation would be a work unworthy of Us.”

I felt my heart burst with joy in hearing what my dear Jesus told me; and I said to myself: ‘Is this possible? Is all this great good possible?’ And my sweet Jesus added: “Daughter, am I not Free to do and to give what I want? It is enough for Me to want it, and all is done. Besides, even in the low world things happen that somehow resemble this: if a man gives his name to be enrolled in the government’s army, this government, in order to be sure about the man, has him swear loyalty to it. This oath makes him remain bound to that army; he wears the uniform of the militia so as to be recognized by all as belonging to that army; and after he has shown ability and loyalty he receives a pay for life. With this pay, which no one can take away from him, he will lack nothing; he can have servants who attend to him, he can live with all the comforts of life, even if in time he should retire. And what has this man given to the government? It is only the external part of his life, which has constituted for him the right to receive a pay during his life. On the other hand, the creature who, with firm decision, has given Me her will, has given to Me the most noble part, the most precious - which is her will. In it she has given Me the whole of her interior, as well as the exterior - and even her breath; and because of this she has deserved to be enlisted in the Divine Army, so that all will recognize her as belonging to Our Militia. How can I ever let her lack anything? How not to love her? And if this could be, it would have been the greatest sorrow for your Jesus – it would have taken away from Me the peace which I possess by nature: not to love she who has given Me everything. While, rather, with infinite Love do I possess her; I hold her inside my Heart, and I let her live my own Life.”

How God wants to form many of His Divine Lives in each creature. How one who lives in the Divine Volition becomes the bearer of all and of everything to her Creator.

I found myself all invested with the Divine Volition – everywhere and in all places I found It in act of wanting to give me Its Life. Oh! how happy I felt in feeling Its empire that, at any cost, with Its loving stratagems, wanted to enclose Its perennial Life in me. I remained surprised, and my always lovable Jesus, visiting my poor and little soul, with His usual goodness and sweetness, told me: “My blessed daughter, if you knew how I delight and how my Love pours Itself out in manifesting to you Our celestial secrets – in what state of love Our Supreme Being, Our Adorable Will, finds Itself – in order to give Me delight you would press Me to tell you in what state We find Ourselves in the midst of creatures, and the great good that We can do to them. Now, you know how Our Immensity envelops everything, Our Power and Strength are such that We carry everything and everyone as though in Our arms as if they were a little feather. All this is the Nature of Our Being Trice Holy; so much so, that if We wanted to become smaller, We could not. Our Immensity and Power flow in each fiber of the heart, in all the breaths, in the rapidity of the blood that flows in the veins, in the speed of each thought – We are Actors and Spectators, and aware of everything. But this is nothing – these are just the qualities of Our Supreme Being. What is most astounding, is that We want to form as many Lives of Ours in each creature.

This is the operating of God: to have the virtue of being able to form as many Divine Lives for as many creatures as He has issued to the light of day. After all, the creature is Ours, created by Us, We live together, and because We love her, Our Love leads Us with an irresistible Strength and Our unique Power to form Ourselves as Life in her; and Our Creative Art, not content with just creating the creatures, in the ardor of Its Love wants to create Itself in the created person. See then, in what condition We find Ourselves in the midst of the human family: in act of constantly forming Lives of Ours in them. But Our Creative Art remains rejected, suffocated, unable to continue Our Divine Creation. While We live together with them, and they live at Our expense – they live because they live of Us – yet We have the great sorrow of not being able to form Our Life in them, while this would be Our highest contentment, the greatest glory that they would give Us, if they gave Us the freedom to let Us be Life of each creature.

But do you know where We are free to form this Life of Ours? In one who lives in Our Will. Our Divine Fiat prepares for Us the raw materials with which to form Our Life; It puts Its Power, Its Sanctity and Its Love in attitude of operating, and calls Us into the depth of the soul; and We, finding the adaptable and workable materials, form Our Divine Life with unspeakable love. Not only do We form It, but We grow It, and to Our greatest enjoyment and delight We carry out Our Creative Art around this celestial creature, and We begin the chain of prodigies. She, by possessing her Creator and Our Will operating in her, becomes the bearer of all and of everything: if she thinks, she brings to Us the thoughts of all, and makes herself substitutor and repairer of all human intelligences; if she speaks, if she works, if she walks, she brings the words, the works, the steps of all. The very Creation becomes her decorous cortege, and she makes herself bearer of the heavens, of the stars, of the sun, of the wind – of everything; she leaves nothing behind, she brings to Us the homage, the glory of all Our created things, even the homage of the sweet singing of the tiny little bird. Because she possesses the Life of He who created her, all things form a crown around her; even more, all of them want to be carried by she who possesses the speaking act, so that for each of them she may narrate the speaking love story through which they were created by their Creator.

So, one who possesses Our Will acquires Our jealousy of love, which is such that We want everything for Ourselves; and this, with highest justice, because there is nothing We have not given, and therefore, by justice, We want everything. In the same way, taken by Our same folly of love, she wants everything, in order to give Us everything, and she jealously wants to bring everything to Us so as to speak to Us, for all and for each created thing, her little word of love. Therefore, one who lives in Our Will is never alone: first, she is with her Creator, with Whom she is always in a contest of love to see how they can love each other more; and since all things are around her, she becomes the bearer of everything to the One who loves her, Who, being infinite Love, wants to see in the creature all things converted into love for love of Him.”

How human reflections take away the place of the divine, and are the little pebbles that render the fount of the soul turbid. How the Divine Will converts Its Love into her nature, and whatever It does at the moment of death It anticipates in one who lives in It.

I am in the arms of the Divine Volition which, more than vigilant sentry, not only wants to be life of each of my acts, but penetrating into each hiding place of my heart and of my mind, scolds me if anything enters into me which is not a birth from the Fiat. And my always lovable Jesus, visiting my little soul, and assuming the attitude of Teacher who wants to instruct His daughter in everything, told me: “Blessed daughter of my Will, you must know that self-reflections, impressions, oppressions, melancholies, doubts, little fears, impede the divine reflections, the holy impressions, the rapid flight toward Heaven, the joys of true good, the celestial peace. They are like many little pebbles cast into a lake while a person is reflecting himself in those clear waters as in a mirror, and he sees his whole entire person beautiful and orderly as it is. And now what happens? While he is reflecting himself in those crystal clear waters, a little pebble is cast into that lake: the water ripples, becomes cloudy, and forms circles upon circles, such as to make the whole water turbid. And the poor person who was reflecting himself – what happened to him? As the circles were forming in the water, so were they taking away, one a foot, another an arm, another a hand, another the head, in such a way that the person appeared as though ripped apart by the ripples of those waters. What was the cause that made those waters lose their clearness, in a way that his image no longer appears as whole, but in such a state as to arouse pity? What was it? A little pebble.

Such is the soul created by God – more than crystal clear fount, in which, more than crystal clear fount, God was to reflect Himself. Now, the reflections, the oppressions, the doubts, the fears, etc., are like many little pebbles cast into the depth of her soul; and as God reflects Himself in her, she does not feel Him as whole, but as though divided into many parts. Hence, the strength is divided, the divine joy, the sanctity, the unity of peace, are divided. This will prevent her from knowing Who God is, how much He loves her, and what He wants from her; and if she wants to reflect herself in God, these little pebbles will hinder her step, making her limp on the way, preventing her flight in order to reflect herself in the One who created her. They appear as things of no importance, yet in this is formed the knowledge of God in the creature, the union, the sanctity, God reflecting Himself in the creature, and she in God - if the soul is not disturbed by these little pebbles. These pebbles can be called the trifles of the soul, and because the firmness and substance of true Love is missing, she is always turbid, and God cannot reflect Himself in her in order to form His beautiful image. Therefore, be attentive, and always seek my Will.”

Jesus became silent, and I remained there, thinking of the great evil caused by self-reflections; and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, only in my Will can the soul reach the top of the highest sanctity and enclose within herself, as much as it is possible for a creature, a complete act that fills her so much as to leave no void in her; so much so, that the good that she does converts into her own nature. If she loves in my Fiat, the wave of Love pours upon her whole being, invests her inmost fibers; and while pouring upon her, overwhelming her completely in Love, it constitutes itself queen and converts its Love in the creature into her very nature; but so much, that she will feel her breath, heartbeat, motion, step, and the whole of her being as incapable of doing nothing other than love. This wave of love rises up to Heaven, without ceasing to rain down on her, and storms her Creator, loving Him always, because when a good converts into one’s nature, one feels the need to repeat the good received, as an act that constitutes her life. If she adores, she will feel her nature changed into adoration; hence, in everything will she feel profound adoration to her Creator burst out from within her. If she repairs, she will feel a surge to track down all the offenses in order to place her reparation. In sum, my Will, with Its Creative Strength, does not leave a single void, and knows how to convert into her nature everything that the creature does in It. See what difference between one who lives in my Will and possesses It as operating Life, and one who recognizes It as virtue, and maybe in the most sorrowful circumstances of life, but in everything else it is as if It did not exist for her.

Now I want to tell you another consoling surprise: when the creature decides, with unmovable firmness, to live in Our Volition, Our satisfaction is so great, that what We must do at the moment of death – to confirm the creature in the good in which she dwells... Indeed, you must know that everything she has done in life – prayers, virtues, pains suffered, good works – serve to form Our little Divine Life in her soul. Not a Blessed enters into Heaven if he does not possess this Divine Life, according to the good he has done. Insofar as they have loved Me and fulfilled my Will, so will they possess It – some smaller, some greater; because true happiness, true joys, must be possessed from within. So, each of them will possess their God, inside and outside of themselves, giving them ever new joys; so much so, that if, upon dying, souls are not filled up to the brim with Love and Will of Mine, I confirm them, yes, but they do not enter into Heaven; I send them to Purgatory, to fill these voids of my Love and of my Will by dint of pains, of longing, of sighs. And when they have filled themselves completely, in such a way that they now appear as fully transformed into my Love and into my Will – then do they take flight toward Heaven.

Now, for one who no longer wants to do her will, but only Mine, We do not want to wait until that moment; Our Love leads Us with an irresistible force to anticipate the confirmation of the good and the converting of Our Love and of Our Will into her own nature. Therefore she will feel that my Love and my Will are hers; she will feel my Life more than her own, but with what difference from those who are confirmed at the moment of death! These will no longer grow in good, their merits are finite; while in the others my Will will grow always, the merits do not end; rather, they will have divine merits. As they continue to love Me and to live in my Will, so will they know Me more; and I love them more and increase their glory. I can say that I run in each of their acts, to give it my kiss, my Love, to recognize it as my own, and give it the value, the merit, as if I Myself had done it.

Ah! you cannot comprehend what We feel toward one who lives in Our Will; how We love her and want to make her content in everything. Because in her We find the purpose of Creation realized; all the glory that all things should give Us, centralized in her; and, what's more, Our fulfilled Will is everything for Us."

How an act in the Divine Will can be a mighty wind, a celestial air and atmosphere Three circles. If God loves, He operates; if He speaks, He gives.

The sea of the Divine Volition always murmurs; and many times it forms its mighty waves to storm the creatures, to envelop them within Its loving waves, to give them Its Life; but with such insistence and loving pushiness - as if It were in need of us, poor creatures - that one remains stupefied. Oh! how true it is that only God knows how to love us. Now, while my mind was wandering within this sea, my sweet Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, told me: "Blessed daughter of my Volition, did you see how sweet was the murmuring of the sea of my Will? And also the souls who live in It do nothing other than murmur together in this sea. Perfect echo of my Fiat, they never cease to murmur love, glory, adoration - but in a simple way: if they breathe, they murmur love; if they palpitate, if blood circulates in their veins, if they think, if they move, in everything they murmur 'Love, love... glory to Our Creator...' And if they call my Will into their acts, they form mighty waves to envelop God and the creatures, so that all - Heaven and earth - may do one single Will. An act in my Will can be a mighty wind, such as to transport and uproot with its strength passions, weaknesses, bad habits, the putrified air of sin, and substitute them with virtues, divine strength, holy habits, and the sanctifying air of my Will. An act in my Will can be a universal air which, penetrating everywhere and in everyone, day and night, can let itself be breathed in order to infuse its life, its sanctity; and dispelling the sickly air of the human will, it substitutes it with the salutary air of my Fiat, in such a way as to let creatures remain sweetened, embalmed, vivified, healed, by this divine air. An act in my Fiat can be a celestial atmosphere which, enclosing within itself all Our works and the very Creation, with the strength of Our works storms Our Divinity and imposes itself on Us, to make Us give graces and gifts such as to render the creatures capable of receiving the Kingdom of Our Will. An act in Our Will can contain such wonders, that the creature is incapable of comprehending all of its value."

Jesus became silent, and I remained as though soaked within this sea, and, I don't know how, I felt myself being transported into the Celestial Fatherland, in the midst of three circles of light, at the top of which there was the Queen of Heaven on one side and Our Lord on the other, with an enchanting beauty and an unspeakable love. In-between these there was a multitude of souls, all transformed into the light in which they lived and grew, but kept, directed and nourished by Jesus and by the Celestial Mother. How many beautiful surprises could be seen! These souls possessed the likeness and the Life of their Creator. And my sweet Jesus and His Mother told me: "These circles of light that you see are a symbol of the Sacrosanct Trinity, and the souls are those who will form the Kingdom of the Divine Will. This Kingdom will be formed within the bosom of the Divinity. The rulers of this Kingdom will be Us - the Mother and the Son, who will keep It with jealousy. See then, the certainty of this Kingdom - It is already formed, because in God things are as though already done. Therefore pray that what is there in Heaven may be realized on earth."

After this, I found myself inside myself, with the highest sorrow of finding myself again inside the poor imprisonment of my body. Then, later, my highest Good, Jesus, all goodness told me: "My daughter, Our Divine Being is all Love; and this Love is so great, that We feel the need to issue this Love outside of Us; nor do We care whether the creature deserves it or not. Had We wanted to care about merit, the whole of Creation would still be inside Our bosom. When We love, We operate; in fact, We loved and We created the Creation; and as gift of Our generosity and of the excess of Our operating Love, We gave It to man as gift. We don't like giving Our gifts as recompense, or as merit. Where could he possibly find enough coins to pay for Our gifts? Or as many acts to deserve them? It would be like hampering Our Love, repressing It within Us, and giving nothing to the creature; and not even loving her, because if We love, then We must operate and give. Our Supreme Being finds Itself, so very often, in such delirium of love, that We feel the need to issue from Our Divine Womb gifts and graces to give to creatures; but in order to form these gifts, We must love and manifest them, so as to make them known. Hence, if We love, We operate; if We speak, Our creative word delivers the gift, confirms it and endows the creature with Our gifts. Our word is the bearer, and puts Us in the condition of pouring out Our constrained Love.

But do you want to know why We do not give Our gifts as recompense or as merit? Because We give them to Our children, and when gifts are given to one's children, one doesn't care whether they deserve them; they are given because one loves them. At the most, they are made to be comprehended. Here is the necessity of the word, so that they may appreciate the gifts, keep them, and love the One who gave them and who so much loves them. On the other hand, it is to servants or to strangers that they are given as recompense or as merit, and - oh! with how many measures.

So, in the excess of Our Love, without anyone praying Us or deserving it, We made the Creation, to make of It a gift for man. In another excess We created the Virgin, to donate Her as a gift. In another excess, I, Eternal Word, descended from Heaven in order to donate Myself and give Myself sweet prey to man. In another greater excess of Love I will give them the great gift of the Kingdom of my Will. The Celestial Virgin, Heiress of this Kingdom, will call the creatures as Her children, that they may receive the gift of Her great inheritance.

Now, my daughter, if the soul lets my Divine Will reign, her love will no longer be sterile, but fecund, nor will it be reduced to mere words, or to just works. She will feel the Creative Strength of Our Love within herself and will be placed in Our same conditions – that if We love, We operate, and if We operate, We give. But what do We give? The great gift of Our Divine Being. Our Love is so great, that if We give, We want to give everything, even Our very Selves, prey to the creature. Our Love would not be content if It did not say: 'I have given everything, I had nothing left to give her.' More so since, by her possessing Our Will, We are safe, We dwell in Our home, with all the decorum, the honors, the decency that befit Us. The same with the creature: by possessing Our same Creative Strength, if she loves Us, inside her love she will give Us the gift of her life as the requital of Our gift. Hence, it is life that we will give each other; and each time she will love Us, Our Creative Strength will multiply her life so that she may give it to Us as gift; her love will not remain isolated, but with the fullness of its life that gives itself prey to its Creator. Here then, how both sides – between Creator and creature – are equalled: Life does she receive as gift, and life does she give. And if the creature has her limits, my Will makes up for her; more so, since in giving Us her life as gift, she gives Us everything, she keeps nothing for herself, and so Our Love remains satisfied and requited.

Therefore, if you want to give Us everything and receive everything from Us, let Our Will reign in you, and everything will be granted to you.”

How Creation possesses the perfect happiness, such as to be able to give terrestrial happiness to the creatures. How sin stopped the happiness. The great evil of one who moves away from his origin. Example.

I was doing my round in Creation, to follow the acts of the Divine Will done in It, and – oh! how many surprises! Each created thing contained such happiness as to be able to render everything and everyone happy. And my always lovable Jesus, seeing me surprised, all goodness, told me: “My daughter, Our Supreme Being possesses the fount of happiness, therefore not one thing or being that was not happy could come out of Us. So, the whole of Creation possesses such fullness of happiness as to be able to give perfect terrestrial happiness to all the earth. Hence, Adam enjoyed the fullness of happiness. All created things poured upon him joys and happinesses; and then, in his interior, by possessing my Will, he contained seas of contentments, of beatitudes, and joys without end – everything was happiness for him, inside and out. As soon as he sinned, by withdrawing from my Will, joy departed from him, and all created things withdrew into their bosom the joys that they possessed, giving to man – not as to the owner, but as to an ungrateful servant - the mere necessary means. See then, unhappiness did not come out of Us, nor could We give it since We had none – to give what one does not possess is impossible. So, it was sin that cast into man the seed of unhappiness, of sorrow, and of all the evils that surround him inside and out.

Then, as the Celestial Lady and then my Most Holy Humanity came upon earth, the whole of Creation assumed the attitude of feast, they smiled at Us with joy and resumed their course of pouring joys and happiness upon Us. As We would go out of the house, they would run, they would bow and unleash joys and happiness over Us: the sun would give Us the joys of its light; it would gladden Our sight with the variety of its colors; it would give Us the joys of the kisses of love it possessed and, reverent, would lay itself under Our feet to adore Us. The wind would pour upon Us the joys of freshness, and with its blowing would drive away from Us the putrid air of so many sins. The birds would run around Us to give Us the joys of their trills and singing. How many beautiful melodies they formed for Us! So much so, that I would be forced to command them to move from around Me and to take flight in the air, to sing hymns to their Creator. The earth would bloom under my feet, to give Me the joys of so many bloomings; and I would command to it not to make such display for Me, and it would obey Me. The air would bring Me the joys of Our omnipotent breath when, breathing upon man, We gave him life, filling him with divine joys and happinesses; and as I breathed so did I feel, coming to Me, Our joys and happinesses that We experienced in the creation of man. So, there was not a created thing that did not want to unleash the joys that they possessed, not only to delight Me, but to give Me the homages and honors as their Creator. And I offered them to my Celestial Father, to give Him the glory, the honor, the homage, the love, for such magnificence and so many marvelous works that We did in Creation for love of man.

Now, my daughter, these joys in the created things still exist; the Creation, just as It was made by Us, with so much opulence and sumptuousness and with the fullness of happiness, has lost nothing, because We are waiting for Our children, the children of Our Will who by right will enjoy the joys and terrestrial happiness that all Creation possesses. I can say that it is for love of these children that Creation still exists and that the other creatures can use, if not the fullness of happiness, at least the necessary things to be able to live. This actual existence of Creation – after so much human ingratitude and so many horrifying sins – says the certainty of the Kingdom of my Will upon earth. In fact, by possessing It, the creature will become capable of receiving the joys of Creation, of giving Us the glory, the love, the requital of what We have done for her, and of doing all possible and imaginable good that the creature can do. Therefore, everything is in possessing Our Will, because this is how the whole Creation had Its origin, man included: everything was Will of Ours; all lived enclosed in It, and in It did they find whatever they wanted – joys, peace, perfect order, everything was at their disposal. Once man moved away from his origin, all things changed their appearance: happiness changed into sorrow; strength into weakness; order into disorder; peace into war. Poor man without my Will – he is the true blind one, the poor paralyzed one, such that if he manages to do anything good at all, it is all struggles and bitternesses.

In all things, if they are conducted from within the origin by which they received their existence, they find their way, a firm step, and the happy outcome of the works or goods that were started; but if they lose their origin, they turn upside down, they vacillate, lose the way, and end up being incapable of doing anything; and if it seems that they do something, it is something that arouses pity. This happens also in the human things: if a teacher wanted to teach to his pupil the consonants, but not the vowels, since the vowels run in each word, in each letter, from the lowest science up to the highest - poor boy, he would never learn how to read; and if he wanted to, he might lose his mind. What is it that produced all this evil? The shifting away from the origin of that science, which are the vowels.

Ah! my daughter, as long as man does not return into his origin, does not reenter into my Divine Will, my creative work will be a broken and dislocated work. Poor man, without the first vowels of my Divine Will – as much as I may give him light and talk to him, he will not understand Me, because he lacks the origin, he lacks the first vowels, to be able to read my lessons on my Fiat, and therefore, without basis, without foundation, without teacher, without defense, his insanity is such, that he does not even know his poor state and therefore he does not implore to reenter into my Will in order to learn the first vowels with which he was created by God, to be able to continue learning the true Celestial Science, and in this way form all his fortune, both on earth and in Heaven.

This is why I keep whispering to the ear of his heart: ‘My son, come back into my Will. Come into your origin if you want to resemble Me, if you want Me to recognize you as my child.’ Oh! how painful it is to have children who are not like Me – disennobled, poor, degraded, unhappy. And why all this? Because they rejected the great inheritance of their Celestial Father, and forced Me to cry over their lot.

My daughter, pray that all may recognize my Will. And you – recognize It and appreciate It. Love It more than your own life, and don’t let It escape you even for one instant.”

Deo Gratias.

Everything for the glory of God and for the fulfillment of His Will.

My sweet Life, my Highest Good, Jesus, come to my help. My littleness and misery are such that I feel the extreme need to feel You within me, as palpitating, operating and loving Life. Otherwise I feel incapable of telling You even a little 'I love You'. Therefore I pray You, I beg You, never to leave me alone, and that the task of writing on the Divine Will be all Yours. I will do nothing other than let my hand be carried by You, and be attentive in listening to your holy words. Everything else, You Yourself will do. So, You take care of it, O Jesus. And then I call my Celestial Mama to my help, so that, while I write, She may keep me on Her lap and synchronize me with Her Maternal Heart to let me feel the sweet harmonies of the Divine Fiat that She possesses, so that I may write what Jesus wants me to write on His Adorable Will.

Prodigies of love in the Divine Volition. How the Divine Will doubles Its Love in order to make Itself loved with Its own Love. How the Queen of Heaven will form the new Hierarchy within Her inheritance.

My flight continues in the Divine Volition, and It awaits me with so much love, that It takes me in Its arms of light and says to me: "My daughter, I love you, I love you. And you, tell me that you love Me, so I may rest my great 'I love you' upon your little 'I love You', and launching it into the immensity of my Fiat, I may make everyone and everything love you, while you love Me for everyone and everything. I am the Immensity, and it pleases Me to give to creatures and to receive from them my immense Love. I give and receive the harmonies, the multiple notes, the sweetnesses and the enchanting and enrapturing sounds contained in my Love. When my Will loves, the heavens, the sun, the whole Creation, the Angels and the Saints - all of them love together with Me. They all stand at attention, waiting for the 'I love you' of she to whom they had directed their 'I love you'; and therefore, upon the wings of my Will, I send to all your 'I love you', as though to repay them for their loving you together with Me. If one loves, it is because one wants to be loved in return. Not to be requited in love is the hardest pain, that makes one delirious; it is the most transfixing nail, which can be pulled out only by the medicine, the balm, of requited love."

Then, I was thinking to myself: 'My God, who could ever repay You for your great Love? Ah! maybe only the Queen of Heaven can claim this merit, of having repaid Her Creator in love. And I? What about me?' And I felt oppressed. And my always lovable Jesus, making me His short little visit, all goodness, told me: "Daughter of my Will, do not be worried. For one who lives in It there is highest accord in love. By possessing Its Life in the creature, my Will doubles Its Love; so, when It wants to love, It loves within Itself and It loves within the soul, since It possesses Its Life in her. In my Will, love is in highest accord – the joys and happinesses of pure Love are always in full force. Our Paternal Goodness for one who lives in Our Will is so great, that We number her breaths, heartbeats, thoughts, words and movements, in order to repay them with Our own, and fill them all up with love. And in Our emphasis of love We say to her: 'She loves Us, and We must love her.' And while We love her, We make such a display of gifts and graces as to astonish Heaven and earth.

We did this with Our Queen - We displayed so very much. But do you know what this displaying of Ours means? We look at Ourselves, and We want to give what We are and what We possess. Dissimilarity would cause Us pain; and the creature, seeing herself dissimilar from Us, would not be with Us with the trust of a daughter, and with that confidence that comes from sharing the possession of the same goods, of the same gifts. This disparity would be an obstacle to forming one single Life and loving each other with one single Love. On the other hand, to live in Our Divine Will is precisely this: one single Will, one single Love - common goods. And in all that may be lacking to the creature, We give of Ourselves in order to make up for her in everything, and be able to say: 'Whatever We want, she wants as well. Our Love and hers are one; and as We love her, so does she love Us.' My daughter, We would lack strength if We did not elevate the creature who lives in Our Will to the level of Our Likeness, to let her possess Our goods. Indeed, with my Celestial Mother, because She lived in and possessed the Life of my Divine Fiat, We love each other with one single Love, and We¹³⁰ love souls with a twin Love. And Our Love for Her is so great, that just as We have Our Hierarchy of Angels in Heaven, as well as the diversity of orders of the Saints, since the Celestial Empress is the Heiress of the great inheritance of Our Will, when this Kingdom is formed upon earth, the Great Lady will call Her own children to possess Her inheritance, and We will give Her the great glory of having Her form the new Hierarchy which will be similar to the nine choirs of Angels. So, She will have the choir of Seraphim, of Cherubim and so forth, as well as the new order of the Saints who have lived within Her inheritance. After She has formed them on earth, She will take them to Heaven, surrounding Herself with the new Hierarchy, generated anew in the Divine Fiat, in Her same Love, having lived in Her inheritance.

This will be the fulfillment of the work of Creation - Our 'Consummatum Est' - because We will have the Kingdom of Our Will in the creatures by virtue of the Celestial Heiress, who wanted to give Her life for each of them, in order to let It reign. Oh! how glorified and happy We will be, because the Sovereign Queen will have Her own Hierarchy, just as We do; even more so, since Our own Hierarchy will be Hers too, and Hers will be Ours, because all that is done in Our Will is inseparable.

If you knew how much this Celestial Queen loves souls! She, faithful copy of Her Creator, looks inside Herself and finds Her seas of Love, of Grace, of Sanctity, of Beauty, of Light; then She looks at the creatures and wants to give all of Herself with all Her seas, so that they may possess their Mama with all Her riches. To see Her children poor, while their Mother is so rich - and only because they do not live in the inheritance of their Mother - is a sorrow. She would want to see them inside Her own seas of Love, loving their Creator as She loves Him, hidden within Her Sanctity, embellished by Her Beauty, filled with Her Grace. But not seeing them there - if She wasn't in the state of Glory, in which pains have no place - She would die of pure sorrow for each creature who does not live in the Divine Will. This is why She prays unceasingly; She puts all of Her seas in prayer, to beseech that the Divine Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven. Her Love is so great, that by the virtue of Our Will, She bilocates within each creature in order to prepare the interior of their souls, She synchronizes them with Her Maternal Heart, She clasps them in Her arms, to dispose them to receive the Life of the Supreme Fiat. Oh! how She prays to Our adorable Majesty, from within each heart, saying to Us: 'Please hurry! My Love can no longer be contained. I want to see my children living together with Me in that same Divine Will which forms all of my Glory, my richness, my great inheritance. Trust Me, and I will know how to defend my children, as well as your own Will, which is also Mine.'

The Love of this Celestial Queen and Mother is insuperable. Only in Heaven will creatures know how much She loves them and what She has done for them. Her most exuberant, magnanimous and greatest act is wanting for them to possess the Kingdom of my Will as She possessed It. Oh! what would this Celestial Lady not do to obtain Her intent! You too, unite with Her, and pray for a purpose so holy."

¹³⁰ The Holy Trinity and the Celestial Mother.

The empire of the acts done in the Divine Will. God is at the head of the acts of the soul who lives in It.

My flight continues in the Divine Volition, but Its surprises are always new, invested by such Love, that one remains enraptured and with the soul overflowing with such joy, that one would want to remain hidden in It, never to leave again. Oh! Adorable Will, how I wish that all knew You, loved You and would let You reign, allowing themselves to be caught in your net of Love.

But while I was thinking this, my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness told me: “Little daughter of my Will, the surprises, the novelties, the secrets and the attractions that my Will possesses are innumerable. One who enters into It remains renewed, magnetized, so much so that she cannot get out, nor does she want to. She feels Its divine empire investing her, and the celestial balm which, changing her nature, makes her rise again to new life.

Now, you must know that my Divine Will gives such empire to the creature who lives in It, that as she does her littlest acts, she feels Its empire. If she loves, she feels the empire of Its Love; if she speaks, she feels Its Creative Strength; if she works, she feels the empire and the virtue of Its works that crowd all around her, and ruling over her with Its same empire, bring her to each heart, to let her rule and dominate over each of them. Our Will feels Its own empire in the act of the creature, and It feels forced to give what she wants in that act: if she wants to love, with her act she makes Us love and be loved; if she wants Our Will to reign, with her empire she brings Us to the point of beseeching souls to receive It. One act in Our Will does not stop; it says to Us: ‘I am your act - You must give me what I want.’ One can say that it takes ownership of Our Power, it duplicates It, it multiplies It; and the creature, ruling, does not ask, but takes whatever her act wants; more so, since in Our Will We Ourselves do not want acts dissimilar from Ours, therefore We Ourselves let Ourselves be ruled and dominated.”

Then, Jesus remained silent, and I myself cannot express what I felt. My mind was so magnetized by His words and invested by His empire, that I wanted to lay down my life so that all might know It. And my beloved Jesus, resuming His speech, continued: “My daughter, there is nothing to be surprised about – what I am telling you is sheer truth. My Will is everything and can do anything, and not to put in Our same conditions one who lives in It is not of Our Supreme Being. At the most, that which in Us is seen as Our Nature, for one who lives in Our Will is grace, participation, outpouring of Our Love - Our Will wanting for the creature to be so. This is why We want her to live in Our Volition - so that her acts and Ours may be fused together, and may resonate with one single sound, one single value, one single love; and We neither can nor do We want to resist one of Our acts.

Furthermore, you must know that the living in Our Will is unity, so much so, that if the creature loves, God is always at the head of her love; hence, His Love and hers are one. If she thinks, God is at the head of her thought; if she speaks, God is the origin of her word; if she works, God is the prime Actor operating in her works; if she walks, God places Himself at the head of her steps. Therefore, to live in my Will is nothing other than the life of the creature in God, and the Life of God within her. To leave one who lives in Our Will apart from Our Love, from Our Power, from Our acts, is impossible for Us; if the Will is one, everything else comes by itself: unity of Love, of works, of everything. This is why living in Our Divine Fiat is the prodigy of the greatest prodigies, never before seen or heard; it is Our exuberant Love, such that, unable to contain It, We wanted to do this prodigy which only a God could do in the creature, but which, ungrateful, she did not accept. However, We have not changed Our Will; even though We have been fought against, and Our Love repressed, causing Us agony, We will use such excesses of Love, such industries and stratagems, that We will obtain the intent - that Our Will be one with the creature.”

How the Divine Will wants to grow in the creature and form Its fullness. How the soul who lives in It is kept aware of all the works of her Creator, Who makes of her the possessor of all the divine works.

I feel I am inside the waves of the Divine Volition which, investing me, want to penetrate more into the depth of my soul, in order to make themselves known and to make me feel Its Life, Its celestial joys, the immense goods It wants to give to one who wants to live together with It. And my beloved Jesus, who seems to be anxiously waiting to continue to speak about the Divine Fiat, all goodness told me: “My blessed daughter, how happy I am when I see the soul disposed, wanting to listen to Me and to receive the great gift carried by my word. I never speak if I don’t see that the soul is disposed. In fact, if she is not disposed, my word cannot deliver that gift which my word itself generates.

Now, you must know that the more the creature seeks my Will, wants to know It, loves It, and does not let It escape in all her acts, the more Its fullness grows in her; one more attention, a longing, a desire for Its Life, is enough to make It grow. Oh! how admirably It grows, and gently pushes her so high as to reach the heights of the divine spheres, to know Its highest and most intimate secrets. My Will is Life, and as Life It does not want to stop, but wants to always grow; and in order to grow It waits for the littlest act, a loving invitation from the creature; more so, since It does not want to grow by force, but It wants the creature also to desire for my Will to grow always and form Its fullness.

Now, as Its fullness grows, so does the Divine Strength grow within the soul, the Sanctity, the Beauty, the happiness, the knowledge, and the fullness of the innumerable goods that my Divine Fiat possesses. See then, what one additional act means, one act of longing for It, wanting It, calling It: it is to acquire more Divine Strength, to be embellished more, but so much that We Ourselves remain enraptured. We look at her over and over again, and We recognize in her Our Strength, Our Beauty, and – oh! how We love her; and We feel even more delighted because she is for Us the bearer of Our joys and of Our goods. Before this creature Our Love swells, It overflows from Ourselves and pours into her so abundantly as to fill her up, to the point of forming around and inside of her Our maze of Love, which gives her the longing and ardent desire for the fullness of Our Will to grow.

My daughter, there is a great difference between one who is all attention, all eyes and all heart because she wants my Will, and one who wants It but without any special attention. It seems that these don’t have eyes to look at It in all things, or a heart to love It, or a voice to call It. Maybe they possess my Will in small part, but Its fullness is far away from them.”

Then Jesus remained silent, and I remained inside the eternal waves of the Divine Volition, so much so, that my poor mind did not know how to get out; and I felt like saying: ‘Jesus, enough for now. My mind just cannot contain any more of what You want to tell me.’ And my sweet Jesus placed His hand upon my forehead, and continued: “My daughter, keep listening to Me – to what extent can a soul who lives in Our Will reach: my Will makes her aware of all Our works. Our Supreme Being always maintains all Its works in continuous act; past and future do not exist for Us. Hence, the Heavenly Father continuously generates His Son, and between Father and Son the Holy Spirit proceeds. This is Life within Us, and it is like the heartbeat and the breathing that form Our Life: ‘Generating and Proceeding continuously’. If it were not so, We would be lacking Life in the same way as the creature would lack life if she did not have a continuous heartbeat and breath. In this continuous Generating and Proceeding, immense joys and such great happiness and contentments are formed, that unable to contain them within Ourselves, they overflow outside and form the joys and the happiness of the whole of Heaven. From the immense goods produced by the continuous Generation of the Word and the Proceeding of the Holy Spirit, overflowed the sumptuousness and magnificence of the machine of the entire Creation; the creation of man, the Conception of the Immaculate Virgin and the descent of the Word upon earth - all this and more is always in act within Our Divine Being, just as the Father generating His Son, and the proceeding of the Holy Spirit, are always in act.

Now, one who lives in Our Will is spectator of these divine prodigies, and she feels she is constantly being given by the Father the Son, Whom He always generates, and the Holy Spirit, Who always proceeds. Oh! the contentments, the love and the graces she receives; while she gives Us the glory of Our constant generating. In Our Will she finds the Creation in act, and We give her, by right, all the goods of It; and she is the first glorifier of the many things We have created. She finds in act the Virgin conceived, Her seas of Love, the whole of Her life; and the Virgin makes her the possessor of it all, and she takes it all and glorifies Us for the great good We did in creating this Celestial Creature. She finds in act the descent of the Word, His birth, His tears, His Life still palpitating, and His pains; and We make her the possessor of everything, and she takes everything, she glorifies Us and she loves Us for everyone and everything. In Our Will the creature can say: 'All is mine, even God Himself, just as the Divine Will is mine.' Therefore she feels the duty to glorify Us and love Us in each thing and for all. Not to give what We have done and what We do to one who lives in Our Will is impossible for Us; Our Love would not tolerate this - It would put Us in pain. More so, since We lose nothing by giving; rather, We feel more glorified and more delighted that the creatures live with Us, are aware of all Our works, and are the possessors of them all. Being able to say 'What is Ours is yours' is Our greatest happiness. Disunity never brings any good: the 'yours' and the 'mine' break the love and produce unhappiness. In Our Will disunion does not exist, nor do the 'yours' and the 'mine', but everything is 'Ours', and highest accord."

How God wants to see His Life in the soul who lives in His Will, and reaches the point of making Himself her Model. Gifts which God gives to the creature. The space of the human will: divine chamber for the marvels of God.

My flight in the Divine Volition continues. Its attractions and Its charming manners become more insistent. Its yearning to live in the soul is such that It assumes the attitude now of prayer, now of supplication, now of promise; to the extent of promising new gifts to the creature, more beautiful and unexpected, as long as she lets It reign. Only the ungrateful could resist so many attentions. But while my mind was crowded by so many supplications and sighs of the Divine Fiat, my sweet Jesus, my dear Life, repeating His short little visit, all goodness, as though wanting to pour out His Love, told me: "Blessed daughter of my Will, if you knew into what a maze of love We are put by those who do not live in Our Will! I can say that for each act they do, for each word, thought, heartbeat and breath in which We don't see the Life of Our Will flowing, Our Love remains repressed, It feels a sorrow, It bursts into tears, It moans and sighs because It does not find Its Life, Its act, Its heartbeat, Its word and the Sanctity of Our intelligence in the creature. Seeing Itself left out, as though cast aside from inside the creature and from everything she does, It feels its Love being extinguished, Its arms being tied, and It feels It cannot carry out Its crafting within her. My daughter, what sorrow - being able to give life and not giving it; being able to speak in the human word, and being reduced to silence because the creature gives it no place within her word; being able to love with Our Love in her heart, and finding no place in which to put It. Oh! how Our Love remains hampered, almost with no life, for one who does not live in Our Will.

Now, you must know that when the soul does an act in Our Divine Will, God makes Himself her Model, and the act becomes the material necessary to receive the Divine Model. So, Our more than Paternal Goodness is all attentive to see everything that the soul living in Our Will does; as she is about to think, speak or operate, so does It seal within her the model of Its Wisdom, the model of Its creative word and the Sanctity of Its works. Our Love is so great, that We want to make Ourselves Life of her life, heartbeat of her heart, Love of her love. Our delirium of love is such that We want to make the facsimiles of Us, and only with one who lives in Our Will can We obtain Our intent, nor would We lack the material adaptable to receiving Our Model."

After this, He added with emphasis even stronger: “My daughter, Our Love is so great that We do nothing other than give continuous gifts to the creature. The first gift was the whole Creation; then came the creation of man. How many gifts did We not give to him? Gifts of intelligence, in which We placed the model, the mirror, of Our Sacrosanct Trinity; the eyes, the hearing, the speech, were all gifts that We gave to him. And not only did We give him the gifts, but We also assumed Our preserving and creative role in order to keep these gifts, while remaining in act of always giving them. Our Love in donating Our gifts is such that We do not detach Ourselves from the gift We give, but We remain inside the gift We have given in order to keep it more safe and secure. Oh! how exuberant is Our Love - how It binds Us everywhere! And while It makes Us give, It does not leave the gifts at the mercy of the creature, because she would not have the virtue to preserve them; therefore We offer Ourselves to keep them, and in order to love the creature more We place Ourselves in act of giving them continuously.

And how much more should I tell you, my daughter, of the great gift We gave to the creature in creating the human will in him? Just as We created the space first, and then the sky, the stars, the sun, the air, the wind and so forth, so that the space was to serve Us to be able to create Our other works - to create them and to have nowhere to put them would not be a work worthy of Our Wisdom; in the same way, by creating the human will, We created the space, the place, in which to put the great gift of Our Most Holy Will that We gave to man. This space was to serve Our operating Will, which was to place in it more extensive heavens and more refulgent suns; and not just once, but as many times as It would operate. Therefore, while Creation was to serve man, this space of the human will was to serve his God, for Him to form His delights, to be able to always operate, and form His own resting place, His throne, His divine chamber.

I gave to man this gift, I formed this space within him, in order to have the place in which to converse with him and be one-on-one with him in sweet company. I wanted to have my secret room. My Love wanted to tell him many things, but I wanted the apartment in which to talk to him, and in which my Love could reach the extent of giving Itself prey to man, and man prey to God. This is why I love so much that he live in Our Will: because I want what I created to be only for Myself; I demand my resting place, my throne, my divine chamber. Hence, until man comes back into my Divine Will and gives Me my royal place inside his will, I cannot accomplish the Creation. We have so many more beautiful things to do inside Our space of the human will, so many more things to say, but We can neither do them nor say them, because, not finding Our Will, We find Our space cluttered, therefore We have no place in which to put Our works; and if We want to speak, he will not understand Us, nor will he have the hearing to listen to Us.

This is why We will make unheard-of prodigies in order to re-acquire what is Ours: Our space and Our divine room. You - pray and suffer, so that I may have back what is Mine; and never deny Me the space of your human will, so that my Love may pour Itself out, and my works may resume the Work of Creation.”

Purpose of Creation. Speaking and operating Life of God in the creature. God's word: the Divine Will. How one who does his own will gambles away the Divine.

I am in the arms of the Divine Volition, which loves me so much that It does not want me to move down from Its more than Paternal arms, to keep me and raise me as It wants and pleases. And if It hears me say that I love It, oh! how It celebrates, and forms the seas of Its Love around me, which repeat to me in each instant: ‘I love you, I love you...’ And my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, and finding me in the arms of His Will, all happy said to me: “My blessed daughter, how I love finding you always fully abandoned in these arms! Your destiny is assured - you will live on Our same food,

We will have common goods. You must know that the one purpose for which We created the Creation was precisely this: Creation was to serve as the dwelling for man, and man was to serve as Our dwelling. We wanted to form as many of Our Lives for as many creatures as We would deliver to daylight. Each of them was to possess Our Life – but a speaking and operating Life, since We cannot be anywhere without saying anything or without operating. If We did so, it would be like forming as many prisons for Us, which would impose on Us silence and uselessness. Our Supreme Being speaks and operates: the word calls for the work, and the work manifests Who We are, forming such beatitudes and joys as to make Us happy, as well as all those who live together with Us. Therefore, each word and work of Ours is a new joy and happiness that We create for Ourselves.

This is why We want to form in man Our speaking and operating Life: because We were to form such wonders of Our Divine Being, as to create new and ever more beautiful creations; We wanted to display and unfold what We can do and know how to do, along with the new joys and happinesses. And where would We do all this? Inside Our dwelling: man.

But, would you like to know what Our word is? It is Our Will. Our Will is the operator of Our works, the narrator of Our Divine Being, the bearer and keeper of Our Life in the creature. Without It We do not move from Our throne, nor do We form life in any dwelling. See the great necessity to possess Our Divine Will and to live in It: because with It We can do anything - We can issue Our most beautiful works, maintain Our purpose in force, form from Our Being as many lives as We want. Without Our Will everything is hampered: Our Love and Our Power are hindered; Our works halted. One could say that We remain as a God mute for the creatures. What ingratitude, what a crime, to reduce Us to silence. And while We wanted to honor them with Our Life in them, as the dwelling of Our delights and wonders, they have rejected Us, not giving Us the freedom to form It; and in Our place they gave residence to passions, to sin and to the ugliest vices. Poor man, without Our Will, without divine purpose - it would be as if he wanted to live without breath, without heartbeat, without blood circulation, which are the foundations of the human life. What life could he ever have? Wouldn't that be like killing himself on the spot? Such would be Our Life in the creature: with no breath, no heartbeat, no motion and no word; it would be a tormenting, oppressive life, which would end up dying.

It is true that with Our Power and Immensity We envelop everyone, We are present in all and everywhere; but lacking Our Divine Volition within themselves, they never hear Us speak, they understand nothing of Our Supreme Being; they live within Our immensity because no one can escape from Us, but they don't feel they are Our children, but rather, strangers to Us. What sorrow - having so many things to say, and remaining silent; having the power to work who knows how many wonders, and not being able to do them because Our Will does not reign in them.

Yet, Our Love is so great that It does not stop; We are all eyes to watch whoever wants to live in Our Will; all ears to listen to whoever calls It to live within them; all love to lean Our great Love upon the little love of the creature; and as soon as We see her disposed, We form Our speaking Life and We narrate to her the story of Our Will, the long story of Our eternal Love, how much We love her, and Our longing to be loved.

In fact, you must know that when We love and do not find anyone who loves Us, Our Love does not know where to lean in order to be loved in return, and so It wanders, It raves, It agonizes, and if It finds not even a little 'I love you' from a creature on which to lean, It withdraws back into Ourselves, where We have Our center of Love. But It does so with such pain as to be incomprehensible to the created mind. The pains of unrequited love are unspeakable, they surpass all other pains. We want to always give, We are in continuous act of giving, but We want to find her will, willing to receive - a desire, a sigh, forming the space, the little shelves on which We can place Our Will and what We want to give and do. These desires and sighs are like ears that listen to Us, eyes that look at Us, hearts that love Us, minds that comprehend Us; and if We don't find these little shelves, We cannot give her anything, and she remains blind, deaf, mute and without a heart. Therefore, Our Will is put to flight, and It comes back to take shelter in Our Celestial regions."

Then, I continued to think about the Divine Will. I felt completely invested by It and I prayed my dear Jesus to help me and keep me locked inside His Heart, that I might live and know nothing other than His Divine Will. And He, coming back, continued: “My daughter, all the good of the creature is tied to my Divine Will. If she unties herself from It, all her goods are ended. You must know that every single time she does her human will, she gambles away the Divine with all Its goods; hence, she loses all that is beautiful, all that is holy and good. This is an incalculable loss. The poor creature is thrown into the most squalid misery; she loses the rights to all goods, and she is invested by such unhappiness that gives her no peace; and even if it seems that she has something good, it is apparent, and it ends up torturing her completely. On the other hand, each time she decides with total firmness to do my Divine Will, she gambles away the human will, the miseries, the passions; she loses all evils, the miserable rags, the filthy clothes that the human will had formed for her. What a happy loss! To lose evils and miseries is glory, it is victory, it is honor. But to lose the goods is cowardice and dishonor. See then: if the creature wants it, she can recover from the great loss of my Will that she suffered by doing her own; more so, since she will have the help of Our Power, of Our Love and of Our Will Itself. By acquiring again the rights to all goods, all will defend her in order for her to recover from the lost game.”

How these truths are the greatest gift that God gives to us. Divine birth. Longing and yearning to see us possessors of His gifts. His word is an outpouring of Love. The great good of an act done in the Divine Will.

My poor mind is as though besieged by the Divine Will. It wants to speak so much about the truths that belong to It, that I cannot contain them, because my capacity is too small; so I am forced to say: ‘Enough for now, Jesus. You want to say so many things, but I am incapable of retaining them. I won’t be able to say them all, and much less write them as You want.’ And my sweet Jesus, compassionating my littleness, all tenderness told me: “My little daughter of my Will, do not fear. Your littleness remains dissolved inside my Will. You are not the one who has to manifest Its truths, but my Will Itself will take on the commitment of becoming the narrator of what It wants to make known. Therefore It will invest your mind, It will make Itself word upon your lips, and It will make Itself known for Who It really is. Surely you cannot do it by yourself, but as long as you place your will into Ours, We will arrange everything, and We will make known what We want to say.

You must know that when We want to do some good to the creatures, or reveal a truth - which is the greatest good We can give to them, because by speaking it, We make of it a gift for her - first We mature it within the womb of Our Divinity; then, when We can no longer contain it, because Our Love is such that It wants to see that gift being possessed by the creatures, to the point of making Us restless and delirious, unto causing Us to languish because It wants to see that good transmitted to them... We find Ourselves in the painful conditions of a poor mother who, having formed her baby, feels herself dying if she does not deliver him into daylight. We cannot die, but if We do not deliver to the light the good that We want to give as a birth from Us, Our Love reaches such excesses, that if creatures could see it, they would comprehend how much a God can love, and into what constraints they put Us when they do not receive the good We want to give them. Therefore, when We find one who does receive it, We confirm the gift, We make feast, and We feel victorious for the good We have given her; and this, because after even just one creature has received it, this birth from Us, delivered with so much love, by itself will make its way, will go around through all creatures, and by its generative virtue it will regenerate many other births, filling the whole world. And We will have the great glory of seeing Heaven and earth filled with Our gift, with Our goods, and whoever wants to receive it being the possessor of it. Everywhere We will feel the loving voices, the notes of Our speaking Love, requiring Our constrained Love, for We could not deliver this birth from Us had We not found at least one creature willing to receive it. For Us, doing good is a passion; giving is the continuous delirium of Our Love; and in finding one who receives it, We feel Our Life and Our rest in that gift. Therefore We love so much the first one who disposes herself to receive this birth from Us, that We trust her, We make her Our secretary; and she, feeling so loved by Us, makes the commitment to love Us for all, and – oh! what a contest begins between she and Us.

You must know that each word of Ours is an outpouring of Love that We make with the creature. So, every word spoken on Our Divine Will is an outpouring of Love that We have already done; and receiving refreshment from this outpouring, We have continued to speak, to form the chain of Our outpourings of Love; in fact, it was a repressed Love that We kept within Us, and if you knew what this, Our outpouring of Love means, and the goods it produces! Our outpouring of Love fills Heaven and earth, invests all, it is balm over the pains, it becomes daylight in the night of guilt, converting sinners, straightening those who are limping in good, strengthening the good. In sum, there is no good that a word of Ours cannot do, containing Our outpouring of Love. Therefore, letting Us speak is the greatest good that can be done for the creatures; and Our Love being requited, and giving Divine Life to the creatures is the greatest glory We can receive. What can one word of Ours not do? It can do anything; and it can be said that whoever is disposed to listen to it gives life to Our word. In fact, We never speak if We don't find one who wants to listen to Us, therefore, the one who does listen to Us, loves Us so much that We feel as if she wanted to give Us life in the midst of creatures; and We give her Our Life, at her disposal. So, be attentive on listening to Us, let Us pour out Our Love, because many times, when We have no one with whom to pour out Our Love, these outpourings convert justly into Justice.”

Jesus kept silent. Who can say what remained inside my mind? I don't have the words to say it. Therefore I stop here and I abandon myself in the arms of Jesus to rest together with Him, Who loves me so much and wants to be loved in return, and Who gives me the whole of Himself to be loved back as He loves me.

Then, I continued my round in Creation, to trace the acts done by the Divine Volition, make them my own, and be able to love Him back the way He loved me. And as I reached the blue vault, I thought to myself: ‘This sky serves as a vault for the residents of the earth, and as a pavement for the celestial residents. So, since it serves everyone, all have the duty to adore He Who with so much love has created this celestial vault to give it to us.’ Therefore I called all the Angels, the Saints and all the inhabitants of the earth to be with me, so that, all together, we might requite Our Creator in love, in adoration, glory and thanksgiving, for He loved us so much that He gave us this sky. In the Divine Will I called and embraced everyone, and as if all were one, they loved together with me. Sweet Jesus felt loved and wounded by so many voices, and with unspeakable love, told me: “My daughter, the power of one act in my Will is such as to seem unbelievable. As you were calling everyone, I felt loved by all; and since you have a will, free and capable of acquiring merit, as you emitted your act, my Will unleashed from Itself a greater love, glory and happiness, by which all felt invested. The Angels and the Saints feel a greater glory and happiness, and feel even more loved by God, while the earth receives more aids and graces, according to their dispositions. All the acts done in my Will receive this great good, because my Will belongs to all, and all have a right to that act; and since it is an act from a pilgrim soul, who gains the merit of every good she does, that merit becomes a common merit, and therefore common joy, love and glory. If you knew what it means to be loved more by God, and the joys and the glory that a God can give, oh! how much more attentive you would be. The Angels and the Saints, who know this, long for your call in order to have this great good; and when you don't call them, with zeal they say: ‘She is not calling us today?’ So, while you are on earth, your merit runs to Heaven to give new love and new happiness to the celestial residents.

Oh! how I wish that all knew what it means to operate in my Will! In fact, knowledge is like the appetite, which makes one desire and enjoy the food that one eats. But without appetite, one feels aversion toward that same food, and does not enjoy it. Such is the knowledge: it is the bearer of my gifts, of the good I want to give to creatures, and it is the confirmation of possession. Moreover, knowledge generates esteem and appreciation for my truths; and only then do I speak, when I know that my words are loved, listened to, and appreciated. Even more, when I see esteem and love I feel attracted by my same Love to manifest more truths. But if I don't see it I remain silent, and I feel the pain of my repressed Love. You will not do this to me, will you?"

How the Divine Will never stops, and seals with Its Eternal Love all the works of the creature. Exchange of imitation and of life between the Creator and the creature.

My flight continues in the Divine Fiat, and – oh! how happy It shows Itself in keeping Its creature on Its lap, remaining always together and operating together. The company of the creature makes It even more happy than It is, because It finds in her one who looks at It, who loves It, and would want to match It in being all Its own, in the same way as the Divine Volition is of the creature. If It loves, It finds one who loves It; if It works, It finds one who receives Its works; if It is offended, It finds one who defends It, and many times makes It turn Its justice into graces. Therefore, It uses all Its stratagems of love with her.

But while my mind was wandering in the Divine Volition, my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, all love told me: “My blessed daughter, the Love of my Will never stops. It is always looking for new devices, new inventions of love, even to the extent of enclosing the one who lives in It inside the intimate hiding places of Its loving secrets; and It shows to her Its intimate creation of ever new and increasing Love, in which It keeps the Blessed and the pilgrim souls as though within one single breath of Love. It reveals to her new arcane and celestial secrets of Our Divinity, giving her unheard-of news on where Its loving Power can reach, as well as Its prodigies for one who lives in It. As long as It finds her in Its Will, It takes delight in telling her ever new things, and in giving her new surprises of Love. Even more, listen to what It does: It makes Itself small within her, while remaining immense; and It loves and says: ‘Ah, the creature loves Me the way I love her.’ And since nothing other than love can enter into Us, this Will of Mine, as though shrunk inside the creature, turns everything she does into love. If she prays, adores or works, It melts everything into love; and with a power fully divine, my same Will leads these acts of the creature into the bosom of Our Divinity, and they take their place inside Our Love. We look at these acts as Our acts, and We feel in them the eternal prayer of Our Love; Our adoration - all of Love; Our eternal works of Love; and – oh! how We remain glorified and delighted, because the creature can say to Us: ‘My prayer, my adoration and my acts are eternal - they are invested with your eternal Love. They have been made so by your Divine Will, therefore I love You as You love me.’ This is precisely Our folly, Our delirium of love: We want to operate and love within the creature as We operate and love within Ourselves. But only Our Will reigning and operating within her can reach such an extent. In fact, if We lower Ourselves, it is not to lose Our Divine Being within the finite; but rather, it is to elevate the creature to infinity, and to give her of Our own, sealing her littlest acts, even her breathing and her motion, with Our Eternal Love, so that We can feel in her Our breath of Eternal Love and Our own motion which does not move without unleashing Love, within hers. Therefore, the whole of Creation was nothing other than an outpouring of Love. We wanted to associate with Our works, and with the creatures whom We delivered to daylight, so that We might love each other with one single Love.

My daughter, what suffering in not having been understood by the creatures. Because of this, We cannot receive the good of telling them Who We are, of making Ourselves known; how We are nothing other than Love and We want to give love in order to receive love. How I wish that everybody knew this!”

Then Jesus remained silent, as though drowned inside His flames of Love. Afterwards, as if He felt the need to pour out more, as though wanting to set the whole world afire with His Love, sighing, He added: “Listen, my daughter, to another greater surprise of Our intense Love, and to the extent of Our delirium of Love. Our Supreme Being loves the creature so much that We even reach the excess of imitating her. We make Ourselves small, We enclose Ourselves within her, and We want to walk with her feet, work with her hands, speak with her mouth, look with her eyes, think with her intelligence, palpitate and love within her heart. So, in order to do everything she does, and the way she does it, We want to have feet, hands, mouth, eyes and heart, like the creature has them; and We ask this of her, as if We were not the absolute Masters, saying to her: ‘Let us love each other. We give you of Ourselves, and you - give Us of yours.’ In fact, since Our Supreme Being is most pure Spirit, It is step without feet - without walking It is present everywhere; It does everything, It operates everything without needing hands; It is word without mouth; It is the Light, and can see all without eyes. But since We love her so very much, We like to imitate her; and this is an immense device of Our Love, which only a God can do. In order to be able to say to the creature: ‘You must imitate Us, you must do it as We do’, We say to her, ‘We want to imitate you, and do it as you do.’ After all, she is Our creature, the work of Our creative hands; she came out of Us, from within the Power of Our creative Love; therefore it is no wonder that We want to descend within her, almost to imitate her and do what she does, and the way she does it. This is nothing other than giving honor to Ourselves and greater importance to Our works. But We can do this in the creature in whom Our Will reigns; in her We can do anything - pour out Our Love, imitate each other – because she is completely disposed to doing whatever We want. On the other hand, there where Our Will does not reign, We can say: ‘We can do nothing.’

Now, listen to another surprise of Love that seems incredible. Once the creature has given Us the freedom to imitate her, giving Us life within herself, giving Us her feet, hands and mouth, We call her to the imitation of Us; and letting her enter into Our Divine Being, the Power of Our Fiat gives her Its step without feet, letting her be present everywhere - in the Angels, in the Saints, in the Celestial Queen, and even inside Our divine womb. Oh, how happy We are! She is no longer encircled by the human nature, but free together with Us, operating without hands; speaking without a mouth, and – oh! how many words.... With Our word she tells Us the long story of Our Love and of Our operating Fiat. She feels Our eternal Wisdom being poured into herself, and – oh! how many things she tells Us about Our Divine Being. She speaks, and always speaks, and – oh! how We delight in hearing the creature narrating to Us what We are; so much so that, taken by Our own flames of Love, she feels the need to love Us without a heart, because the heart has its limits, while Our Love without heart has no limits - It is immense; and so the creature gets rid of the heart and loves within Our infinite Love.

See, my daughter: could it ever be possible to give surprises of Love more beautiful than these? To feel the pleasure - the taste of imitating her; doing whatever she does as a pretext of love in order to call her to imitate Us, and make her do what We do! The abysses of Our Love are so many, and, what’s more, It keeps searching for ever new devices of Love.”

I cannot say what I felt inside my mind: immensity of light which, converting into words, spoke of so many devices of Love of my Creator. And my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, keep listening to Me. Our Love is such that it seems It gives Us no peace if We do not make new inventions of Love in order to love and be loved. If we did not do so, We would condemn Ourselves to idleness, which cannot be in Our Supreme Being, because We are a continuous Act of ever-burning Love, and of never-ending works. Our Wisdom is such that It always does new things. Now, wherever Our Will reigns, We enclose Ourselves inside that creature and We pour out Our Love with abundance. We centralize everything We have done, all that we do and will do, repeating in the soul Our most beautiful works, the outpouring of Our Love, the new inventions of Our Wisdom, which knows how to do so many of them, that the creature cannot count them. Oh! how many touching scenes We perform! She becomes Our theater of Love, the deposit of Our works that never cease to operate, the refuge for Our delights, joys and happiness; the hiding place for Our celestial and arcane secrets, the display of Our varied beauties. But do you know why? To enjoy them together, because wherever Our Will reigns, nothing must be missing of Our works. Our Will encircles Us within the soul, and makes Us do in her what We do within Ourselves; and this, because We want her to know Who We are, what We can do, how We love; and to give her a more certain proof, We give her Our Love, We let her love as We love, so that she may find out for herself how a God loves and knows how to love; and in order to delight with her, We let her do together with Us what We Ourselves do. Do not be surprised - this is the nature of Our Will and of true Love: to unify the creature with Us; to love her and make her love Us as We do. Disparities must not exist, otherwise it would make the creature unhappy to see that We love her so much, and she doesn't; that We know how to do many things, while she can do nothing. Poor child, she would be there in Our Divine Being under the weight of a profound humiliation, like a stranger, without trust; like a poor one before a rich man. We just cannot do this type of things - if she is with Us, then whatever is Ours must be hers too. The living in Our Fiat is unity - common works and joys; and this is what makes Us more happy, and gives Us a large field for the outpouring of Our Love."

How God always gives to the creature, without ever ceasing. Gifts He gives to one who lives in His Will. The palpitating Life of God. The little winner.

My flight in the Divine Will continues, and I remain stupefied in seeing how It always wants to give; and since I am small, nor can I enclose Its immensity within me, with invincible patience and love It waits for me to enclose within myself the truths It has spoken to me, accompanied by Its graces, so that I may take possession of them. And as soon as It sees that I possess them, immediately It places Itself in the attitude of wanting to give me and tell me even more surprising things. Will of God, how much You love me! How can I ever repay You?

Then, my lovable Jesus, coming for His usual short little visit, all goodness told me: "Blessed daughter, it is Our Divinity that possesses, by nature, the desire to always give. Just as you have a breath that constantly wants to breathe, even if you didn't want to, so do We possess the continuous act of always giving; and even if the creature, ungrateful, does not take what We give, it remains around Us to sing the praises of the perfection, the goodness, the sanctity and the generosity of Our Supreme Being, as the triumph of Our Love and of how much We love the creature, waiting with a patience that only We can have, for the creatures who would take what others have rejected from Us. And Our Love is such that We adapt Ourselves to them, giving little by little, because being small, the creature cannot take all at once what We want to give her. But Our giving must be continuous; We would feel as though faint, Our breath being suffocated, if We did not give. Our Divine Will wants to be the Life of the creature - the greatest act, the most exuberant love, which only a God can do and knows how to do.

Now, in order to be possessed by her, Our Will gives her the gift of Its praying virtue, and It takes the lead in order to confirm the gift, making all created things pray. It imposes Itself on Our Love, Power and Goodness, and makes Our Love, Power and Goodness pray. All Our attributes pray; even Our Justice, Mercy and Fortitude turn into prayer; no one can be missing. Whenever Our Will wants Us to do an act or give a gift, everyone and everything bend their knees to do what It wants. And when all have prayed - even Our very divine attributes - We confirm the gift; the prayer of this creature becomes universal, and each time she prays, she has such power that all Our things pray, even Our attributes, because in that gift she has received the right over all. What cannot be obtained with this gift of prayer? It can be said that the Heavens move, and that Our very Being feels enthralled and bound; and It surrenders.

After the gift of prayer, I move on to give her the gift of Love; and in order to be confirmed in love, she loves with new love in the sun, in the sky, in the wind, and even in Our Divine Being, so as to acquire the right to love all and to be loved by all with a new continuous love. Oh, if you knew what it means to be loved by all with an ever growing love, and to have the power to love all with growing and new love! - to be able to say to your Creator: 'Growing and ever new is Your Love for me; growing and ever new is my Love for You.’ This Love surpasses the Heavens, It fills the Celestial Fatherland, and Its waves come to unload themselves into Our divine bosom; and – oh! the marvels that take place. All remain astounded, and glorify my Divine Volition for such a great gift It gives to the creature.

Now, as We give her this gift, We enlarge her capacity so that she may comprehend the gift she has received, and make use of it. Then We move on to give her the gift of inseparability, of union with God, which is such that she reaches the point of feeling Our Life more than her own. God becomes for her the Actor and Spectator, and she remains as the bearer of her Creator, living with His very Life, with His Love and Power. With this gift everything becomes her own, she has the right over all; and when We see that she possesses it, We add the gift of making her triumphant over all, triumphant over herself, triumphant over God. All is triumph in her - triumph of Grace, of Sanctity and of Love; and We call her ‘Our winner.’ We let her win everything, because that is Our gift for her, and when We give, We want to see the fruits that Our gift contains. Therefore, for each act she does in Our Will - each word, work and step - many distinct harmonies are formed between she and Us, one more beautiful than the other. She keeps Us constantly busy, and Our Love is so great, that on the outside We surround her with all Our works, while in her interior We invest her and repeat all Our acts that have been bearers of Life – hence, the Life of the Queen, and the Life of the Word upon earth, which was a continuous excess of Love that gave new Life to all.

So, We always give; We are never exhausted. The soul who lives in Our Will is the full day of Our continuous works, and Our Life that palpitates and repeats Our acts, which are always in act without ever ceasing. Therefore she is Our triumph, and Our ‘little winner’; and this is Our delirium of Love: We want to be conquered by the creature. When she wins, Our Love is unleashed, and Our yearning and delirium find life in the creature, and they rest.”

Prodigies of Creation. Dose of Power and of Sanctity that God put out for love of man. The acts done in the Fiat will be always new, and each one more distinct and beautiful than the other. These acts will enclose everything and will form the speaking seas, works and steps of their Creator.

I was doing my round in Creation in order to trace all the acts of the Divine Volition, to make them mine, embrace them, adore them, and place my little ‘I love You’, in recognition of how much the Divine Will has loved me, and has done for me and for all. Oh! how many surprises, how many new things one comprehends; how many divine secrets of their Creator do created things contain! And my always lovable Jesus, visiting my little soul, seeing me surprised, told me: “My daughter, Our works are always new and they harmonize with their Creator. There is so much harmony between them and Us, that they always know how to say new things about the He who created them; more so since, being inseparable from Us, they receive new contact with Our Divine Being. This is why, in following the acts of my Divine Volition, you always find new surprises and comprehend new things that Our works possess.

Now, you must know that when We issued the Creation from within the womb of Our Divinity - because It was already inside of Us ‘ab æterno’¹³¹ - in letting It out of Our Fiat, We also put out, within a sea of love, all that the creature was to do. Therefore, everything came out of Us, and We would offer to her everything that she was supposed to do; hence the whole Creation is crammed with all the works that must be done, unto the last man; and even though this is invisible to human eyes, it is visible and palpitating for Us - in Our Will - forming a creation¹³² more beautiful than Creation¹³³ Itself. And Our Love for it is so great that, while this creation occupies the whole atmosphere, We bring it into Our divine bosom; and as We deliver the creatures to daylight, so do We begin to offer to them, with Our own creative hands, all that they must do. As principle of each of their acts We place the Life of Our Fiat as the foundation, and Our Love as the nourishment for the act, because We do nothing, nor do We give anything, if it does not have Our Will as principle and Our Love as food and provision. It would not be a work worthy of Our Supreme Height, to give works which have nothing of Our Life, and which do not possess Our food, which is Love.

¹³² The spiritual creation of all the acts of creatures.

¹³³ The material Creation.

The whole of Creation, together with all the acts that the human generations were supposed to do, was a birth which We held within Our divine womb 'ab æterno'; and Our Love, unable to contain It any longer - for It felt the need to deliver of It - wanted to pour Itself out; and since, when We do an act, We do a complete act, in issuing the Creation We also issued everything that the creature was supposed to do. Our Divine Fiat, enclosing everything within Itself - Creation and human acts - placed Itself in waiting to deliver the creature to daylight, so as to administer to her the acts that belonged to her. Is this not an exuberant Love, which only a God could have: to order and form the acts, and then to deliver to the light the creature who was to use those acts, as formation of sanctity, of love, of glory for herself and for He who had created her?

But this is not all. Our Love never stops. As this birth came out of Us, We also issued from Ourselves a dose of Our Power in order to sustain the creature and her acts, arming and equipping them with Divine Power. Therefore, she has Our Power that sustains her. We also issued the dose of Our Wisdom, by which her intelligence and all of her acts were to be animated; so, if new sciences, new inventions and discoveries, almost incredible, can be seen in the creature, it is because of Our Wisdom that invests her. In the same way, We put out a dose of Love, of Sanctity, of Goodness, and of all Our attributes, in order to administer to her love, sanctity, goodness, and so forth. Man did not exist yet, and We were already busy with him; in him We longed for Our Power, Wisdom, Love, Sanctity and Goodness, placing Ourselves at his disposal to make him as beautiful as We could, and say to him: 'You are like Us in everything. We could not have made you more beautiful.' The fact that We put out Our divine qualities and all the acts that man was to do, even before he came out to the light of time, was for Us a love so intense as to seem incredible. In Our delirium of love, We kept saying: 'Oh man, how much I love you! I love you in my Power, I love you in my Wisdom, in my Love, in my Sanctity; I love you in my Goodness, and even in the acts that you will do. I love you so much that I place them all in waiting for you. Our Divine Volition, to which We entrusted everything - Our divine qualities as well as the very acts which will be yours - is in act of handing them all to you, as the outpouring of Its Love for you.'

Now, you must know that Our Supreme Being possesses by nature an Act ever new; therefore these acts that are established for each creature will be new and distinct from one another: distinct in their sanctity, ever new in their beauty, one more beautiful than the other; new in the love, in the power, new in the goodness. These are acts formed and nourished by Us, therefore they possess all Our characteristics; all beautiful, varied in sanctity, love and beauty - each one different from the other. They will be Our order, the type of Our diverse beauties, the fecundity of Our Love, the harmony of Our Wisdom: just as it appears in the Creation, in which all Our works, all of them, are beautiful, but the sky is not sun, the wind is not sea, the flowers are not fruits; and yet, though distinct among themselves, they are all beautiful; even more, they form the harmony of the varied beauties: true image of the acts and of the creatures themselves.

You must know that these acts in my Divine Will form an army of new beauties, of new love and sanctity, such that, by just looking at them, We feel enraptured, and We anxiously wait for creatures to come who, by possessing Our Will, will be endowed with them and will possess them. See then, how certain it is that Its Kingdom will come upon earth: Its acts already exist! And they will be unleashed from within my Will like a noble army, and will let themselves be possessed by the creatures. My daughter, the Creation came out from within my Fiat, and everyone and everything must return into my Will as a work worthy of Our Power; and only when We recognize Ourselves in the creature and in her acts, then will We remain fully glorified. We can give everything, and she can receive it all, as long as Our Divine Will reigns; but if It does not reign, she forms an abyss of distance between herself and Us, and there is nothing We can give her.

But this is not all yet, my daughter. Since it is a firm decision to give the Kingdom of Our Will to creatures, We want them to know the goods contained in It, and where their acts, done in Our Divine Will, can reach. In fact, if they do not know Its goods, We will have many blind, deaf, mute children, unable to speak of their Creator; and not knowing these goods, neither will they love or appreciate what they possess. But in Our Will all have a clear sight, a fine hearing, and a speech animated by creative strength, therefore they will be so eloquent as to always have something to say, so much so that all will remain astounded, and the very Heavens, delighted, will lower themselves to listen to them. The children of my Will will be the joy of all and the true narrators of their Creator. Only then will We find some who are capable of speaking about Us, since it is not they who will speak, but my Will Itself will be speaking within them – Our Will which alone is able, and knows how to speak of Our Supreme Being.

Therefore, keep listening to Me. As soon as the creature will possess Our Volition, all her acts - small and great, human and spiritual - will be animated by my Will. These acts, animated by my Will, will rise between Heaven and earth, will invest and braid together the sky, the sun, the stars and all Creation. Then they will rise even higher and will invest all the acts of the Queen of Heaven, identifying themselves with them. These acts will have the power to invest the acts of Our Divinity, Our joys and beatitudes as well as those of all the Saints. And once they have enclosed everything within themselves, without leaving anything out, they will present themselves victoriously before Our Divine Majesty, and will offer them to Us as complete acts which lack nothing. Oh! what joy, what glory for Us, in finding in these acts, the sky, the sun, all the acts of the Queen of Heaven, the love with which She loved Us, Our own acts, Our joys and Our unceasing Love! These acts done in Our Will redouble for Us the glory of Creation; they redouble the glory and the love that the Sovereign Queen gave Us; they redouble Our glory and the glory of all the Saints. It is enough to say that Our Will has entered into this, to say everything, for It encloses everything. Wherever Our Will enters, It knows how to make a fury of love and of glory, centralizing Itself in everything. After all, everything is Its own, so It holds the right over all.

Now, the wonders that these acts done in my Will form in the soul are unspeakable. Our Divine Fiat uses them as means to form seas of Love – not seas that murmur, but seas that speak, and speak with such eloquence about Our Love, pleasing Us so very much, that We want to keep listening to them, always. The voices of this creature are wounds that she sends Us; her words are darts; she has always something to say about the story of Our Love; and because We like it so much, We remain always attentive in listening to her, for We want to miss nothing of what regards Our Love. How beautiful it is to hear the creature who possesses Our sea of speaking Love, always speaking about Our Love. So, being the possessor of the creature who lives in It, my Will is up to things of every stripe: It forms the works that speak of Our works, the steps that speak of Our ways... In sum, since Our Will is word, wherever It reigns It gives speech to all that the creature does, making of it a divine prodigy.

Therefore, there is nothing greater, holier, more beautiful - that glorifies Us more, than the living in Our Will; nor is there any good greater than this, that We can give to the creature. Hence, be attentive and follow Me, if you don't want to stop my speaking."

The prayers of one who lives in the Divine Volition are commands, and her acts are messengers between Heaven and earth. For the soul who lives in the Divine Will all things become Will of God.

I am at the mercy of the Divine Will. I feel Its longing, Its yearning of love for It wants to make Itself known - not to be feared, but to be loved and possessed, to let the creature be identified with It, and to say to her: "Let us live life together, so that whatever I do, you will do as well. I feel that my Love gives Me the need to live heart to heart; or rather, one single heart with you. O please! do not deny Me your company. I know that you lack many things to be able to live together with Me, but, do not fear - I will take care of everything. I will clothe you with my royal garments of light; I will arm you with my Power; I will display my Love to you, making the Life and the Love of my Will flow within the inmost fibers of your being. If only you want it, all is done."

I remained surprised, and I prayed that He would give me the grace to live of Divine Will, because I greatly feared myself. And my sweet Jesus, making me His short little visit, all goodness told me: "My little daughter of my Volition, why do you fear? In my Will there are no fears, but highest love, courage and firmness. Once It has decided, It never moves; more so, since the soul who lives in It does not pray, but commands, and she herself can take, as the owner, whatever she wants. We place everything at her disposal; and this, because all is sacred and holy in her; more so, since by living in Our Will, she will not want, nor will she ever take or command anything but what We Ourselves want. Therefore, her commands delight Us, make Us joyful; and We Ourselves say: 'Take. Tell Us - what else do you want? The more you take, the more you make Us happy.' When the creature wants Our Will, all her acts are like many messengers between Heaven and earth; they go up and down continuously, acting now as messengers of peace, now of love, now of glory. Sometimes they reach the point of even commanding the Divine Justice to stop, taking Its just fury upon themselves. How much good do these messengers do! When We see them coming before Our Throne, We recognize Ourselves in these acts which, disguised by the human veils of the acts of the creatures, hide Our own Will - but it is always Our Will. And, delighted, We say: 'What an art of Love It has! It hides inside the acts of the creatures so as not to be recognized. But We recognize It anyway, and since it is Ourselves loving, We let It do whatever It wills.' Therefore We call these acts 'Our acts', and We recognize them as such, although the creature concurred in them, and with her acts she has given Our Will the clothing with which to cover Itself. Hence, she is the support on which my Divine Will can lean, and It delights in carrying out Its Life, making unheard-of prodigies, hiding within the creature, as though covering Itself with her guises. More so, since the Creation and all creatures received their origin from Its Fiat, and they live, grow and are preserved in It; the Fiat is actor and spectator of all their acts, they will carry out their lives in the Fiat, and will fly to Heaven in an act wanted by Its Will. So, everything belongs to It; all the rights are Its own; no one can escape It. The only difference is that one who lives in It, lives life together with It, knows It, is aware of what It does, delights It with her company, and forms Its joy and the confirmation of what my Will wants to do in her. On the other hand, one who does not live in it, does not know It; she remains isolated and forms Its continuous sorrow."

After this, He added with unspeakable tenderness of love: "My blessed daughter, how beautiful it is to live in my Will. This creature keeps Us always in feast; she knows nothing other than Our Will, and everything becomes Will of God for her: her suffering, Divine Will; her joy, her heartbeat, breathing and motion become Divine Will; her steps, her works, feel the steps of my Will and the Sanctity of the works of my Fiat; the food she takes, her sleep, the most natural things, become Will of God for her. In whatever she sees, feels and touches, she sees, feels and touches the palpitating Life of my Will. My Will keeps her so occupied and invested with Itself, that, jealous, It does not allow even the air not to be Divine Will. And just as for the creature everything is Our Will, so it is for Us; We feel her in the whole of Our Divine Being - in the Heartbeat and in the Motion; and We can do nothing, nor do We want to do anything without the creature who lives in Our Will. Our Love is such, that We make her flow within all Our works, and together with Us she maintains and participates in Our creative and preserving act. So, she is together with Us, doing what We do, and wanting what is wanted by Us. Nor can We put her aside, since one is the Will that we possess, one the Love, one the act that we do. The living in Our Will is precisely this: to live always together; to do one single thing. And this was the need that Our Love felt: to have the company of the creature, to delight together, to keep her on Our lap in order to make each other happy. And since the creature is small, We want to give her Our Will in order to have the occasion, in each of her acts, to give her Our Life, Our act, Our manners - Ours by nature, hers by grace. This is Our joy, and Our greatest glory. Do you think it is trivial for Us to give Our Being, in such a way that the creature, unable to contain It because she is small, would give It back to Us again, together with herself, and We, in turn, give Ourselves again? It is a continuous giving of oneself to each other, and this makes such love and glory arise, that We feel as though repaid by her for having given her life. Hence, each thing she does without letting Our Will enter, is a tearing that We feel, a right that We feel is being taken away from Us, a glory and a joy that We lose. Therefore, be attentive, and let everything become Divine Will for you.

Furthermore, for each act the creature does in Our Divine Volition, We redouble Our Love toward her. As this Love invests her, It brings with It Our Sanctity, Goodness and Wisdom, so she remains doubled in sanctity, in goodness and in the knowledge of her Creator; and as We love her with doubled love, so does she love Us with double love, with double sanctity and goodness. Our Love is an operative Love, and as It departs from Our Supreme Being in order to love the creature with doubled love, so does It give her the grace to love Us with ever growing love. Not to add something more to an act made so great by Our Will is impossible for Us. We can say that these acts are the capturers of Our Love. They capture Our Sanctity, and form their ways to get to know Who We are and how much We love her.”

How the Divine Will forms the Most Holy Trinity in the creature who lives in It. Wonders of the acts done in It. How true Love begins from oneself. The Divine Will, fecundator and sower of Divine Life in the souls.

The Divine Volition continues to invest me. I feel Its motion within me, speaking as It moves, but with such eloquence, that if It did not make a prodigy in order to let Itself be understood, I would not be able to repeat what It says. Even more, It adapts Itself to my capacity, because if It speaks - Its word being a creative word - It wants to create the good contained in Its word; and if I did not understand It, I would not be able to make that good my own, nor give it to others as property of the Supreme Fiat. So I felt concerned, thinking: ‘How can it be that Its motion is word?’ And my sweet Jesus, visiting my poor soul, all love told me: “Blessed daughter of the Divine Volition, you must know that wherever my Will reigns with Its creative power, Its motion is word; hence, It speaks in the works, in the steps, It speaks in the mind, in the breathing. Wanting to establish Its Kingdom, my Will speaks in order to create Its Divine Life in each act of creature. Therefore it takes highest attention in order to hear where It wants to begin Its teachings. By the power of Its word, It invests the human act - the human breath, heartbeat, thought and word - and forms in them Its divine work - the divine breath, heartbeat, thought and word. These acts rise up to Heaven, they present themselves before the Sacrosanct Trinity; and Our Divinity looks at these acts, and what do We find? We find Ourselves, Our Life and the very Most Holy Trinity reproduced in these acts. We look at the prodigy of Our Will which has overwhelmed the creature with Its power, making of her the repetition of Our own Life, and – oh! how happy, how enraptured We remain, because We find in her the Sanctity that resembles Us, Our Love that loves Us, the Intelligence that comprehends Us, Our Power and Goodness that move Us to love mankind through the bonds of Our sweetness. We recognize Ourselves in her, finding the Work of Creation as We want It to be. One alone of these acts contains such wonders that they can’t find enough room in which to put themselves, such is their greatness. Only in Our immensity can they find the place in which to stay, remaining fused with Our own acts. What will Our glory not be, as well as that of the creature, because her acts, by virtue of Our Fiat, hold their place within the acts of her Creator? Oh! if all knew what it means to live in the Divine Will, to let It reign, they would compete with one another to let themselves be invested by It and become the repeaters of the Divine Life.”

Beloved Jesus became silent, and I remained immersed in the sea of the Divine Volition, and as though stupefied, I said: ‘My God, what heights can one who lives in your Will reach!’ And a crowd of thoughts, like many voices, kept speaking and speaking; but I am unable to repeat them. Maybe I will be able to repeat them when I am in the Celestial Fatherland where I will possess the same language as up there. So, while I was feeling as though concerned, my Highest Good, Jesus, continued: “My daughter, do not be surprised. Everything is possible to my Will. True Love, when It is perfect, begins from oneself. The true model is the Most Holy Trinity: my Celestial Father loved Himself, and in His Love He generated His Son; so He loved Himself in His Son. I, His Son, loved Myself in the Father, and from this Love the Holy Spirit proceeded. In this loving of Himself, the Heavenly Father generated one single Love, one single Power, Sanctity, and so forth; and He bound the inseparable union of the Three Divine Persons.

When We created the Creation We also loved Ourselves. So, We loved Ourselves in stretching out the heavens, in creating the sun; it was the Love for Ourselves that moved Us to create many beautiful things worthy of Us and inseparable from Us. And when We created man, the Love of Ourselves became more intense, and as We loved Ourselves in him, Our Love reproduced Our Life and Likeness in the depth of his soul. One cannot give but what he possesses; and since Our Love was perfect, in loving Ourselves, We could not separate Ourselves from what came out from within Us.

Now Our Will, in wanting the creature to live in It in order to form Its Kingdom, loves Itself, and in loving Itself It wants to give what It possesses; and only when It forms the repetition of Our Life, when It operates in the acts of the creature, and triumphant and victorious, to Our greatest glory and honor It brings them into Our divine womb, so that We may recognize Our own Life in the acts of the creature who lives in Our Will – then is It content. This is precisely the meaning of loving Itself in all that It wants to do and produce: giving Itself in order to form another being similar to Itself. Our Will is the fecundator and sower of Our Life; and wherever It finds souls who are disposed, It loves Itself, It fecundates them with Its Love, and sows in them Its divine acts which, united together, form the great prodigy of the Divine Life in the creature. Therefore, abandon yourself prey to my Will, and let It make of you whatever It wants; and we will be happy - you and Us.”

The Sovereign Queen is the Heiress of the Divine Will, and therefore the Heiress of the Divine Life. How She made of Herself a precious pledge in the creative hands of God. The great good contained in one act done in the Divine Fiat.

I was doing my round in the acts of the Divine Will, and as I arrived at the Conception of the Most Holy Virgin, I paused in order to offer to the Divinity the Power and the Love which the Divine Persons had in conceiving this Celestial Lady, so as to obtain the coming of the Kingdom upon earth. And my sweet Jesus, surprising me, told me: “My daughter, as this Holy Virgin was conceived, so did Our feast start again with mankind. In fact, from the very first instant of Her Conception She inherited Our Divine Will, which immediately began Its divine crafting within Her beautiful soul; and in each of Her heartbeats, thoughts and breaths, Our Will formed, with Its Creative Power, enchanting prodigies of sanctity, of beauty and of grace, to the point that We Ourselves - Actors and Spectators together with Our Divine Will - remained enraptured. And in Our emphasis of love We said: ‘How beautiful is the creature together with Our Will! She gives Us ease to form Our most beautiful works, and she gives life to Our own Life within herself.’

Our Love rejoiced and celebrated, because Our Divine Heiress - the Heiress of Our Will and of Our very Life - had come out to the light of time. And since by virtue of Our Will operating in Her She was fully Ours - exclusively Our own, in looking at Her We felt Our breath, Our heartbeat, Our Love, ever burning and ever loving, and Our own motions within Hers. Our Beauty shone through the movements of Her pupils, of Her little hands, and in the sweet enchantment of Her enrapturing voice. She kept Us so busy and festive, that not even for one instant could We remove Our gazes from Her. So, She belonged to Us, fully Our own; Our Will was already Hers by right; and We recognized in this Holy Creature Our Divine Heiress, for by possessing Our Will She had already taken possession of It¹³⁴.

Now, this Holy Virgin possessed Her own humanity, in which She bound the whole human family, almost like limbs to the body; and We, for love of Her, seeing in Her the whole of mankind, as soon as She was conceived We gave the first kiss of peace to all humanity, constituting it the heir of Our Divine Heiress, with the exception of some ungrateful ones who would not want to receive it. See then, how certain it is that the Kingdom of Our Will must come upon earth: there is already a creature who inherited It, and since She who inherited It is a creature that belongs to the human race, all creatures acquire the right to be able to possess It.

This Celestial Sovereign, taken by love, made of Herself a pledge in Our creative hands, so that all could receive the Kingdom; and since this pledge possessed the Life of my Will, it contained an infinite value, such that it could be pledged for all. What a sweet and dear pledge was this Holy Creature in Our hands! By making Her life and her acts flow into Our Divine Volition, She formed divine coins, to be able to pay Us for those who were to inherit Our Divine Fiat. Then came my Humanity, united to the Eternal Word; and with my life, pains and death, I paid a sufficient price to purchase back this Divine Will of Ours and give It to creatures as their Inheritance. One act, one breath, one movement in my Will, contains such value as to be able to purchase Heaven and earth, and anything it wants. Therefore, let my Will alone be your life and your all.”

Afterwards, I continued to immerse myself inside the Divine Volition... What an enrapturing strength It possesses! Its sweetness, the attractions of Its enchantment, are such that one would not want to lose even one breath. And my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, the prodigies of my Will are unheard-of. Its Power is so great that, as the creature operates in my Will, It calls into action all that she has done before, unites it together, and gives back to each act the merit, goodness and power, as if the creature were doing it anew, enriching it with so much grace and beauty as to form the enchantment of all Heaven. Then, as celestial dew, this act invests all the Saints and gives them the new glory and happiness which the operating of the creature in my Will contains. It then pours this dew upon all pilgrim souls, so that they may feel Its power and grace in their acts. How many souls, burned by passions, by sin, by brutal pleasures, feel the freshness of this divine dew and are transformed in good. One act in my Will overwhelms Heaven and earth, and if it does not find souls who are disposed to receive such a good, it puts itself on the lookout, spying the circumstances, the occasions and the disillusionings of life, ready to invest them, embalm them and give them the good it possesses. The acts in my Will are never idle; they are pregnant with light, with love, with sanctity, with divine sweetness; and they feel the need to give light to those who live in darkness; to give love to those who are cold; to give sanctity to those who live in sin; to give divine sweetness to those who feel embittered. These acts, true children of my Divine Fiat, never stop, they keep going around, even for centuries if needed, in order to give the good which they possess. And since they are animated and armed by Its Power, they can say: ‘We can do anything, because an omnipotent Divine Will gave us life.’”

How an act of Divine Will contains such Power and Love that, if God did not make a prodigy, the creature would not be able to contain this infinite act. The passport.

¹³⁴ Divine Inheritance.

My poor mind continues to cross the sea of the Divine Volition. It seems to me that It wants to say always new things on what It is able to do and wants to do inside the creature in whom It reigns. And since sweet Jesus takes great delight in speaking about His Will, as soon as He sees the creature disposed to listen to His story, He assumes the primary role of narrator in order to make It known and loved. Therefore, repeating His little visit, He told me: “My daughter, if I wanted to speak to you always about my Fiat, I would always have new things to tell you because, Its story being eternal, it never ends - either what It is Itself, or what It can do in the creature.

You must know that one act of my Will in the creature contains such power, grace, love and sanctity that, if my Will did not operate a prodigy, the creature would not be able to contain it, because it is an infinite act, and what is finite is not capable of embracing it all. Listen to where Its Love reaches: as the creature disposes herself, calling my Will into her act, my Divine Will operates. In operating, It calls Its Infinity, Its Eternal Life, Its Power which imposes Itself over all; Its Immensity which calls and embraces everyone and everything. No one can set himself aside from Its operating. And once my Will has enclosed everything, It forms Its work. See then, what an act of my Will is: an infinite act, eternal, armed with divine power; immense, such that nobody can say, ‘I wasn’t there, in that act.’

Now, these acts cannot be without producing a great divine glory for Our Supreme Majesty, as well as an immense good for the creatures. Since they are acts done together with the creature, they operate as God does, and they bind God and the creature: God, to giving, and the creature, to receiving. They are like pretexts for Our Love, which says to Us: ‘The creature gave Us a place in her act; she gave Us the freedom to do whatever We want.’ Therefore Our Love imposes Itself on Us in order to make Us give what We are, and also to honor Ourselves and for the honor of Our operating Will. Our Love reaches such pretexts and yearning of Love that It would never want Us to stop giving, placing before Us Our Immensity that never ends, Our Power that can give anything, Our Wisdom that can dispose anything. These acts are divine acts, and they can form the passport for other creatures, to let them enter into the Kingdom of Our Will. They will give a child to Our Kingdom, so that the more acts are done in It, the more populated It will be; and all the good will overflow upon those who have been the first to give life to my Will in their acts.

Now, you must know that the first passports were formed by Me and by my Celestial Mother for the first children of my Will, and they contain my signature, written with my Blood and with the sorrows of the Most Holy Virgin. To all other passports also runs my signature, otherwise they would not be recognized. Therefore, one who lives in my Will has my Life as origin, my Love as heartbeat, my works and steps as endowment, and my very Will as word. I feel Myself in this creature, and – oh! how I love her and feel loved back by my same Love; and the soul feels such joy and contentment, for she loves Me no longer with her little love, but with my eternal Love; she embraces Me with my works, she runs after Me with my steps; she feels that I am her life - she finds everything in Me, and I in her. Therefore, be attentive, daughter, if you want to render yourself happy, and make Me happy.”

After this, I felt a little more in suffering, and I was coughing hard; and at every fit of coughing I asked that the Divine Will would come to reign upon earth. And my dear Jesus, all tenderness, squeezed me tightly in His arms, telling me: “My daughter, I knew you would ask for my Will at every fit of your coughing, and I felt my Heart being wounded and bursting with love. I felt as if I were receiving, in your coughing, my Immensity that enveloped Me and asked Me for my Will; my Power and Infinity that made all ask for my Will to reign; so much so, that I Myself was forced to say: ‘Will of Mine, come to reign, delay no more!’ I feel such violence, that I do and say nothing other than what the creature does and says. Therefore I want you to ask for my Will in your pains, in the food you take, in the water you drink, in the work you do, in your sleep; I want you to engage your breath and heartbeat to ask for my Will to come and reign. In this way, everything will be for you an occasion to ask for my Will - even in the sun that fills your eyes, in the wind that blows upon you, in the sky that you see, stretched above your head. Everything must be for you an occasion to ask Me for my Will to reign in the midst of creatures. By doing this, you will place many pledges in my hands; and the first pledge will be your whole being, so that you won't even move without asking for my Will to be known and longed for by all."

How all the truths written about the Divine Will will form the day for those who will live in It. The Queen of Heaven languishes with love, for She wants to endow Her children.

I felt my poor mind as though crowded by the so many truths that my sweet Jesus made me write about the Divine Will; and I was thinking to myself: 'Who knows when these truths on the Divine Fiat will come to light, and what good they will produce...' And my beloved Jesus, surprising me with His little visit, all goodness and tenderness told me: "My daughter, I too feel the need of love to let you hear the order that these truths will have and the good they will produce. These truths on my Divine Will will form the day of my Fiat in the midst of creatures. Insofar as they come to know them, so will this day keep forming. Hence, as they begin to know the first truths I have manifested to you, provided that they have good will and the disposition to make of them their own life, a most splendid dawn will arise; but these truths will also have the virtue of disposing the creatures, and of giving light to many blind who do not know my Will, nor love It.

Then, once the dawn is risen, they will feel invested by a celestial peace, strengthened more in good; and they themselves will yearn to know more truths, which will form the beginning of the day of my Divine Will. This beginning of the day will increase the light and the love; all things will turn into good for them; passions will lose the power to make them fall into sin. It can be said that this is the first order of the divine good that they will feel. This order will facilitate their actions for them; they will feel a strength with which they can do anything, because the primary virtue that my Will casts into the soul is precisely this: to transmute her nature into good. Hence, feeling the great good of the beginning of the day of my Will, they will long for the day to advance; they will want to know more truths, which will form the full daylight. In this full daylight they will feel, vividly, the Life of my Will within themselves, Its joy and happiness, Its operative and creative virtue within them. They will feel the possession of my very Life, for I am the bearer of my Divine Will. The full daylight will kindle in them so much yearning to know more truths which, once known, will form the full midday. In it the creature will no longer feel alone; between her and my Will there will be no more separation; whatever my Will does, she will do as well, operating together. Everything will be hers by right - Heaven, earth, and God Himself.

See then, how noble, divine and precious will be the scope of these truths which I made you write on my Divine Will - to form Its day. And for some they will form the dawn; for others the beginning of the day; for some others the full daylight and, lastly, the full midday. These truths, according to one's knowledge of them, will form the different categories of the souls who will live in my Will. One more knowledge, or one less, will make them ascend or remain in the different categories. Knowledge will be the hand to make them go up to superior categories; it will be the very life of the fullness of my Will in them. Therefore, I can say that with these truths I have formed the day for whoever wants to live in my Divine Will - a day of Heaven, greater than Creation Itself; not made of sun or stars, because each truth has the virtue of creating Our Life in the creature, and - oh! how this surpasses the whole of Creation! Hence, Our Love has surpassed everything in manifesting so many truths on my Divine Will. Our glory on the part of creatures will be full, because they will have Our Life in their power, to glorify Us and love Us.

As for the emerging of these truths, just as I have had the power and the love to assist the one to whom I had to manifest them, in the same way I will have power and love to invest the creatures and transform them into these very truths, in such a way that, feeling their life within them, they will feel a great need to bring to light what they feel within themselves. Therefore, don't be concerned; I, Who can do it all, will do everything and will take care of everything."

After this, I was following the acts of the Divine Will, in which there were all the works, the love, the prayers, the sorrows, the palpitating life, the breaths, and everything that the Queen of Heaven has done, as if She was just doing them. And I embraced them, I kissed them, I adored them, and I offered them in order to obtain the Kingdom of the Divine Will upon earth. And my dear Jesus, resuming His speech, added: "My blessed daughter, one who lives in my Will can enter everywhere and can give Me everything: my Celestial Mother as if She were her own, as well as the way in which She loved Me, and everything She did. This creature can reach the point of even duplicating my Life and giving It to Me in order to love Me, as if It were her own.

Now, you must know that just as I formed the day of my Divine Will for the creatures by manifesting to you so many truths about It, in the same way, with Her Love, with Her sorrows, with Her prayers and acts that She did, which, all being done in my Divine Will, filled Heaven and earth, the Sovereign Queen of Heaven formed the sufficient endowment for those who must live in It. With what longing She longs and yearns to be able to endow Her children! She sees Herself immersed in so many riches of grace, of love, of sanctity, but She does not find Her children, in order to endow them, because they do not live in that same Will in which She lived. Look, my daughter, how in everything She did and suffered there is written: 'For my children.' Therefore, if She loves, She calls Her children to receive the endowment of Her love, in order to make Us recognize them as Her children and as Our children, and make Us love them as We love Her; if She prays, She wants to give the endowment of Her prayer. In sum, She wants to endow them with Her sanctity, with Her pains, and with the very Life of Her Son. How touching it is to hear Her and look at Her, as She keeps Her children within Her Maternal Heart as though inside a sacrarium; and in all Her acts and breaths, She calls Her children and says to Our Supreme Being: 'All that I am and possess, is all for my children. O please, listen to Me! I feel my Heart bursting with love. Have pity on a Mother who loves, and wants to endow Her children, to make them happy. My happiness is not full; I feel it halved because I don't have my children enjoying it together with Me. Therefore, hurry, let the Divine Will be known, so that they may also know the yearning of their Mother, and how I want to endow them, and make them happy and holy.'

Do you think that We remain indifferent before this touching scene, as She languishes with love so much, that with Her maternal tenderness and with the rights of Mother She prays Us and beseeches Us? Ah, no! How many times, because of these, Her cares, I manifest more surprising truths on my Fiat, to give Her free rein to pour out onto Her children a more extensive endowment, since it will be given to them according to their knowledge. Therefore, you too, enter my Divine Will, and together with this Celestial Mother, pray and supplicate that Our Will be known and reign in all creatures."

One act done in the Divine Will loves God for everyone, and gives Him that which the creature owes Him. One who lives in the Divine Fiat gives God the occasion to repeat His works in act. God wants to operate one-on-one with the creature. The 'I love You': divine jewel.

The Divine Volition continues to inundate me with Its light, which unleashes a Power so great as to form such prodigies in the acts of the creature, that one remains as though enraptured. One can see the Creative Power, which encloses everything and does everything in the little human act. Oh! Power and Love of the Divine Will, how insuperable You are! Your Power conquers everything, Your Love seems incredible! And my lovable Jesus, Who wants the unheard-of prodigies which His Divine Fiat can do in the creature to be comprehended, visiting my little soul, told me: "Daughter of my Will, the flames of my Love are such that I feel suffocated; and in order to give vent a little bit to my Love that makes Me burn and languish, I return to say what my Will can do in the creature. In order for my Will to reign, one must know Who It is, the extent of Its Love, what Its Power is, and what It can do.

Now listen to Me. As the creature gives It the freedom to operate, It calls Its Immensity and Power, It encloses everything and everyone in that act, and Our Divinity Most Holy receives in that act the love of each creature. We hear in that act the voices and the heartbeats of all hearts, saying to Us: 'We love You. We love You...' This act gives Us the adoration of each one, and everything that they owe to their Creator; Our Will animates everything, and We feel in that act that even the sun, the heavens, the stars and all Creation, are saying to Us: 'We love You, we adore You, we glorify You.' So, We receive everything from Our Will operating in the creature, and for each of them Our Love is requited, and Our glory completed. Our Will can give Us anything, although It makes use of the act of the creature; and taken by love toward the one who lets It operate in her act, It says: 'I give you everything, my daughter. I place you before Our Supreme Majesty as the one who has loved Us for all, and for each one has given Us the glory and the adoration of all; and has made Us loved even by the sun, by the heavens... The whole Creation was harmonizing, and all created things were saying among themselves: "Love, love to Our Creator!" Therefore, to you I give the merit of everything; all is yours.' My Will cannot operate, nor does It want to, unless It encloses everything and does everything."

I remained surprised, and I said to myself: 'Is it possible? Is all this really possible?' And my dear Jesus added: "My daughter, do not be surprised. One single act of my Will is greater than Heaven and earth. Its immensity has no boundaries, Its power has no limit; It holds everything and everyone in the palm of Its hand; therefore in Its operating It has an act of infinite Love, which can say 'Love' for all; and after It has loved for all – oh! how much of It is left. Besides, Our Love is perfect: first We love Ourselves, We secure Our interests, Our glory, Our Love; and then We descend in the creatures, loving in them with Our same Love, glorifying Ourselves with Our own works. Who does not think of himself first? Therefore, whether Our Will operates within Us or in the creatures, first It must give Us, by right, what is due to Us and befits Us on behalf of all and of each one; and then the creatures will receive according to their dispositions."

Afterwards, I continued to be inundated by the waves of the Divine Volition – but waves of light, packed with truths and love, wanting to make known Its prodigies, Its power, and what It wants to give to the creature. So I was following Its acts that It did in Creation, to make them mine and to be able to say: 'What belongs to Jesus is mine too.' And my always lovable Jesus, coming back, resumed His speech and told me: *"Daughter of my Will, as the creature goes back into Our works, to long for them, love them and make them her own, Our Love makes Us run toward her, to admit her to Our company and renew Our works for her alone, as if We were in act of repeating them just for her. Hence, We centralize all Our Love in her, as well as Our power, Our joys, and the stratagems and follies of love that We had in creating and delivering the whole Creation. And in Our emphasis of Love, We look at her and We find her 'heavens', with the Love that We felt in stretching out their azure vault. Then We look at her again, and We find the multiplicity of the stars, as she gives her voice to each of them, to make them say to Us: 'I love You, I love You, I love You...' These voices of 'I love You's' form the most beautiful of the celestial melodies, and their harmony, the sweet sound that they form for Us, is such that We feel inebriated; and in Our inebriation We say to her: *'Daughter, how beautiful you are! You are the bearer of infinite joys for Us. Not even when everything was created did We receive such melodies and joys, because a creature united to Our Will was missing, who would make Our works say to Us: 'I love You, I love You, I love You...' At the sight of such a show of Love, We renew the creation of the sun, of the wind, of the sea, of the air, and We centralize in her all Our Love and divine harmony that We had in creating all these elements. Oh! what joy for Us, and the requital of love she gives Us, as We look at her we find her 'sun' that burns for Us with love; 'wind' that blows and moans for love of Us, and forming arcane voices of love, would want to surround Us with its love, to tell Us: 'You have loved me, and I love You. Love You have given to me, love do I give to You.' And with her 'sea' she forms for Us mighty waves, to the extent of giving Us air of love for each breath of creature; and We feel We are being wounded continuously, and fainting, by her love. A soul who lives in Our Will is all for Us; she keeps Us constantly busy; she loves Us always, but with Our own Love; and each time she does her acts in Our Fiat, We renew the works of Creation; and in order to amuse Ourselves, love her and make her love Us, We use every act that she does as material to renew Our various created works. Even more, Our Love is not satisfied - It wants to add yet more, and It creates new prodigies of grace, to the point of creating Our very Life in the beloved creature. We like very much to operate one-on-one, as if We were doing everything for her alone. This makes more love, esteem and appreciation arise toward Us, Who love her so much. Therefore, according to how she unites to Us, if she unites in the works of Creation, We renew Our works of Creation; if she unites to Our works of Redemption, We renew and I repeat my birth in act, and looking at her, I find my birth in her, as well as the Love by which I was born, while she loves Me with that same Love with which I was born upon earth. Do you think it is trivial for Me to find my own Love, which made Me be born, cry, suffer, walk, operate? And together with her, one-on-one, I repeat my life down here, and my Divine Will makes her love Me with the same Love with which I loved when I was on earth, carrying out my Redemptive Life. Therefore, the living in my Divine Will is everything for the creature, and everything for Us.”

Then, I was following the acts of the Divine Volition in Its works, and I thought to myself: ‘What would be a greater glory for God, to follow the acts of Creation or those of Redemption?’ And Jesus, coming back, added: “My daughter, both of them are greatly pleasing to Me; but there is a difference. In the works of Creation the creature finds Our Majesty in feast while creating many things with Our primary purpose that everything was to serve Our Will reigning in her; and all created things were to serve as a deposit for her requital of love, of adoration and of glory toward Us. All created things speak of Our Love toward creatures; and the creature, through them, was supposed to love her Creator. You must know that each one of your ‘I love You’s’ that you hide in the sun, in the heavens and in the other created things is a jewel for Us; and We love them, We kiss them, We embrace them and delight with them; We feel glorified and repaid for everything We have done. Do you think We remain indifferent to your many ‘I love You’s’ with which you have invested the Creation? Not at all. We look at them, one by one, and, as Our jewels, they give Us the joy that We had in Creation. Therefore, you make Our feast continue; and if these ‘I love You’s’ cannot be seen other than by Us, it is because, Our Will being immense, also in Creation Its light eclipses your ‘I love You’s’ and keeps them hidden jealously within Its bosom. It happens as to the sun whose light and heat are greater and more intense than all the preciousness of the effects contained within it; these cannot be seen, but it is certain that the sun possesses them. In fact, if its light touches the flower, it gives color, and portrays like a painter the variety of beauties of the colors, so as to form the sweetest enchantment for the human generations. If it touches plants and fruits, it gives the multiplicity of the various sweetnesses and flavors. This shows how the sun is not only light and heat, but it hides other goods within its bosom of light. Such is the creature who lives in Our Will; as she loves and adores, so does Our Will form the beauty of Its iris of love in her works; the variety of joys and sweetnesses of her good acts, which It jealously hides within Its bosom. My Will is the hiding place of the love and of everything that the creature does in It, forming the most beautiful ornament to Our divine works and the sweet enchantment of Our pupils; and Our pleasure is so great, that We show this to the whole Celestial Court, to let them delight together with Us. Therefore, this is the greatest glory she can give Us, following Our acts of Creation, because she unites herself to Our same purpose, she braids herself to Our Love; We feel her kissing Our Love, while We kiss hers and make of them one single Love. What joy, what happiness, to have the creature together with Us, loving Us and doing what We want to do.

Now, in Redemption the purpose changes: it is guilty man that We go searching for. In Creation everything was feast, Our works smiled at Us with joy, love and glory; while in Redemption - pains, bitternesses, tears, remedies, medicines, in order to heal man. And the creature, by entering Our Will, can invest my pains, bitternesses and tears with her tender and compassionate ‘I love You’s’, and hide in them the jewels of her ‘I love You’s’. In this way, by kissing these jewels, I will not feel lonely, but comforted, sustained and accompanied by one who lives in my Will; in the jewels of her ‘I love You's' I will also find one who dries my tears, who shares my pains with Me, who defends Me. Therefore, always in my Will do I want you, so that, whether in feast or in pain, I will keep you always with Me."

Continuing with the same topic: How the Divine Will makes love arise, in such a way that everywhere and in every place It feels loved by the creature. Wherever the Divine Will is, God finds the adaptable material to make divine life be conceived, be born and grow.

My poor mind continues to swim in the sea of the Divine Volition. Its surprises are such and so many, Its yearning for It wants to live life in the creature, and the length of Its speaking about It is such that it is impossible for me to say everything. And my beloved Jesus, visiting my little soul, with unspeakable love, told me: "My blessed daughter, speaking about my Will is for Me the greatest feast. Heaven unites with Me to celebrate, and as they see Me speak about my Will, they all stand at attention to listen to Me. There is no greater feast that I may give to the whole Celestial Court than to speak about my Divine Will. My Will makes the operating love arise in the souls on earth, and the beatifying love in Heaven. Where there's no love, I do not move, nor do I go there; and I don't know what to do with the creature; while the Love that my Will makes arise is immense, and there's no place in which one who lives in It cannot be found, all invested and as though jammed with my Love. She has undergone Our same lot, for We love everywhere and in every place, We love all and always; so, We feel that she loves Us in the hearts of all; her love runs everywhere and she loves Us in the sun, in the heavens, in the twinkling of the stars, in the moans of the wind, in the murmuring of the sea, in the darting of the fish, in the singing of the little bird. We feel that she loves Us also in the hearts of the Angels and the Saints, and even inside Our divine bosom. All say to her: 'May you be welcome! Oh, how we awaited you! Come and take your place of honor! Come and love Our Creator within us!' My Will holds her jealously tight to Itself, and inundating her with ever new love, It lets her do love chants, singsongs of love, sweet enchantments of love, wounds of love. It seems to be saying: 'I found one who loves Me and I want to enjoy her. I would not feel happy if she did not tell Me, always and everywhere: 'I love You, I love You....'" Hence, the soul who lives in Our Will will be Our triumph, Our victory, the depository of Our Love, Our continuous glory. My Love feels the need of the company of this creature, to pour Itself out, and to have her love; therefore I want to breathe together with her, palpitate and operate with her. Union can produce joys more beautiful, ineffable contentments, greater works, love more intense.

Now, my Will will give so much love to this creature who lives in It, as to be able to inundate the whole Creation. It will stretch out a new heaven of love upon all human generations, in such a way as to feel embraced and loved by the love of this creature, which was given by my Will Itself, everywhere, in each one and in every place. And while this creature embraces and loves my Will, she will say to It: 'Come, O Supreme Volition, to reign upon earth; invest all generations; win and conquer all!' Don't you see how beautiful it is to live in It? To have Its Love in your power, which contains such power and virtue that no one will be able to resist It? And when this Love will have invested everything and everyone, since it is the Love of a creature who has lived in Our Fiat, which carries with her the bond of the human family, We will let Ourselves be conquered; We will tear down all the obstacles and will have Our Kingdom on the face of the earth. Therefore pray and make use of all things in order to ask Me for my Will to come to reign on earth as It does in Heaven."

Then, I continued to be inundated by the Divine Fiat, which was pouring on me light and love: light, to make Itself known more; love, to make Itself loved. And my sweet Jesus, coming back, added: "My daughter, how beautiful it is to live in my Will. We cannot be without this creature; We keep thinking of new surprises to make for her, something new to give her, new things to tell her, so that she may get to know more about Our Fiat. And according to her knowledge of It, so can We keep expanding the sea of Our Love within her. Knowledge is the little bell which, as it rings, calls Our Power, Sanctity, Goodness and Love with sweetest sound, to be enclosed within the creature who lives in my Will, to let Us operate Our unheard-of prodigies.

Now, you must know that when We find Our Will in the creature, We feel beatified, and We take such delight in looking at her, that in order to enjoy her even more, We look at her mind, and We make Our Intelligence be conceived, be born and grow; We look at her mouth, and We make Our word be conceived, be born and grow, so that she will speak of Our Supreme Being with such eloquence and grace as to enamor of Us whomever has the good of listening to her. We look at her will, and We make Our own be reborn and grow to new life; We look at her heart, and We make Our Love, Its harmonies and Its stratagems be conceived in it, to make Us win in having her be reborn always in Our Love. We look at her hands and feet, and We make Our works and steps be conceived, be born and grow. We could do this all at once, but We don't, in order to take more time in being with her and enjoying her more. Our Love is so great that with Our own creative hands do We want to form Our very Life in the creature; all that We are, We want to give to her; Our Love is not satisfied if We do not repeat Our Life in her; and We find the adaptable material only when We find Our Will, which has prepared, purified and embellished the ground for Us. And while We form Our Life, We sing victory and glory to Our Divine Being; and what does she do? She gives Us the food to be nourished and to grow within her; she gives Us the water to quench Our thirst; her own being to clothe Us; her soul as Our room; her heart as bed for rest, and all her acts to keep Us amused and surrounded by Our own celestial joys. But who can tell you, my daughter, what We can do and give to one who lives in Our Will? We give everything and do everything - and she gives Us all."

November 29, 1937

Our pains, united with the pains of Jesus, form His Life within us, and there is no good which does not come from them. How lack of love martyrs the Divine Love.

My poor mind swims in the sea of the Divine Volition. Even more, I feel that It breathes, It palpitates in me and, more than blood, circulates inside the veins of my soul, saying to me: 'I am here, inside and outside of you; more than your own life, I run within each of your acts, and with my Love I make everything easy for you, and I make you happy too.'" In the meantime He was showing me all the pains that I had suffered, invested with light, holding them tightly close to His bosom as conquests of His Will. I remained concerned, and my always lovable Jesus, visiting me, told me: "My little daughter of my Divine Will, you must know that all the pains which my Most Holy Humanity suffered on earth - each tear I shed, every drop of my Blood, each step and motion, and even my breath - were and are invested by one single voice, with which they speak and cry out continuously: 'We want the Kingdom of the Divine Will reigning and dominating in the midst of creatures! We want Our divine rights to be placed in force!' And they pray, speak and moan around Our Supreme Throne, without ever ceasing, that the Will of Heaven and of the earth may be one.

Now, whoever unites with my pains, with my heartbeats, breaths, steps and works, prays, speaks and moans together with all that I did and suffered upon earth. There is no good which does not arise from my pains; and united with those of the creature, mine form the depository, the hosts, in order to receive her pains, forming one single prayer together, one single voice, one single Will. Even more, my pains carry the pains of the creature and everything she does before Our Majesty, in order to make her want and do what I did; while the pains of the creature capture my pains onto the earth, to envelop all creatures in my pains and in hers, and dispose them to receive the Life of my Divine Will. The union with Me - of her pains with my pains - produces the great prodigy of my Life in the creature, who comes to operate, speak and suffer as if I were again living on earth; and I animate the whole of her being with the power of my acts; even in her little trifles does my Life flow, so that all may be mine, animated by my Creative Power, and she may give Me the love and the glory of my very Life.

Do you think that my Will has not taken into account all that you have suffered? Not at all. My Will preserves within Its womb of light all of your pains, small and great, your distressed and sorrowful sighs, your privations. Even more, It has used them as material to be able to conceive, deliver and raise Its Life. Each pain of yours was a growth It had, nourishing them with Its Sanctity, filling them with the ardor of Its Love, embellishing them with Its unreachable Beauty. My daughter, how much you must thank Me for all that I have disposed for you, and for all that I made you suffer; because everything has served to form my Life in you, and for the triumph of my Will. What fortune for the creature, to see that her pains have served my Life so Holy, which will have, as fulfillment, my Divine Will palpitating in her. Do you think it is trivial that the Creator shows His need for the creature; He who is omnipotent and gives life to all? Is this not the greatest excess of Our Love?"

Jesus remained silent, and I remained there thinking of what He had just told me, and I saw all my pains lined up within me, spreading rays of light, being transformed into the pains of Jesus, forming the divine support and the defense of creatures, and forming constant voices and moans that were asking for the Divine Will to come to reign. Then, He continued: "My good daughter, Our Love is so great, that everywhere and in every place - even upon the littlest blade of grass, in the air that the creature breathes, in the water she drinks; even underneath her steps, as she treads the ground - We send Our voices, Our passionate cry of Love: 'I love you, I love you, I love you...' But Our Love gives Itself no peace if It does not feel listened to by the creature, and does not hear her repeat: 'I love You, I love You...' And in Our delirium of love and sorrow We say: 'Ohh... is nobody listening to Us? Ohh... no one repeats for Us: 'I love You, I love You'? Why then say 'I love you, I love you', if no one returns it to Us? To whom are We saying 'I love you...' - to the air, to the wind, to the empty space? Our 'I love you' finds no one to whom to go, no place on which to lean, if it does not find the 'I love you' of the creature who receives it in order to requite it with her own, so that her love may find refuge inside Our immense Love, to lean on It and be expanded more and more.' When the creature listens to Our 'I love you' and requites it, in Our emphasis of love, and as though appeased by her love, We say: 'Indeed We have been heard. Our Love has found someone to whom to go, a place in which to take refuge. We have been recognized, because We have found one who says 'I love You'.' Then Our Love makes feast. But when We do not find anyone who says to Us 'I love You', We find no one who recognizes Us, nor anyone who listens to Us, or loves Us. How hard it is to love and not to be loved! How I wish that all knew that with my Love I sustain them, I embrace them; I love them and I make them breathe; I love them and I give them a heartbeat; I love them and I give them speech; I love them and I give them the step; I love them and I give them motion, thinking, food, water.... All that they are and receive is the effect of my Love that runs. Hence, isn't not loving Me a horrendous ingratitude? It is to martyr Our Love, because We love and We are not loved."

After this, I was thinking to myself: 'But, how can the creature know when Our Lord tells her His repeated and continuous 'I love you's', so as to requite them with her own?' And my sweet Jesus added: "My daughter, and yet it is easy to know it, if the creature possesses my Divine Will as her own life, because my Will gives her Its divine hearing which makes her listen when her Creator tells her: 'I love you'. And not only the hearing, but also Its divine speech, so that the hearing listens, and the speech says 'I love you'; or rather, even before He says to her 'I love you', she already perceives that she is about to receive the 'I love you' of her God, and she makes her 'I love You' meet the divine 'I love you', almost so as to engage in a contest with her Creator.

My Will wants to give everything to the creature who lives in It: It gives her Its arms with which to embrace It, and Its steps in order to run after It. Just as We feel Our divine nature to be all Love, and the need to love, so much so that if it were possible to prevent Us from loving, We would suffocate, the breath of Our Divine Life as though being choked - because in Us Our breath, Our motion and Our very Will is Love, and it is impossible for Us not to love - in the same way, one who possesses Our Will feels the need to love Us, and to love Us always. Therefore, my Will alone can put order between the Creator and the creature, keeping her constantly aware of Our Love, of Our Sanctity, and placing her in communication with Our Supreme Being.”

As the creature operates in the Divine Volition, so does Jesus ring His little bell to call the inhabitants of Heaven and those of the earth. How the company of the creature is so needed by Divine Love.

I feel the Life of the Divine Volition within me overflowing with Love which, and as It moves, pours out seas of Love, and investing all, says to every heart: “O please! Look at Me, know Me, receive Me into your hearts. Give Me dominion; I come loaded with all my goods in order to live together with you. But alas! I am not recognized. Or worse, they reject Me; and since I am not known, my supreme laws of Love are not in force for them; my goods remain with Me, and I am not able to give them to my children.”

Then, I was following the acts of the Divine Will, and as I arrived at the blue vault studded with stars, I called with me the inhabitants of Heaven and the inhabitants of the earth, so that, all together, we might requite with our little love the infinite Love of God, Who with so much love had created the expanse of the heavens to as though cover us and hide us within His Love. Therefore all of us, with no exception, have the duty to love He Who loved us so much. Now, as I was doing this, my Highest Good, Jesus, visiting my little soul, all love, told me: “My blessed daughter, if you knew with what love I was waiting for you to call everyone, so as to feel within your act the requital of the love of all! As soon as you begin to call, so do I ring the little bell to the celestial residents and to those of the earth, and I stop ringing only when I see that all of them have run into your act. The first ones are the celestial residents who, living in my Will, cannot put themselves aside, nor do they want to. They feel the unifying Divine Will that unites them in that act; even more, they anxiously await your call to be able to requite Me in love; and since the one who is calling them is a creature from the earth, who possesses her own free will, in her they feel that they can give Me new love. And oh! how they rejoice at the sound of my little bell, and they fly to place themselves inside that act of the creature who wants to love Me. As for the inhabitants of the earth, because they do not live completely in my Will, they can just barely hear the vibrating sound of my little bell.

When I see them all together in that act, Our Divinity stands at attention in loving anticipation, and – oh! how beautiful it is to hear in that act innumerable voices saying to Us: ‘We love You, we love You; we recognize You in your works. How much You have loved us! On behalf of all we want to requite You in love.’ Our Supreme Being, wounded by so many voices, unleashes more seas of Love, covering and investing everyone with such joys and happinesses, that all remain enraptured, enjoying one more paradise by means of that creature. The one who lives in Our Will gives Us the field for new works, and makes Our Love gush out more strongly; and unable to contain It, We pour out new seas of Love, to love the creature and to be loved. Oh! how much We love her.

You must know that the thing most needed by Our Supreme Being is the company of the creature. We do not want to be the isolated God, or to keep her far away from Us. Isolation has never been bearer of great works or of happiness; while company matures the birth of a good and makes the most beautiful works come to light. This is why We created so many things: to have the occasion of having her company many times for as many things as We created. And since what We did once We remain always in act of doing, the one who lives in Our Will stays always in Our company; she undergoes Our creative act, and We receive the glory and the requital of the created love. Therefore We have her company in the celestial spheres, in the resplendent sun, in the blowing of the wind, in the air that all breathe, in the murmuring of the sea - everywhere and in every place she follows Us, she defends Us and she requites Us in love. She cannot live without Us, without loving Us, and We cannot be without her and, jealous, We hold her tightly to Our divine bosom.”

Then He added: “The company of the creature is so dear to Us, that We form with her Our recreation, We make the most important decisions for Our glory and for the good of the human generations, We accomplish Our designs. While We are in her company, Our Love rises to new life and keeps inventing new devices of love and new surprises in order to bind the creatures to love Us more and more. If it wasn’t for her company, with whom could We pour Ourselves out? Over whom to form Our designs? Where to place Our Love that always rises? Hence, without company, Our goods would be constrained, without being able to give life to what We want to do for love of the creatures. See then, how necessary her company is to Our Love, to Our works, and to the fulfillment of Our Will.”

On the Conception of the Queen. Her race of Love; wherever Her Creator was, She was there to love Him. How She remained conceived in each created thing, and was constituted Queen of the heavens, of the sun and of everything.

Today, while swimming in the Divine Volition, my poor mind found, in act, the Conception of the Queen of Heaven. Oh marvels! The surprises are indescribable. And I was thinking to myself: ‘What else can be said about the Immaculate Conception after He spoke so much about It?’ And my lovable Jesus, surprising me, all festive, as if He wanted to celebrate the Conception of the Celestial Queen, told me: “My blessed daughter, oh! how many more things I have to say on the Conception of this Celestial Creature. It was a Life that We were creating - not a work; and there is a great difference between a work and a life. Furthermore, it was a Life both Divine and human, in which there had to be highest accord of sanctity, of love and of power, such that one life had to be able to match the other. The prodigies We made in creating this Life were such, that We had to perform the greatest prodigy and a chain of miracles, so that this Life might contain the goods that We deposited in Her. This Holy Creature, conceived without original sin, felt the Life of Her Creator, His operating Will, which did nothing but make new seas of Love arise; and – oh! how much She loved Us! She could feel Us inside and outside of Herself; and – oh! how She would run, in order to be present everywhere and in every place - wherever the Life of Her Creator was. It would have been the hardest and most cruel martyrdom for Her, had She not been able to be present everywhere in order to love Us. Our Will gave Her wings, and Our Life, while remaining in Her, made Itself found everywhere, to make Itself loved, and to enjoy She whom It loved so much, and by whom It was so loved in return.

Now, listen to another surprise. As soon as She was conceived, so did She begin Her race, and We loved Her with infinite Love - not loving Her would have been the greatest martyrdom for Us. So, as She ran in order to search outside of Herself for Our Life which she possessed inside - because a good is never complete if it is not possessed both inside and outside – hence, as She would run, so would She remain conceived in the heavens and in the celestial spheres, and the stars would form a crown around Her, singing hymns and praises to Her as their Queen; and She acquired the rights of Queen over all the celestial spheres. Our Immensity awaited Her in the sun, and She would run and be conceived in the sun which, becoming diadem for Her adorable head, invested Her with light and praised Her as Queen of light. Our Immensity and Power awaited Her in the wind, in the air, in the sea; and She would run and run, without ever stopping Her race, and remained conceived in the wind, in the air and in the sea, acquiring the rights of Queen over all. So, the Sovereign Lady makes Her Power, Her Love and Her Maternity flow in the heavens, in the sun, in the wind, in the sea, and even in the air that all breathe; therefore everywhere, in every place and within all, was She conceived. Wherever Our Power and Immensity were present, there would She erect Her throne in order to love Us, and to love all. This was the greatest miracle that Our powerful Love performed: to bilocate Her, to multiply Her in all things and in all created beings, so that We might find Her in all and everywhere. The Celestial Queen acts like the sun: even if someone did not want its light, this light imposes itself and says: 'Whether you want me or not, I must do my course, I must give you light.' But if someone could hide from the light of the sun, no one can hide from the Sovereign Lady; otherwise, She could not be called, with facts, universal Queen and Mother of everyone and everything; and We do not know how to speak words without making facts.

See then, where Our Power and Our Love reached in the Conception of this Holy Creature: to the extent of elevating Her to such height and glory that She can say: 'Wherever my Creator is, there I am - to love Him. He has invested Me with such power and glory, that I am Sovereign over all; everything is dependent upon Me, my dominion reaches everywhere, to the extent that, while I am conceived in all things, I hold the sun, the wind, the sea and everything, conceived within Me. I possess everything in Me, even my Creator, and I am the Sovereign and Owner of all. This is all my unreachable height, my glory, which nobody can equal, and my great honor: that with my Love I embrace all, I love all, and I belong to all; and I am the Mother of my Creator'."

December 14, 1937

Just as the human nature has its day, so does the Divine Will form Its day in the depth of the soul of one who lives in It.

I felt as though immersed in the Divine Volition. Even more, It seemed to me that, as I kept doing my acts in the Fiat within Its waves of light, that light would expand and centralize itself more within me; and my need to love It and breathe It, more than my own life, kept growing. So, without It, I felt out of breath, without warmth and without heartbeat; but as I would go back to do my acts in the Divine Volition, I felt the breathing, the warmth and the divine heartbeat coming back, to cheer my poor existence. Therefore, the living in the Divine Will is a need for me, and need of life.

Then, my sweet Jesus, coming back to visit my little soul, all goodness told me: "My blessed daughter, just as nature has its day for the human life, during which all the actions of life are carried out, in the same way my Divine Will forms Its day in the depth of the creature who lives in It. As the creature begins to form her acts in It, calling It as her own life, so does my Will begin Its day, forming a most splendid daybreak in the depth of her soul. This daybreak reunites the powers of her soul and renews in her the Power of the Father, the Wisdom of the Son, the Virtue and Love of the Holy Spirit. Hence, my Will begins Its day together with the Most Holy Sacrosanct Trinity, Which descends into the littlest acts and hiding places of the creature in order to carry out Its life together with her, and to do whatever she does. This daybreak puts to flight all the darkness of the soul, in such a way that everything is light for her, standing at attention as a vigilant sentry, so that all her acts may receive the light of the Divine Will. This daybreak is the first rest of God within the room of the soul; it is the beginning of the eternal day in which the Life of the Supreme Being begins together with the creature. My Will does not move, nor can It move or be without the Adorable Trinity. At the most, It goes ahead of Them, It plays the role of Actor, but It draws Them along with Itself in an irresistible way, forming the divine chamber in which the Divine Persons can enjoy Their creature, so loved by Them. Wherever It reigns, my Will has the power to centralize everything, even Our Divine Life. How beautiful is the beginning of the day of one who lives in Our Fiat! It is the enchantment of the whole of Heaven; and if the whole Celestial Court were subject to envy, It would envy the one who is so fortunate as to possess inside her soul, while still living in time, the beginning of the eternal day - the precious day in which God begins to carry out His Life together with the creature.

Now, as she moves on to do the second acts in the Divine Volition, so does the Sun of my Eternal Will rise. The fullness of Its light is such as to invest all the earth, visiting all hearts and bringing the 'good morning' of light and new joys to the whole Celestial Court. This light is crammed with love, with adorations, with thanksgivings, with gratitude, glory and benediction; but who do these belong to? To the creature who, with her act in my Will, has made the Sun rise which shines over all, in such a way that all find the one who has loved God for them - the one who has adored Him, thanked Him, blessed Him and glorified Him. Everyone finds what he was obliged to do for God; all are substituted for. One act in my Will must enclose everything, it has the power and capacity to make up for all and to do good to all; otherwise It could not be called 'act done in my Will'. These acts are jam-packed with unheard-of prodigies, worthy of Our creative work.

Now, as she comes back to her third act in Our Will, so is the full midday of Our Eternal Sun formed within the creature. And do you know what she gives Us in this full midday? She prepares a banquet for Us. And do you know what she gives Us for food? The love that We have given to her, as well as Our divine qualities. Everything carries the imprint of Our beauty and of Our chaste and pure fragrances. We like it so much, that We eat Our fill; more so since, if anything should be lacking for Our decorum, because the creature is in Our Will, she is the owner of all Our goods, therefore she takes from Our treasures whatever is needed, and she prepares for Us the most beautiful banquet, worthy of Our Supreme Majesty. And We invite all the Angels and the Saints to sit at this celestial banquet, so that they may take and eat with Us from that love which the creature who lives in Our Will gave Us. Now, after we have banqueted together, the other acts that she does in Our Will serve - some to form for Us celestial melodies, some loving chants, some the most beautiful scenes; some others, to repeat Our works that are always in act. In sum, she keeps Us always occupied; and when she has given course to all her actions in Our Will, We give her rest, and We rest together with her; and after the rest, We open the field to more work in order to let another day begin; and so forth. And many times this faithful daughter of Ours - because true faithfulness is in the living in Our Divine Will - seeing that her brothers, and children of Ours, are about to be struck by the deserved chastisements because of their sins, does not close her day, but prays and suffers to impetrate deeds of graces for their souls as well as for the bodies. Therefore, the life of one who lives in my Divine Will is the new joy and glory of Heaven, as well as help and graces for the earth."

All that is done in the Divine Will acquires the Divine Life, and these Lives swim and float within the seas of Love of the Divine Volition.

I am prey to the Divine Volition, which does nothing other than unleash seas of light and of love from Itself, but It seems It is not content if It does not see the Life of the light of Its Will and the little love of the creature that pours out of her, meeting each other, kissing and loving each other with one single love. Oh! how It celebrates then, and in Its emphasis of love, It says: "The Life of my Will is inside and outside the creature. Therefore I possess her - she is all mine."

Then I was thinking: 'Doesn't the little love of the creature disappear within the immense sea of Divine Love?' And my always lovable Jesus, returning to visit my little soul, as though inundated within His flames of love, told me: "Daughter of my Will, everything that the creature does which has my Will as origin and as life, be they even small things, each of them contains a Divine Life. So, in the endless sea of my Will and of my Love one can see, swimming and floating, many little lives of love and of light that have taken their place inside Our sea. Oh! how requited We feel, because it is life of love that she gave Us in her little love; and it is life of light that she gave Us in doing her acts. In fact, they have been formed in the center of the Life of Our Fiat, which possesses the true Life, and therefore whatever comes out of It are lives, which my Fiat creates first, forming them within Itself, and issues outside, as though delivering them from within Its Divine Womb. Therefore, each 'I love You' possesses the life of love; each adoration possesses the life of divine adoration; each virtue that the creature exercises possesses - one, the life of divine goodness, one the wisdom, one the fortitude, one the power, one the sanctity. And since they are little lives which have received life from Our Life, they cannot stay still, but they run, and come to continue their little life inside Our interminable seas. Oh, how they love Us! They may be small, but We know that the creature can only give Us what is little, because the great things – the immensities - are Ours. The creature does not even know where to put them if We want to give them to her; therefore it is necessary for her to take refuge in Us; and We, seeing her inside Our seas, feel requited with that love which We want from the creature.”

I remained pensive about what Jesus was saying, and He added: “Do you want to see it, to convince yourself of what I’m telling you?” At that moment, Jesus made me see His endless seas investing Heaven and earth, and the little love of the creature, and all the rest done in His Divine Will, like many lives, but beautiful, swimming inside these seas. Some remained on the surface to fix their gazes on their Creator; some would run into His arms - one hugging Him, another kissing Him; another one would plunge itself deep inside the sea. In sum, they were making a thousand affections and stratagems for He from Whom they had received life. The Supreme Being was looking at them, but with such love as to call the whole Celestial Court to celebrate together with Him, saying to all: ‘Look at them, how beautiful they are! These lives, formed by the acts of the creature, and by my Will, are my glory, my triumph, my smile; the echo of my Love, of Our harmony, of Our happiness.’ Now, I could see these lives in the sun, in the stars, in the air, in the wind, in the sea. Each ‘I love You’ was a life of love that ran to take its place of honor inside the divine seas. What enchantment, what beauties, how many unspeakable surprises! I remained mute, and I did not know what to say. And Jesus: “My daughter, did you see? How many rare beauties of life my Will can do! Its Love and Its jealousy are such that It keeps them inside Its own sea.

But this is not all yet, my daughter; I want to tell you another surprise. For the creature who lives in my Will, one ‘I love You’ does not wait for another; with the little life of love contained in the prodigious ‘I love you’, one runs ahead, another escapes behind; another flies to take its place inside Our endless sea. They compete among themselves - one runs faster, another wants to place itself in the front; another wants to be the first one to throw itself into Our arms; and yet another makes a jump, up to enclosing itself inside Our divine womb. Life cannot stay motionless. These little lives, however small, have a breath, a heartbeat, a step and a voice; they are all eyes to look at Us. Therefore they breathe love and give Us love; they palpitate with love, and have Our same step, as We move and walk because We love; their voices constantly speak to Us of love, and they love so much that they want to hear, constantly, Our story of Eternal Love. These little lives never die - they are eternal with Us. The ‘I love You’ - the acts in my Will - populate Heaven. These little lives diffuse themselves everywhere: in the entire Creation, in the Saints, in the Angels; and how many of them run around the Queen! Everywhere do they want their place, to the extent of descending into the hearts of the creatures on earth, saying among themselves: ‘How can our Creator remain inside the human hearts without our little life of love? Ah, no, no. We are little, we can enter into them and love our Creator for them.’ These little lives are the enchantment of all Heaven; they are the greatest marvels of Our Supreme Being; they are the true requiters of Our Eternal Love. They have such unique follies of love, that by merely looking at them, it is known that they are Our daughters - lives formed and created by Our Divine Volition.”

But who can tell my surprise? And Jesus: “Do not be surprised. My life down here also did nothing other than release life from Me, so much so, that my steps still walk after everyone, they never stop; even more, all centuries will have the life of my steps. My mouth is still speaking, because each one of my words contained a life, and therefore it continues to speak; only those who do not want to listen do not hear my voice. My tears are full of lives, and are always in acts of pouring themselves upon the sinner in order to touch him, to move him to repentance and to convert him; as well as upon upright and good souls, to embellish them and captivate their hearts to love Me. Each pain, each drop of my Blood, are distinct lives of mine that they contain, and therefore they form the strength for the pains of creatures, and the bath for all their sins.

These are the prodigies of my Will: wherever It reigns with the creative virtue It possesses by nature - over each tiny little thing, even a small trifle - It does create life, to make Us loved. You must be convinced that in the face of such great Love of Ours, We just cannot be without anyone who loves Us; therefore Our Will, which takes care of everything and knows how to do it all, creates many lives out of the acts of the creature who lives in It; It acts as substitutor for Our Love, and renders less restless Our yearning of love and Our eternal delirium for We want to be loved. Therefore, live always in Our Will; love always, and you will be the new enchantment of the whole of Heaven and Our perennial feast, and We will be your feast - we will celebrate each other.”

How the Kingdom of the Divine Will on earth has been decreed in the Consistory of the Adorable Trinity. The new breath of God by which the creature will be restored. Difference between lives and works.

My poor mind was occupied by the great wonders and prodigies that the Divine Volition knows how to do when It reigns in the creature. And I was thinking to myself: ‘What a happy lot to live in It! There cannot be greater fortune, either in Heaven or on earth. But how can It ever come to reign upon earth if evils and sins abound so much as to be horrifying? Only a Divine Power, with one of Its greatest prodigies, could do it; otherwise the Kingdom of the Divine Will will be in Heaven, but not on earth.’ But while I was thinking this, my dear Jesus, my sweet Life, visiting my poor soul, with unspeakable goodness told me: “My good daughter, it has been decreed in the Consistory of the Sacrosanct Trinity that my Divine Will will have Its Kingdom on earth; and as many prodigies as this will take, We will make them. We will hold nothing back in order to have what We want. But in operating We always use the simplest ways, though powerful, such as to overwhelm Heaven and earth and all the creatures in the act that We want.

You must know that in Creation it took nothing other than Our omnipotent breath to infuse life in man. But how many prodigies in that breath! We created the soul, providing it with the three powers¹³⁵ - true image of Our Adorable Trinity; and with the soul he received the heartbeat, the breathing, the circulation of the blood, the motion, the warmth, the speech, the sight. What did it take to make all these prodigies in man? The simplest act of Ours - Our breath - armed with Our Power and with the race of Our Love which, unable to contain it any longer, ran and ran toward him, even to the point of making of him the greatest prodigy of the entire work of Creation.

Now, my daughter, since man did not live in Our Divine Will, his three powers have become obscured and Our adorable Image deformed in him, in such a way that he has lost the first heartbeat of God’s Love within his heartbeat, and the divine breath within his human breath. Or rather, he has not lost it, but he does not feel it, and therefore he does not feel the circulation of the Divine Life, the motion of good, the warmth of the Supreme Love, the word of God within his own, the sight to be able to look at his Creator. All has remained obscured, weakened, and maybe even deformed. Now, what does it take to restore this man? We will return again to breathe upon him with stronger and increasing love; We will breathe in the depth of his soul; We will blow Our breath more strongly into the center of his rebellious will - but so strongly as to shake the evils by which he is trapped. His passions will be knocked down and terrified before the power of Our breath. They will feel themselves burning by Our divine fire, and the human will will feel the palpitating Life of its Creator, and it will conceal Him like a veil, so that man will return to be the bearer of his Creator. Oh, how happy he will feel! With Our breath We will restore him and heal him; We will act like a most tender mother who has a crippled child, and by dint of breathing, whispering and blowing, she pours herself over her child; and only when she has healed him and rendered him beautiful as she wanted him to be - then will she stop blowing her breath upon him. The power of Our breath will not leave him; and only when We see him coming back into Our paternal arms, beautiful, as We want him to be – then will We stop breathing on him. Then will We feel that Our child has recognized Our paternal goodness, and how much We love him.

See then, what it takes to make Our Will come to reign upon earth: the power of Our omnipotent breath. With it We will renew Our Life in him. All the truths I have manifested to you - the great prodigies of the living in my Will - will be the most beautiful and greatest properties which I will give to him as gift. This too is a sure sign that Its Kingdom will come upon earth, because if I speak, first I do deeds, and then I speak. My word is the confirmation of the gift - of the prodigies I want to do. Hence, why would I expose my divine properties and make them known, if Its Kingdom were not bound to come upon the earth?"

Now I will continue on the same topic of the date December 18: how our acts done in the Divine Will turn into life.

So, I was thinking to myself: 'But, in the divine order, what will become of the many good works which have not come out from within the Divine Volition, and which therefore cannot be life, but works, because the seed of Its life is missing in them?' And my sweet Jesus, always benign, added: "My daughter, by possessing by nature Its Creative Life, it is no wonder that each act of the creature done in my Will - even a little 'I love You' - is as though matured in the center of Its Divine Life, and as though naturally, it acquires Its Life. All that is done in my Will is regenerated in Our eternal Love, and acquires the long offspring of many Divine Lives, which are exclusively Ours. Now, the good works not done in Our Will can be like many beautiful ornaments in Our Creative Work; some more beautiful, some less - but never life. In the order of Creation also there are lives and there are ornaments: flowers are not lives, yet they form a beautiful ornament to the earth - though not a permanent one; fruits are not life, but they serve to nourish man, and to let him taste the many varied sweetnesses - though they are not durable, and man cannot always enjoy them anytime he wants. If fruits and flowers were lives, man would be able to enjoy them anytime he wanted to. The sun, the sky, the stars, the wind, the sea, are not lives, but since they are Our works, how much good do they not do? First of all, they serve as the most beautiful primary residence for man. What are their homes compared to the great dwelling that We made of the whole Universe? There is a blue vault, dotted with gold that never fades; there is a sun that is never extinguished; there is air which, letting itself be breathed, gives life; there is a wind that purifies and refreshes; and then many more things. It was necessary for Our Love to make an assortment of lives and of works, because they had to serve to make man happy, and they had to serve for the decorum, the decency and the dwelling of the one whom We created with so much love. So, since We had made more than enough works, to him was given the task to enjoy Our works, and to live in Our Divine Will in order to form many lives of love and of glory for He Who loved him so much. But the difference between works and life is great: life does not perish, while works are subject to many changes; and if they are not upright and holy, instead of forming the ornament, they form Our dishonor and their confusion – and maybe even their condemnation."

The descent of the Divine Word. How He departed from Heaven, while still remaining in Heaven. Prodigies of the Incarnation. The beginning of the feast of the Divine Will. How in His Divine works God puts aside the human ingratitude. The graft. How the Love of Jesus paid for all and ransomed us.

I was following the acts of the Divine Will, and my poor mind paused in the act of the descent of the Divine Word upon earth. My God, how many wonders, how many surprises of Love, of Power, of Divine Wisdom! They are so great and so many that one does not know where to begin to tell them. And my beloved Jesus, as though inundated in His sea of Love that rose Its waves, surprising me, told me: “My blessed daughter, in my descent upon earth the wonders, the ardor of Our Love, were so great and so many that neither Angels nor creatures are capable of understanding what Our Divinity operated in the mystery of my Incarnation. Now, you must know that Our Supreme Being possesses by nature Its incessant motion. If this motion could cease, even for one instant - which cannot be - all things would remain paralyzed and with no life, because all things - the life, the preservation and everything that exists in Heaven and on earth - everything, is dependent upon that motion. Therefore, in descending from Heaven to earth, I, Word and Son of the Father, departed from Our primary motion; or rather, I stayed and I left. The Father and the Holy Spirit descended with Me, They were concurrent, neither did I do a single act if not together with Them, and They remained on the Throne, full of Majesty, in the celestial regions.

So, as I left, my Immensity, my Love and my Power descended together with Me; and my Love, which seems incredible and is not satisfied if It does not form many lives from my Life for as many existing creatures, not only did so, but It formed and multiplied my Life everywhere and in every place; and holding my Immensity in Its power, my Love filled It with many of my Lives, so that each one might have a Life of mine for himself alone, and the Divinity might have the glory and the honor of as many Divine Lives of Ours for as many things and creatures as We issued to daylight. Ah! Our Love repaid Us for the work of Creation; and by forming many of Our Lives, It not only repaid Us, but It gave Us even more than what We had done. Our Divinity remained enraptured, and felt so sweet an enchantment in seeing the devices and stratagems of Our Love - in seeing so many of Our Lives being spread out, since Our Love made use of Our Immensity as the circumference in which to place them. Therefore, while my Life could be seen as the center, my Immensity and Power were the circumference in which these innumerable Lives were deposited, and finding everything and everyone, gave themselves in order to love Us and to be loved.”

I remained surprised in hearing this, and my sweet Jesus, giving me no time, immediately added: “My daughter, do not be surprised. When We operate, We do complete works, so that no one can ever say: ‘He didn’t do this for me. His Life is not fully my own.’ Ah, love cannot arise when things are not one’s own and are not held in one’s power. Besides, isn’t this what the sun also does, which is a work created by Us, that while making itself light for the eyes, up to filling them completely with light, at the same time it is light - full and whole - for the hand that works and for the step that walks, in such way that all - created things and creatures - can say: ‘The sun is mine’? And while the center of the sun is in the height of the atmosphere, its light departs and remains; and with its circumference of light it invests the earth and becomes life and light for each one, even for the little flower and the tiny blade of grass. Yet the sun is not life; it possesses light, and light does it give, together with all the goods that its light contains. While Our Divinity is Life - the Author and Life of everything; therefore, in descending from Heaven to earth I had to do complete acts, and - more than sun - make a display of my Life, multiplying it into many Lives, so that Heaven, earth and everyone might possess my Life. Had it not been so, it would not have been a work worthy of Our Wisdom and of Our infinite Love.”

Jesus remained silent, and I continued to think about the birth of Little Baby Jesus. And He added: “Little daughter of my Will, the feast of my birth was the feast, or rather, the beginning of the feast of my Divine Will. As the Angels were singing, ‘Glory to God in the highest Heavens, and peace on earth to men of good will’, the Angels and the Creation became all festive, and while celebrating my birth, they celebrated the feast of my Divine Will. In fact, with my birth, Our Divinity received true glory unto the highest Heavens; and men will have true peace when they recognize my Will, giving It dominion and allowing It to reign. Only then will their wills become good, they will feel the divine strength, and Heaven and earth will then sing together: ‘Glory to God in the highest Heavens, and peace on earth to the men who will possess the Divine Will.’ Everything will become good in men, and they will possess true peace.”

Then, I continued to think of the birth of the little King Jesus, and I said to Him: ‘Cute little Baby, tell me, what did You do when You saw the great human ingratitude in the face of your great Love?’ And Jesus: “My daughter, had I taken into account the human ingratitude before my great Love, I would have taken the way to go back to Heaven; but I would have saddened and embittered my Love, and turned the feast into mourning. So, would you like to know what I do in my greatest works in order to make them more beautiful? With pomp and with the greatest display of my Love, I put everything aside - human ingratitude, sins, miseries, weaknesses - and I give course to my greatest works, as if those things did not exist. Had I wanted to pay attention to the evils of man, I would not have been able to do great works, or put all my Love in the field. I would have remain hampered - suffocated in my own Love. Instead, in order to be free in my works, and to make them as beautiful as I can, I put everything aside and, if necessary, I cover everything with my Love, so that I see nothing but my Love and my Will, and in this way I move forward in my greatest works, and I perform them as if no one had offended Me, because for the sake of Our Glory, nothing must be lacking to the decorum, to the beauty and the greatness of Our works.

This is why I would like that you too would not occupy yourself with your weaknesses, your evils and your troubles. In fact, the more the creature thinks about those, the weaker she feels, and the more the poor one feels drowned by evils, while her miseries press round her more tightly. By thinking about it, weakness feeds more weakness, and the poor creature keeps falling even more; evils acquire more strength, miseries make her die of hunger. On the other hand, by not thinking about them, they disappear of their own. The complete opposite happens with what is good. A good feeds another good; one act of love calls for more love; one abandonment in my Will makes her feel the new Divine Life within herself. Hence, the thought of what is good forms the nourishment and the strength in order to do more good. This is why I want your thoughts to be occupied by nothing other than loving Me and living in my Will. My Love will burn up all your miseries and all your evils, and my Divine Volition will become your Life, making use of your miseries as the footstool on which to raise Its throne.”

Then, I continued to think about the little newborn Jesus, and - oh! how it broke my heart to see him crying, sobbing, wailing and shivering with cold. I wanted to place an ‘I love You’ of mine for each pain and each tear of the Divine Little One, to warm him and to calm his crying. And Jesus added: “My daughter, I feel one who lives in my Will in my tears and in my wailing. I feel her flowing in my crying sobs and in the shivering of my baby limbs; and by virtue of my Will which she possesses, she turns the tears into smiles, and the sobs into heavenly joys. With her lullabies of love she warms Me and changes the pains into kisses and embraces. Even more, you must know that one who lives in my Will receives continuous grafts of all that my Humanity does: if I think, I graft her thoughts; if I speak and pray, I graft her word; if I work, I graft her hands; there is nothing I do that does not form a graft for the creature, to make of her the repetition of my Life. More so since, my Divine Will being in her, I can find my Power, my Sanctity and my very Life, to do whatever I want with her.

How many prodigies can I not do, when I find my Will in the creature? I came upon earth to cover everything with my Love, to drown the evils themselves and burn everything up with my Love. By justice, I wanted to repay my Father, because it was just that He be given back the honor, the glory, the love and the gratitude that everyone owed Him. Hence, my Love gave Itself no respite; It filled the voids of His glory and of His honor; to the extent of repaying, by dint of Love, the Divinity Who had created a heaven, a sun, a wind, a sea, a flowery earth, and all the rest, while man had uttered not even a ‘thank You’, for the so many goods he had received, acting as the true thief, the ungrateful one, the usurper of Our goods. And my Love ran and ran in order to fill the abysses of distance between the Creator and the creature; It repaid my Celestial Father by dint of love; and by way of love It purchased back all human generations, to give back to them, again, the Life of my Divine Will. My Love had already formed many Lives of Divine Will as their ransom; and when it is my Love that pays, the value is such that It can afford to pay for all, and buy back whatever It wants. Therefore, you have already been purchased by my Love; so, let Me enjoy you, and possess you.”

Just as Redemption served to rescue the dwellings, the Kingdom of the Divine Will will serve to place in safety the One Who had created them, and to return the dwellings to Him. How in each act done in the Divine Will God creates His Divine Life.

I kept thinking about the Divine Will. How many touching scenes before my mind: a Jesus who cries, who prays, who suffers, because He wants to be Life of each creature; and a crowd of crippled children - some blind, some mute, some lame, some others paralyzed, and others covered with wounds, such as arouse pity; and dear Jesus, with a love that He alone can have, running now to one, now to another, drawing them close to Himself, pressing them to His Heart, touching them with His creative hands in order to heal them, and whispering to them, so very gently, to their hearts: ‘My child, I love you. Receive my Love and give Me yours; and I will heal you by way of love.’ My Jesus, my dear Life, how much You love us!

Now, while I felt suffocated by His Love, as He was blowing His burning breath upon me, surprising me, He told me: “Daughter of my Love, let Me pour Myself out, for I can no longer contain Myself. How hard it is to love, and not to be loved in return. Not having one to whom to tell my surprises of love is the most inexpressible pain for Our Supreme Being. Therefore listen to Me.

You must know that I came upon earth in order to rescue my dwellings. Man is my dwelling, which I had formed with so much love, and in which - to make it worthy of Me - my Power and the creative art of my Wisdom had concurred. This dwelling was a prodigy of Our Love and of Our divine hands. Now, by withdrawing from Our Will, Our dwelling became unstable and darkened, a dwelling for enemies and thieves. What sorrow for Us! So, my Life down here served to return, to restore and to rescue this dwelling, which We had formed for Ourselves with so much love. It was Ours too - it was befitting to save it, to be able to inhabit it again. Therefore, in order to save it, I used all possible and imaginable remedies: I exposed my very Life in order to fortify it and cement it again; I shed all my Blood in order to wash it from all the filth; and with my death I wanted to give it life again, to make it worthy to receive once again, as its Inhabitant, the One Who had created it.

Now, having used all the means in order to save Our dwelling, it was also decorous for Us to place in safety the King who would reside in it. Our Love had remained hampered half way through Its race, as though suspended and obstructed in Its course; therefore the Kingdom of Our Will will place in safety that Fiat which had been rejected by the creature, to allow Its entrance into Its dwelling, so as to let It reign and dominate as the Sovereign It is. Saving the dwellings would not be a work worthy of Our Creative Wisdom, if We left the One Who is supposed to reside in them wandering around, outside, with no Kingdom and no dominion. To save the dwellings without saving oneself, unable to inhabit the dwellings that were rescued, would be absurd; as if We did not have enough Power to save Ourselves. This will never be. If We had the Power to save Our creative Work, We will also have the Power to rescue Our own Life within Our Work. Oh yes, We will have Our Kingdom, and We will make unheard-of prodigies to have It. Our Love will accomplish Its course, It will not remain half way; It will get rid of the shackles and will continue Its race, bringing balm to the wounds of the human will; It will adorn these dwellings with divine ornaments, and with Its empire It will call Our Fiat to dwell and reign, giving It all the rights that are due to It. If the Kingdom of my Will were not certain, why fix and restore the dwellings?

Ah, my daughter, you cannot comprehend well what it means not to do Our Will: all Our rights are taken away from Us; many of Our Divine Lives remain suffocated. Our Love was and is so great, that in each act of the creature We wanted to create Ourselves in order to be loved, to be known, and to have a continuous exchange of Life between Us and the creatures. But it is impossible to do this without Our Will; It alone has the Power and the virtue of adapting the creature to receive Our Divine Life, and to put Our Love on the way, so as to multiply Us in the act of the creature. You must know that in each act she does in Our Will, an irresistible force calls Us; and We look at her, We reflect Ourselves in her, and with irresistible Love We create Our Life. And if you knew what it means to create Our Life...! There is such a great display of Love, that in Our emphasis of Love We say: ‘Ah, the creature has allowed Us to form Our Life in her act!’ We feel the equality with Our Love, Sanctity and Glory, and We anxiously await the continuous repetition of her acts in Our Will in order to repeat Our Life - to have, in her act, Ourselves loving and glorifying Ourselves. Only then do We fulfill the true purpose of the Creation – that everything would serve Us. Even the littlest act of the creature serves to repeat Our Life, and to make a display of Our Love. Therefore, the living in Our Volition will be everything for Us, and everything for the creature.”

In the Divine Will, miseries and weaknesses turn into the most beautiful conquests. All that is done in the Divine Volition is first formed in Heaven; the whole Celestial Court takes part in it, and it descends for the good of the earth.

I continue my flight in the Divine Volition; and I was thinking to myself: ‘The living in the Divine Will seems incredible. How can one live in It if the miseries and the weaknesses that one feels are so many? And the encounters, the circumstances... But as much as one feels them, it seems that the Divine Will wants to invest everything with Its light and burn everything up with Its Love, in such a way that nothing other than Its Will and Love must exist between Itself and the creature.’

But while I was thinking this, my dear Jesus, who is always on the lookout, to spot and see whether there is anything in me which is not His Will, told me: “My good daughter, my jealousy for one who lives in my Will is such, that I do not tolerate a single thought, or a weakness or anything else which does not have life in It. Now, you must know that in order to begin to live in my Will it takes a decision on the part of God, and a firm decision to live in It on the part of the creature. Now, this decision is animated by a new life, by a divine strength, such as to render the creature unconquerable by any evil or circumstance of life. This decision is not subject to changes, because when We decide, We do not bother dealing with kids who make a joke of their decisions, but with those whom We know must persevere; therefore We give of Our own so that this creature may not fall short. It may be that she feels the miseries, the evils, the weaknesses; but this means nothing, because in the face of the Power and Sanctity of my Will these things die - they feel the pain of death and they flee; more so, since these miseries are not a birth from the human will, because her human will is sunken inside my Will and therefore cannot will anything but what I Myself want. And many times my Will even uses these miseries to make of them the most beautiful conquests and lay Its Life upon them, forming Its Kingdom, extending Its dominion and converting the weaknesses into victories and triumphs. Indeed, with one who lives in It, all things must serve my Will as the most beautiful love that the creature gives to He Who forms her Life - almost like the stones, bricks and rubble serve to the one who wants to build for himself a beautiful house.

Now, you must know that before she comes to live in Our Will, We purify everything, We cover and hide everything inside Our Love, in such a way that We must see nothing but love in this creature. When Our Love has hidden everything - even the miseries – then does she take her place inside Our Will; even more, every time she emits her acts, first she is purified, and then Our Will invests her and makes of her whatever It wants. My daughter, in my Will there are neither judgments nor judges, because the Sanctity, the order, the purity and the utility of Our ways is such and so great, that all must lower their foreheads and adore whatever We do. Therefore, do not lose peace - don't be concerned with the miseries and circumstances, but leave them at the mercy of my Will, so that It may make of them Its portents of love."

After this, He added: "My daughter, everything that the creature does in my Divine Will is first formed in Heaven, in the eternal day which knows no nighttime. The entire Celestial Court is already aware that a creature of the earth has taken refuge in her Celestial Fatherland, which is already hers. But to do what? To enter into the center of the Fiat and call Its power and Its creative virtue, in order to give It the opportunity to operate in her act. Oh! with how much love she is welcomed - not only by the Divine Volition, but also by the Sacrosanct Trinity. They draw her so close to Themselves, pour Their balm over her act, and blow Their breath into it with Their Creative Power, forming such great wonders out of that act, that the whole of Heaven feels such joy and happiness, as to make the celestial regions resound with harmonious voices: 'Thank You, thank You, for You have given us the great honor of being spectators of your Will operating in the act of the creature!' So, Heaven is flooded with new joys and new contentments, in such a way that all remain obliged and grateful, and all call her: 'Our welcomed'. This more than celestial creature feels loved back by God with double love; she feels inundated with new seas of grace; and just as she rises up to Heaven, as the bearer of her acts, letting God form wonders in them, so does she descend again, becoming the bearer of all that God has operated in her act, flooding the earth and investing the whole Creation, so that all may receive the glory and the joy of the marvels which the Divine Fiat has operated in the act of the creature.

There is no greater homage, love or glory that she can give Us, than to let Us do whatever We want in her acts. We can do the greatest wonders without anybody lending Us anything; and even without anyone telling Us anything - just as We did in Creation. No one said anything to Us, but still, how many wonders did We not create? However, back then there was no one, nor anyone who could offer Us even just a sigh as a pretext for Our Love, and as a refuge in which to place Our creative wonders. But now there are those who can tell Us, and give Us the multiplicity of their little acts - even the natural ones, since nature is Ours too, and We can use anything to form the greatest wonders in the creature. Our Love feels greater delight, Our Power is more exalted in doing Our greatest wonders inside the little circle of the act of the creature, rather than outside of it. After all, these are the usual pretexts of Our Love which, in order to give, goes in search of the occasion, to be able to say: 'She gave to Me - I gave to her. It is true that it is little, but she has kept nothing for herself; therefore, it is just that I give everything to her - even Myself.'"

One who lives in the Divine Volition forms the refuge for the Life of the Divine Will. The 'I love You' as refreshment for the Divine Love. How God feels obliged towards the soul who lives in His Will.

My poor mind was flowing in the Divine Volition, and I could see the yearnings, the desires, the contentment It feels in seeing the creature wanting to live life together with It, to love It with Its own Love, and if she doesn't know how to do anything else, to gather into her soul Its yearning, Its ardent longing, and say to It: 'I am here with You, I will never leave You alone, to calm your restlessness of love and make You happy.' But while I was thinking this, my dear Jesus, my sweet Life, visiting my little soul - and His Love was so great that it seemed that His Heart wanted to explode - told me: "Dearest daughter of Mine, Heaven, earth and all creatures are completely wrapped and as though enclosed within the intensity of Our Love. Our Volition flows with such rapidity in each fiber, in each atom, in each instant - with such speed and fullness that nothing is left out, not even a breath, which is not Life of Our Will; and Our Love loves ardently, but with such ardor as to feel the need of someone who would bring a little refreshment to the intensity of Its Love.

Now, do you want to know what can give a relief to the intensity, totality and fullness of Our Love? The 'I love You' of the creature; and as many more times as she says it, the more refreshments does she bring to Us. This 'I love You' enters into Our flames, it breaks them for Us, it lifts them and soothes them, and as the sweetest refreshment she says: 'I love You, I love You... You love because You want love, and I am here to love You.' This 'I love You' makes its way inside Our intensity and forms in it its own little place - the little space in which to put its 'I love You'. Therefore, the 'I love You' of the creature is the resting place for Our own, Our refreshment, the soothing of Our Love, so that It may not become too delirious. My daughter, to love and not to be loved is like wanting to obstruct the course of Our Love, constraining It into Ourselves and making Us feel all the pain and hardness of Our unrequited Love; and therefore We keep looking for one who loves Us. Her 'I love You' is so sweet and refreshing for Us, that who knows what We would give her in order to have it.

See then, in one who lives in Our Will We find the refuge for Our Life, and We do nothing other than exchange Our lives continuously: she gives Us hers, and We give her Ours. In this exchange of life, We find the one who receives Ours and gives Us hers; We can give something of Our own and do whatever We want - We feel like the God that We are. So, the living in Our Will serves Us as refuge, as the theater for Our works, as refreshment for Our Love and the requital of all Creation - there is nothing We do not find in this creature; therefore We love her so much, that We feel obliged to give her whatever she wants; and for each additional act she does in Our Will, she binds Us more and adds more chains. And do you know what she gives to Us to makes Us feel obliged? Our own Life, Our works, Our Love, and Our very Will. And do you think this is little? What she gives Us is so exuberant, that if it wasn't for the Power We possess, by which We can do anything, We would lack the means to repay her. But Our Love, which never lets Itself be won and surpassed by the love of the creature, keeps looking for new devices, inventing new stratagems, to the point of giving back Our Life time and time again, to fulfill Its obligation toward Its beloved creature. And in Its emphasis of Love, It says: 'How happy I am that you live in my Will, you are my joy and my happiness; so much so, that I feel as though obliged to give you the air to breathe, and because I feel obliged, I breathe together with you. I bring you the sun and its light in my own hands; but I do not leave you alone - I remain with you. So, there is nothing - water, fire, food, and everything else - that I do not bring to you with my own hands, because I feel obliged, and I want to remain with you to see how you take it - I want to do everything Myself.' And if, as she takes, she says to Me, 'I take everything in your Will, because I love You; I want to love You and glorify You with your own Will' - oh! who can tell you then, of the refreshments she gives Me. And she tries to repay Me; and I let her; but then I come back with my surprises of love. Therefore I recommend to you: make Me content by living always heart-to-heart and synchronized with my Will, and we will be happy and content - you and I."

The first sermon that the little King Jesus gave to the children of Egypt. How each of them had their Celestial Father in their heart, Who loved them and wanted to be loved.

I was doing the round in the Divine Fiat, and - oh! how I yearn that not one act would escape me of what It has done, both in Creation and in Redemption. It seems to me that I lack something if I do not recognize It, love It, kiss It and clasp It to my heart in everything It has done, as if it were my own. And the Divine Volition would remain as though displeased if one who lives in It does not know all of Its acts, and if It does not find, in everything It has done, the little 'I love You' of the one whom It so much loves and for whom there is nothing It has not done.

So, I came to follow that point when the Celestial Child was in Egypt, in the act of taking His first steps; and I kissed His steps, I placed my 'I love You' at each step He was taking, and I asked Him for the first steps of His Will for all human generations. I tried to follow Him in everything; if He prayed, if He cried, I asked that His Will would animate all the prayers of creatures, and that His tears would regenerate the Life of Its Fiat in the human family. Then, while I was attentive in following Him in everything, the little Baby King, visiting my poor soul, told me: “Daughter of my Will, how happy I am when the creature does not leave Me alone - I feel her behind Me, in front of Me, and in all my acts. Now, you must know that my exile in Egypt was not without conquests. When I reached the age of about three years, from our little hovel I could hear the children playing and shouting in the street; and I, little as I was, would go out into their midst. As they would see Me, they would run around Me, and each one wanted to get the closest to Me, because my beauty, the enchantment of my gaze, the sweetness of my voice, were such that they felt captivated to love Me. Therefore they would throng around Me, and they loved Me so much that they were unable to detach from Me. Now, I too loved these children; and since, when love is true, it tries to make itself known - not only this, but to give what can make one happy in time and eternity – I gave to these little ones my first little sermon, adapting Myself to their small capacity; more so since, possessing innocence, they could more easily understand Me.

Now, do you want to know what my sermon was about? It said to them: ‘My children, listen to Me; I love you very much and I want to make known to you your origin. Look at the heavens - up there you have a Celestial Father who loves you very much. But He loves you so much, that He was not content with being your Father from Heaven, guiding you, creating for you a sun, a sea, a flowery earth to make you happy; but loving you with exuberant love, He wanted to descend into your hearts, to form His Royal Palace in the depth of your soul, making Himself sweet prisoner of each one of you. But to do what? To give life to your heartbeat, breath and motion. So, as you walk, He walks in your steps, He moves in your little hands, He speaks in your voice; and as you walk, as you move, because He loves you very much, now He kisses you, now He squeezes you, now He hugs you and carries you as though in triumph as His own dear children. How many hidden kisses and hugs does this Celestial Father of ours not give you! And you, because you were inattentive, have not let your kiss meet His, or your hugs encounter His paternal embrace; and He has remained with the sorrow that His children have neither kissed Him nor hugged Him.

Now, my dear children, do you know what this Celestial Father wants from you? He wants to be recognized in you, as having His dwelling in the center of your soul; and since He gives you everything, nor is there anything He does not give you, He wants your love in everything you do. Love Him - let love never depart from your little hearts, from your lips, from your works - from everything; and this will be the delicious food you will give to His Paternity. He loves you very much and wants to be loved. No one can arrive at loving you as He loves you. This is so true, that while you also have a terrestrial father, yet how different from the Love of the Celestial Father. He does not always follow you, does not watch over your steps, does not sleep together with you, nor does he palpitate within your heart; and if you fall, he does not even know anything about it. On the other hand, your Celestial Father never leaves you; if you are about to fall, He gives you His hand so as not to let you fall; if you sleep, He watches over you; and even if you play and do some impertinences, He is with you and knows everything you do. Therefore love Him very, very much.’ And becoming more enflamed, I would say to them: ‘Give Me your word that you will love Him always – always. Say together with Me: “We love You, our Father who are in Heaven. We love You, our Father who dwell in our hearts”.’

My daughter, at my speaking, some of the children would be moved, some would cry of joy, some would remain enraptured, some would cling to Me so strongly, that they did not want to leave Me any more. I made them feel the palpitating Life of my Celestial Father in their little hearts, and they rejoiced and made feast, because they no longer had a Father far away, but inside their own hearts. And I, to fortify them and give them the strength to depart from Me, would bless them, renewing upon those children Our Creative Strength, invoking the Power of the Father, the Wisdom of Myself, the Son, and the Virtue of the Holy Spirit; and I would say to them: ‘Go - and then you will return.’ And so they would leave. But then they would come back the following days, almost in throngs - a crowd of children. They would set themselves to spy when I was to go out, and to see what I was doing inside our hovel. And when I went out they would clap their hands, make feast for Me, and shout so loudly, that my Mother would come out the door to see what was happening. And, oh! how enraptured She would remain, in seeing Her little Son speaking to those children with so much grace; so much so, that She felt Her Heart burst with love, and could see in them the first fruits of my Life down here, because, of these children who listened to Me – no one was lost. Knowing that they had a Father inside their hearts was like a pledge for them to be able to possess the Celestial Fatherland, to love that Father who already dwelt also in Heaven.

My daughter, this sermon of Mine which I, a little Child, gave to the children of Egypt, was the foundation, the substance of the creation of man; it contains the most necessary doctrine, the highest sanctity; it makes love arise in each instant, for the Creator and the creature to love each other. What sorrow in seeing many little lives that do not know the Life of a God in their souls. They grow up without Divine Paternity, as if they were alone in the world; they do not feel or know how much they are loved. How can they love Me? So, once love is taken away, the heart hardens, life becomes degraded, and - poor youth – they give themselves prey to the gravest crimes. This is a sorrow for your Jesus, and I want it to be a sorrow for you, that you may pray for many who teach that I am present in their hearts, that I love and want to be loved.”

How the Divine Will calls the creature in Its acts in order to give her the gift of Its works. If the creature responds, she calls God and receives the gift. Exchange of wills between the creatures and God.

The Divine Volition is always around me - now It calls me, now It presses me to Its bosom of light; and if I respond to Its call, if I requite It with my embrace, It loves me so much and wants to give me so much, that I don't know where to put all that It wants to give me; and in the midst of so much love and generosity, I remain confounded, and I love that Holy Will which so much loves me. Now, my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, with unspeakable tenderness told me: “Daughter of my Will, you must know that only your Jesus knows all the secrets of my Fiat because, I being the Word of the Father, I glory in making Myself the narrator of what It has done for the creature. Indeed, Its Love is exuberant; in everything It did, both in the works of Creation and in the works of Redemption, It called you; and if you listened to Its call by saying, ‘I'm here - what do You want?’, It would give you the gift of Its works. If you did not answer, It would keep calling you always, until you would listen.

So, if It created the heavens, It called you in that azure vault, by saying to you: ‘My daughter, come and see how beautiful are the heavens I created for you. I created them to make you a gift - come and receive this great gift. If you don't listen to Me I cannot give it to you, and you leave Me with the gift suspended in my hands, calling you constantly. But I won't stop calling you until I see you possessing my gift.’ The heavens contain such huge expanse, that the earth can be called a little hole compared to them. Therefore all creatures have their own place, and a heaven for each one; and I call everyone by name to give them the gift. But what is not the sorrow of my Will in calling again and again without being listened to, while they look at the heavens as if it was not a gift given to them?

This Will of Mine loves so much, that as It created the sun, It called you with Its voices of light, going in search of you and of all, to give it as gift. So, your name is written in the sun, with characters of light, nor can I ever forget it; and as its light descends from its sphere and reaches you, so does it keep calling you constantly. Hence, It is not satisfied with calling you from the height of its sphere, but loving you more and more, It wants to descend down below, to tell you, by dint of light and heat: ‘Receive my gift - I created this sun for you.’ And if It is listened to, how festive It becomes, seeing that the creature possesses the sun as her own property, and as a gift received from her Creator.

My Will calls you everywhere and in every place. It calls you in the wind - now with might, now with moans, now as though wanting to cry, to move you to listen, so that you may receive the gift of this element. It calls you in the sea, by way of its murmuring, to tell you: 'This sea is yours - take it as a gift from Me.' Even in the air you breathe, in the little bird that sings, It calls you in order to tell you: 'I give you everything as gift.'

Now, if the soul responds to the call, the gift is confirmed. If she does not respond, the gifts remain as though suspended between Heaven and earth. In fact, if my Will calls, it is because It wants to be called, to maintain the exchange between Itself and the creatures, to make Itself known and to make incessant love arise between Itself and the one who lives in Its Fiat. In fact, only for those who live in Its Divine Volition it is easier to hear Its many calls, for while It calls her from within Its works, It also makes Itself heard in the depth of her soul - calling from both sides. And then, what should I tell you of the many times I have called you and do call you in all the acts of my Humanity? I was conceived, and I called you to give you the gift of my Conception. I was born, and I called you more strongly, to the point of crying, moaning and wailing, to move you to compassion so that you would answer Me quickly - to give you the gift of my birth, of my tears, moans and wailings. If my Celestial Mama swaddled Me, I called you to swaddle you together with Me. In sum, I called you in each word I spoke, in every step I took, in each pain I suffered, in every drop of my Blood; I called you even in my last breath on the Cross, to give you everything as gift; and in order to keep you safe, I placed you with Me in the hands of my Celestial Father.

Where have I not called you, to give you all that I did as gift, to pour out my Love, to make you feel how much I loved you, and to let the sweetness of my enrapturing voice descend into your heart - a voice that captivates, creates and conquers; and also to hear your voice telling Me: 'Here I am; tell me, Jesus, what do You want?', as your requital to my Love and as your promise to accept my gifts, so that I could say: 'I have been heard; my daughter has recognized Me, and she loves Me.' It is true that these are excesses of Our Love, but to love without being recognized and loved - no one can endure it, or continue to live. Therefore, We will continue Our follies of Love, Our stratagems, to give course to Our Life of Love."

Then He added, with an emphasis of Love even more intense: "My daughter, Our yearning, Our longing for the creature to remain always with Us are so many, that We want to always give her of Our own. But do you know what We want to give her? Our Will. By giving her Our Will there is no good We do not give to her; so, while having her as though drowned in Our Love, in Our Beauty, Sanctity and so forth, We say to her: 'We have given you so much; and you? - you don't give anything to Us?' And the creature, as though confounded because she has nothing to give Us - and if she has anything at all, it is Ours - looks at her will and gives it to Us as the most beautiful homage to her Creator. And do you know what We do? Even if she gave Us her will in each instant, every single time We give her the merit as if she possessed as many wills for as many times as she has given it to Us. And We give her Our Will for each time she has given Us her own, redoubling each time in her Our Sanctity, Our Love, etc." On hearing this, I said: 'My dear Jesus, I gain much in receiving the merit each time I give You my will; and to have Yours in exchange is the greatest gain for me. But what about your gain? - what is it?' And He, with a smile: 'To you the merit, and to Me the gain of receiving all the glory of my Divine Will; and as many times as I give It to you, so many times is my divine glory doubled, multiplied, increased a hundredfold - which I receive by means of the creature. Then can I say: 'She gives Me everything, and I give her everything'."

How Our Lord departed for Heaven and remained on earth in the Tabernacles in order to accomplish the Kingdom of the Divine Will. One who lives in the Divine Will can say with Jesus: 'I leave and I stay.'

My flight in the Divine Volition continues; and while I was making my visit to Jesus in the Sacrament, I wanted to embrace all the Tabernacles and each Sacramental Host in order to live together with my Prisoner Jesus. And I thought to myself: 'What a sacrifice, what a long imprisonment - not of days, but of centuries! Poor Jesus – were He at least requited!' And my beloved Jesus, visiting my little soul, all immersed in His flames of Love, told me: "My good daughter, my first prison was Love. Love imprisoned Me so much, that I had no freedom to breathe, to palpitate or to operate, other than while remaining imprisoned in my Love. So, it was my Love that imprisoned Me inside the Tabernacle - but with reason and with highest and divine Wisdom. Now, you must know that the chains of my Love made Me depart from Heaven in my Incarnation. I left in order to descend upon earth in search of my children and brothers, to form for them, with my Love, so many prisons of love as to make it impossible for them to leave. But while I departed, I remained in Heaven, because my Love, becoming my prison, bound Me within the celestial regions.

Now, having completed my office down here, I departed for Heaven, and I remained imprisoned inside each Sacramental Host. But do you know why? Because my Love, being my sweet imprisonment, told Me: 'The purpose for which You descended from Heaven to earth is not fulfilled. Where is the Kingdom of Our Will? It does not exist, nor is It known. So, remain in prison in each Sacramental Host; in this way, there won't be only one Jesus, as in your Humanity, but as many Jesuses for as many Sacramental Hosts as will exist. So many Lives of Yours will make a breach and a storm of love before the Divinity, as well as breach and storm of love into each heart that will receive You. These Lives will have a little word to say in order to make Our Will known, because when they descend into the hearts, they will not be mute, but speaking Lives; and You will speak about Our Fiat in the secret of their hearts - You will be the Bearer of Our Kingdom.' I recognized the demands of my Love as just, therefore I willingly remained on earth in order to form the Kingdom of my Will unto completion of the work.

You see, by departing for Heaven while remaining on earth, my Life, spread in many Sacramental Hosts, will not be useless down here; with certainty I will form the Kingdom of my Will; nor would I ever have stayed if I knew I was not going to obtain my intent. More so, since this is for Me a sacrifice greater than my very mortal Life. How many secret tears, how many bitter sighs in the midst of so many flames of love that devour Me! I would want to devour all inside my Love, to make the souls who are to live in my Divine Volition rise again to new Life. From the center of my Love will this Kingdom come out. My Love will burn up the evils of the earth, It will rely upon Itself, It will arm Its Omnipotence and, victory upon victory, It will win Our Reign in the midst of creatures, to give It to them.

But I was not satisfied with remaining a Prisoner Myself. My Love, igniting Me even more, made Me choose you, to make you a prisoner, with chains so strong that you cannot escape Me – as an outpouring of my Love and company of my imprisonment, to be able to speak to you at length about my Will, of Its yearning and longing, for It wants to reign; and as a pretext for my Love to be able to say before the Supreme Majesty: 'A creature from the human race is already Our prisoner. With her We speak about Our Will, to make It known and lay Its Kingdom within her.' This prisoner is like a pledge for the whole human family, so that by right We must give Our Kingdom. I can say that each of my Sacramental Lives is also a down payment that I make for all of you, sufficient to secure my Kingdom for my children. But to these many deposits of Mine, my Love wanted to add the deposit of a simple creature who carries the marks of my imprisonment, so as to reinforce the bonds between creature and Creator, and therefore accomplish and fulfill the Kingdom of Our Will in the midst of creatures. From each Tabernacle my prayers are incessant, so that the creatures may know my Will in order to let It reign; and everything I suffer - tears and sighs - I send to Heaven in order to move the Divinity to concede so great a grace; and I send it to every heart, to move them to compassion for my tears and pains - to make them surrender to receive a good so great.”

Jesus became silent; and I thought to myself: ‘By making Himself a Prisoner, my dear Jesus made an act of heroism so great, that only a God could do it. But while He is Prisoner, He is also free; more so, since in Heaven He is free and enjoys the fullness of His freedom. Not only this, but even on earth, how many times does He not come to me without His sacramental veils? But having imprisoned my poor existence... He has really done it this time. He knows in what a narrow prison He puts me, and how hard my chains are. Nor can I act like Him – that while He is a Prisoner, He is free. My prison is continuous.’ But while I was thinking this, He resumed His speech, saying: “My daughter, poor daughter, you were given my same lot. When my Love wants to do a good, It holds nothing back - neither sacrifices nor pains. It seems as if It wants to hear no reason: Its whole intent is to make the good It wants arise. And besides, of course I had to do this. This was not about just any good, but about a Kingdom of Divine Will to be established upon earth. This good will be so great that no other good can be compared to it; all other goods will be like many little drops before the sea, like little lights before the sun. Therefore, don’t be surprised if ‘I have really done it this time’, as you say. Your continuous imprisonment entered as a necessity for my Love, to keep Me company and to let Me speak of the knowledges about my Will which I so much cherished and felt the need to make known. You must know that as I speak to you about It, my Love repays you and releases you from the shackles of your human will, setting you free within the fields of the dominions of the Kingdom of my Will. All the knowledges about It are directed to this: to unchain the creature from her will, from her passions, from her miseries. Therefore thank Me for what I have disposed for you; my Love will know how to repay you, and will take into account even a single breath of yours, and each instant of your imprisonment.”

After this, I continued to think about the prodigies of the Divine Volition, and my beloved Jesus added: “Daughter of my Will, as your Jesus said, in descending from Heaven to earth: ‘I leave and I stay’; in same the way, when He ascended into Heaven He said: ‘I stay and I leave.’ My same word repeats upon descending sacramentally into the creatures: ‘I leave and I remain in the Tabernacles.’ In the same way, the creature who lives in my Will can repeat my same word in all her acts: as soon as she begins her act, so is her Jesus formed in her act; my Life has the virtue of multiplying Itself to infinity, as many times as I want. Therefore, in all truth she can say: ‘I leave and I stay. I leave for Heaven to beatify It, to reach my home and to make known to everyone my dear Jesus, Whom I have enclosed in my act so that they may enjoy Him and love Him; while it¹³⁶ also remains on earth, as life of mine, as well as support and defense for all my brothers.’ How beautiful one act in my Will!”

Everything that one who lives in the Divine Will does acquires the Divine Nature. Its prodigies in creating Divine Life in the human act. Feast for the whole of Heaven. The true requital of all Creation.

My poor mind swims inside the sea of the Divine Volition. Its murmuring is continuous – but what does It murmur? Love, souls, light – for It would want to invest and reign in each of Its children. And - oh! what stratagems of love It uses in order to make them re-enter into the bosom of Its light, from which they came. And in Its sorrow It says: ‘My children, my children, let Me reign, and I will give you so much grace, that you will recognize yourselves as children of your Celestial Father.’

But as my mind was wandering within this divine sea, my dear Jesus, my sweet Life, renewed His short little visit, and all goodness told me: “My little daughter of my Divine Volition, so many are the yearnings and the longings of my Will, for It wants to operate in the act of the creature, that It begins spying to see whether the soul calls It as prime act of her acts; and if It is called, It becomes festive, It runs, and blowing Its breath into the act of the creature, It impresses Its Creative Strength and converts it into Divine Nature. So, this creature feels the nature of the Divine Love investing her, surrounding her, and flowing like blood inside her veins - even in the marrow of her bones, in the beating of her heart. Hence, her entire being says nothing but 'love'. To convert the human acts into Divine Nature – these are the greatest prodigies that my Divine Will can do. My Will cannot give but what It possesses: Love It possesses, and Love does It give; and - oh! how happy this creature feels, that she can see and feel nothing but love, nor can she be without loving. By giving the nature of Love to the creature, my Will has placed her in the divine order – everything is harmony between God and her. It can be said that my Will has cast the creature into Our own maze of Love; so, if she adores, thanks or blesses, Its Divine Strength runs in order to change the adoration, the thanksgiving and the blessing into Divine Nature. Therefore the creature has it in her power - as her own nature - to always adore, thank and bless the Supreme Majesty, because what my Will communicates by nature possesses the continuous act that never ceases.

So, We keep her at Our disposal; Our Love finds one who loves It with Its own Love, and if It feels the need to pour Itself out, It has one with whom It can make Its outpouring. Our Majesty finds Its eternal adorations in the creature, as she can really say to It a divine 'thank You', a divine 'I bless You.' In sum, We find someone who can give Us of Our own; and – oh! how We love this more than celestial creature. She keeps Us always in activity, as We can give her whatever We want; and for Us to give is to be more blissful and happy. On the other hand, one who does not live in Our Volition keeps Us as though idle, without activity; and if We give something, all is measured, because We don't know where to put it, and We fear that she will waste it and will not be able to appreciate the little that We give.”

Then, with even stronger yearning, He added: “My good daughter, the prodigies which my Fiat operates in the act of the creature who lives in It are unheard-of. As It sees that she is about to do it, my Fiat runs to take the act in Its hands; It purifies it, molds it and invests it with light. Then It looks at it, to see if that act can receive Its Sanctity and Its Beauty; if It can enclose it within Its Immensity; if It can let Its Power and Its Love flow within it. And once It has done everything - because nothing must be lacking to Its act - It kisses it, embraces it, and pouring Itself all over it, with indescribable solemnity and love, It pronounces Its omnipotent Fiat, and creates Its very Self in that act. The Heavens stand at attention when my Will is about to operate in the act of the creature; they are moved, they remain stupefied and enraptured, and they exclaim: ‘Is it possible that a God, with His Will Trice Holy, can reach so much love - to the extent of creating Himself in the act of the creature?’ My very Fiat looks back at what It has done in the human act, and feels captivated, delighted, in seeing Its new Life; and taken by indescribable joy, It makes feast for the whole of Heaven, and abounds in pouring out graces over all the earth. I call these acts ‘my Life, my Act, echo of my Power - the prodigies of my Love.’

My daughter, make Me content; these are the joys of my Creation, the feasts of my creative virtue: to be able to form as many Lives of Mine for as many acts as the creature does. Therefore, call Me always into your acts, never put Me aside, and I will always make new things in you, such as to astound all peoples. Only when I have filled Heaven and earth with many of my new Lives - then will I receive the requital and the glory of all Creation.”

How God does not love force but spontaneity. Display of opulence, lavishness and sumptuousness that the Divine Volition will make in those who live in It. How Creation is not finished.

I am under the empire of the Divine Volition. Its creative virtue has such strength that It makes Its sweet empire felt over the poor creature who, sweetly - not being forced – harmonizes with the Fiat and gives It full freedom to do whatever It wants. Even more, she says to It: ‘How honored I feel that You want to make a portent out of my being; but so much, that You want to use your creative and operative strength inside my poor soul.’

But as my mind was immersed in receiving the creative virtue of the Divine Fiat, my always lovable Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, with unspeakable love told me: “Daughter of my Will, how beautiful is my Fiat as It operates with Its creative virtue. You have seen how It does not use violence, but sweetness - but an irresistible sweetness, maybe more than violence itself. With Its sweetness It embalms the creature, making her feel the beauty of the Divine, in such a way that she herself says: ‘Hurry, Holy Will, do not delay any longer. I feel myself languishing if I do not see You operating in me with your creative virtue.’

My daughter, We have never liked forced things or a forced will. Or rather, We don’t even want them; they very much reek of human and do not fit either with Our Love or with Our works, where everything is spontaneity and full Will - as We want, We yearn to do a good, and We do it; and therefore We do it with such fullness of Love and of grace, that no one can match Us. So much so, that if We don’t see spontaneity and the willingness to receive the good that We want to do in the creature, We don’t do anything. At the most We wait, making her feel Our sighs, Our longing; but We do not move to operate - not before We see her wanting to receive with love the work of her Creator.

Now, you must know that the Life of Our Will keeps growing in the creature for each act she does in It; and when she reaches the fullness - that everything is my Will in her – then We begin the display of Our Love, of Our graces, in such a way that in each instant We give her new Love and new surprising graces. We show Our divine pomp, the opulence, the lavishness of Our stratagems of love. Everything We do to her carries the imprint of the bounty of her Creator. When the soul is filled with Our Divine Will We hold nothing back: what We have We give, and whatever she wants is hers. The lavishness We show is such, that We make a note of Our divine melodies flow in each of her acts, so that not even Our music may be lacking in her; and she often plays to Us the beautiful little sonatas of Our divine notes and – oh! how delighted We feel, Our harmonies and divine sounds harmonizing for Us. You must know that for one who lives in Our Will, We surpass the lavishness, the pomp, the opulence and sumptuousness We used in Creation. Everything was abundance: abundance of light that no one can measure; extension of heavens, lavishness of beauties, adorned with many stars. Each thing was created with such abundance, invested with such splendor of magnificence, that each of them has no need of the other; rather, all can give without the need to receive. Only the human will puts limits and constraints on the creature, casting her into miseries, and preventing my goods from giving themselves to them. Therefore, I anxiously await that my Will be known and that creatures live in It. Then will I make such display of lavishness, and each soul will be a new creation - beautiful but one distinct from the other. I will amuse Myself, I will act as the insuperable Artisan, I will put out my creative art. Oh! how I long for this, how I want it, how I yearn for it! Indeed, Creation is not finished, I have yet to do my most beautiful works.

Therefore, my daughter, let Me work. And do you know when I work? When I manifest to you a truth on my Divine Will. Then immediately I act as the Artisan, and with my creative hands I work in you, so that that truth may become life inside your soul; and - oh! how I enjoy Myself in this work. The soul becomes like soft wax in my hands, and I shape in her the life that I want. Therefore, be attentive and let Me do it.”

How the acts of one who lives in the Divine Will extend over all, and become the narrators of the Supreme Being. Display of Love. How, in creating the Virgin, God created forgiveness.

My flight continues in the Divine Volition. Oh! how I feel dissolved within Its Immensity! Its Power and activity are such, that when It operates in the act of the creature, It wants to give that act to all; It wants to fill Heaven and earth, to make everyone see and feel what It can do and how It can love. I remained surprised, and my beloved Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness told me: “My blessed daughter, the Love of my Will in operating in the act of the creature is such as to seem incredible. As It operates, my Will wants everyone to undergo that act and do it as their own act. With Its omnipotent breath It gives wings to that act and makes the sun, the heavens, the stars, the wind, the sea go through it, and even the air that all breathe. Then it flies higher, up to the celestial regions, and everyone - the Angels, the Saints, the Queen and Mother, and even Our Divinity – undergo that act, in such a way that, each one receiving it, all must be able to say: ‘This act is mine.’ But do you know why? The Love of my Will is such that It wants everyone to possess Its act, giving life to each one. It wants to decorate, adorn and invest everything and everyone with Its creative virtue in order to receive from everything and from each one the glory, the love and the honor that my Will possesses.

My Volition never stops; only when It sees that Its act has filled everything – then is It content; and as triumph It carries with Itself the creature who gave It the freedom to operate in her act, to make it known and loved by all. These are Our feasts, Our pure joys of Creation: to be able to put something of Our own in the creature, as though wanting to duplicate Our Power, Immensity, Love and Glory to the infinite, in the human act of the creature. Nor should there be any wonder about it - Our Divine Will is present everywhere, therefore Our acts that animate the acts of the creatures fly and take refuge inside Our Volition, even into the tiniest hiding places where my Will is present. These acts serve Us as the requital of Love from all Creation, as the sweetest company for Us, and as the narrators of Our Supreme Being. Therefore Our Love is exuberant for one who wants to live in Our Fiat; We are all eyes over this creature, almost spying to see when she lends Us her act so as to let Us put Our Creative virtue to work in it. This creature is for Us the display of Our love, the activity of Our Power; and she becomes the repeater of Our very Life.”

After this, I continued my round in the Divine Volition, and my sweet Jesus transported my little will inside the creative act of His. My God, how many surprises! My poor intelligence gets lost and is unable to say anything. Then, my always lovable Jesus, repeating His short little visit, all goodness told me: “My good daughter, Our Fiat in Creation made a display of Our Love - operative, powerful and wise - in such a way that all created things are filled with Our Love, Power, Wisdom and unspeakable Beauty. We can call them ‘the administrators of Our Supreme Being.’ But in the creation of the Sovereign Queen We moved beyond that; Our Love was not content with the mere display, but wanted to assume the attitude of mercy, of tenderness and of compassion, so profound and intimate, as though wanting to turn into tears for love of creatures. This is why, as Our Fiat was pronounced in order to create Her and call Her to life, so did It create forgiveness, mercy, reconciliation between Us and mankind, and We deposited it inside this Celestial and Holy Creature, as the Administrator between Our children and Hers. Therefore, the Sovereign Lady possesses seas of forgiveness, of mercy, of compassion, as well as tearful seas of Our Love, in which She can envelop all generations, generated anew within these seas created by Us in Her - seas of forgiveness, of mercy, and of so tender a compassion as to soften the hardest hearts.

My daughter, it was just that everything be deposited inside this Celestial Mother because, She having to possess the Kingdom of Our Will, everything was to be entrusted to Her. She alone has sufficient space to be able to possess Our seas created by Us. With Its creative and preserving Power, Our Will maintains whatever It creates intact, without ever lessening, in spite of Our continuous giving. On the other hand, where Our Will is not present We cannot give, nor entrust or deposit – We find no space; Our Love remains hampered in the many beautiful works We want to do in the creatures. Only in this Sovereign Lady did Our Love find no obstruction, and therefore It displayed so much and did so many wonders, to the point of giving Her divine fecundity, to make of Her the Mother of Her Creator.”

Then my beloved Jesus made present to me all the acts that He did together with His Celestial Mama, and while they were operating, the seas of Love of one and the other became one, and raising their waves up to Heaven, invested everything, “even Our¹³⁷ Divinity; and forming a thick rain of love upon Our Divine Being, they carried the love of all, the refreshment and balm by which Our Divine Being remained soothed, changing Justice into a surge of Love toward the creatures. It can be said that Our Love regenerated the human family with new love, and God loved it with doubled love. But where? In the Queen and in Her dear Son.

Now listen to another surprise. When I, as a little Baby, was suckling the milk from my Mama, I suckled souls, because She kept them in deposit, and in giving Me Her milk She deposited all souls in Me, because She wanted Me to love them, give my kiss to all of them, and make of them my victory and Hers. Not only this, but in giving Me Her milk She also made Me suckle Her Maternity, Her tenderesses, and She imposed Herself on Me with Her Love, so that I would love souls with Maternal and Paternal Love. And I received in Me Her Maternity, Her unspeakable tenderesses, and so I loved souls with Divine Love, Maternal and Paternal. Then, after She would deposit all souls in Me, I, with one of my stratagems of love, with a breath or a sweet gaze of Mine would deposit them again inside Her Maternal Heart; and in order to requite Her I would give Her my Paternal Love, my Divine Love which is unceasing, firm, unshakable and never changes. In fact, the human love changes easily, and I wanted my inseparable Mother to possess the same prerogatives of my Love, and to love souls the way only a God can love. Therefore, in every act We¹³⁸ did, from the littlest to the greatest, it was exchanges of deposit of souls that We were making - I in Her, She in Me. Even more, I can say that We duplicated this deposit of souls, because what I received from my dear Mama I kept inside my Divine Heart with highest jealousy, as the greatest gift She could give to Me. And She, in receiving my gift, would keep it so jealously as to put all Her Maternity in motion in order to keep the gift that Her Son was giving Her. Now, in these exchanges of deposit that We were making, Our Love grew and loved all creatures with new love; We were making designs on how to love them more, and how to win them all by way of love; and We laid down our lives in order to rescue them.”

How Jesus, in incarnating Himself, formed from Himself as many Jesuses for as many creatures as would exist, so that each of them might have a Jesus at her disposal.

I am in the arms of the Divine Volition, which loves me so much; and to show me how much It Loves me It wants to always tell me Its eternal and long love story, adding new surprises, such that one remains enraptured, finding it impossible not to love It. Only one who is ungrateful and mindless would not. Then, the Divine Fiat made present to me what It had done in the descent of the Word upon earth; and my sweet Jesus, repeating His usual little visit, all goodness told me: “My little daughter of my Will, you must know that my Love is so great, that It feels the need to pour Itself out, and to entrust Its secrets to one who lives in my Will, so that, making her aware of everything, we may love with one love, and I may repeat in her what I did within Myself. Listen then, daughter, where the excesses of my Love reached, making Me do things unheard-of and incredible to the created minds.

So, in coming upon earth, I wanted to form from Myself as many Jesuses for as many creatures as had existed, were existing, and would exist. Hence, each one was to have his Jesus – fully his own

¹³⁸ Jesus and His Mother.

- at his disposal. Therefore, each one would have my Conception in order to remain conceived in Me, my birth to be reborn, my tears to be washed, my tender age in order to be restored and to begin his new life, my steps as life and guide of his own, my works to make his works arise within mine, my pains as balm and strength for his pains, and as repayment of any debt incurred with Divine Justice; my death to find his life again; my Resurrection for him to rise again completely in my Will and to the complete glory he was supposed to give to his Creator. And this, with highest love, with reason, with justice and with highest wisdom.

My Celestial Father was to find in Me, in order to be satisfied, glorified and repaid for His great Love, as many Lives of Mine for as many creatures as He had issued and would issue to daylight; and even though not everyone would take this Life of Mine, my Celestial Father demanded my Life in order to be glorified for everything He had done in the Work of Creation and Redemption. I can say that as soon as man withdrew from Our Will, so did the Glory which was due to my Divine Father cease. Hence, had I not formed from Myself as many Jesuses for as many existing creatures, the Glory of the Celestial Father would have been incomplete – and I cannot do incomplete works; my Love would have waged war against Me, had I not formed of Myself many Jesuses - first, for Our own decorum and Glory, and then, to give this complete good to each creature. Therefore, Our greatest sorrow is that in spite of so many of my Lives that are at each one's disposal, some do not recognize them, some don't even look at them, some do not make use of them, some offend them, while some just barely take the crumbs of my Life. Few are those who say: 'I do the Life of Jesus, with Jesus; and I love like Jesus loves, and I want what He wants.' These creatures are the requital, together with Me, of the Glory and Love of Creation and Redemption. But even though not all of these Lives of Mine serve the creature, they admirably serve the Glory of my Divine Father, since I did not come upon earth only for the creatures, but also to reintegrate the interests and the Glory of my Celestial Father. Oh! if you could see what a beautiful cortege these many Lives of Mine form around Our Divinity, and how much Love and Glory are unleashed from them - you would remain so enraptured that it would be difficult for you to go back into yourself!"

Jesus became silent, and I remained with the scene before my mind of so many Jesuses for as many existing creatures. But I carried a thorn inside my heart that tortured me and embittered me - down to the marrow of my bones - for a person very dear to me, and necessary to my poor existence, who was in danger of death; and I wanted to save this person at any cost. Therefore I took the Divine Will, I made It all mine, and in my sorrow I said: 'Jesus, your Will is mine; your Power and Immensity are in my power. I do not want this, and You must not want it either.' My God, I felt I was battling with a Power; and in order to win, my mind brought itself before the Divinity, and I placed around It the expanse of the heavens with all the stars in prayer, the vastness of the light of the sun with the might of its heat, the entire Creation - in prayer; and then the seas of Love and Power of the Queen of Heaven, the pains and the Blood shed by Jesus, like many seas around the Divinity - all in prayer; and then the many Jesuses of each creature, so that they might have a sigh, a plea, to obtain what I wanted. But what was not my surprise and emotion together, in seeing and hearing that the many Jesuses of each creature were praying to obtain what I wanted? I remained confounded in seeing so much divine goodness and compliance. May He be always thanked and blessed; and may everything be for His Glory.

How God recognizes Himself in one who tries to recognize God in His works. Happiness that God receives from the love of the creature. The place that man has in the Creation and in the very Divinity. How Creation forms the members of one who lives in the Divine Will.

I am under the empire of the Divine Volition, which loves and longs to be recognized in all Its works. It seems that It takes the little creature by the hand, and carrying her in flight, points out to her all that It did, how much It loved her in each created thing, and how, by right, It wants to be loved. To love without being requited in love is Its greatest sorrow. I remained surprised, and my always lovable Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness told me: "My blessed daughter, to love and to be loved is the greatest refreshment for Our Love. To the happiness of Heaven unites the happiness of the earth, and as they kiss each other, We feel that the earth too makes Us happy, bringing Us the love of the creature who recognizes Us and loves Us. She brings Us the most beautiful joys and the greatest happiness; more so, since the joys of Heaven are Ours - no one can take them away from Us; while those We receive through the love of the creature are new for Us, and form Our new conquests. Moreover, as We are recognized in Our works, the creature takes flight to ascend and recognize He Who created her. For Us, to be recognized is the greatest glory, the love most intense that We receive; and by being recognized We form Our army, the divine militia, Our people, from whom We demand nothing other than the tribute of being loved; and We put all Our works at their disposal to serve them, abounding with all that may make them happy. While if they do not recognize Us, We remain like the God with no army and without a people. How painful it is to deliver so many creatures to daylight, and to remain without an army and without a people.

Now, keep listening to Me. As the creature recognizes Us and loves Us in the created things, so does she impress in them a note of love and of happiness for her Creator; and as she rises up to recognize her Creator, she recognizes Us and We recognize Our Divine Being in her; and if you knew what it means to recognize each other! Our Love, being loved, is pacified and loves more intensively the one who loves It, and reaches such excess, that in order to recognize Itself in the creature, It creates Itself. But to do what? To recognize Itself in her and to be loved. How beautiful it is when We recognize Ourselves in the creature! She becomes for Us Our throne, Our divine chamber, Our heaven. The seas of Our Love inundate her; her littlest acts form waves of love that love Us, glorify Us, bless Us; and she recognizes Us in Ourselves, she recognizes Us in herself, she recognizes Us in all created things. And We recognize her in all Our works: in the heavens, in the sun, in the wind - in everything. Our Love, united to Our Fiat, brings her everywhere, and We place her in the order of Our works."

After this, my mind continued to swim in the sea of the Divine Volition. My God, how many surprises, how many wonders! And my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, all inundated within His flames of Love, told me: "Blessed daughter of my Will, my Love gives Me no peace if It doesn't make Me say new surprises about my Divine Fiat. It wants to make known to you the sublimeness, the nobility, and the place that the creature occupies both in the Creation and in Our Divine Being, when she lives in Our Divine Volition. Now, you must know that in the Creation she occupies the first place; all created things feel so connected together and united, that they become for her her inseparable members. So, the sun is her member, the expanse of the heavens, the wind, the air that all breathe, are her members. All created things feel happy - honored to be the members of this fortunate creature; and some become her heart, some her hand, some her feet, some her eyes, some her breath. In sum, there is no created thing which does not have its distinct place, and does not exercise the office of being her member. And her soul, as the head, keeps her members in order, and receives and gives to God all the love, the sanctity, the glory and all the goods that the created things contain. More so, since all created things are Our members too; hence, for the creature who lives in Our Will, her members are Ours, and Ours are hers, which keep Our Supreme Being in communication with the creature, and We become for her more than blood that circulates in the veins of her soul; the continuous heartbeat of love, as We palpitate in her heart; the divine breath, as We breathe within her soul. And loving this more than celestial creature with excessive love, We place in circulation her little love and her acts inside Our Divine Being. We are jealous of her heartbeat and of her breath, and We enclose them inside Our own. Nothing comes out of her which does not remain enclosed within Us, so as to requite her with Our Love, and to hear her delightful and sweet refrain: 'I love You, I love You, I love You.' So, in one who lives in Our Will We see the continuous chain of love that never breaks; and Our Love has Its ledge on which to lean, to be able to say, incessantly: 'I love you, I love you, I love you.' When Our Love does not find the love of the creature, It remains suspended and screams with pain, almost wanting to deafen the creature, to say to her: ‘Why do you not love Me? Not loving Us is the cruelest wound for Us.’

But this is not all yet. Our Love is not content if It doesn’t reach the excess. Do you want to know why We made of the Creation many members that had to serve as Our members as well as members of the creature? In each created things We placed Our gifts, Our Sanctity, Our Love, as bearers of what We wanted to give to her, and as carriers of what she would do for Us. All created things are crammed with and the depository of what We wanted to give her: the heavens with the multiplicity of their stars symbolize Our many new and distinct acts that We wanted to give her; the sun symbolizes Our eternal Light with which We want to inundate her, and its heat and the effects it possesses represent Our Love that almost wants to drown her to make her feel how much We love her, while its effects are Our various beauties with which We wanted to invest her. In the wind, in each blow, We placed Our kisses, Our loving caresses, and in its mighty waves Our ruling Love, to sweep her into Our Love with Our squeezes and embraces, so as to render her inseparable from Us. In sum, each created thing possesses Our gifts to be given to the creature. But who takes them? Only those who live in Our Will. I can say that all created things are pregnant with Our gifts, but they cannot give them, they cannot be the bearers of them, because they do not find one who lives in Our Divine Fiat, which has the virtue and the power of putting her in communication with all Our works - more than her own members; and with her very Creator - more than her own life. How many unheard-of prodigies We will deliver from Our Divine Womb, for those who will let Our Will reign! Our works will sing triumphs and victories, and, full-handed, they will abound in giving the gifts and the goods of their Creator, which they possess. All will be happy – the Giver and the receivers. Therefore, be attentive and do not occupy yourself with anything other than living in my Will, because I have much to give you, and you, much to receive.”

I remained surprised in hearing this, and I said to myself: ‘Is it possible - all that He just said? It seems incredible.’ And my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, do not be surprised. You must know that everything We did was to serve the creature who would possess my Divine Will as Life; and this was necessary for Our decorum, Wisdom, Power and for Our Majesty. Now, when the creature withdrew from Our Will, Justice demanded that We withdraw from her all that was to serve as befitting to Our Supreme Majesty; and the creature remained like the head without its members. Poor head with no members! What good could it ever do? It is true that the head has the supremacy over the members, but without members the head can do nothing - it has no life, and no works. Now, since my Will wants to go back inside the creatures, my Love wants – It demands – that they be given back the members; not only the members, but the very Life of He Who created them. Our reigning Will will place all Its works in force, and It will give back to the creature what she lost by doing her will, which devastates all goods, snaps all communications with Our works and with her own Creator, and becomes like a dislocated bone that loses communication with all its members, and is fit for nothing but giving pain.”

Oppressions and melancholies have no reason to exist in the Divine Will. They form the clouds, the bitter little drops, which embitter God and the creature. Prodiges of abandonment in the Divine Volition. How all created things remain animated by one who lives in the Fiat.

The sea of the Divine Volition never ceases to plunge me into Its waves, as though wanting nothing to enter to into me other than Its light, so as to grow in me, by way of light and heat, the Life of Its Will alone. But in spite of all this, I felt oppressed, with an air of melancholy, because of the circumstances, alas, too painful, of my poor existence down here, which formed as though clouds around me, to prevent me from enjoying the beauty of the light and the gentleness of the warmth in which the soul remains fecundated, reborn and growing inside her very Creator. And my sweet Jesus,

Who jealously watches over my poor soul, all goodness told me: “My good daughter, courage! Oppressions, melancholies, the thought of the past, have no reason to exist for one who lives in my Will. These are notes that clash with Our notes of joy, of peace and of love, and form feeble sounds which sound unpleasant to Our divine ears. They are like bitter little drops which, thrown into Our sea, would want to embitter Our divine sea; while by living in Our Will, We make the creature the owner of Our seas of joy, of happiness, and if necessary We arm her with Our Power so that everything may be propitious to her and nothing may do harm to her, because there is no power against Our Will. On the contrary, Our Will has the power to level and to crush anything, like dust under the empire of a mighty wind. Therefore, when We see the creature in Our Will being afflicted, oppressed - how bad it sounds to Us; and since she lives in Our Volition, because of the one Will that animates Us We are forced to feel her afflictions and oppressions. To set Ourselves aside when the creature is afflicted is not of Our Divine Being - nor of Our Love. Rather, We make use of Our Power, and We inundate her more with Our Love, so that We may see her again with a smile on her lips, and with joy in her heart.

Besides, the thought of the past is truly absurd - it is like wanting to claim the divine rights. You must know that anything beautiful and good that the creature has done is deposited inside of Us, attesting to Us her love and the glory that she gives Us, and forming her crown, for her to be crowned on her first entrance into Our Celestial Fatherland. Therefore, the most beautiful act of the creature is to throw herself into Our arms - abandon herself - letting Us make whatever We want to make of her, in time as well as in eternity. Only then do We take all the delight in making her one of the most beautiful statues that must adorn Our Celestial Jerusalem.”

Then He added: “My daughter, when the creature abandons herself in Our Will, Our satisfaction is so great, that she pours herself into Us and We pour Ourselves into her; and We give her new Life of Ours, new Love, new Sanctity and new knowledges of Our Supreme Being. When the creature abandons herself in Our Divine Volition, We can make in her the greatest prodigies, the most surprising graces, because there is Our own Will in her receiving and depositing what We want to give to the creature. By abandoning herself in Our Will she storms Heaven, and her empire is such that she imposes herself over Our Divine Being, enclosing It within her littleness; while she, triumphant, encloses herself inside Our Divine Womb. The Heavens are stupefied, the Angels and the Saints remain ecstatic, and all feel a new life flowing in them by virtue of the act of abandonment that the creature has done, while still a pilgrim. And We, finding her abandoned in Our Fiat, We find that We can do whatever We want in her - she lends herself completely to Our Power. So We begin the work, and form in her soul many little fountains of Love, of Goodness, of Sanctity, of Mercy, and so forth; in such a way that when Our Love wants to love, with Our omnipotent breath We move the little fountains of Love, and she loves Us, making so much love overflow from the fount, as to flood the entire Celestial Court. When We want to use Goodness, Mercy, Grace, We set these fountains in motion, and the earth is flooded by Our Goodness and Mercy - and some are converted, some receive graces. We could do all this directly by Ourselves, but We experience greater delight, We feel more pleasure in using the fountains which We Ourselves have formed in the creature. Through her We feel more moved to use mercy toward all; We have Our intermediary between Heaven and earth, who, with her abandonment, makes Us pour graces and makes Us love all creatures with new love. Therefore, the more you are abandoned in Our Will, the more magnanimous We will be toward you and toward all; and everyone - at least the more disposed - will find new strength, new light, new guidance.”

I remained surprised, and He added: “My good daughter, how I wish that all knew what it means to live in my Divine Volition. It is such as to seem incredible; but do you know why? Because they don't know what my Will is, and the whole series of prodigies that It can do and wants to do in the creature. So, not knowing It, they believe it is impossible that my Will can do in the creature all that I'm saying. Oh, if they knew It! What It does and says is little - it is the knowledge that puts Us on the way to the creature, and prepares Our place, forming the space in which to place Our unheard-of prodigies. It is knowledge that forms the eyes to be able to look and appreciate Our divine wonders. Everything is prodigy for one who lives in Our Will. You must know that as a creature does her acts in my Will, all created things remain animated by the will and word of that creature; all things possess a voice, and some say, 'Love', some 'Glory', some 'Adoration', some others 'Thanks', and others still, 'Blessing to Our Creator'. What harmony do they form in the atmosphere, what a sweet enchantment - such that We feel enraptured. But whose voices are those? The voices of one who lives in Our Will. It happens as when voices and chants are ingeniously enclosed inside instruments of wood and of metal: the instruments sing and speak. It is the same for the one who lives in my Will: her love to see Me loved and glorified is such, that she encloses her will, her voice and her love inside the created things; and some narrate to Me the story of my Love, some sing of my Glory. It seems that all things have something to tell Me, and - oh! how happy I feel, because I see that the creature masters the entire Creation and, queen as she is, animates everything and makes Me loved by everything. Oh, how sweetly it resounds to Our divine hearing! I have given everything to her, and she gives Me everything; and I return to give her all over again."

How God loves and prays Himself, to give the Kingdom of the Divine Will. The life of one who lives in It is formed in God. How she is constantly reborn. Sowing of Divine Lives. How she is welcomed and loved by all.

I feel I am in the arms of the Divine Volition which, dominating me, is all attentive - even over my little trifles - to invest them with Its Life and with Its Light, in order to enclose the All inside the little trifle. What goodness, what love! It seems that, in any way, It wants to interact with the creature; but to do what? To always give. By giving, It pours Itself out; by giving, It feels operative, making from Itself so many beautiful things that love It and praise It for Who He is. Then, my dear Jesus, Who always takes great delight in saying ever new things about His adorable Will, visiting my poor soul, as if He felt the need to entrust to me His secrets, told me: "My blessed daughter, the living of the creature in Our Will is Our amusement, Our enjoyment, Our perennial occupation. Now, you must know that, as the creature unites to Our Volition and enters into It, so does Our Will kiss the human will, and the human will kisses Our own; and We Ourselves love, pray and ask of Ourselves that Our Will come to reign in the human generations. The creature disappears inside Our Divine Sea like a little drop of water, and what remains is Our prayer, which wants to invest everything with its power, and obtain what We have asked of Ourselves. It is Our own prayer - We can't do without answering it.

Then, once We have prayed, We set Ourselves on the way, We go throughout all nations and through each heart, to see if We find even a small disposition - that they want to live in Our Will. So We take that little disposition in Our creative hands, We purify it, We sanctify it, We embellish it, and We place inside of it the first act of Our Will. And We wait, to be able to place the second, the third act of Life of Our Fiat; and so forth. Therefore, all that the creature does in Our Will is truly Us doing it: We love, We pray... It can be said that We commit Ourselves in order to give what We want, and it is impossible not to grant it to Ourselves. Do you see then, what it means to live in Our Will? It is to impose oneself over Us, making Us do what she wants, and making Us give what she wants Us to give."

After this, my beloved Jesus added: "My daughter, for one who lives in Our Will, her life is formed inside Our Divine Being - she is conceived, born, and reborn continuously. Just as Our Divine Being is always in act of generating, so is she always in act of being born anew; and as she is reborn, so is she born again to new love, to new sanctity, to new beauty; and while she is reborn, she grows and takes always from Us. These new births are her greatest fortune, and Ours as well, because We feel that the creature not only lives in Us, but is born anew and grows in Our very Life; she is renewed in Our own act, which is ever new; and as she is reborn, We delight in looking at her because she acquires a new beauty - more beautiful, more attractive than the one before. But does she perhaps remain there? Ah, no. Yet more beauties will invest her, they will never cease – but so many as to captivate Our gaze, in such a way that We won't be able to move it, so as to enjoy in her Our interminable beauties; and We love Our beauties with which We keep investing her incessantly. And while We look at her under the rain of Our varied beauties, Our Love does not remain behind - It makes her be born again every instant in Our Love, which is always new. Therefore, she loves Us with ever new love, which always grows and never stops.

Who can tell you what this life of creature is, formed inside of Us? It is Our Paradise that We form in her. By being reborn in Us, she gives Us always new joys, new surprises of happiness, because as she is reborn, so is she born again in Our Power, Wisdom, Goodness and Sanctity. Hence, recognizing Our own Life in her, We love her as We love Ourselves.

Now, as she is reborn in Us so many times, We give her virtue to be able to receive Our sowing – that is, We can sow in her as many of Our Divine Lives as We want. And here comes Our Will, out into the field; and with Its Fiat, It speaks and It creates, It speaks and It sows Divine Lives; and by Its breath It makes them grow, with Its Love It nourishes them, with Its light It gives them the tints of all Its diverse beauties. More so since, this life having been reborn in Us so many times, and raised within Us, We have infused in her all the prerogatives necessary to be able to receive the sowing of Our Divine Lives. These Lives are the most precious, they possess the creative virtue - they have Our same value. We can say: 'We Ourselves, having formed so many Lives of Ours, have sowed them inside the creature.' Comparing these Lives to the sun, its light remains like a shadow before them. The expanse of the heavens is small compared to them.

But do you want to know the use of these Lives of Ours, formed in the creature with so much love? They will serve to populate the earth and to generate the Life of Our Will in the human family. They are Our Lives, my daughter. Our Life never dies - It is eternal, with Us. Therefore they are all in waiting to take possession of the creatures, in order to form with them one single Life. And this is also the cause - Our great divine reason for which We have been speaking for so long about Our Divine Will. Each word We say is a Life of Ours that We issue; it is a birth that We deliver to daylight. Each word We speak about Our Fiat is a Life of Ours that We expose, which puts Itself in communication with the creatures. Each knowledge that We manifest carries Our kiss which, breathing upon her, forms Our Life; and since life has motion, warmth, heartbeat and breath, by necessity, the creature must also feel this Life of Ours within her, which will have the virtue of transforming into Itself the life of this fortunate creature. Therefore, Our dear daughter, be attentive, let not even one word on Our Fiat escape you, because these are Lives, and Lives that We live in other creatures. The value of one single word on Our Fiat is so great, that the whole of Creation - oh! how behind it remains. In fact, the Creation is Our work, but one word on Our Fiat is Life, and life always costs more than all the works.

Furthermore, Our Love for this creature who receives the sowing of Our Divine Lives is so great, that as We speak to her about Our Will, so does Our Eternal Love unload Itself upon her, It pours Itself out, It feels loved back. The weight of human ingratitude - of not being loved – is emptied, because We find one who loves Us with Our Love, which has the virtue of making up for all the love that all creatures should give Us, of burning up all their evils, and of filling and shortening the greatest distances. This is why Our Love finds in her Our refreshments, Our paybacks, and therefore We love her infinitely. But We are not content with loving her Ourselves alone; We make her loved by the Celestial Queen, as more than tender daughter; by the Angels and the Saints, as their inseparable sister; We make her loved by the heavens, by the sun, by the wind - by everyone. They feel in her the strength, the virtue of Our Love; and they feel fortunate to love her, because she is the bearer of joys to all. And Our Love, the contentment We feel, are so great, that We call her 'Our consoler', 'Our Fiat' that We keep on earth, 'Our depository'. Everything in her is Ours."

How the Divine Fiat reaches the point of counting the breaths and the minutes to make the creatures return to live in It. How the creature knocks on all created things. How God wants to be in continuous act of giving and of receiving. The pains of Jesus kiss the pains of the creature.

It seems to me that the Divine Volition awaits me, wants me, and yearns for me to enter into It in each instant, so as to re-enter into all my acts. And if – may this never be, Heavens forbid! - I escape for a few instants, It feels isolated, and misses inconsolably the company of Its creature; and in Its sorrow It says: “How can this be - are you leaving me? For you I left Myself in the spheres, in the sun, in the air, to keep you company and receive yours. But do you know why? To love you, and to be loved; and to be able to say: ‘What I do in the heavens, in Our Divine Being, in the spheres, I want to do in my beloved creature.’ But if you don’t remain in my Will, you withdraw from Me, and I from you, and I remain isolated. But in my sorrow I never stop calling you.”

Divine Will, how much You love me! How lovable and admirable You are! And I felt the sorrow of Its loneliness; but my sweet Jesus, repeating His little visit, told me: “My good daughter of my Volition, waiting is one of Our greatest pains. The creature keeps Us as though watching; We reach the point of counting the breaths, the heartbeats, the minutes that We don’t feel her with Us, in order to make her feel Our Love within hers, and to love each other with one single Love. Then do We feel as though harmonized with the creature, and We carry her as Our victory into Our divine bosom. Therefore, without her minutes seem like centuries to Us, and We long for her return. More so since, as she enters Our Volition, asking Us for Our Will to come to reign upon earth, We make feast, because she wants what We want, which is the greatest and most beautiful of all things - the creature wanting what her Creator wants. This forms Our rest, and Our Love smiles and calms down.

Now, as she asks for Our Will to come to reign, she knocks on all created things: on the sun, on the wind, on the heavens, on the stars - on everything. As I, Who dominate as Ruler in them, hear the knocking, I open all the doors and put Myself on the way to come and reign. But the creature does not stop - she goes higher, and knocks at Our Divinity, at all the Angels and the Saints, making all ask Me for my Fiat to come. How sweet is her knocking, penetrating, with such authority that everybody opens and all stand at attention. She gives everyone work to do, and all ask for what she herself wants. Therefore, the living in Our Will moves Heaven and earth, putting all Our Works in action for a cause so holy.”

After this, He added: “My daughter, would you like to know why We want the creature to live in Our Divine Volition? Because We want to give her always new gifts, new Love, new charisms - We want to tell her always new things of Our Divine Being. But, having to receive and listen to Us, if she does not live in Our Will she will have no space where to put Our gifts; and We do not issue Our gifts if We don’t have a place in which to deposit them, and We remain with the sorrow that We want to give, but We can’t. We are as though suffocated by Love, and We cannot find relief because there’s no one who takes It; and We are forced to see the creature poor, weak, ignorant. What sorrow! In Our Will, instead, We place Our goods in common, and keep saying to her, always: ‘Take whatever you want and, in recognition, give Us the little tribute of your love and of your will.’ Therefore, my daughter, let us make a pact – let us agree on this: I must always give to you, and you must always give Me your little love; in this way, we will be always in communication, and will always have things to do together. We will love with one single Love, and be happy of one same happiness.”

Then, as I was in suffering, with such restlessness that I couldn’t find a position, my sweet Jesus came back and continued: “My daughter, my pains kiss yours, embrace them, breathe upon them with their love; they identify your sufferings with mine, giving them life in my own pains; so your pains receive the same infinite value and the good that mine produce. In my Will all things change, the pains also; from human they become divine. I feel that it is not the creature who suffers them, but I Myself form them, I create those pains, in order to suffer them inside my beloved creature; it is my life being repeated in her, with the cortege of my pains. This is why I call them ‘My pains’; and if you knew what I do with these pains...! I place them between Heaven and earth as perennial Glory and Love to my Celestial Father; as defense and refuge of the creatures; as remorse for those who offend Me; as a cry of love to those who do not love Me; as light for those who do not know Me. In sum, I make them do all the offices of good needed for the creatures. Therefore, let Me do it; these are works that your Jesus wants to do, and I can only do them in one who lives in my Will.”

March, 20 1938

Love devices of the creature who lives in the Divine Will. Example of a teacher who possesses the sciences, but does not find anyone to whom to teach them; or of a rich man who does not find anyone to whom to give his riches.

I am in the arms of the Fiat, which loves so much Its beloved creature who lives in It, that It holds her always tightly in Its arms; even more, Its Love is such that It places her inside Its incessant motion. The tiniest distances or the gaps of an instant in which It doesn't feel her with Itself, in Its own Life, would be for It the most painful martyrdom of Love; and in Its sorrow It would say to her: “Daughter, don't move away from Me, even for one single instant. You would embitter my Love, because We feel your life as Our own, therefore We would feel Our Love being torn and tortured.’ In fact, you must know that for the creature who lives in Our Will, her breath lives and breathes within Our breathing, and as she breathes, We feel Ourselves being loved and We love her. Her motion moves within Ours, lives Our same life, operates with Us, speaks with Our same word. We feel her circulate inside Our Divine Being like the blood that circulates inside the veins of the creatures; and she says and repeats always: ‘I love You, I love You...’ Not yet satisfied, she takes off in flight, she goes around through all created things, she gathers Our Love spread in all Creation, and comes to take refuge inside Our Supreme Being; and she surprises Us by bringing Us all the Love that all created things should give Us, if they had reason. She keeps finding ever new devices in order to love Us. Other times she goes to her Mother and Queen and asks Her for all Her Love; and she surprises Us by bringing Us, redoubled, the Love of the great Lady. Then, celebrating, she says to Us: ‘I bring You the Love of my Celestial Mama in order to love You.’ And - oh! how pleased We feel. It is impossible for Us to be without the one who lives in Our Volition.”

Oh, Divine Will, how much Love and Power You contain for those who live in You! And I felt so amazed that I didn't know how to continue on speaking. And my beloved Jesus, repeating His short little visit, with unspeakable love told me: “My daughter, born and reborn in Our Will; you must know that the living in Our Will contains such prodigies and unheard-of marvels that the very Heavens are shaken and, reverently, lower themselves in hearing them. In fact, in this creature We can carry out Our creative work, We can deposit Our Love, Our delirium, Our longing and sighs - Our Will. She will make others comprehend Our Supreme Majesty, she will make Us loved with Our own Love. Without this creature We would find Ourselves as a teacher who possesses all the sciences; he could give his lessons in all universities and all schools. But, no, he can't even find one pupil to whom to teach his sciences. What sorrow for this teacher, possessing so many sciences and having to keep them unused within himself, without being able to make known the value of the sciences he possesses. Oh! if this teacher could only find even just one pupil who wanted to learn his sciences, he would place him on his knees, and keep him with himself night and day. He would feel that his science will not die, but will live in his pupil, almost so as to duplicate his own life. Oh, how much he would love him! He would feel reborn in his pupil, his loneliness being broken; he would feel loved by the one to whom he imparts his lessons, therefore his life would change from bitterness into joys.

Such is Our Supreme Being. If We don't find someone who lives in Our Divine Will, We are like that teacher - We have nobody to whom to impart Our lessons. We possess infinite sciences, and yet We have no one to whom to say a word, because the light of Our Will is missing, which would make him comprehend what We want to teach him. On the other hand, if the creature lives in Our Will, We feel Our life being repeated in her, We can teach her Our divine sciences; even more, they will turn into lives in her. She will understand perfectly Our celestial dialect, she will love Us as We want her to love Us. And here is Our lot and hers being changed: loneliness will no longer exist; company will be perennial; We will always have something to say, and someone who listens to Us. Our eternal sorrow will turn into joys and feasts, because We will have the creature living in Our Will.

Or, when We do not find anyone who lives in Our Will, it happens to Us as to someone who possesses immense riches - but so many as to feel as though suffocated by them. And yet, he finds no one to whom to give, nor anyone who takes his goods. Poor him - he is so unhappy among his riches, and suffers a cruel loneliness. There's nobody who would love him, who would respect him, or say to him even just a 'thank you'. On the contrary, it seems that all shun him, because he finds no one to whom to give his riches, nor anyone who would take them. Without company joy dies, and because he is unable to give them to anyone, he feels that his goods - his life - do not live inside others. Isolation is the greatest of bitternesses. Oh, how many times We want to give but We have no one to whom to give. Even more, by not living in Our Will, the creature closes the doors on Us, she impedes Our entrance; or rather, she puts herself at a distance from Us, surrounding herself with miseries, with weaknesses, with passions - the ugliest ones.

This is why the living in Our Will arouses amazement in everyone; and We Ourselves remain amazed, having to enclose the Infinite in the finite - Immensity within the littleness. We have to make such wonders and prodigies, that only Our Love, ruling over Our Divine Being, can move Us to make the most astounding marvels, but such that even the Angels and the Saints remain astonished and mute, in awe."

As the creature decides to live in the Divine Will, all things change for her, and she is placed in the same divine conditions. The function of the children of the Divine Fiat, and how they will carry within them the Life of their Celestial Father. The last sign of Love at the moment of death.

I continue my flight in the Divine Volition. Upon entering It, one can feel Its balsamic air and Its pacifying waves. Everything is peace. Its strength is such that the soul feels invested by such fortitude, that in one instant she can do anything, reach anywhere, even unto doing what God Himself does. Divine Will, how capable You are of changing the human will! Your power is such that You renew the poor creature, making her be reborn to new Life.

Then, my lovable Jesus, coming back for His short little visit, all tenderness told me: "My little daughter of my Will, as the creature decides to live in my Volition, all things change for her. Our divine dominion invests her, and We make her dominator of everything - dominator of Our strength, of Our Goodness, of Our Sanctity; dominator of the light. Heaven and earth are hers by right. We place her in an atmosphere of security and of imperturbable peace. Nothing of what is good, holy, beautiful and divinely joyful, must be lacking to this creature who lives in Our Will. All of her littlest acts are filled with such contentments as to captivate the smile of all Heaven and of Our very Supreme Being. Therefore We are all attentive to see when she loves and operates, so as to enjoy her and smile together. Our Love is such that We place her in Our same conditions: even if We are not loved, We love; even if We are ignored, and maybe even offended, We continue to give life; and if the creature comes back to Us asking for forgiveness, We don't reproach her at all; rather, We embrace her and clasp her to Our divine bosom. So, it can be said that man can only trust Us; as for creatures, not only can he not trust them, but he will find in them mutability, deception; and the moment he thinks he can lean on them, they will quit.

Now, man can only trust the creature who lives in Our Will. This creature will act as We do: unloved, she will love; ignored and offended, she will run after the offender to place him in safety. We feel Ourselves within the one who lives in Our Will, and therefore We love her so much that We do nothing other than pour rivers of love upon her, to be loved more and more, with doubled and increasing love.”

After this, He added with more tender and touching love: “My daughter, the whole Creation was made in one outpouring of Our most intense Love. Therefore, the children of Our Fiat will serve the necessity of Our Love. My Love feels the need to pour Itself out, otherwise We feel suffocated inside Our own flames. Here is the necessity of the children of Our Will: as a continuous outpouring of Our Love, We will put them in Our same condition of feeling the need to pour out their love with Us; and We will pour out love into each other. Just as Creation started in an outpouring of Love of Ours, in the same way, We will fulfill It together with Our children - in an outpouring of Love. These children of Ours will serve to the complete glory of all Creation. It would not be a work worthy of Us, if We did not receive the glory that the creatures owe Us for Our having created so many things for love of them. And besides, there is the highest, the most noble, holy and sublime point: that We created everything so that all might be enclosed and animated by Our Will. Hence, just as We issued the Creation, so must It return to Us - into Our adorable Fiat. If We didn’t do so, it would seem as if We had not enough Power to do it all, or not enough Love to be able to conquer all, or Wisdom, to dispose of everything. Therefore, the children of Our Fiat will serve to make Us fulfill Our Will in them, and this is why they will be Our glory, Our triumph, Our victory. They will be Our true children, who will not only carry Our Image, but the Life of the Celestial Father Himself, as their own Life dwelling in them. These children of Ours will be Our Life, Our heavens, Our suns. Oh! how We will delight in creating in them winds that blow love, and seas that murmur ‘I love You, I love You’. We will find everything in them; there will be no more difference between Heaven and earth; they will form one single thing for Us - whether We keep them with Us in Heaven, or with Us on earth.

Therefore, take to heart the thing that should concern you the most: to live in Our Divine Will. Our Love will find Its rest, Its outpouring, Its peace in you, as well as the beginning of Our happiness on earth in the heart of the creature. Our Will will hover over you constantly, to make Our Life grow in you; and Our Love will send you Its continuous breath, to love you with ever new love, and to receive yours as the expression and requital of Its Love.”

After this, my beloved Jesus added, but with such unspeakable tenderness that I felt my heart crack: “My good daughter, if everyone knew what I am telling you - what my Will does with the creature, how It lives with her - they would all throw themselves into Its arms, never to detach again. You must know that my Will acts as a true Mama for the creature: It creates her with Its creative hands and conceives her inside the maternal womb, nor does It ever leave her alone - not even for one instant. In this maternal womb, as though inside a sacrarium, It forms her, It gives her the use of her limbs, It rears her with Its breath, It gives her warmth; and when It has formed her well, It makes her be born to daylight. But It never leaves her alone; more than Mother, It remains always over her - watching over her, assisting her, giving her motion, the articulation of her members, the breathing, the heartbeat; and as she grows, It gives her the use of the word, and step to her feet. There is nothing that the creature does which my Will does not do together with her, to give her the use of the human life. So, the beginning of the human life - both of the soul and of the body - is formed entirely by my Will, which remains in it as though inside Its refuge, to give it perennial life.

Now, my daughter, until guilt begins in the creature everything is my Will; but as guilt begins, so do the tears and pains of this Celestial Mother. Oh! how It cries over Its child. But It does not leave him; Its Love binds It to live in that creature in order to give her life, and although It feels Its Divine Life being as though suffocated, and maybe not even known or loved, the Love of my Will is so great that It follows her life, regardless of any offense, to make a surprise of love and save Its child. Our Goodness and Our Love are such that We try all ways, We use all means to snatch her from sin, to place her in safety; and if We don’t succeed during her life, We make the last surprise of love at the moment of her death. Now, you must know that, in that moment, We give the last sign of love to the creature, and We endow her with graces, with light, with goodness; We place such tendernesses of love as to soften and conquer the hardest hearts. And when the creature finds herself between life and death - between time that is about to end, and Eternity that is about to begin - almost in the act of her leaving the body, I, your Jesus, make Myself seen, with a loveliness that enraptures, with a sweetness that chains and sweetens the bitternesses of life, especially in that extreme moment. Then, my gaze: I look at her, but with so much love as to snatch from her an act of contrition, one act of love, one adhesion to my Will.

Now in that moment of the stripping of illusion, in seeing and in touching with their own hands how much We have loved them and do love them, the creatures feel such sorrow that they repent for not having loved Us; they recognize Our Will as the origin and completion of their lives, and, as satisfaction, they accept death, to fulfill one act of Our Will. In fact, you must know that if the creature did not do even one act of the Will of God, the doors of Heaven would not be opened; she would not be recognized as heiress of the Celestial Fatherland; the Angels and the Saints cannot admit her into their midst, nor would she want to enter, because she would recognize that it does not belong to her. Hence, without Our Will there is no true Sanctity and no salvation. How many are saved by virtue of this sign of Ours, all love, with the exception of the most perverted and obstinate, although it would be necessary for them to go through the long path of Purgatory. The moment of death is Our daily catch - the finding of the lost man.”

Then, He added: “My daughter, the moment of death is the hour of the loss of illusion. In that point all things present themselves, one after the other, to say to the creature: ‘Good-bye, the earth is ended for you; now begins eternity for you.’ It happens to the creature as when she is locked inside a room and someone says to her: ‘Behind this room there is another room, in which there is God, Paradise, Purgatory, Hell; in sum - Eternity. But she can see none of these. She hears them being asserted by others, but since those who speak about them cannot see them either, they speak in a way that is almost not credible, not giving great importance to making their words believed as reality - as something certain. Now, one day the walls fall down, and she can see with her own eyes what they had told her before. She sees her God and Father, Who has loved her with great love. One by one, she sees the benefits that He has done to her, and how she has broken all the rights of love that she owed Him. She sees how her life belonged to God, not to herself. Everything passes before her: Eternity, Paradise, Purgatory, Hell. The earth runs away from her; pleasures turn their back on her - everything disappears; the only thing that remains present to her is in that room whose walls have fallen down - that is, Eternity. What a change for the poor creature!

My Goodness is such, wanting everyone to be saved, that I allow the falling of these walls when the creatures find themselves between life and death - at the moment in which the soul exits the body to enter eternity - so that they may make at least one act of contrition and of love for Me, recognizing my adorable Will over them. I can say that I give them one hour of truth, in order to rescue them. Oh! if all knew my industries of love, which I perform in the last moment of their lives, so that they might not escape from my hands, more than paternal - they would not wait for that moment, but they would love Me all their lives.”

How for those who live in the Divine Will the Creation serves as many cities where the creature can repatriate. How the human act must begin and end in the Divine Volition in order to be complete. Rain of Light. The greatest sorrow of Jesus is to see that creatures do not live in His Will.

My poor mind keeps going in search of the acts done by the Divine Volition. It seems that I look for them and they await me, to let themselves be found, because these acts yearn to be found by the creature, to receive her 'I love You', and to let her know how much they love her; while the soul feels as though repatriated in the acts of her Creator, as though immersed in the ocean of joys and happiness. And my always lovable Jesus, seeing me surprised, repeating His short little visit, told me: "My blessed daughter, since man was made by Us to live in Our Will, all Our acts were to serve as many different cities or nations in which man would find, by right, his Fatherland - the different cities where he was to find his amusements, his joys, and the enchanting and delightful scenes that his Creator had prepared for him with so much love. So, it can be said that the sun is a city, and as the soul enters into Our Will, she finds this city of light, with all its varied beauties of colors and of sweetnesses. She finds Our creative and festive act, full of joys, of love and of unspeakable happiness, and she dives into these seas of beauty, of sweetness, of love and joys, taking her long strolls, as in her own Fatherland, rendering herself the owner of the goods that she finds in It.

Oh! how happy We are, in seeing Our works - Our cities - created only for man, no longer deserted, but populated by Our children. In fact, upon entering Our Will they find the way that leads them to the different cities which We have formed in Creation; and in some they find a delight, in another a distinct joy, somewhere else a more outstanding knowledge of their Creator, and some place else a Love so intense that embraces them, kisses them, and communicates to them the Life of Love. Each created thing possesses something of Ourselves; not for itself, but to give it to the creatures. However, the creatures must live in Our Will, otherwise the doors remain closed; at the most they can enjoy the effects, but not the fullness of the goods contained in Our works. Therefore, my daughter, in order to be perfect and complete, the act of the creature must begin and end in Our Will, which administers Its very Life of Light and of Love, so that the act may be complete, and nothing beautiful, holy and good may be lacking to it. If it does not begin in Our Will, it will lack order, sanctity and beauty, therefore the human act cannot be marked with the seal of Our Will, as an act that belongs to It.

It makes one want to cry, my daughter, to see so many deranged and disordered human acts - some left at the beginning, some half way, some lacking one point, some missing another; and then, even worse, some are smeared with mud, some with rot; some are as though soaked in guilt, and do nothing but irritate Our just Justice¹³⁹. Therefore, without Our Will there cannot be any good in the creature, and even if it seems that they do some good, it is an apparent good, which cannot last, because the substance of the Life of Our Fiat is missing: one challenge, one disappointment that arises is sufficient for that good to end, and they regret having done it. Instead, anything done in my Will possesses an unshakable firmness, and does not stop in the face of disappointments or challenges; rather, these acts run even more, to give the life of the good which they possess.

Now, you must know that the creature who does her acts in Our Will makes complete and perfect acts; but the one who lives always in It finds herself under a continuous rain of Light, such that, as she moves, palpitates or breathes, so do all the effects of the varied beauties of Our Divine Life pour upon her. Our Divine Being is most pure Light, and though being endless Light, It encloses all possible and imaginable goods. While being Light, It is Word and, all eyes, It looks everywhere - there is nothing that can hide from Us. This Light is work, It is step, It is Life which gives life to everything and to everyone. It encloses inexhaustible beauties, joys and happiness without end. Now, one who lives always in Our Divine Will is always under the rain of Light of Our Word, ruling and creative; and - oh! how Our Word transforms this creature, speaking to her constantly about Our Supreme Being, and producing all Our divine effects over her, with such variety of beauty that We Ourselves remain enraptured. Our gaze of Light is always upon her; Our step keeps running toward her; Our works embrace her with their arms of Light, and clasp her to their bosom. All of them pour Light upon her, to communicate to her Our gaze of Light, Our works and steps of Light. So, one who always lives in Our Will is always in direct communication with her Creator, and receives all the effects that a God can produce. On the other hand, one who only operates in It is in communication with Our works, and her works are molded with Ours.”

Then, I continued to keep track of the acts of the Divine Will, and as I arrived at those which Our Lord did in Redemption, I kissed them, I adored them, I blessed them, I thanked them, one by one; and taking the same love with which Jesus loved them, I loved them too. And Jesus, all moved and touched in seeing His acts being loved by His same Love, told me: “My daughter, it is always Love that touches Me and wounds Me; and It moves Me to speak in order to reveal my secrets to my beloved creature; secrets which are hidden to those who do not love Me because, not loving Me, they would not understand my dialect of love. Now, you must know that each one of these acts done by Me on earth contains a sorrow so intense, that if my Divinity had not sustained Me, it would have been enough to make Me die. So, as I operated, my Divine Will created in Me the sorrow of not finding the human will inside Mine, so that I might enclose it in my acts and give it virtue and grace to make it live in my Will. In everything I did, even if I just breathed, palpitated, looked or walked, I looked for the human will in order to enclose it and give it the primary place in my breath, heartbeat, gaze and steps.

What sorrow, my daughter, wanting to do good and not finding anyone to whom to give it! I wanted to put the creature in a safe place, where she would have been happy, because my pains, my works and my very Humanity would not only have been her defense, but would also have formed her royal palace in which they would have kept her like a queen. But instead of being grateful and listening to Me, she ran away from my hands, from my pains, to live unhappy in the midst of dangers and enemies, with no one to defend her. What sorrow! What sorrow! I can say that my greatest sorrow down here, which gave Me continuous death, was to see the creatures neither living in, nor doing my Will, because I saw that my acts remained without the purpose for which I was doing them - without giving the life with which they were invested. Had it not been for my All-seeingness, by which I could see all centuries like one present act, in which I saw my beloved children who would live in my Divine Will, and would make use of what my Humanity did and suffered in order to establish my Kingdom, using It as the most beautiful dwelling for them - I would not have been able to bear so great a sorrow. Therefore, continue to keep track of my acts, my steps, my pains, to ask Me for my Will to come and reign upon earth, and my sorrow will be soothed and will turn into love, so as to shorten the time needed to make my Will known and loved, so that It may reign. I will keep you as my refreshment, and as bearer of balm for my pains; and when I see my acts and my sufferings embittered by sorrow because the creatures are running away from my Will, I will come to take refuge in you, to soothe and embalm my pains, too embittered by the sorrow.”

When sacrifices are made willingly, dear Jesus places in them His divine flavors, rendering them pleasant and lovable. How God created in the creatures the passion for loving.

I feel I am in the arms of the Divine Fiat. Its Love is so great that It feeds me with Its Light, It warms me with Its Heat; and if I am tired It rocks me on Its knees to give me rest, making me rise again to new Life. Divine Will, how lovable You are! You alone know how to truly love me; and in You I find the refuge from all my evils.

But I was feeling oppressed in seeing that those who surround me suffer and make great sacrifices because of me. How painful it is to see others sacrificed. And my sweet Jesus, clasping me in His arms in act of compassionating me, all tenderness told me: “Poor daughter of Mine, courage, I don’t want you to think about this. You must know that I can and know how to repay well even the small sacrifices and attentions – how much more so for the big ones. I count everything, and I do not leave without recompense even a breath done for Me. More so, if these sacrifices are made for one who loves Me, for one who wants to live in my Will; then I feel as if they were done for Myself; and in order for these sacrifices to be made willingly, I place in them my divine flavor, so that creatures may feel the taste and the pleasure in making these sacrifices, in such a way as to feel the need for making them. Taste and pleasure in sacrifice are like salt and spices for the food, like grease for the wheels, which could barely move, but once the grease is applied, they spin. The divine taste empties the sacrifice, making it light and pleasant.

This is the reason why, in Our Love, We created a holy passion, a taste, a pleasure, such as to make it impossible for Us not to love the creature. It was this passion of Love that made Us feel the extreme need to prove Our love toward creatures by means of Our works. In fact, nobody pleaded with Us to create a sky, a sun, and many other things; so much so, that after We created them, We looked at them and found so much taste and pleasure, that in Our emphasis of love We exclaimed: ‘How beautiful are Our works! But they will give Us more glory, We will receive greater delight, when Our works will give themselves to creatures in order to love them and make Us loved by them.’ Then, to Our passion of Love - to the extreme need to love – was added the folly, the delirium of love, to the point that We were not content with works alone, but Our Love reached such an excess that We felt the need to give even Our Life. In fact, what did this necessity to love that I felt within Me not make Me do? It made Me suffer unheard-of pains, undergo the most humiliating humiliations - and even death, among atrocious spasms.

Now, this same passion for loving of Ours is not content if it does not share Our same passion of love with the creature. Therefore, in the sacrifices that We have her make, We create in her the holy passion, endowing it with flavor and pleasures, so that she can make the most beautiful conquests. This passion becomes ingenious, it comes up with a thousand new ways, and it seems it cannot endure or live without being operative. If there is no passion, even in holy works, and taste for sacrifice, it seems that these works are just painted - not alive; they have a coldness, an apathy, which produces more disgust than gusto, and maybe more evil than good. Therefore, my daughter, don’t be concerned for the sacrifices that others make for you. Indeed, I must tell you that they do it for Me, not for you; and I will infuse so much grace, taste and pleasure as to empty the sacrifice. Then, according to the love with which they will do it, I will pour Myself into them, and as they make that sacrifice wanted by Me, so will I make my Life grow in them. Is it not perhaps my passion of love that makes Me speak so much about my Will in order to create in man the passion for living in my Volition? By speaking so much, I want to drown the human will with Our divine flavors - to the point of making it decide to live in my Will, by virtue of the taste and happiness it feels. And besides, you yourself can say it: how many flavors, contentments and joys have I not placed in the sacrificing state in which I put you? Therefore, let it be done by your Jesus, Who knows how to calibrate the sacrifice and make it lovable, easy and even desirable; more so, since to the sacrifice of the creature I add the strength, the support and the life of my own Sacrifice. I can say that my Sacrifice takes the sacrifice of the creature on its lap, becoming guide, life and light for whomever wants to sacrifice himself – willingly - for Me.”

How God created the necessity for the Divine Will in the creature, and how she could not live without It. Example: how He created the necessity of water and sun for the earth. How one who does not live in the Divine Will wants to confine God into Heaven. Each additional word on the Divine Will gives a new and distinct Life.

My poor mind feels the extreme need to trace the acts of the Divine Volition, as the breath and heartbeat of my poor existence; and if I did not do so, I would feel as if I were lacking the air to breathe, or the heart to palpitate. My God, how can anyone live without the air and the Life of your Will? It seems impossible to me. And my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness told me: “My good daughter of my Will, my Love was so great in the creation of man that I gave him my Will as his primary Life, and of absolute necessity, so much so that without It he could produce nothing good. The earth cannot produce anything without water; indeed, water can be called the soul of the earth. But without the sun which fecundates, purifies and embellishes the earth with its light and heat, the water would serve only to make the earth moldy, rendering it like a muddy sewer, which would release a contagious air capable of infecting the earth. But these three elements - water, earth and sun - are not enough. The seed is needed in order to produce, from the earth, the most beautiful blooms, plants and fruits which gladden the farmer and form the food for all the human generations. See, if only one of these elements were missing, the earth would be so sterile, gloomy and dark as to be frightening. Here is the necessity of the union of these elements which forms the beauty, the utility, the goodness and the fecundity of Our Creative Work: separated, they can be harmful and noxious to the poor creatures; but united, they can do a world of good.

In the same way, I created the strict necessity of my Will in the creature. I created the soul, like water for the earth, which was to flow - more than water - in the earth of her body. I created my Will in her, like sun, light and heat, which was to vivify, fecundate and embellish her, but with such rare beauty as to captivate Us continuously to loving her. And just as the farmer takes the care of casting the seed into the earth to make it produce, so did my Will take on the commitment of casting many divine seeds into the creature, which would let many suns rise, one more beautiful than the other, which would produce blooms and celestial fruits that would serve as food for Our Will Itself, for the creatures, and for their very Creator - because Our food, Our Life, is Our Will.

See then, the necessity of the union of acts which, like seeds, my Will forms in the creature: this union forms the growth of my Will in her; it communicates the virtue of Our divine qualities, producing such prodigies of grace and of beauty, that We love her so much as to become not only inseparable from her, but constantly operative in her, because We know that if We love, she loves, if We operate, she operates - nor can she do anything without Us. In fact, if her union with Us were missing, she would be reduced to uselessness, like the earth with no water, no sun and no seeds. This is why, loving her very much, We do everything in her. See then, in what painful, harmful and almost horrible condition the creature puts herself without Our Will.”

Then He added, with a more sorrowful and touching tone: “My daughter, how painful it is for Us not to see the creature living in Our Will! By not living in It, she wants to confine Us into Our Celestial Fatherland. She does not want Us to live on earth together with her. Our Will is a weight for her; she runs away from Our Sanctity, shuts the door to the Light, and looks for darkness. Poor one, by doing her will, she will die of cold and hunger, and will say: ‘Heaven does not belong to me.’ These creatures live in exile on earth, with no support, no defense and no strength; good itself turns into bitterness for them and, eventually, even into defects; therefore they form Our sorrow and suffocate Our Love continuously.

The Love of Our Will is such that each word or knowledge It manifests about It is a Divine Life of my Will; and not only that, but a new Life, each one distinct from the other - new in Sanctity, in Beauty, in Love. This is why We so greatly delight and make feast in making known what Our Will is, what It can do and knows how to do in the circle of the creature, and at what noble, sublime and high point It wants to place her inside Our Divine Bosom. In fact, by making It known, We do nothing other than unleash new Divine Lives, and as these Lives let themselves be possessed by the creature, so do We receive from her Our new Love, Our new Beauty, Goodness, and so on. Oh! how glorified and loved We feel - by means of Our own Lives - by the one to whom We have revealed Ourselves. Therefore, making Ourselves known, finding one who wants to know Us, is the act that glorifies Us the most; Our Love finds one for whom It can pour Itself out, and give whatever We want. After all, why make the creature, had We not wanted to make Ourselves known? It is the knowledge that makes Us descend into her, and gives her the wings to ascend unto Us. Hence, when We see you yearning to know more about Our Will, immediately I give you the most beautiful surprises of Our Omnipotent Fiat - not just to let you know, but to give you the good that We reveal to you.”

After this, He added, all moved: “My daughter, one who lives in my Will is the creature longed-for by all, because all feel loved by her. Her love runs to all, embraces all, places itself inside the hearts of all, to make Us loved by all. Even the tiniest ‘I love You, I adore You, I bless You’ of the creature who lives in Our Holy Will has the right to enclose itself in all. Even more, the very Saints and Angels feel honored to give a place within themselves to the littlest ‘I love You’ of this fortunate creature - and they love Us with this ‘I love You.’ What will her contentment not be when she comes to the Celestial Fatherland and will see her ‘I love You’ in all the Blessed, loving her God? And this, in the simplest way: since Our Will is present everywhere, whatever is done in It takes its place everywhere and acquires the continuous act of loving always. Therefore, even the sun, the heavens, the stars - the entire Creation - will possess these acts in order to love Us and bless Us.”

How Jesus wants to find everything in the creature who lives in the Divine Will, and wants to find her in everyone. How God wants to find in our love the shelf for His works and the hiding place of His Life.

My poor mind is constantly going back to the Divine Volition; and having received Holy Communion, I was saying to my lovable Jesus: ‘In your Will everything is mine; therefore I love You with the love of my Queen Mama and Yours; I kiss You with Her lips, I hug You very tight with Her arms; and carrying You with me, I take refuge inside Her Heart, to give You Her joys, Her delights, Her Maternity, so that You may find the sweetness and protection that only your Mama can give You.’ But while I was enclosing myself together with Jesus inside my Mama, all tenderness, sweet Jesus told me: “My daughter, and daughter of my Mother, how happy I am to find the daughter with my Mother, and my Mama with her daughter. In fact, She wants the creatures to love Me with Her own Love and to use Her lips to kiss Me and Her arms to embrace Me; She wants to give them Her Maternity in order to keep Me safe, and let them all act as my Mama. To find the Mother and the daughter loving Me with one single Love is the greatest contentment for Me - I feel that they both give Me a new paradise on earth.

But this is not enough for Me. In one who lives in my Will I want to find everything. If anything is missing I cannot say that my Will is complete in the creature. And not only do I want to find in her my Mother at Her place of honor as Queen and Mother, but I want to find my Celestial Father and the Holy Spirit, in such a way that, making Their Love her own, she may love Me with the immensity and the infinity of Their Love. Therefore my daughter, delight Me by telling Me that you love Me together with the Father and the Holy Spirit.”

Jesus remained silent, waiting for me to tell Him what He wanted; and I, though unworthy, to make Him content said to Him: ‘I love You in the immense Power and Love of the Father, and with the endless Love of the Holy Spirit. I love You with the love with which all love You - Angels and Saints. I love You with that love with which all creatures, past, present and future, love You, or should love You. I love You for all created things, and with the same Love with which You created them.’ Dear Jesus heaved a long sigh, and then He added: “Finally, I feel satisfied in my yearnings to find everything in the creature. I find Our seas of Love that never end, I find the delights of my Mama loving Me - I find everything and everyone. Therefore, in one who lives in my Will I must find everything and everyone, and I must find this creature in everyone. After all, my Celestial Father generated Me in Love, and so I feel the one who loves Me, and lets nothing escape her of Our Love, together with Me and in act of giving Me and receiving continuous Love.”

After this, He added: “My daughter, this is why, in Our Love, We feel an extreme need for creatures to know Us and Our works. If they do not know Us, We remain as though apart from them, while We live inside and outside of them; and while We are aware of anything they do and think - loving them in each of their acts - not only do they not love Us, but they don't even recognize Us. What sorrow! If they do not recognize Us, love cannot arise; and if love is missing, We don't have a place for Our works, nor can Our Love find a refuge in which to pour Itself out and take shelter. Everything remains suspended. Therefore, We want to find in Our works the 'I love You' of the creature, so that, arming it with Our Power, We can lean on it Our greatest works. Oh! how happy We are in finding her little 'I love You' as the shelf for Our works. To operate without finding a place for Our works is a sorrow for Us - it seems as though the Life of Our Love is missing; Our operative Love is repressed and suffocated. We are able to operate, but cannot, and only because the creature, ungrateful, does not recognize Us, nor does she love Us. And since all Our works are directed to the benefit of creatures, as We are unable to give them because knowledge and love are missing, and therefore the space in which to put Our works, creatures tie Our hands and confine Us to uselessness. After all, why should We operate if We cannot find anyone willing to receive Our works?

Furthermore, you must know that before operating, first We look for someone who must know Our work, receive it and love it - and then We operate. My very Humanity did not an act before finding one who would love and receive that act; and even if I didn't find anyone who would receive it at that time, I looked through the centuries and directed my act to those who would love it, know it and receive it. Even when I cried as a little newborn Baby, those tears of Mine were directed to those who were going to repent, be sorry for their sins, and be cleansed in order to re-acquire the Life of Grace. As I walked, my steps were already directed to those who would walk along the path of good, to be their strength and guide along their journey. There was not a work I did, or word that I spoke, or pain that I suffered, in which I did not look for the works of the creatures as the shelf for my works; my word looked for their words on which to lean; my pains searched for a shelf in their pains in order to give the good contained in what I did. It was my passion of Love that made Me do nothing other than what could be useful for my children; and this is one of the most powerful reasons for which I want creatures to live in my Will - because only then all my works, the Creation, the Redemption, and even a single sigh of Mine, will find a place on which to lean, to become works of their works, pains of their pains, steps of their steps, life of their life. Then will everything I did and suffered turn into glory and victory, such as to cast away all enemies and call back the order, harmony, peace, and the celestial smile of the Heavenly Fatherland into the midst of the creatures."

I remained surprised in hearing this, and my beloved Jesus added: "My blessed daughter, the living in my Will will enclose such surprises and so many divine novelties as to astonish even the Angels and the Saints; more so, since in my Will there are no words, but facts. The words, desires and intentions themselves are converted by my Will into facts and fulfilled works. Outside of my Will, whatever the creature wants is reduced to words, desires and intentions; but inside my Will, which possesses the Creative virtue, all that the creature wants becomes accomplished deeds and works full of life. More so, since by living in Our Will the creature is already aware of what We do, and senses what We want; therefore she follows Us in the works, she wants what We want - nor can she do without it, or put herself aside. Our Fiat becomes for her the greatest of her necessities, which she can't do without. It is more than breath for her, which she must give and receive; more than motion, as she feels the extreme need to move. In sum, my Will is everything for her. It is impossible for her to live without It. Therefore, be attentive, and let your flight be always in Our Fiat."

May everything be for the Glory of God and for the fulfillment of the Divine Will.

Deo Gratias.

VOLUME 36

In Voluntate Dei!

April 12, 1938

One who lives in the Divine Will pronounces his Fiat in every act he does and forms many divine lives. The difference between living in the Divine Will and being resigned to it.

I am always in the arms of the Divine Fiat - and oh!, how I feel the need of its life, that breathes, palpitates and circulates in my poor soul. Without It, I feel that everything dies for me: the light, the sanctity, the strength, even the very Heaven dies, as if it wouldn't belong to me anymore. But as soon as I feel Its life, everything rises again in me. The light rises which, with its beauty gives life, purity and sanctity; my Jesus Himself rises with all His works; Heaven rises, which the Holy Will encloses in my soul as in a chapel to make it all my own. If I live in His Will everything is mine and nothing can miss.

O Holy Will, as I start this 36th volume, I pray you, I beg you, I implore you not to leave me - not even one instant - so that you speak, you write. You will make Yourself known, and make known how you want to be the Life of all in order to give your goods to all. If you let me do it, I won't be able to make you known as You want, because I'm incapable, but if You do it, You will triumph, You will be known and You will have Your Kingdom in the whole world. Oh, Holy Will, with your power You eclipse all the evils of the creatures, you put Your Almighty End, so that they leave the way of sin and find themselves in the way of Your Divine Will.

To You, Queen Mother of the Divine Fiat, I consecrate this volume in a special way, so that Your love, Your Maternity may be spread throughout these pages, to call Your children to live together with you in that same Will whose kingdom you possessed. As I start, kneeling at Your feet, I implore Your Maternal blessing.

So, while my mind was immersed in the Divine Fiat, my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, with inexpressible goodness told me: "My blessed daughter of my Will, how many wonders my Will can make in the creature, as long as she gives It the first place and all the freedom to operate. My Will takes the will, the word, the act that the creature wants to do, as part of Itself - covers it with Its creative virtue, pronounces Its Fiat in it, and forms as many lives for as many existing creatures. You were asking in my Will for the baptism of all newborn babies that will come to the light of the day - and then, for Its life to reign in them. My Will did not hesitate for one instant; soon it pronounced Its Fiat and formed as many lives from Itself for as many newborn babies coming to the light - baptizing them, as you wanted, with Its first light, and then giving each one of them Its life. If these newborn babies, for lack of knowledge, will not possess our life, this life still remains for Us, and We will have many divine lives which love Us, glorify Us, bless Us, as We do Ourselves. These Divine Lives are our greatest glory, but they don't put aside the creature who gave our Fiat the opportunity to form so many of our lives for these newborn babies who are coming to the light; rather, they keep her hidden in themselves to let her love as they love, and let her do what they do. Neither would they set the newborn babies aside; rather, they would give them so much attention, guard and defend them as to be able to reign in their soul.

My daughter, who can tell you how much we love this creature who lives in our Will? We love her so much that we leave our Will in her power to let her do what she wants. If she wants to form our lives, we let her do that; if she wants to fill Heaven and earth with our love, we give her the freedom to do it - so much so, that she can make everyone say that they love us. We even hear the 'I love You' of one who lives in our Will in the little bird that trills and warbles and sings. If in the ardor of her love she wants to love more, she can enter our creative act and delight herself with new Suns, Heavens and stars, making us say, unceasingly, 'I love you, I love you', and taking part in narrating our glory. In our Will the sight is long and all attentive to see what she wants and how she can love us more."

My God, how many wonders, how many surprises there are in your Will. Its sweet enchantment is so great that not only does one remain captivated, but as if embalmed - transformed in the wonders of the Fiat in such a way that one doesn't know how to get out of it. So, I was thinking to myself: what is the difference between one who lives in the Divine Will, one who is resigned to the painful circumstances of life and one who doesn't do the Divine Will at all?

My sweet Jesus, coming back added: "My blessed daughter, the difference is so big that there is no comparison at all. One who lives in my Will has dominion over all and we love her so much that we even let her dominate ourselves. We are so pleased in seeing the little creature dominating us that we feel unusual joy, because we see that our Will dominates in the creature and she dominates together with our Will. Oh!, how many times we let her win. Many times our joy is so great that we let our Will win in the creature instead of in ourselves. Further, by living in the Divine Will - being in continuous contact with It - she acquires divine senses. She acquires a long sight. Her light is so penetrating and clear, that she can even fix herself in God, in whom she sees the divine Mysteries. She can touch our sanctity and beauty, loving them and possessing them. With this eye of light she can find her Creator everywhere - there's nothing in which she can't find Him. With His Majesty and His love, He bundles the creature and makes her feel how much He loves her. In feeling her love, He loves her and, oh!, how unspeakable the joys on both parts - feeling His love and loving Him in everything. She acquires divine hearing, and soon she hears what We want; she is always intent on listening to us, and there is no need to repeat again and again what We want. A small sign is enough and all is done.

She acquires a divine sense of smell. By merely smelling she feels whether that which is around her is good, holy and belongs to us. She acquires divine taste - to the extent that she fills herself with love and all that is Heaven. Finally, in our Will she acquires our touch, so that all is pure and holy, and there is no fear that even the smallest breath may shade her - all beautiful, lovely and pretty - the one who lives in my Fiat.

On the other hand, one who is only resigned does not live in continuous contact with us. It can be said that she does not know anything about our Supreme Being. Her sight is so weak and sickly, that it is painful for her even to look. She suffers from the last stage of myopia, and she can hardly see even the most necessary things. She can hardly hear, and how very much it takes to make her listen - if she listens at all. Her smell, taste and touch sense what is human. She feeds herself with earthly things - feels the touch of passions, and the sweetness of mundane pleasures. She doesn't even do my Will every day, but only in painful circumstances and encounters, when my Will offers her a suffering. Oh, poor creatures without my continuous Will. How weak they grow - so nervous and ill as to move to pity! How I pity them. Finally, one who is not even resigned - blind and with no sense of smell, loses the taste for every good. She is a poor paralytic who can't really help herself. She imprisons herself in a web of unhappiness and sins, and is not able to get out."

Fiat!

April 15, 1938

Those who live in the Divine Will move in the Fiat just by breathing. They can feel within themselves the whole Heavenly Court; Its breathing, Its motion and Its virtue of conquest and happiness. Painful conditions for the Divine Will when It is rejected.

My poor mind runs, flies in the Divine Will toward Its center, to rest - to leave its remains and to take, in exchange, the clothing of Its light, Its breathing, Its heartbeat, and Its motion, which moves in all and gives life to all. Now, while I was swimming in the ocean of joys of the Divine Fiat, my always adorable Jesus, doing His short little visit, with unspeakable love told me: "My little daughter of my Will, how beautiful it is to live in my Will. As the soul enters It, she breathes with our breathing, beats with our heartbeat, and moves in our motion. In communion with all, she does what the Angels, the Saints and all created things do, and makes everybody do what she is doing. The wonders contained in our Will are astonishing; the scenes are so touching and unique as to capture everybody, making all attentive in enjoying them. Who knows what they would do to enjoy, as spectators, such delightful scenes from this soul who lives in the Divine Will.

Now, you have to know that as the soul enters my Divine Will, she breathes, palpitates and moves in our motion; but she does not lose her own breath, heartbeat and motion, although it is never detached from ours. Since our Will is everywhere and circulates more than the breathing, heartbeat and motion of all, then, what happens? The Angels and the Saints, our very Divinity, and the whole creation, together with my Will, feel the breathing and the heartbeat of the creature within them. They all feel her moving inside, even to the center of their souls. They are full of happiness, of new unspeakable joys, which the pilgrim soul brings to each Blessed; since this soul is not enjoying - but suffering and conquering with her free will. It is merely by breathing, palpitating and moving, in the fullness of joy that the soul, always united to my Will, brings ever new joys from breathing in her own will. And since it is the free will that forms the conquering act of the creature, she gives me this new conquering flavor. Oh, how happy the Blessed, our own Divinity, and the whole Creation remain - and in an emphasis of love and fullness of joy they say: 'Who is breathing, palpitating and moving in us? Who, from the earth, is bringing the conquering act of pure joys - of new love, that we do not have in Heaven, and that makes us so happy - increasing in us our reciprocating love?' And all in chorus: 'It is a soul who lives in the Divine Will on earth.' What prodigies! what wonders! how enchanting the scenes! - a breathing that breathes in all, even in its Creator - that moves in all, even through Heaven, in the stars, in the Sun, in the air, in the wind, in the ocean. It takes everything in hand in its own motion, and gives to God love and adoration - all that everyone should give but has never given. She gives to all her God - His love, His Will; and she brings everything to God - and God to everybody.

Even if not all creatures would take us, we remain equally loved and glorified, because such is the fullness of one act, one motion in our Will, that all those creatures remain as many little drops of water before an immense ocean - like many little flames before the great light of the Sun. Therefore this motion, breathing and palpitating of the creature in our Will abounds in all - hugs Eternity. Suns and oceans are formed, so immense that they can give us everything; and even if others do not accept this life, they remain so small that it is as if they didn't exist.

Oh, my Will! How admirable, powerful and adorable you are. The creature in You can give us all and we can give all to her. She covers everything and everyone; she makes love arise with her light and gives us love for all. We can say she offers true reparation, because when the creatures offend us, we find that she can hide us in her love in order to love us, and inside her light to defend us - putting to flight, with her light, those who want to wound us. Therefore, always cherish in your heart living in our Will."

Then He added: "My daughter, the love for one who lives in our Will is so great that, as she breathes, she gives us, as a gift, all that we have done: the Creation, the Angels, the Saints, our own Supreme Being, our love and glory. So, taken by such excess of love, we give her back what she has given us. As she exhales, she returns to us all that we are; as she inhales, we return to her what she gave us. We are in continuous relation and exchange of gifts. By this, we continuously strengthen our love - our inseparability, and we feel so much delight that we give her all that she wants."

But while I was feeling drowned in the Divine Will, the thought of my poor state was troubling me - the fact that I had to succumb to a sort of death every night, for fifty years and more, until someone would come to get me out of that state. My God, I feel such pain, You know how much pain and how much it costs me. Only the fear of displeasing You and not doing your Will holds me on. Otherwise, who knows what I would do not to be submitted to this.

And my sweet Jesus ran toward me and clasping me tight in His arms told me: “My good daughter, be of good cheer. Don’t be too worried, I don’t want you worried. It is your Jesus who wants this painful state for you - this succumbing as if you were losing your life. I suffer it together with you, since true love cannot deny anything to the loved one. And then, this state of yours, so painful - as if losing your life, was necessary and wanted by my Divine Will. It wanted to find in you the return and reparation for the many deaths that creatures inflict upon It when they reject It, not giving It life within themselves. Submitting yourself for so long to these pains of death repaid my Divine Will for the many deaths given to It, and called It to kiss the human will - to make peace. It is thanks to this, I could speak so much about my Will.

You must know that anything the creature does in my Will runs to give and form life within It; otherwise, not receiving it, my Life dies for her. Do you think it’s nothing for me, this great pain of seeing so many of my divine lives dead for the creatures? Therefore it was necessary to find one who, in some way, would reignite my yearning to form my life in them. My Will is in the same condition as a poor mother, who is ready to deliver but is prevented from giving life, and this life suffocates in her own womb. Poor mother; she feels her baby dying in her womb and she dies of pain with him.

Such is my Will: It feels in Itself the birth of many divine lives already mature which It wants to give to the creatures; but as It is about to deliver them, It feels them suffocating in its womb. The new life dies and my Will with it, since there cannot be a true life of sanctity, love, or anything belonging to our Divine Life, without my Will. Therefore, my daughter, calm down and don’t think about it anymore. If We did this, We did it with the Highest Wisdom - with love that We could not contain, and for the sake of the order which We keep in our works. It is necessary to bend and adore what We dispose for love of the creatures.”

Fiat!

April 20, 1938

How Jesus on the cross still cries to every heart: “I thirst!”. How the true Resurrection consists in rising in the Divine Will. How nothing is denied to one who lives in It.

My flight in the Divine Will continues, and I feel the need to make all that It has done my own, placing there my little love, my affectionate kisses, my profound adorations, and my ‘thank you’ for everything It did and suffered, for me and for all. As I reached the point at which my dear Jesus was crucified and lifted on the cross amid atrocious agonies and unspeakable pains, with heartbreaking tenderness and compassion, He told me: “My good daughter, the pain that most pierced Me on the cross was my ardent thirst. I felt I was burning alive; all the vital humors had gone out through my wounds which, like many mouths, were burning and wanted to quench their ardent thirst; so much so, that unable to contain Myself, I cried out: ‘I thirst!’ This ‘I thirst’ remained and is always in the act of saying: ‘I thirst’. I never stop saying it; with my open wounds, with my parched lips, I am always repeating: ‘I am burning, I thirst! O please, give Me a little drop of your love to give a little refreshment to my ardent thirst.’

So, in everything the creature does, I keep repeating with my mouth opened and burned: ‘Let Me drink, I am burning of thirst.’ My dislocated and wounded Humanity had only one cry: ‘I thirst!’; therefore, as the creature walks, I cry out to her steps with my parched mouth: ‘Give Me your steps, done for love of Me, to quench my thirst.’ If she works, I ask for her works, done only for love of Me, as refreshment for my ardent thirst; if she speaks, I ask for her words; if she thinks, I ask for her thoughts - like many little drops of love to refresh my ardent thirst. It was not just my mouth that was burning, but all of my Most Holy Humanity felt the extreme need of a refreshing bath for the ardent fire of love that burned Me; and since it was for the creatures that I was burning in excruciating pains, only creatures, with their love, could quench my ardent thirst and give a refreshing bath to my Humanity.

Now, I left this cry - 'I thirst!' - inside my Will, and I made the commitment to make creatures hear it in every instant, to move them to compassion for my ardent thirst; to give them my bath of love and receive theirs, be it even just little drops, as refreshment for the thirst that devours Me. But who listens to Me? Who has compassion for Me? Only one who lives in my Will. All the others play deaf, and maybe increase my thirst with their ingratitude, making Me restless and with no hope of refreshment. And not only my 'I thirst', but all that I did and said in my Will, is always in the act of saying to my sorrowful Mother: 'Mother, behold your children'; and I place Her at their side as help and guide, to be loved by Her children. Every instant She feels She is being placed at the side of Her children by Her Son, and - oh! how She loves them as Mother, and gives them Her Maternity, to make Me loved as She loves Me. Not only this, but by giving Her Maternity, She places perfect love among the creatures, so that they may love one another with maternal love, which is sacrificing, unselfish and constant love. But who receives all this good? Only one who lives in Our Fiat feels the Maternity of the Queen. One can say that She places Her maternal Heart into Her children's mouths, that they may suckle and receive the Maternity of Her love, the sweetnesses, and all the qualities with which Her maternal Heart is enriched.

My daughter, one who wants to find Us, one who wants to receive all Our goods and my very Mother, must enter Our Will and remain in It. Our Will is not only Our life, but with Its immensity It forms Our residence around Us, in which It keeps all Our acts, words, and all that We are, always in act. Our things do not go out of Our Will; one who wants them must be content with carrying out her life together with It, and then everything is her own - nothing is denied to her. If We want to give Our things to her, but she does not live in Our Will, she will not appreciate them, nor love them; she will not feel the right to make them her own, and when things are not made one's own, love does not arise - it dies."

After this, I continued my round in all that Our Lord did on earth and I stopped in the act of Resurrection. What triumph, what glory. Heaven poured Itself upon earth to be spectator of such a great glory. My beloved Jesus said: "My daughter, in my Resurrection, the right was given to creatures to rise again in me to new life. It was the confirmation, the seal of my whole life, my works and my words. If I came on earth it was to give to each and every one my Resurrection, as their own - to give them life and make them rise again in my own Resurrection. But do you want to know where is the real resurrection of the creature? Not in the end of her days, but while she is still living on earth. One who lives in my Will rises again to light and says: 'my night is over.' She rises again in the love of her Creator, so that there is no more cold or snow for her, but the smile of the Heavenly Spring; she rises again to sanctity, which puts to rushed flight all weaknesses, miseries and passions; she rises again to all that is Heaven, and if she looks at the earth, Heaven and Sun, she does it to find the works of her Creator - to take the opportunity to narrate to Him His glory and His long love story.

Therefore, one who lives in my Will can say, as the Angel said to the holy women on the way to the sepulcher, 'He is risen. He is not here any more.' One who lives in my Will can also say, 'my will is not with me any longer - it is risen again in the Fiat.' And if the circumstances of life, opportunities and sufferings surround the creature, as if they were looking for her will, she can answer: 'my will is risen again, it is not in my power anymore. I possess, in exchange, the Divine Will, and I want to cover with Its light all things around me - circumstances and sufferings, to make them like many divine conquests.' The soul who lives in our Will finds life in the acts of her Jesus, and Our operating, conquering, triumphant Will always runs in her. She gives us so much glory that Heaven cannot contain it. Therefore, live always in our Will - never leave it, if you want to be our triumph and our glory."

Fiat!

April 26, 1938

The sign that the Divine Will reigns in the soul is the need to love It incessantly. The great evil of not doing good in the Divine Will. The little flame fed by the great light of God.

My poor mind runs, flies in the Divine Fiat, and if I don't do this I feel restless, with no strength, no food, no air to breath. I feel as if I had no feet to walk, no hands to work, no heart to love; so I need to run in the Will of the Divine Fiat to find Its acts - shaping with these acts, feet that run, hands that operate and enclose everything, a love beyond heart - fed by Eternal love - to love unceasingly. But while I was thinking all this nonsense, my always adorable Jesus, coming for His short little visit, pleased by my nonsense, all love said: "My blessed daughter, don't be surprised by your nonsense. This is what happens: one who lives in my Will leaves her own being and will by entering mine. She uses our works to form the new members needed to live within It. Therefore she acquires new steps, motion and love to be able to identify herself with our works and to let my Will reign and dominate in her soul. This is the continuous motion of love; and since she knows that this love and these works are unceasing, she multiplies them, giving them to me, to love me.

What does she do, then? She enters the endless fields of my Will, sees the great theater of Creation - the splendor and magnificence of the love that invades all creatures; she runs from work to work picking up all the love that we spread through our Creation, gathers it on her lap and comes before our Majesty to give us the many different varieties of love that we placed there. Then she plays her love song with the various notes of our creative love. Oh!, what a joy we receive from the feasts starting between Heaven and earth, and the oceans of love with which she surrounds our Throne! Then, after celebrating the feast of all Creation, to love us more and with double love, she goes from our Throne to all created things, spreading our doubled love on them, and by the power of our Will, which she possesses, she makes everybody say: 'love...love to our Creator.' The soul who lives in our Will is really like a continuous feast for us - the pouring out of our love."

Then He added with a note of sadness: "My daughter, how the creature sinks to the bottom, when she does not live in our Will. Even if she does good, lacking the light of our Will - the strength of our sanctity and its effects, this good remains covered by smoke, blinding and producing self esteem, pride, and love of self. It remains poisoned - unable to produce any real benefit for anybody. Poor good works without my Will. They are like bells with no sound; coins without the image of the king, which have no value as money - at the most they turn into self satisfaction. Many times I'm forced, for love of the creatures, to embitter the good they do, so that they enter themselves and try to operate truly and generously. On the other hand, for the one who lives in our Will, there is no danger that the smoke of self esteem may enter even the greatest works she may do. She is the little flame fed by the great light that is God, and the light knows how to get rid of the darkness of passion - the smoke of self esteem. Being light, she really knows that all the good she does is done by God Himself, operating within her nothingness; and if this nothingness has not been completely emptied of all that does not belong to God, God will not descend into it to make great works worthy of Him.

Therefore, not even humility can enter our Will; only nothingness - knowing to be nothing. All the good that enters It is only divine work - God Who brings God. In my Will, everything changes for the creature. She is nothing other than the little light which has to absorb, as much as she can, the great light of my Fiat, so that she may be fed only by light, love, goodness and divine sanctity. What an honor to be fed by God! So it is no wonder that, being the creature, the little flame of God, He also feeds Himself with it."

Then He added: "On top of the unceasing love, there is another sign that the soul lives in my Will. This sign reigns inside the soul: the immutability - never moving from good to evil. This can only be of God: a firm, constant character, hard to change in its action; the constancy that only a Divine patience can have - always to repeat an act without ever getting tired; never being bothered - never regretting. It is only of God. Now, one who lives in our Fiat feels her immutability and is invested by such firmness that she would never change her action - not for Heaven and earth. She would rather die than stop doing and redoing what she does. Furthermore, everything she does with a firm heart - without ever changing, had its origin in God; so she feels God in her act, and in repeating it, she feels that act flowing and her action animated by God Himself. How can she ever stop doing what she started together with our Supreme Being? She would have to get out of our Will to change action. Our Will is unchanging in Its works, and It renders so, whoever lives in It. Oh! When one does not live in It, how clearly it shows. Today she wants to do something, tomorrow something else; one time she likes to make a sacrifice, another time she runs away from it. One can't trust her. She is like a stem that bends following the wind of her passions. The mutability of human will is such that it reaches the point of making the creature its own toy and perhaps even a toy for the demons themselves.

This is why I call the creature to live in our Will: to be sustained and strengthened, so that she can give honor to our creative work, since only man is voluble, while all our other works never change. Heaven's place is always fixed, never tiring of its extension. The Sun always runs its course and never changes action in giving light to the earth. The air is always ready to be breathed; all things stay the same and keep doing the same action, the way we created them. Only man, by not wanting to live in our Divine Will, clashes with the modes of his Creator; he can't finish his works, so he can't love or appreciate them - neither can he receive credit for them."

Fiat!

How the Divine Will constantly asks for the human will, to be able to say: you did not deny me anything, so neither can I deny you anything. How It forms its little sea of love in the Divine ocean. The Creation. The sweet enchantment of the manifestation of God's love toward creatures.

My flight continues in the Divine Will. Oh! how surprising it is to see It asking continuously for the human will in order to make it into one of Its marvels of love. How touching to see that a Divine Fiat asks the creatures for their human wills. My sweet Jesus, in seeing me so moved, came back for His short little visit, and all goodness said: "My daughter, it is always our love that, with irresistible strength, pushes us toward the creature to say, in the attitude of asking as if we needed her: 'You loved me, and I love you. You gave yourself to me and I give to you.' Now, you must know the extent of our love: every time we ask for her will and she gives it, she also gives us lives for as many times as she gives us her will. So, to give her the opportunity and credit, we remain always in the act of asking her to give us her life - not once but as many times as we ask her. Do you think it's nothing that the creature can then say, 'I gave you many lives; not once but thousands of times - for as many times as you asked me?' And we not only love her with twofold love for each time she gave us her will - deserving it again every time - but we feel more glorified and loved, for as many lives as she gave us. This is nothing other than the exuberance of our love - the keenness, the stratagems, excesses and follies of our operating love - which just can't stop finding ever new ways to deal with the creature; to be able to say: 'this many times we asked for her will and she never denied it. We can we refuse her nothing.' Isn't this an insuperable sign of love, which only a God can make?"

Further, our love never stops. We always try to keep the creature within us. As she loves our Will, we let her own little sea of love be formed in the immensity of our ocean of love, in order to feel her love inside of ours - loving together with ours. It will be smaller, we know, since created love can never reach the creative one, but our content is unspeakable in seeing her loving inside our love, and with our love. A detached love, separated from us, could never please or hurt us; it would just lose the best of love itself. So, every time she loves us in our Fiat, her tiny sea of love keeps growing in our Divine ocean, and we feel more glorified and loved in seeing the growth of our creature's love."

After this, I was doing my rounds in the Creation to trace all the acts done by the Divine Will. And my sweet Jesus added: "My blessed daughter, Creation is the sweetest enchantment of our love manifested toward creatures: there is the blue of the Sky with its stars, the bright Sun, air, wind and sea - always fixed, never moving, telling man of our incessant love. Then, on the ground, there are flowers, plants, trees, tiny grass - and each of them has the voice, motion and love life of their Creator - even the most tiny blade of grass - to tell everybody the love story of the One Who created them. It seems that things created in the earth die, but it's not true; rather, they rise again, to be even more beautiful. This is nothing other than the new resurrection of God's love toward creatures. While they seem to be dying - in order to give a sweet surprise of love - they rise again more beautiful; and God puts the new enchantment of blooming and fruits, under everybody's eyes, to be loved. One can say that each flower and plant carries the kiss, the 'I love you' of its Creator to the one who is looking at it and takes it. This is why our supreme love expects that, in everything, the creature recognizes us and sends to us her 'I love you' - but we wait in vain.

In all created things our Supreme Being manifests our power, Wisdom, goodness and the order of our love; and we give it to man so that he may love us with powerful, wise, all good love - being himself the image of our Divine love. All this can be received by the one who lives in our Will, since we can say that she lives from our own Life. On the other hand, outside of our Will, love is weak, wisdom is insipid, goodness turns into defects, order into disorder. Poor creature, without our Will, how we pity her! Furthermore, loving our creature incessantly, we want to find in her unceasing love, but when she doesn't love us she forms big gaps of love in her soul, and our love, unable to find itself in those gaps, does not know where to lean. It remains suspended, goes wandering, runs - flies, not finding who would receive It. It shouts, in agonizing pains: 'I am not loved, I cannot find one who loves me.'

Then He added, in a more tender tone: "Dearest daughter, if you knew the extent of my love for the soul who lives in my Will, you would love me so much that your heart would burst from joy, and your love and my love would consume you, devour you for pure love of me. Now, you must know that my Divine Will gathers all that the creature living in It does. Nothing done in my Fiat can leave, but remains in our fields of light, and my Will delights in picking up motion, breathing, steps, words and thoughts - all that she has done in our Volition - to incorporate it in our own life. If I didn't do so, Our Life would miss that breath, motion - everything the creature did in our Will; they are really parts of our Life, so we feel the need for them to continue their breathing, moving and walking inside ours. Therefore, we call the creature to live in our Will, breath, heartbeat, motion and love. We are neither able nor do we want to detach ourselves from even a breath of one who lives in our Will. It would be as if our life were torn away. As she moves, breathes and so forth, my Will puts on a festive air and keeps gathering all that the creature does - loving her, as if It would contribute to form breath and motion in the creature, and, at the same time, as if the creature would give breath and motion to God.

These are the excesses and the inventions of our love which is only happy when It can say: 'what I do she does, as we move, sigh and love together.' Then we feel the happiness, glory and appreciation for our creative work, which returns all love into our Divine womb, as it came out, in a fire of love from our paternal bosom."

Desiring It and taking the first steps are all that is needed to live in the Divine Will. How the Divine Will possesses the generative life and generates endlessly when It reigns. Inseparability of the works of Our Lord from one who lives in His Will.

My poor mind is crowded with thoughts regarding the Divine Will. These thoughts seem like many messengers that bring lots of news about this Will, so holy. I was surprised; and my sweet Jesus, coming back to His little daughter, all goodness said: "My good daughter, it is very easy to enter my Will, since your Jesus never teaches difficult things. My love makes me adapt to human capabilities, so that the creature can do, with no difficulty, what I teach and what I want. You must know that the first indispensable thing in order to enter my Fiat is wanting and firmly yearning to live in It. The second thing is to take the first step since, once the first step is done, my Divine Will surrounds the creature with so much light and attraction that she loses any desire to do her own will. In fact, as soon as she takes a step she feels powerful. The night of passions, weaknesses, miseries is turned into day - into divine strength; so she feels the irresistible need to take the second step, which calls for the third one, the fourth, the fifth and so on and on.

These are the steps of the light which embellishes the creature, sanctifies her and makes her happy; which puts her on the right way, making her similar to her Creator; to the extent that, not only does she feel the extreme need to live in my Will, but she also feels It as inseparable from herself as her own life. See then, how easy it is. But wanting is necessary. My Paternal goodness wants it too, always present in my Will with grace, love and goodness. Since I also want it, I add my contribution - my own life if necessary, to give her all the help and the means - even my own life, as her own - in order to make her live in my Will. I don't hold anything back when it comes to making a creature live in my Will.

My daughter, our love is so great that we fix different degrees of beauty and sanctity to adorn the soul in our Divine Will. We will make these souls different from one another, distinct in their beauty, sanctity and love, but all beautiful - all unique. Some will remain in the sea of our light and will enjoy the goods of my Will, others will remain under the action of my operating light. These will be the most beautiful ones, with all our creative art and operating action. As we find the creature in our Will, we can do whatever we want. She will be ready to receive our creative power and we will delight in creating new beauties, unseen sanctities - love that we've never given to others and which they could not receive because the life, light and strength of our will was missing. We will hear in her our echo; the creative strength that always generates love and glory; the continuous repetition of our acts and of our own life. This is the life of our Fiat: to generate. And where It reigns It generates continuously, without ever ending: generates in us and keeps the life of the Most Holy Trinity; generates in the creature in which It reigns; generates our image, love and sanctity. So, we still have a lot to do in the work of Creation. We have to reproduce our acts and works, which will serve as the most beautiful ornament for our Heavenly Fatherland."

After this, my mind got lost in the ocean of the Fiat, which made me aware of everything, and all seemed to belong to me as well as to God. Then my beloved Jesus, almost suffocated in His flames of love, added: "My blessed daughter, one who lives in my Will has always been inseparable from her Creator. She was with us from all Eternity. Our Divine Will brought her to our laps to love, court and enjoy her, and since then, we have felt her love palpitating in us, calling for the work of our creative hands, to make of her one of our best images. Oh! how much we delighted in finding in our Will someone in whom we could express our creativity. Now, you must know that since these souls that live, and will live, in our Fiat are inseparable from us, they were coming down with me when I, the Eternal Word, came down from Heaven to earth in the excess of my love. They were guided by the Heavenly Queen; they formed my people, my loyal army, my living Royal Palace, in which I was true King of these children of my Divine Will.

I would never have come down from Heaven without the court of my people; without a reign in which I could dominate with my laws of love. All the centuries are just like a point for us, in which everything is ours, in action. Therefore, when I came down from Heaven as dominator and king of my children, I felt courted and loved - as only We can do - and my love was such that my children were all conceived together with me. I just couldn't be without them; I couldn't have tolerated not finding my loving children. So they grew with me in the womb of my Queen Mother; they were born together with me, cried with me, did everything I did. They walked, worked, prayed and suffered together with me, and I can say that they were with me even on my Cross, to die and rise again to new life for human generations.

Therefore, the kingdom of our Will is already established. We know its numbers, we know them all by name. We already feel them palpitating in ardent love. Oh, how much we love them and yearn for the time to deliver them into the daylight of our Will on earth. Then the children of my Volition will have in their power my conception, my birth, my steps, pains and tears; they will be able to be conceived and born again as many times as they want; they will feel my steps and pains in theirs. Since in my Will, my life, my birth, are repeated – are renewed in every instant, they can take them for themselves, give them to others, or do whatever they want. I know that they would never do what I do not want. These children of ours, born again, formed and fed by our Will, will be the true glory of our Creation; they will crown our creative work, placing the seal of their love in every created thing for the One Who did all for them and loved them so much.”

How God - to be loved by creatures - puts in their hearts His love and turns it into coins. The vigils of Jesus. Divine Paternity and the sonship of one who lives in the Divine Will. How God writes the name of His daughter with indelible characters.

I feel the Divine Will calling me every instant, wanting to be loved; and since my love is just little drops, It wants to give me Its own love, so that I may have seas, not just drops to tell God that I love Him very much. The Divine Volition is so good that It wants to give Itself in order to rejoice, saying: ‘the creature loves Me.’

So, my always adorable Jesus, coming back to visit my poor soul with His heart beating very fast, clasping me to Himself in His arms, told me: “My blessed daughter, I burn of love. I feel like fainting, I am delirious for desire of love. And to reach this end, do you know what I do? I put my love in the heart of the creature, I let it flow in her mind, words, works and steps; I turn all this love that flows everywhere into coins of Divine love, and to let it circulate as Our currency we impress on them my image and the writing: ‘Jesus, King of the Kingdom of the Divine Will.’

Now, we give this coin of love to the creature to say: ‘I loved You by right’. With this love, turned into money by our goodness, she can buy anything she wants and loves, such as our sanctity, our very Will and our virtues. If she wants more love she has enough coins to buy it. Oh, how we delight in seeing that the creature, no longer poor, but rich, has so much that she can even buy our virtues, our very sanctity. How beautiful it is to see her holding our love coins, which make her owner of all our goods. But we give this money only to the soul who lives in our Will, since she won’t waste it. She’ll keep it and multiply it, to be able to love us more and more, and refresh us from our devouring flames.”

Then I started my round in the acts of the Divine Will and I felt such suffering and fidgeting that I couldn’t calm down. Minutes were like centuries. What an endless night. And I was waiting for my sweet Jesus to come and calm me down, when finally, after long waiting, my dear Jesus made Himself seen, breathless, and all goodness. He said: ”Poor daughter, how hard the vigil is, is it not? How many times your Jesus finds Himself with these pains, so cruel and torturing! How many vigils creatures make me do. I can say I’m always watching, suffering, restless for my love. If the creature sins I feel her running away from my arms, and I watch over her, I look at her, I see her surrounded by demons that make a feast and even make fun of the good she’s done. Poor good, how much it becomes covered by the mud of guilt. But since I still love her, I send her some sparkles of light and I watch. I send her remorse to make her stand up again, and I watch. Minutes seem centuries. I cannot calm down if I do not see her coming back into my arms,...and I watch, always watch. I spy on her beating heart, the thoughts of her mind, to provoke in her the memory of how much I love her,... nothing. I am just forced to wait in vain. How hard the vigil is! Only if she comes back to me can I rest a little, otherwise my vigil continues. If another wants to do good but takes time, never making up her mind, I still watch over her. I try to attract her with my love, with inspirations, even with promises, but she does not make up her mind, finding many excuses and difficulties. She keeps me in vigil, how many vigils! So many vigils these creatures make me do, and in so many different ways. Here is the reason for your vigil: to keep me a little company in my continuous vigil. Therefore let us suffer together. Love me and I will find a little rest from so many vigils.”

Then He added with a more tender tone: “Daughter of my pains, would you like to know who does not give me such hard suffering? The soul who lives in my Will. Further, as she decides to live in It, I name her my daughter. I call the whole of Heaven and the Most Holy Trinity to celebrate my new daughter. Everybody knows her because I write her name with indelible characters inside my Heart - in my ever burning love: ‘my daughter’. She remains always with me in my Will and anything I do, she does. She rises again with me in my continuous resurrections, and if human ingratitude makes me cry, I write her, ‘daughter of my birth’. She cries with me, so I write, even in my tears, ‘daughter of my tears’. In sum, if I suffer, work or walk, I write her ‘daughter’ of my pains, works or steps. I keep her impressed in Me, everywhere.

Now, you must know that between Father and child there are permanent bonds. Nobody can deny the rights of the Father and the rights of the child, either in the supernatural or in the natural order. Therefore, as a Father I feel the obligation to make heir of my goods, love and sanctity, the one who so solemnly declared herself to be my daughter, to the extent that I keep her written in my heart. Not loving her would be like defrauding my Paternal love. I just can’t. She then has the duty to love me and possess my goods, to defend her Father, to make Him known, even to give her life so that nobody may offend Him.

Oh! how beautiful it is to see these children of mine living in my Will, telling me: ‘My Father, You’ve been waiting and watching for too long; You are tired, please rest. To let your rest be sweet and smooth I’d like You to rest in my love, and I will start watching over souls, taking your place. Who knows, maybe I’ll manage to bring someone back by the time You wake up’. So I trust these children and take a rest. Oh, what can’t a soul living in my Will do? She can do everything, since her light makes her aware of all my pains, and I do everything for her; we alternate in vigil and rest. How beautiful it is to live in my Will. The creature places herself in our own conditions, and what we want, she wants.

This is the most holy thing, the greatest and the noblest, so full of Majesty and purity: wanting what God wants. Nobody else can reach such a sublime height, such an infinite value: wanting what God wants. God is holy, God is pure, God is order and goodness; by wanting what God wants, the creature wants what is holy, pure and good. In the fullness of His order, she feels reborn in God, and does what He does. God does everything, embraces all, moves in everybody, and she concurs in all God does; there is no higher good she could do. There is nothing superior or even equal to living in my Will. Therefore, live always in my Fiat and we will be happy, you and I.”

How the Word of God is life enclosing all the centuries. How It looks to all human generations. How Jesus does not know how to deal with those who do not love Him. How Jesus is always there for the needs of the creatures.

I felt immersed in the Divine Will. Its light made me comprehend many of Its truths, but I also felt incapable of enclosing them in my little mind, and reluctant to manifest them in writing on paper. Then my sweet Jesus, visiting my poor soul, all tenderness and compassion for my incapacity, told me: “Poor daughter, she gets confused before the immensity of my Will, and would like to stay there resting in peace, to enjoy all the joys and the happiness with which she is filled. No, my daughter, work is necessary too. In Heaven there is always joy, but on earth there is an alternation of joys and work. For you, manifesting and writing is work, while entering my Will is possessing the purest joys and the greatest happiness. However, I never leave you alone in your work; I actually do more than you do, and without me you could have done nothing.

You must know that our love is so great that when we decide to give a word, to manifest a truth from our Supreme Majesty, we also provide the act in which to do it, enclosing in ourselves the good which that truth has to produce. When the good we have to give to creatures, through those truths we manifest, is all mature and completed, then we give this good to one of them, and she becomes the bearer of that good for the benefit of all human generations. Therefore, our words enclose all centuries, and being words of life they possess a creative strength. Wherever they reach out they will create life and bring the goodness of our truth. So, stopping our words by not manifesting them, means stopping all the good and lives that our words can produce. I know, my daughter, that you would never want to give me such a sorrow, by preventing this great good from reaching the human generation... would you? One who loves me cannot refuse me anything, not even the sacrifice of her own life. Therefore be attentive, since you don't want to be responsible for so many of our divine lives, which are destined to give life to creatures."

After this, I felt in so much pain, it was as if I was going to breathe my last. Jesus immediately ran to sustain me in His arms and said: "What is it, tell me, do you want to come?" And I: "Yes, Heaven willing that you make up your mind to take me", and Jesus: "My daughter, and what are we going to do with the earth?" and I: "I don't know anything and I'm good at nothing, and then, what do I care about the earth?". He said: "My daughter, but you should care, because your Jesus cares, and my concerns and your concerns must be one. Now, you have to know that the Divine Will has not yet been completely manifested, although It will be soon, and the more it is manifested the more souls get caught in the nets of its light. Not only this, but the more it matures and grows in one creature, the more all the others acquire the right to receive it, and we feel more moved to grace the human generations, letting them possess our life and Will. Our goodness and our love is such that in one creature we look at all, and for love of one we also benefit all the others.

But who then, overflows with this good for all? The one who has been the first to receive that good. The one who listened to us and cherished our truths more than her own life. The one who, never looking for her own life, was ready to sacrifice it in every instant for love of us, to let us make of her what we wanted. This has so much power on our Supreme Being, it moves us so much that one alone is enough to let everybody receive that good. Furthermore, the human generations are so linked together - more than the limbs to the body - that it is no wonder that one healthy and good member makes its vital and holy humors flow into the others. In the same way, the strength of one single creature living in our Will is omnipotent, to the extent that it can overwhelm Heaven and earth; it conquers all, God as well as creatures. Therefore, let me finish and I will take you soon."

Then He added: "My daughter, the more one suffers, the more he feels the need to be loved. I am the one who suffered more than anybody else, and my pains, my spilled blood and my tears turned into loving voices, imploring love from those I love so much, and who made me suffer and cry so much. Those who love me bring the sweetest relief to my pains; they dry my tears while my blood turns into a bath of love for them. But do you know who turns my suffering and tears into joy and gladness? Those who live in my Will. They always find in It love with which to love me, sustaining me in my suffering and giving me continuous relief. Then I feel like a triumphant king who, although wounded, won the will of the creature by the weapons of his sufferings and love. Oh! How happy I am in feeling loved and living together with the ones for whom I sustained such a painful and bloody battle. I created everything to be loved and if love is lacking I don't really know what to do with the creature. I can't find what I want. At the most there might be different varieties of love: love of reparation, of compassion, of imitation. But it is always love that I want, and if I don't find it, it is just not for me. Given that love is the child of my Will, if I find this child I have found the Mother. And so I find everything, all that belongs to me; and I rest and rejoice in her and she does the same in me, and we love each other with one single love."

And I: my beloved Jesus, if you yearn so much for love and for creatures to do your will, why don't you inundate them with your graces so that they feel the strength to operate and love you as you want?

And Jesus: "My daughter, I feel like giving to the creature the necessary strength or, rather, an overabundant strength, only in the moment when she sets herself to do what I want - not before. Otherwise she would feel the strength but still not do what I want, and I do not know how to give useless things. How many, before doing an action, feel so helpless; but then as soon as they put themselves to work they feel invested by a new strength, a new light. I am the one who charged them, since I never lack the necessary strength to do good. Rather, this need ties me and forces me, if necessary, to act together with them. But if what they do is not necessary, then I put myself aside and let them do by themselves."

After this, I was thinking to myself: how miserable I am; I feel like I haven't done anything for Jesus, for all the graces He gave me; who knows how much I should love Him. Instead, I am so cold. It's true that I can't love anyone other than Jesus, but I should be all on fire, and I'm not. As I was thinking that, He came back and, reproaching me sweetly, said: "My daughter, what are you doing? Do you want to waste time? Don't you know that all you should care about is knowing whether or not a state is in my Will, and doing it? In my Will everything is love, breathing, heartbeat, motion; even the human will wants nothing other than to love me. My Will, jealous of the creature, surrounds her with an air of love, so that I breathe only that love. Your Jesus never looks at what the creature feels, because many times feelings can deceive her. I look at her will and what she really wants. That's all I take. How many things there are which she feels but does not do; but, if she wills, all is done."

Further, in my will nothing gets lost. For whoever lives in It everything is counted: breaths, heartbeats, the little 'I love you'; all things done in It remain written with indelible characters of light and form the very life of my Will. Often the gifts I have given to the creature as well as her acts, remain hidden as her property in the depth of her will. She feels as if she has not done anything. But that is not true. At the right time these acts will show their light inside that soul - brighter than the Sun - and sanctity is there in its place of honor; virtues are all there ready to act heroically in case of need. My Will knows how to maintain harmony and its divine order. Wherever It reigns and whatever It does acquires the seal of Eternity. Therefore live in It and do not worry about anything. My Will will take care of you better than you would yourself."

How the soul is voice, singing, hands to play, while the body is the organ. How the Divine Will wants the smallest acts to let Its Sun rise. The sowing of the Sun on the earth. Sowing of the Divine Will. The marriage that God is preparing with His truths.

Continuing my flight in the Divine Volition, I feel It invading me inside and outside, to take Its Royal place in my smallest acts as well as in the natural ones, and maybe even in my little trifles. If It didn't do so It could not reign in fullness within the creature. Now, my dear Jesus, repeating His short little visit, all goodness said: "My daughter, everything came out of Ourselves and was shaped by our creative hands: both the soul and the body. Both of them must be ours. In fact, we made the body as the organ, and each act done in the Divine Will was to form one key. It had to contain many notes and concerts of music, all different from one another. The soul, in union with the body, was supposed to be voice and song. By playing those keys, it was to create the most beautiful melodies. Now, an organ without a player is like a dead body; it's not fun, neither does it attract anyone. On the other hand, one who is good at music cannot exercise his art as a musician, if he doesn't have an instrument to play. Therefore, a living someone who speaks and moves is needed to create beautiful music; but the instrument is necessary too, with its keys, notes and so on. Both of them are necessary."

Such is the soul and the body. There's such harmony, order and union, that one cannot do without the other. So, be attentive. I watch your steps, your words, the movements of your pupils, your tiniest acts, in order for my Will to have its life - its place. We don't care whether the act is natural or spiritual, big or small; but we watch attentively to see whether all is ours; whether our Will made arise its Sun of Light, sanctity and love. We use even the most insignificant act to make the most prodigious wonders, forming the most beautiful scenes to keep us all amused. Didn't we form the marvelous enchantment of the whole creation from nothing? Wasn't it from nothing that we created so many harmonies up to our very image, in the Creation of man? My daughter, if creation had to give us only what is spiritual, that would have been very little. Instead, by giving us also its natural acts, it can always give. We can be in continuous relation and our bond never breaks; more so, since the small things (breathing, moving, helping oneself in little personal things), are always available and within reach; available for the little and the great, for the ignorant and the learned and they never end. If these little things are done to love us they form in themselves the life of the Divine Will; our victory and triumph: the ultimate purpose of their creation. See, then, how easy it is to live in our Will? The creature doesn't have to do new things, but just what she always does; that is to say, to live her life as we gave it, but in our Will."

Fiat!!!

After this, my Jesus continued: "My daughter, every day the sun gives light, heat, sweetness, fragrances, color, fecundity and different flavors, and with this, it embellishes the earth. By just touching with its light and molding with its heat, it fecundates the plants and the whole of nature. It sweetens the fruits and gives a variety of colors and fragrances to flowers, forming a sweet enchantment for human generations. The same thing happens with my Will which, immensely exceeding the sowing of the Sun, sows light, love, varieties of beauty and sanctity in the one who lives in It. It gives to each seed, a divine fecundity. Oh, how beautiful it is to see this embellished creature, fecundated by our divine sowing. How special she is, forming the enchantment of our divine pupils. Now, my daughter, in order to receive the sowing of the Sun, the earth, the flowers and the plants must let themselves be touched by its light and heat, otherwise the Sun would remain at the height of its sphere, not being able to sow in the earth. The earth would remain sterile, without fecundity and beauty, since union and agreement from both sides are needed to give and receive any good. Without these, one cannot give and the other cannot receive. In the same way, in order for the soul to receive the sowing of my Will, she has to live in It, being always united with perfect agreement. She must let herself be molded in order to receive a new fecund life. Otherwise, as with the Sun, my Will doesn't sow and the creature remains sterile - without beauty - in the darkness of her human will. This is why I want the creature to live in my Will. Furthermore, I Myself become the farmer in charge of the sowing. I make sure it doesn't get wasted, in order to produce the most various beauties."

Then He added with more loving tenderness: "My good daughter, my love wants to be tied more and more to the creature, and the more truths it manifests regarding my Will, the more bonds I put between God and herself. In manifesting the truth, my love is preparing the marriage between God and the soul. The more it manifests the more pomp and magnificence this marriage will have. Would you like to know what happens then? My truths will be like the dowry needed in order to marry God; to get to know the One who lowers Himself and even ties Himself - only for love - in the bond of marriage. My truths touch the creature over and over; they mold her to new life; they return her to the beauty of our image and resemblance from the time she was created, and impress on her their kiss of inseparable union.

Just one of our truths can make a sea of prodigies and divine creations in the soul who has the goodness to listen to It. One truth can turn a perverted world into a good and holy one, because It is one of our lives, exposed for the good of all. It is a new Sun that we raise in created intellects; a Sun that will let Itself be known through its light and heat, turning into light and heat whoever wants to listen. Therefore, hiding a truth that we give from our Paternal womb, with so much love, is the greatest crime. It deprives human generations of the greatest good.

Further, one who lives in our Will, by marrying us, makes a feast for all Saints. All of them participate in this divine wedding and, because of it, they have their own party in Heaven and another one on earth. Each act the creature does in our Will is a feast; a table sumptuously decked for the Heavenly Regions. In return, the Saints give new gifts. They beseech the Lord to manifest more truths to the soul, to broaden more and more the boundaries of the dowry which God gave to her.”

How the Divine Will is the paralysis of all the evils, while the human will paralyzes good. How to love and possess. How God is formed in the creature and the creature in God. Concerns about the writings.

I was always in the ocean of the Divine Volition which, as if wanting to put me on guard and warn me not to let in my poor restless human will, left me all concerned. My sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: “My blessed daughter, courage, don’t be afraid. The virtue, the power of my Will is such that upon entering into It all the evils, passions, missteps and works remain paralyzed; the human will is defeated to the point of dying, without really dying. However, it understands with great joy, that while the evils are paralyzed, it feels the life of goodness rising again; a light that never dies, a never-ending strength, eternal love, heroic sacrifice and invincible patience. I can say that my Will puts an end to the evils of the creature, since It is the principle and life of every good. Now, as my Fiat has the power to paralyze evils, the human will paralyzes every good when it reigns in the creature. Poor Good, trapped under the paralysis of the human will. It wants to walk but can barely drag itself; it wants to work but it feels its arms sagging; it wants to think good thoughts but it feels stunned and stupid. The human will, without my Will, is the source of all evils and the total ruin of the poor creature.”

After that my beloved Jesus added in such a moving tone: “My daughter, the one who wants to possess me must love me. Loving and possessing are the same thing. As you love me, so I remain formed in your soul, and as you love me more, I grow. Only love makes me grow, and through more love I reveal myself so as to be loved even more. So, to the degree that you love me, I let you feel how much I love you. As soon as you love me, I love and possess you, and as we mutually love each other I form you and grow you within me. I feed you with my love and with the life of my Will. I inundate you with my seas of love to make you feel how much I love you; with how much tenderness I grow you within my heart. How jealously I keep you, so that you may love me more and with my own tenderness.

This is the jealousy of love. The soul is all attentive in giving me her life in every instant, to love me, to make me joyful and happy in herself, the way I make her joyful and happy inside my heart. Love wants reciprocity, and if it loves, not being loved, it feels unhappy and embittered because of what it should receive but does not. Therefore, love me always and if you really want to love me do it in my Will, in which you will find endless love to tie me with love chains, chains so long that I won’t be able to free myself.”

After this, I was thinking of my big sacrifice and my reluctance in writing all this, my interior fights to put the pen on paper. Only the thought of displeasing Jesus made me do it, obeying the one who was imposing this on me. And I was saying to myself: who knows where they will end up; into which hands. Who knows how many quibbles, oppositions, doubts they will cause to arise. I felt restless. My mind was being darkened by such apprehension that I felt like I was dying. But my sweet Jesus came back to calm me down and told me: “My daughter, do not trouble yourself, these writings are mine, not yours, and in whichever hands they go, nobody will be able to touch them to ruin them. I will take care of them, defend them, since they are mine, and whoever will take them in good will, will find my chain of light and love for the creatures.

With these writings I pour out my love. I can call them the expression of the follies, delirium, excesses of my love with which I want to win the creatures, to make them come back into my arms; to make them feel how much I love them. To let them know my love even more, I want to reach the excess of giving them the great gift of my Will as life, since only in It will man be safe and feel the flames, the anxiousness of my love. So, whoever will read these writings with the intention of finding the truth, will feel my flames and all transformed in love, will love me more. But whoever will read them to split hairs and find doubts will remain blinded and confused by my light and my love. My children, the goodness of my truths produces two opposite effects: for those who are disposed, it is light, giving sight to their intelligence, and the life of sanctity, contained in my truths; for those who are not disposed, it is blindness, which deprives them of the good contained in my truths.”

Then he added: ”My daughter, have courage and don’t be troubled. All that your Jesus did was necessary to my love and to the importance of what I had to manifest to you about my Divine Will. I can say it was necessary for my very life and to accomplish the work of Creation. So, at the beginning of this state of yours, I had to use many stratagems of love. I tried so much intimacy with you, that it’s almost unbelievable how I reached that point. I also made you suffer much, to see whether you would accept everything. Then I drowned you with my graces, with my love; and again, I gave you more sufferings to be sure you would deny me nothing. All this, to win your will. Oh, if I hadn’t shown you my love, I wouldn’t have given you my grace. Do you think you would have easily submitted yourself to this state of suffering for so long? It is my love, my truths that kept you and still keep you there as if magnetized to the one who loves you so much. However, everything I did at the beginning of your state was necessary. It had to serve as the basis, decency, decorum, preparation, sanctity and disposition to the great Truth I was going to manifest to you about my Divine Will. Therefore, I will be more interested in the writings than you, because they are mine; and just one truth about my Fiat is life that I want to give to creatures. You can understand this from all you suffered and from the graces I gave you to manifest to you my truths on my Holy Will. So, be calm and let’s love each other. My daughter, let’s not break our love, because it costs much to both of us: to you, in keeping your life sacrificed and at my disposal; to me, in sacrificing myself for you.”

With all Jesus’ talking, I still couldn’t feel completely calm. As He was speaking, peace came back to me, but afterwards, thinking about what happened to me during these days - which is not necessary here to say - I started to feel troubled again. So, for about two days after this, my sweet Jesus remained silent and, because of this I felt completely exhausted, extremely weak. Then my beloved Jesus, having compassion for me, all goodness, came and told me: “Poor daughter of mine, you haven’t eaten, this is why you have no strength. It’s two days since you have taken any food, because you were not at peace, so I couldn’t feed you with my truths. My truths are food for the soul but give also strength to the body. By being so troubled you wouldn’t have understood me, neither would you have been disposed to take such a delicious food. You must know that peace is the door through which truth enters - the first kiss - the invitation of the creatures disposed to listen, to let it speak. Therefore, if you want me to give you a lot of food go back to your state of peace. Furthermore, during these days you’ve been so troubled that Heaven, Angels and Saints have been trembling over you. They felt a bad air which did not belong to them coming from you. So, they all prayed for you to find your peace again.

Peace is the smile of Heaven, the source of Celestial joys. Look at your Jesus, I am never troubled over any offense they can give me. I can say that my Throne is peace. So I want you wholly peaceful, my daughter, because in this mode, too, we have to adapt ourselves and to look alike: peaceful me, peaceful you. Otherwise the Kingdom of my Will cannot be established in you, since It is a Kingdom of Peace.”

Continuous and repeated acts bind God more to the creature and form the strength of her soul. How beautiful it is to live in the Divine Will. How God Himself begs the creature. The rain of love that God pours over the creature and the rain of love from those who live in the Fiat.

I feel the need to enclose myself inside the Divine Volition to continue my life in It. Oh!, how I would love to be imprisoned in its light, so that I could neither see nor hear anything else but what regards its Will. Then my beloved Jesus, coming back to visit my poor soul, all love told me: "My blessed daughter, I want you here, imprisoned in my Will, so that no other things can have life in you. Now, you must know that all the harmony of the creature is in the repetition of her good acts done in my Will. A single act does not form any harmony or beauty, but many continuous acts united together call the attention of God, Who puts Himself in waiting for the acts of the creature. As she performs them, He communicates to her, now beauty, now sanctity, now goodness, wisdom or love. In sum, He provides her with His ornaments and divine qualities. All the acts repeated by the creature form the strength of her soul, binding God even more to herself. They form Heaven in the depth of the soul and as she goes on repeating her acts, some are turned into star, others into wind blowing whispers of love, others become a sea continuously murmuring love, glory, adoration to God the Creator. In sum, the whole atmosphere is reproduced in her. However, when the acts are not continuously repeated, they lack that unifying power that gives strength to all; they lack that divine mode of acting unceasingly, sustaining each of them with creative strength in perennial attitude of doing and redoing again.

Furthermore, a single act has never formed any sanctity because it has no strength; it does not possess the life of love, since true love never says 'basta' - never stops - and if it does, it's dead. Only continuously repeated acts can send good surprises to Heaven where, as one arriving act is being enjoyed, another one follows and more and more arrive forming the enchantment for the Heavenly Fatherland. Therefore, in my Will there is always something to do and time can't be wasted."

Then, with a more tender tone and stronger love, He added: "My daughter, how beautiful it is when a soul loves to do the Divine Will. Heaven lowers Itself and everybody assumes the posture of venerating and adoring the Supreme Volition. They see Its Majesty, height and power enclosed in the little circle of the creature, doing what It does in Its Celestial Royal Palace; sumptuously showing Its love and works, being honored as great Queen; to the extent that Royal lives arise for as many acts as the creature does. Then my Fiat feels all Its Divine power, Its ruling scepter brandished in royal modes, while the creature renders It all the honors It deserves. Since my Fiat embraces all, It feels so glorified that it is as if all would let It reign. In sum, we can't find truer beauty, receive greater love, operate more exceptional prodigies than in the soul who loves to live in our Will.

My desire for the soul to live in our Will, my anxiety and my ardent sighs are such that I keep repeating to the ear of her heart: 'Make me content, don't make me sigh any more. If you live in my Fiat, the night will be over for you and you will enjoy the fullness of the day; or better still, every act done in It will be a new day, bringing new graces, new love and unexpected joys. All the virtues will have a celebration for you in their place of honor; like many princesses they will court your Jesus, and your soul. You will form in yourself my Throne of brightest light, where I will dominate as a King. In all freedom I will dominate your whole being, even your breathing. I will court you with all my works, my pains, my steps, my love, my own strength, to be your defense, your help and your food. There is nothing I won't give you if you live in my Will.'

Now, you must know that our Supreme Being keeps the creature under a thick rain of love. All created things pour a rain of love upon her: the Sun pours light of love; the wind pours waves - blows freshness and caresses of love; the air pours continuous lives of love - my immensity surrounding her - my power sustaining and bringing her, as in my arms; my creative act preserving her. All pour on her infinite and powerful love, love that every instant creates more love. We are always over the creature, to enclose and drown her with love. She makes us delirious for so much love, and still she doesn't let herself be won over to loving us. What pain, what suffering!

But, would you like to know who has exact knowledge of our uninterrupted rain of love? The one who lives in our Will. Only she feels our continuous rain of love. Furthermore, by living in It, everything is hers. Not knowing what to do to give to us in return, or how to shower her rain of love, she takes all created things; our immensity and power; our creative virtue - always in the act of creating only for the sake of love - and she ascends in our very Will, beginning to pour on our divine Being light and caresses of love; immense and powerful love, as if she wanted to match us; taking us in her arms and saying: 'see, how much I love you. You pour on me and I pour on you. I have in my power your immensity and power, which allows me to bring everything back to you.'

My daughter, you cannot comprehend how much relief we feel, how our flames remain refreshed and soothed under this rain of love from the creature. Our contentment is such that we feel as if we are repaid for the whole work of Creation, and paid by the same coins of love with which we loved her so much. Our love has the virtue of letting form in the creature sufficient and abundant coins to pay us for what we have done for her. Therefore, in the midst of our joy we say: 'tell us, what do you want? Do you want us to make up more stratagems of love? We'll do it for you. Tell us, what do you want? We will please you in everything; we will refuse you nothing. Denying you something, not pleasing you in all, would be like denying something to ourselves; like placing a discontent into our endless joys'. Therefore, we find everything in the soul who lives in our Will, and she finds everything in us."

The sign of whether the creature lives in the Divine Will is in feeling Its life within herself - Its operating act - which is the greatest gift ever given to the creature. Centralization of God in the creature and of the creature in God.

I continue my flight in the Divine Will and I feel Its desire to breathe, palpitate, move and think in me. It seems to be putting aside Its immensity - Its height, depth and power - to become smaller in me, to do what I do. It seems to delight in lowering Itself to my level; breathing as I do, palpitating and moving in my motion, but still keeping Its immensity and power which invests and surrounds everything outside of me. Therefore, while my mind wanted to enjoy the Divine Will inside of me, it also wanted to go outside to travel all over Its immensity, power, height and depth. I could find no frontiers. Nothing other than abyss of light, with no bottom and no height, completely boundless. While my mind was getting lost, my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness told me: "My little daughter of my Volition, my Will invests and involves everything and everyone. It possesses all in Its womb of light and nothing can escape It. All live in It, although they do not recognize It as source of life, motion, step, warmth and even breath. We can say that every creature lives in our Will as though in our house. We give her what she needs, we feed her with Paternal tenderness, but she doesn't recognize us. Many times she attributes to herself what we are actually doing. She even reaches the point of offending the One who's giving her life and preserving her.

We can say that we keep many enemies in our house who live at our expense, stealing our goods. Our love is such that it forces us to give them life, to feed them as if they were our friends. How painful it is that our Will serves as residence for those who do not recognize us, and who offend us. They stay in It by right of Creation, because of our immensity. If they didn't want to be in our Will, there would still be no other place for them, since our Will is everywhere on Heaven and earth. Now, in order for the creature to claim that she lives in our Will, she must want it and recognize it, because by wanting it she feels that everything is Will of God for her, and by recognizing it she feels our operating act over her. This is living in my Will: feeling our operating power inside and outside of herself, and operating together with It. If she feels we love, she loves together with us; if we want to make ourselves more known, she is all attentive to listen and receive with love the new life of our knowledge. In sum, she feels our operating life and she wants to do - and does - whatever we do, following us in everything.

This is living in our Will: feeling our life that gives life to her; feeling our operating act moving, breathing, working in her being. These are our Celestial inhabitants, the glory in our house. We live as children and Father. All that is ours is theirs, but they do indeed recognize it. They are not blind thieves who have no eyes to look at our light, or ears to listen to our Paternal attentions, and who do not feel our operating act over them. On the contrary, those who live in our Will feel through our operating act, and this is the greatest gift that we can give to the creature. Therefore, be attentive. Recognize that your life comes from us, that we give you all, breathing and motion, to live together with you.”

After this, I kept thinking of the great wonders of the Divine Will: how many surprises, how many unheard-of prodigies that only the divine Fiat could do. Then my always adorable Jesus, coming back, added: “My blessed daughter, I did the Creation and all the creatures to form my delights in them; to express from our Supreme Being the excesses of our love and the marvelous power of our works. If we delighted so much in creating so many different things in the order of Creation, having to serve man, we delighted even more in doing unheard-of prodigies, works never before considered, enrapturing beauties for the one who had to serve us: Man, the prime act of Creation. We were to be always so delighted in Him as to keep us always busy, doing as many things as we could for Him. He, on the other side, was supposed to remain always with us, to love us and let himself be loved, receiving the great wonders of our works. It was his escape from our Will that stopped our delights and the course of the works that, with so much love, we wanted to do for man. But what we established has to be accomplished. This is why we come back fighting, calling the creatures to live in our Will: to let all that has been decreed and established be punctually accomplished.

Now, you must know that as the soul does her acts in our Will, our love is such that we centralize our Supreme Being in her, together with all our works. Oh! what delights and joys we feel, in seeing our dominating Majesty in her surrounded by all our works. The Angels and Saints pour into her, to honor their Creator, because everybody runs where God is and wants their place of honor around us. But while everything is centralized in her, an even greater wonder occurs. The creature is centralized in everybody, she reaches the center of each created thing. Our Will loves her so much that It multiplies her and gives her a place wherever It is, keeping her close in all Its works. We just can't stay without this creature who lives in our Will. We would have to split our Will in two, but our Will cannot be divided - It is always one, and one single act. Furthermore, if we put aside one who lives in our Will, our own love would wage a war against us. Rather, the reason for which we want her to live in our Will is that we want her with us to show her our works, to make her feel the heartbeats and the notes of our love. From afar our works cannot be known and our love cannot be felt; so we need to be with her to love each other, to know each other and to work; otherwise the creature goes on her own way and we on ours, remaining deprived of our delights and of the freedom to do what we want - in absolute pain. Therefore, be attentive, live always in our Will if you want us to live in you and you within us.”

The truth, bearer of divine seeds. How knowledge forms new divine lives. The glory that the soul will receive in return, in Heaven. One who lives abandoned in Jesus's arms is His favorite.

I am always returning to the Divine Volition. Its immensity is such that while I am in the middle of Its ocean, trying in vain to embrace all Its acts (since it takes centuries to do it, and still, they would not be enough to embrace all Its acts), I seem to come back to my smallness. So, while I was wandering in the Fiat, my sweet Jesus, who needs the love of those who want to live in His Will, told me: “My blessed daughter, it is only when I speak about my Will that my love can find peace, and that it calms down from its anxiety and delirium. In the word, in the truth I manifest, It finds sweet rest, because It sees Its love taking place in the creatures, in order to receive love in return and form Its life. It is necessary to manifest the merits and the goods contained in It in order to attract and enchant the creature to live in It, otherwise they won't move.

Now, you must know that every knowledge I manifest and every act done in my Will, with the cortege of the knowledge I have manifested, is a divine seed that the soul acquires. This seed will produce new divine science, and – oh, how she will be able to speak the language of her Creator! Each truth will be a new celestial language which will have the virtue of making itself understood by those who listen to it and want to receive this divine seed. This seed will produce new life of sanctity, new love, new goodness, new joys and happiness. These seeds of my truth will be as many divine properties that the soul will acquire.

The joy we receive when the soul operates in our Will is such that we communicate it to all the Blessed. You must know that as many are the divine seeds which the soul acquires by knowledge of my Fiat, so many more degrees of our knowledge and glory will we extend to her when, having finished her life down here, she will come to our Heavenly Fatherland. To each knowledge acquired on earth will correspond a double knowledge of our Supreme Entity in our Celestial residence. To each Divine seed a degree of glory, joy and happiness. Therefore, the happiness, joy and glory of the Blessed will be in proportion to how much they will have known us. Consider, for example, a man who did not study different languages. In hearing them being spoken, he will not understand a thing. Moreover, he certainly could not be employed as a teacher of these languages to let him earn a higher salary. He will only be able to teach the little he knows and earn little money.

In the same way, if men do not know us on earth, they won't make enough room in their souls to be able to receive all our joy and happiness. Even if we desire to give it to them, it would just not fit, and they would not understand anything. Therefore, the glory of the Blessed will correspond to how many acts in our Will they have done: glory and joy will be higher the more knowledge they acquired. This can make the Blessed reach such a height that all the Celestial Court will be amazed, because each additional knowledge is a new divine Life that the soul acquires, a life with infinite goods and joys.

Do you think it's nothing for the souls to possess many of our new divine lives as her own property? What we will not give of joy, happiness and love, in return for these new divine lives that she possesses! We long for our children who will live in our Will, to make Ourselves known on earth, since It will be their Teacher of the new sciences of their Creator and will make them beautiful, wise, holy and noble, according to the knowledge acquired. We await them in our Celestial Court to inundate them with our new joys, beauties and happiness, which we haven't been able to give until now. And since in Heaven all the Blessed are bound together as a family, loving each other in a perfect way, they will all participate in the glory and joy of these children; not as direct glory and joy, but in an indirect way, thanks to the bond of love among themselves. So, we want our Will to be known on earth in order to show, from the depth of our divine womb, new infinite joys and happiness to those who live in It."

Then He added with unspeakable tenderness: "My good daughter, I love creatures very much, but I feel more captured, won and attracted to love the soul that lives abandoned in my arms, as if she had nobody in the world - only her Jesus - trusting me and me only. If she is offered other kinds of support she refuses them, to have only the support of her Jesus who holds her tightly in His arms, defending her and taking care of her completely. These are the souls that I love very, very much - my favorite ones. I surround them with my divine power. I build around them the wall of my love. Woe to those who touch them! My love will know how to defend them and my power will know how to topple those who want to displease her.

The souls abandoned in me, live only of me and I of them, as if we lived on one breath and one love. If some human support arises, they look into it to see if I'm there, and if I'm not, they run away to find shelter in my arms. Only these are the souls I can really trust, confide to them my secrets, and lean on them as well. I am certain that they do not get out of my Will because they are always with me. The one who doesn't live abandoned in me, instead, runs away from my arms; she does not refuse human supports. Rather, she gets a taste for them. She is inconstant. One moment she looks for me, another, for creatures. She is forced to feel the disillusion from creatures which opens deep gashes in the soul, and she feels the earth in her heart - my Will as Life, far away from herself.

Oh, if everyone abandoned themselves in my arms! The earth would disappear for them, they wouldn't pay attention to anybody, I would be enough for all. I love, so much, the one who lives abandoned in my arms that I show her the greatest excesses of my love, my love jokes, my caresses. I reach the point of inventing new love tricks to keep them busy and centered in my love. Therefore, live abandoned in my arms and in everything you will find your Jesus defending, helping and sustaining you."

How the Divine Will always wants to give and receive from the creatures; mutual exchange; rights that are lost and empire acquired. How God finds everything in one act done in His Will.

Continuing my flight in the Divine Will, I feel It doesn't give me time; always wanting to give me of Itself and to receive what is mine. If I don't know what to give - being just nothing - It wants my will again and again. This is Its feast: receiving the will of the creature as a gift and, if necessary, receiving always the same thing It gave, happy to give these back again redoubled with new love, light and sanctity. Divine Will, how much you love me! Oh! how much I'd like to love you in return. I felt completely immersed in the Fiat when my always adorable Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness said: "My little daughter of my Will, you don't know how far my love goes for the soul who lives in It; how many new things I'm up to, taking her by new surprises; always having something to do with her and always keeping her captured by me. I don't give her time: now I tell her a truth, now I give her a gift, now I show her our enrapturing beauty, and our whispering burning delirious love that wants love in return. In sum, I just don't give her time, and what I want the most, and always, is for her not to give me time either.

Listen to what I do. In order, always, to give and receive, I call the creature to live in my Will and I offer her Its sanctity, light, Life, love and infinite joys - as much as she can contain them. After a while, finding her loyal, I go to her and I say: 'give me back what I gave to you'. She promptly delivers everything, without hesitating an instant, to show me how much she loves me; even her breath, her heartbeat, her motion - everything - she gives me everything, not keeping anything for herself. Rather, she's happy to give all to her Jesus. And I take it all. I look and look again at what she gave me, to delight and amuse myself with her gifts. Then I put them inside my heart to enjoy them as the property of my daughter. But do you think I remain satisfied? For the creature I am, but not for myself - never. My love doesn't give me peace. It swells up, it overflows, driving me to the greatest excesses, and do you know what I do? I give my whole Being to my beloved creature, I double everything she gave me. I give her doubled love, light, sanctity, my breath, my motion, my very life, so that I breathe in her breathing, I move in her motion, I love in her love. There is nothing I don't do within her. I just do not want to do anything without her. I would feel as if I didn't love her in all my things and this would be unbearable. I must give all to the one who gave me all.

Do you think it's nothing that your Jesus gives you His life to let you live in me, asking for your life to live within you? Trying, almost, to find ever new excuses to give and to receive; to have a chance to tell you the long story of my Will and my eternal love story? This is not just to give you simple news, to show you how good, holy and powerful I am, but to actually provide you with my love, Will, sanctity, goodness and beauty. Isn't such an excessive love, almost unbelievable? Just by wanting to always keep her with me, I show my great love. I give her something of myself, since she possesses nothing by herself that is worthy of me. Then, making it her own, she can say: 'You gave to me and I give to you'. Isn't this the kind of love to break and move even the hardest hearts? Only your Jesus can love in this way. Only your Jesus knows how to love in this way. Nobody can claim to be able to reach me in love; I Myself do it for one who lives in my Will.

Every act she does in It is like a Sun rising in fullness of glory and sanctity. I take shelter in these Suns to delight and rest. Then I find my beloved creature all immersed in these Suns, she looks so beautiful to me. Moreover, by living in my Will, there is nothing human in her. She loses the rights on her will and on all that is human. All rights over her will become ours while she acquires the rule over all that is divine. Oh! how beautiful! How pleased and happy we are in seeing her with the right of ruling all that belongs to us. She rules over our love and takes as much as she wants to love us; she also rules over our love to be loved. She rules over our wisdom and makes us reveal unspoken truths on our Supreme Being; she rules over our goodness and makes us pour this more than beneficial rain over all creatures. Her empire on our Paternal lap is so sweet and powerful that we even say: 'who can resist you daughter? What you want we want'. Therefore, if you want all, never leave our Will: everything will be yours and you will be all ours."

After this, I kept on thinking about the Divine Will - Its great wonders - how sometimes, while crossing Its sea everything is serenity and profound peace. Its divine Sun glows with light, but all is silent, and since Its word is life, the new life It desires seems to be missing. While I was thinking of this, my sweet Jesus said: "My daughter, the Sun of my Will always speaks. The light is not silent but speaks with its warmth, its fecundity, and by impressing its various beauties into the soul living in It. Then, here I am, the bearer of its word, lowering myself to the human intellect, making easier and in simpler terms, the height of the word of my Fiat's light. Therefore, my Will is never silent where It reigns, but speaks through light or through my word. However, when you are not attentive you don't ruminare well, you don't eat so you can't digest what I tell you, then you forget it and say I did not tell you anything. You must know that in every word or act done in my Will, all centuries are embraced, all creatures are enclosed and present. Past and future do not exist for us and for who lives in our Will.

Even more, our truths contain all centuries, all times. They are the bearer of all creatures in the act of those who live in our Will, and in that act we find Ourselves and the love and the glory that everybody should give us. For this reason, when the creature is about to operate and to receive the operating act of our Fiat, all Heaven bows in reverence, amazed to see a Divine Volition operating in this act. Therefore, We find everything in this act done by the creature in our Will: our power that honors us as we deserve; our immensity that contains all and puts all at disposal; our Wisdom which sings to us the most beautiful notes; our Divine Being; the Angels who praise us; the Saints who, enraptured, repeat: 'Holy, Holy, Trice Holy, the Lord our God, Who works with such goodness and manifests His love'.

We can say that nothing is missing in the act of the creature. Our glory is complete, our love finds sweet rest and perfect return. This is why We long so much for one who lives in our Will, and it seems as if We had not done anything in Creation, because the greatest act we can do is missing: Our Life repeating itself in the human act, in which we will find ourselves, everything and everybody. There isn't good we won't give to our beloved creature, and there will not be love or glory that she won't give us. She will find everything she wants in us, and we in her. Daughter, wanting to give all but being able to give only a small part of our goods; having to keep our love constrained and hampered, is a suffering for us, and all because our Will as Life is missing in the creature. Not being able to receive everything from her is the greatest pain of our creative work. Therefore our love, our power and Wisdom, all our creative work demand that the creature live in our Will. The centuries will not pass away until our Fiat will form Its Kingdom, and when It will reign, It will give all the goods and the dominion over them to the human generation. Therefore pray, and may your life be a continuous act in our Will, to obtain the coming of Its Kingdom."

One who lives in the Divine Volition is in continuous communication with God. New birth and rising love. How it gives happiness and joy to all. How Jesus Himself will become the vigilant custodian of these writings, the interest being all His own.

I am under the empire of the Divine Will. Its power raises me in its center; Its love, embalming me, brings me its celestial air; Its light purifies, embellishes, transforms me, enclosing me in the range of the Divine Will, so that all is forgotten; so great and so many are the joys, so enchanting the scenes of the Supreme Being that one remains enraptured. Oh, Divine Will, how I'd love for all to know you, to enjoy joys so pure, gladness so ineffable, which can be found only in you! And while my mind was feeling such an unspeakable happiness, my beloved Jesus, repeating His short little visit, all goodness told me: "My little daughter of my Will, see, how beautiful it is to live in my Will? We are in continuous communication with the creature. We prepare for her new joys for every new act she does, to make her more and more happy in our residence. The actions done in the Fiat remain always in the act of being done; our life rises again continuously; our love ascends and, investing everyone with its waves, calls all into that act, so that all would repeat it, and We hear the echo of them loving and glorifying us. The Angels and the Saints are all attentive, and anxiously long for the act of the creature done in our Will. Do you know why? Because in this way they receive double glory: the glory of Heaven, and the new glory, joy and happiness of the act done in my Fiat. How grateful they are to me and how much they love the creatures that redouble for them new happiness and endless joys!

Who would not love the one who lives in my Will; the one who gives us joys and happiness; the one who gives us the great glory of letting us do what we want in her; the one who gives happiness and joys to all? There is no good that does not come from her. Therefore, one who lives in our Will is not subject to discouragement or fear. Distrust just doesn't find its way in, because the creature possesses everything. She feels as though she were the owner of everything and she takes what she wants. Her life is nothing other than our love and Will, to the extent that she even suffers our same love follies, and would be happy to give her life for anyone, to give us the glory of making our Will known."

After this, I was feeling concerned for these blessed writings here, and for the insistence of my beloved Jesus in wanting me to keep writing: after so many sacrifices, where will they end up? And my Jesus, interrupting my thinking, told me: "My daughter, do not trouble yourself. I will be their vigilant custodian, they cost me too much. They cost Me my Will that enters these writings as primary life. I could call them 'Testament of Love which my Will does for the creatures'. It donates Itself and calls them in Its heritage, but with such supplicant, attractive, loving modes that only the hearts of stone will not be moved to compassion and will not feel the need to receive such a great good. Therefore these writings are full of Divine Lives which cannot be destroyed. If anyone tried to do so, the same would happen to him as to one who would try to destroy Heaven. Offended, It would fall back upon him, from every side, annihilating him under Its blue vault; or, as to one trying to destroy the Sun, which would laugh at him and burn him up; or, as to another one would want to destroy the waters of the sea, and be drowned by them. It would take too much to touch what I made you write on my Will. I can call this a new living and speaking Creation: it will be the last display of my Love to the human generations.

You must know that, at each word I have you write on my Fiat, I double my love for you and for those who will read them, to make them remain embalmed by my love. Therefore, as you write, you give me the space to love you more; I see the great good these writings will do for you. I feel each one of my words and the palpitating lives of the creatures who will know the goodness of my word, forming within themselves the life of my Will. So, the interest is all Mine, and you, leave everything to Me. You must know that these writings came out of the center of the great Sun of my Will, whose rays are full of the truths coming from this center, and embrace all times, all centuries, all generations.

This great wheel of light fills Heaven and earth, and, through light, it knocks at every heart; praying, begging them to receive the palpitating life of my Fiat, which our Paternal goodness condescended and deigned to dictate from within Its center with the most unusual, charming, affable, sweet modes, and with such a great love, as to seem almost incredible - to astound the very Angels.

Each word can be called a 'portent of love', one greater than the other. Therefore trying to touch these writings is wanting to touch Myself, the center of my love, the loving finesses with which I love creatures. I will know how to defend Myself and confound anyone who would slightly disapprove of even one word of what is written on my Divine Will. Therefore, continue to listen to Me, my daughter; do not obstruct my love, do not tie my arms by rejecting back into my womb what you keep writing. These writings cost me too much. They cost me as much as Myself. Therefore, I will take so much care of them that I will not allow even a word to be lost."

The human will, united to the Divine Will, can also do prodigies, but without the Divine Will, it is like a poor cripple. One who lives in the Divine Will acquires the conquering act.

I am always in the arms of the Divine Will. Its light puts to flight the night of my will; Its beauty enraptures me; Its love chains me so much that I can't find the way to get out of Its womb of light. I don't know why, but I was scared and afraid of my will. And my dear Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: "My blessed daughter, the human will, together with my Will, can do prodigies too. However, without my Will it is a poor cripple, completely unable to help herself. Without my Will, it remains like a pupil without his master. Poor him! Without his master he will always remain ignorant, with neither science nor art, incapable of earning even a piece of bread for living. The human will without my Will is, again, like a person with legs but no feet; arms without hands; eyes without pupils; head with no reason. Poor creature! What an abyss of miseries in she finds herself! One would say: 'It would be better if she was never born'. So, the most terrible and frightening thing is, for her, not living united with my Will; all the misfortunes just fall upon her. But, if she is united with my Will, she will have, inside of It, her Master at her disposal, who will teach her the highest and most difficult sciences, the most beautiful art, so much as to become a portent of science on earth and in Heaven.

The human will, together with Mine, will have human legs and divine feet, which will make it run on the way of good without ever tiring. It will have human arms and divine motion, providing the virtue for doing the greatest works, which make it most like its Creator. With our divine motion it will embrace Eternity, it will keep us always courted and tightly close to its heart. United to our Will it will have a human mouth, but word and voice will be divine. Oh! how well We will speak of our Supreme Being. In sum, it will have the pupil of our eye so that, looking at all created things, it will recognize in them our life, our love, and the way to love us. United to our Will, it will have a divine mind, it will feel a sort of innate knowledge, which will form the man in order, all in the order of his Creator. Everything will turn into good, or better still, there is no good he will not possess by living in our Will. Our Will means the true failure of all evils, of all misfortunes, and It calls back to life all goods, since It possesses their source.

Furthermore, for one who lives in our Will, each motion, breath, heartbeat, anything she can do, are continuous conquests for her: divine conquests. I can say that, by living in my Will, she breathes with my breathing, moves at my motion, beats with my eternal heartbeat. Therefore she acquires the conquering act in each of her acts. All this is given to her with justice and exuberant love, since by living in our Will, not giving life to her will anymore, she has to be in the Celestial region by right to delight and enjoy our delightful Will. Now, in order to live off of our Will on earth, the poor daughter deprives herself of the joys of Heaven: this is the most heroic act, the most intense love, by which all Heaven, our Divinity and the Queen of Heaven, remain wounded. And We love the heroism of this creature. Oh! how much all of us love her! So our love, which lets itself be won by anybody, surrenders to each of her breaths, to every little motion. If she thinks, looks and speaks with a conquering divine act, the conquests are innumerable. We feel that it is not the creature who breathes and moves, but We Ourselves, giving the value that Our breath and motion contain, which is the highest that could possibly be conceived. Therefore, this creature is the conqueror of our life and acts. This happy creature, with her conquering act, becomes our continuous expression of love, our very happiness, our rest. Her conquests are continuous seals on our decree of the coming of the Kingdom of Our Will on earth. These conquests shorten the time, and, even more, our operating life is not a stranger on earth anymore, but it already exists, having formed its kingdom in this lucky creature. Therefore, be attentive; never stop, and I will take everything into account, even your breath, to love you more and to make you do many conquests, one more beautiful than the other.”

Then He added: “My daughter, as the creature donates her will to me in order to live in Mine, I too, give her my Will. But do you know what my Will does before donating Itself ? It pours into the act of the creature and embellishes it, forming its day, sanctifying it, inserting Its divine joys, and then locking Itself inside the act of the creature. As my Fiat operates in this act, all created things receive a new life, a new creation. They feel renewed in beauty, love and joy of their Creator, and as the creature does her divine act, it remains as her own, and everybody is attentive to see what the creature is going to do with this act. Since it encloses all, they too feel enclosed in it. Then, what does the happy creature do? She enjoys it, kissing and hugging it, and, knowing that such a great act cannot be only for herself. In her emphasis of love and joy, she says: ‘Adorable Will. You gave to me Divine Will, and Divine Will I give back to You, to render back to You the appreciation, thanksgiving, glory, joy and love that You gave to me; I am incapable of containing them’. This act runs to all, sanctifying, embellishing, giving happiness and honor to all. This is the most beautiful act the creature can give to me. Nobody can equal this act: to give My Will in order to have It returned, and to give It back, yet again.”

How true love wants to find itself in the loved one. How Our Lord formed many lives to let Himself be found. Our field. How knowledge opens all the doors between God and the creature.

My poor mind is under the empire of the Fiat, which, pulling it to Itself, makes it follow all It did for love of the creatures. While I was following the acts of Redemption, my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness told me: “Daughter of my Will, my love feels the need to open up to one who loves me, and confide to her my most intimate secrets. True love has this virtue of breaking any secret, because it wants to find in the loved one anything It possesses: its own love, its own joys, its same qualities. Love wants to find itself in the loved one. Know my daughter, as I came on earth, my love never gave me rest. As soon as I was conceived, I began to form many ways, which serve to help the creatures to come to me. As I was forming these ways, I stretched them but without detaching myself from them; I remained as the center from which each of them started. Therefore, every act, word, thought and step were ways of light, sanctity, love, virtue and heroism which I was forming so that, in every act the creature does, she might find the way to come to me.

At the head of these innumerable ways I put my Will as Queen, while I put Myself in waiting at every cross road to receive her in my arms; but many times I wait in vain. My love does not give me peace or rest, so I put myself on her way in order to reach her, at least half way; and if I find her, I invest the act of the creature so I Myself become her act and her way. Then, with exuberant love, I cover her, hiding her in my love. I cover her with my very acts, to the extent that I find myself in her, and I carry her to keep her safe in the arms of my Will. Therefore, every thought of the creature has the way to my thought; every word, every work has the way of my works, thoughts and steps. If she suffers she has the way and life of my sufferings. If she wants to love me she has the way of my love.

I surrounded creatures with so many of my ways that they can't escape me; and if someone does escape me, I become delirious, I run, I fly, to reach him. I stop only when I find him and I enclose him in my ways so as not to let him go again.

My coming on the earth has been nothing other than the outpouring of my love, repressed for many centuries. It was for this love, reaching excesses, that I formed the new creation - even overcoming it, in the variety of my works and the intensity of my love. But my love is still repressed, and to vent it, I want to give my will as Life, to give creatures the greatest good I can give, and to receive the great glory of having the children of my Will in Our Kingdom. As the creature enters our Will, our joy is such that she gives us the field on which to repeat in her all we have done in the Creation and Redemption. Our love wants to see in action, as if they were being created, Heaven stretching out, the Sun resplendent of light, the winds blowing continuously (within those who live in our Will) waves of grace and love, seas murmuring love, glory, adoration to their Creator. In action, my Will repeats the descent of the Word, and my Will is the repeater of all that my Humanity did in the creature.

So we remain always in the act of operating in her. We never stop, because nothing can possibly be missing in the one living in our Will. Our very acts will be our Throne, our court and the very life of the creature. Our love for her seems almost unbelievable. We are all eyes over her, to see whether she is enclosing all and how many times. Because we love her too much, we keep repeating our operating act, placing new beauty and new sanctity over the masterpieces we've done for her. We like to give to her always, keeping her busy under the rain of our operating acts, to give her the occasion to receive more love and to love us more. Therefore, live always in our Will and you will feel in It the continuous outpouring of our love - our operating act - which not only will repeat our works in action but will also add new things to astonish Heaven and earth."

After this, He added: "My daughter, everybody lives in my Will. If they did not, they just wouldn't find a space in which to live. But, who feels our Divine Life? Who feels surrounded by our sanctity? Who feels the joy of being touched by our creative hands to be embellished from our very beauty? Who feels drowned inside our love? (answer): the one who wants to live in our Will. Not the one who is there by necessity of Creation, merely because of our immensity which involves everything and everyone. These creatures are there without knowing us, like real usurpers of our goods; like disloyal, ungrateful, degenerate children of their Father. Because they do not know us, they do not love us. They cannot find in themselves a place for our sanctity - our love. Their souls are incapable of receiving our ever increasing beauty. They give us nothing, not even our rights as Creator, and while they live together in our Divine sea, they are as if far away from us. By not knowing us, they build the bars, they shut the doors: they have broken any communication between them and Us.

It is knowledge which is the first joining link between them and us. It is wanting to live in our Will that takes away the bars and opens the doors, to let them come into our arms and delight with us. It is loving us that makes us pour rivers of our love and graces, to the point of covering them with our divine qualities. Without the knowledge, we cannot give anything, neither can they receive. One who lives in our Will, instead knows us. As she enters It, she gives her kiss to her Daddy, she hugs us and surrounds us with her little love so we give her our seas of love, and she exchanges her kisses with all Heaven. We can say that the celebrations are opened between us - between Heaven and earth. We Ourselves call her blessed and we tell her: you are the most happy and fortunate creature, because you live in our love, covered by our arms and under the rain of our graces."

How everything triumphs in the Divine Volition: joys and conquests. The Divine Will as Mother; example of the sea and those who live in it.

I am in the arms of the Divine Will, and I can say that I spend every day in Its sea. Anything It did both in Creation and in Redemption (all Its acts) comes toward me, telling me: 'We are already yours. See, with how much love the Creator donated us to you. And you - insert your little love, so that the Creative love may love in the created love, and the created love may love in the Creative love, and both of them may be victorious'. But as I was following the acts of the Divine Volition, I wanted to take all Heaven in one jump, locking myself in the celestial region never to leave again. Oh! How heavy is this exile for me! If it wasn't for the Divine Fiat, which lets flow Its rivulets of joys and Celestial happiness, I don't know how I could bear it! and I felt embittered. So my beloved Jesus, who watches over me in everything and wants me occupy myself with nothing other than living in His Will, having compassion for me and sweetly scolding me, said: "My good daughter, why do you embitter yourself? Bitterness clashes against my Will, because It is the source of all the sweetness, triumphs and conquests. If the creatures feel bitterness it is because they don't live in my Will, and their will tyrannizes them so they suffer from bitterness and remain defeated. Therefore, courage, my daughter. You must know that, as the creature lives in my Will, she feels the need for her Heavenly Fatherland. She feels It already her own, so, depriving herself of the Heavenly Glory for love of me, I feel as if she would give back to me everything, in each of her acts: she gives me all Heaven, the whole ocean of joys and happiness contained in the Celestial regions. Wouldn't you give this content to your Jesus? Moreover, if I don't finish forming in you the Kingdom of my Will, how can I transmit It to the others? So, please, just let Me Do."

After this, He added: "My daughter, my love toward one who lives in my Will is such that I behave as a mother who had a crippled son, but possesses the power to give her son the rarest beauty. This mother lies over him, warming him with her heat. By kissing and hugging him over and over again, she restores the use of his limbs. She makes him beautiful, and, looking at him, as the fruit of her maternal love, she feels happy. However, the mother doesn't really have this power, so she will always be unhappy with her son. But what the Mother doesn't have, I do have. My love is such that, as she enters into my Will, I lay over her, warming her with my love, to call her to new life; I kiss her again and again, I squeeze her to my heart to remove any evil that may shade her and take away from her divine freshness and beauty; then I blow, sending her my recreating breath to regenerate her into new life and to give back to her the rarest beauty. Not satisfied yet, I form the throne of all my works and I put my Will on It, like a King on his Throne, reigning and dominating in this creature. Then, I can say: 'what else could I have done that I did not do? Could I, perhaps, have loved you more, and did not?'

You have to know that my love reaches the point of excess: as the creature does her own acts in my Will, I call in each act all of our acts - all possible imaginable acts that we have done - even the very generation of the Word, done by the Holy Spirit; the whole Creation and my Incarnation in time. Everything - in that act we enclose everything - to be able to say: 'It is our act, a complete act, nothing can miss'. And the creature must be able to say: 'In your Will everything is mine, and I can give you everything, even Your very Self'. Therefore our glory and love echoes in all our works, gathering everything, it pours even into our divine womb. Oh! How sweet it is to hear everything resound with 'Glory and love to our Creator'. But, who gives us the opportunity to receive so much glory? The one who lives in our Will."

After a while He added: "My daughter, as the creature calls my Will in her acts - in her prayer - my Will repeats that act together with her, praying together with the creature; and since Its immensity is everywhere, the creation, the Sun, all Heaven, the Angels and the Saints feel within themselves the strength of that creative prayer, and all of them pray. The prodigy of this prayer is omnipotent and it involves all, giving itself to all. Only those who, ungrateful, don't want to receive it, remain without its effects. Therefore, my Will possesses the virtue of prayer. Oh! how beautiful it is to see It praying in Its divine way, and with Its creative virtue which imposes itself on all, making everything pray. This prayer imposes itself on our divine attributes, making us pour rains of mercy, graces, forgiveness and love. It is sufficient to know that it is Our prayer, to say: 'It can give everything'. Now, you must know that, whether the creature does or does not do our Will, whether she lives in It or not, she is already in Its immensity; or better still, my Will is life of her life and act of her acts, and It continuously assists her with Its creative and preserving act. Therefore, one who lives in It, can feel Its Life, Its power, Its sanctity and how much I love her.

It happens to her as to the fish who lives in the sea and who knows it. She feels this divine sea that is her bed carrying her in the arms of its Celestial waters. It feeds her, it makes her consume herself within it. It amuses and embellishes her, and if she wants to sleep, it forms her bed in its depths; permits nobody to awaken her. It even sleeps together with her. Such is the love of My Will for the one who lives inside Its sea - and who knows it - that It does in her all the arts It wants to do. If It wants to think It thinks in her; if It wants to look It looks through her eyes; if It wants to speak It speaks, keeping her in continuous communication, telling her many of the wonders of our Eternal love. If It wants to work It works; if It wants to walk It walks; if It wants to love It loves. My Fiat is always busy with her, and she not only recognizes It, but she never leaves It alone. She sinks more and more in Its sea, because she knows that if she get out of the sea she'll lose her life. The creatures that live in our Will are our Celestial residents, and with their love, they delight in forming the waves of our sea, to amuse us and make us happy.

On the other hand, those who live in the immensity of our love, but do not know us, don't feel anything of this. They don't feel our Paternal attentions which press them to our womb. They live inside our sea as if they did not live at all - so unhappy - as if they were not our children. They are like strangers, and since We are not known, We are forced by their ingratitude not to tell them even a word, and to keep repressed inside Our womb the goods which We had to give them. And seeing our poor children dissimilar from us, only because they don't know us, is a suffering for us. Even if We gave to them, it would happen as the Gospel says: don't give pearls to the pigs, because they don't know what they are, and they would cover them with mud and trample on them. Therefore, it is knowledge that allows creatures to understand where We are, with Whom they live, what they can receive and what they have to do. So, those who do not know are the true blind because they can't see anything, no matter how many goods are placed around them: they are the vagabonds of Creation."

How, with true love, anything one wants the other does too. Every act of Divine Will is a way being opened between Heaven and earth. The breath of God in the creature.

I am always in the arms of the Divine Volition, and as I was writing I felt the weight of the great sacrifice of writing, and I offered it to my dear Jesus, to obtain that the Divine Will may be known, wanted and loved by all. Oh! How much I would give my life to let It be known by all. Since I was suffering, with difficulty I continued to write, and my sweet Jesus, to give me strength, told me: "My blessed daughter, courage, I am with you; I am so pleased when you write that, for each word you write, I give you a kiss, a hug and a Divine Life of Mine, as a gift. Do you know why? Because I see, copied in these writings our Life of Eternal love; the copy of our operating Divine Will. Also, Our love, repressed for six thousand years, bursts out, and finds relief for our flames, in making known how much it loves the creature; to the extent that it wants to give her its own Will as life. This, so that on both sides we can say: what is mine is yours.

Only then true love is satisfied, when it can say: 'we love each other with equal love. What I want she wants. If there were any disparity of love, it would make both of us unhappy, and if one wanted something and the other something else, the union, the love would cease'. Since my love is true love, knowing that the creature has a limited love and will, we can say that we love each other with one love, that we have only one Will. If one doesn't become the will of the other, true love doesn't exist and cannot arise. Therefore, you should be happy to be used for the outpouring of my love - for many centuries repressed - and for the refreshment of my flames which are such as to make me delirious. So, let's love each other with one love and let's say together: what you want I want. Say: Jesus, dissolve my will into Yours, and give me Yours to live."

Then, after we promised each other to live of one Will, my beloved Jesus added with more tenderness: "My good daughter, you must know that the power of each act done in my Will is such that it opens a way to Heaven for oneself, and others who follow. Therefore every act is a way that leads to Heaven. All these ways, coming down from Heaven, braid the earth they spread everywhere and become safe paths and safe guides for anyone who wants to enter, guiding her up to the womb of her Creator. See then, what an act in my Will can do: it is one more way which opens between Heaven and earth. How beautiful it is living in my Will. The act is not only a way but, as the soul is about to do it, the divine breath descends into it and, blowing, fills all creation with its omnipotent breath. Everybody feels the refreshment, the love and the power of the creative breath, which has the power to enclose everyone and everything, embalming with Its divine and Celestial air My operating Will, within Ourselves as much as in the creature. It makes wonders to the extent that It can say: 'I am a divine act, I can do anything.'

There is no greater honor that we can give to the creatures, and no glory we can receive from the creatures that makes us more glorified, happy and triumphant, than letting our Will operate in their act. We feel locked in her act, while still being free to operate in the human circle as only God can. Doing this is an exuberant love for us: we love our act in which we see the action of our power and unreachable beauty, our sanctity, love and goodness, covering all, kissing and embracing everybody in our divine qualities: how not to love such a great act? We love the one who called us and gave us her act, allowing us do an act so great: how not to love her? She, who served as our bearer, to operate so many of our wonders. What wouldn't we give to her, and who could ever refuse her anything? It is sufficient to tell you that one who lives in our Will leaves everyone behind. She is first in sanctity, beauty and love. We can feel our echo, our breath in hers; she doesn't pray for, but takes what she wants from our divine treasures. Therefore, cherish always in your heart to live in our Divine Will."

After this He added: "My daughter, our Will circulates in all created things as blood in the veins. The primary act, the motion, the heat is always Its own. But if my Will finds a creature who recognizes It and lives in It - while It keeps circulating in everything - It concentrates in this creature, forming Its own support to operate Its marvels; and while, with power and immensity, It never leaves anyone, It opens Its communications with this creature for the benefit of those who will have ears to listen to them, intelligence to understand them, heart to receive them and love them. In this creature, It will deposit Its graces and Its keenness of love, while the human will living in It will serve as the room in which to continue Its operating act, forming Its center - Its Divine chamber - for Its continuous expression of love. As the creature does her acts in my Will, she is reborn in God and God in her, and these births will make new horizons arise: more beautiful Heavens, brighter Suns, new divine knowledge. For every additional act she does in our Will, we feel more moved to make Ourselves known, we feel more confident in placing our trust in her, since our Will is in her. She will know how to keep with jealousy what we tell her and what we give her. Therefore, in every new birth she will rise to new love, new sanctity, new beauty. Then, looking at her in a delirium of love, we say to her: 'our Will makes you more and more beautiful, more and more saint, and the more you live in It the more you grow and rise again in our Divine Being. For every new act you do, our Will imposes Itself to make us give you what is ours, and to tell you new secrets, grant you new discoveries of our love.

If we did not always give to this creature, we would feel motion lacking to our Divine life. This cannot be. Neither can she live without receiving, otherwise she would feel lacking the food of love, the tenderness of her Heavenly Father. Therefore, be attentive, and recognize that you are being carried by the arms of the Divine Paternity."

How beautiful it is to see the creature in the Divine Will. How created things await It, to love their Creator. The exuberant love of God for those who live in It.

My flight in the Divine Will continues. It is as if Its power and immensity feel the need of the company of Its beloved creature to take her everywhere It is. As It finds Its works, It pauses to tell her the different story of each work and the diversity of love which animates them. It delights so much in manifesting the source, the specialty of Its works that, not only does It donate these works to those who listen, but It celebrates the works together with them. Now, while my mind was surprised and enchanted, my always adorable Jesus, surprising me, told me: "My blessed daughter, there isn't enchantment more beautiful, delighting our supreme Being, than seeing the creature enter our Will. As she enters, she takes us, as if in her arms, and she clothes herself, inside and outside with our divine Being; we, in return, take her in our arms to enjoy her. Oh! how beautiful it is to see her, little but beautiful, little but powerful, little but wise, little but strong; to the extent that she can carry her Creator. There is nothing in which she is not similar to us. So, just by entering our Will, she acquires and wears our divine qualities. With the right given by us she takes ownership of all, giving herself to all, loving all, wanting to be loved by all, wanting love for us from all. Seeing a creature who wants everybody to love us is the purest joy for us, the most beautiful, the greatest one. We can really hear our echo: 'we want everyone to love us - we love everyone.' And if many don't love us we feel offended and deprived of our rights as Creator - Father - Who loves His children very much. Therefore, we feel recreated by this creature, finding in her our same follies of love: how not to love her? To her our first kiss, to her our squeezing hugs. The love tricks we make up for her are unheard-of, and the more we love her, the more we want to love her."

Jesus kept silent for a while. Then He added: "My daughter, all created things await you, but do you know why? Because, thanks to my Fiat which animates all, they feel their union with you, their inseparability from you; and since the creature has the supremacy, they all await you in their midst, so that together with the creature they can glorify and love us, each one according to the office assigned by us. Each created thing possesses the fullness of its own good. The Sun possesses the fullness of the light, and each act of light it produces, each effect and good it unleashes from its womb of light, is like a continuous little sonata of glory and love that it gives to us. But it doesn't want to give it alone, rather, it wants the one for whom it has been created. Only then are we truly loved and glorified: when the creature animated by our Will, flows into that act of light, loving and glorifying us with the love and glory of light. So we feel our purpose - the reason for which we created light - when we find the creature hidden inside that light, loving us with the fullness of the light and heat. We find in her love that wounds us, love that sweetens us, love that says, always, 'love.' Therefore we placed the Sun in the power of the creature, to love us. But if we don't find the creature in the created things, we are not happy. They remain like instruments with no sound or life; at the most we love and glorify Ourselves, but it is not the creature loving and glorifying us. So our purpose fails.

The wind is waiting for you, for your voice to flow in its whispers, waiting to feel your whispering love toward its Creator. Oh! how honored it feels when all see, in the impetuosity of the wind, your impetuous love - almost prevailing - towards the One Who created it: its blows; its breaths invested by your 'I love you'; and as we feel your love breathing, we breathe love to you, to be loved more. The air that all breathe is waiting for you, to be animated by your voice. So, in the air everyone inhales, they receive the 'I love you' of their Creator; in the air they exhale, your 'I love you' runs, to bring us, within its womb, every life, every breath changed into as many loving voices. All created things wait for you, to receive the new life of love brought by the soul who lives in my Will. Even the Saints, the Angels, the very Queen of Heaven await, to receive the freshness and the joy of the love operating in the creature. Although the soul is on earth, she lives with their same Will, and they are as if watered by the love of this happy creature. They feel the new love from which my Will has filled her, investing all; they feel the joy of the conquering love she bears. My daughter, what order, what harmony one who lives in my Will establishes between Heaven and earth! All her acts, motions and thoughts turn into voices, sounds and harmonies which, investing all created things, make everyone say they love us; and as we remain loved, all of them together with us are loved with a new love. The whole Heaven remains enraptured in seeing the wonders, the sweet enchantment of those who live in our divine Fiat.

Now you must know that my love is not satisfied if I don't do and give new surprises of love to one who lives in my Will, and if I don't add new things to reveal to her. So, my daughter, my Celestial Father generated me, when I loved you, and I loved Him; and in that love I loved you too, because my Will was bringing you along, always present. I generate continuously, and in the ardor of our love as Father and Son, the Holy Spirit proceeded. In that ardor I also loved you from a continuous love. I created the whole Creation, and for each thing I was creating, I loved you first, then I created it, laying it to your service. Even in the love between Me and my Heavenly Mother, I love you. Oh! how much I loved you in the Incarnation in her Virginal womb. I loved you in each breath, each motion, each tear. My Will had you present so that I loved you and you received - as a gift from Me - my breathing, my tears, my motion. My love for the creature who was going to live in my Will reached the extent that, even in doing graces and in loving my Saints - in that same love - she was enclosed. I can say that I loved you always, I loved you in everyone and in everything. I loved you at all times. I loved you in every place. I loved you everywhere.

Oh! if everybody knew what it means to live in my Will, and the seas of love and graces by which they are inundated! A God Who loves with love always new. As in our Divine Being we keep our divine and predominant passion - that the creature live in our Will - so it would become the creatures' predominant passion, and so that at any cost, they would give their life to live in that Fiat that loves them so much."

Difference between Divine Will and love. How one who lives in God's Will receives the deposit of love of all created things and forms the shelf for the acts of Our Lord. Appeal to all.

I feel invested by the Fiat. It seems to me It calls me in all created things, to give me Its love so that I could love It more. But I was thinking to myself: what is the difference between love and Divine Will? And my adorable Jesus, repeating His short little visit, told me: "Daughter of my Will, my Will is life, my love is food; life cannot be without food, while if there were food with no life taking it, it would be useless, and God does not know how to do useless things. Life makes food arise. So, both of them are necessary: life cannot be formed, neither can it grow nor develop its great works without food. Food would remain without works, without giving itself in marvelous things, if it didn't have a life which receives it.

Furthermore, my Will is light while love is heat; they are inseparable. Light cannot stay without heat, neither can heat be with no light. They seem to be twins born of one birth; however, the first one to be born is the light and then heat arises; so, the heat is son of the light. In the same way, my Will holds Its primary act, while love remains Its favorite daughter - Its inseparable first born. If my Will does not want, does not move, does not want to work, love would remain hidden inside its Mother, doing nothing. If instead my Will wants to operate, love runs, flies, is all attentive in works and steps, without ever tiring. It is this way also with the creature. If she lets my Will move her, she will have true love, she will be still, constant, unshakable in the good, but if she is not animated by my Will, her love will be as a painted love, with no life - inconstant. Poor love, without the life of my Will! The good and the works it will do will be exposed to the cold, the frost of the night and the burning sun, which have the virtue to burn and dry even the most beautiful works. See then, daughter, the difference between my Will and love: the daughter cannot be born without the Mother. Therefore, cherish the possession of its life in your heart if you don't want to be sterile in the good, with no generations to populate Heaven and earth."

After this He added: "My blessed daughter, living in my Will puts everything in order, and makes known the good that all created things possess - the love with which they are invested. They pour themselves on the creature, to love her with a distinct love which each created thing possesses. Therefore, in one who lives in our Will, we find the love with which we created Heaven; the variety of our distinct love with which we dotted It with stars. Each star is a different love and we see it sealed in the creature. As she loves us with so many different varieties of love - as many as are the stars - we feel our immense, infinite love being crowned by the crown of the love of the creature. Oh! how happy we feel in finding in her the love that crowns ours; so we redouble, in return, our love in her, to make her love us more, more than Heaven with all Its stars. We find in her the love with which we created the Sun. The Sun is one, but the variety of the effects and goods It produces are innumerable. Each effect is a distinct love: it can be a kiss, a caress of light from the Creator to His creature, a loving hug, or many acts of life, inside of which we make arise those effects that can be called 'food' for the creatures. So we find in one who lives in our Will the love and the variety of effects with which we created the Sun. Oh!, how we feel the return of love, kisses, hugs - of the variety of effects of love that the light possesses. And we feel our inaccessible light as being crowned by her crown of light and love. What doesn't our Will let us find in one who lives in It?

It makes us find the love with which we created the wind, the air, the sea, the tiny flower in the field, everyone and everything; and It gives us back this love, redoubled, and we redouble again this love with which we created all things. Our love then makes a feast, feeling loved - returned - and it prepares new love surprises and forms the operating creation in the creature. This love binds all Heaven and earth, it flows everywhere and becomes like cement, reuniting the division caused by lack of love between God and the creature.

My love for one who lives in my divine Will is such that I let her do whatever I do; I give her the right over my acts as if they were hers. And I stay there, anxiously waiting that she take my steps to let her walk, my hands to let her work, my voice to let her speak; so much so, that if sometimes she stops using me my love reproaches her sweetly, and with tenderness I say: 'Today you didn't let me walk, my steps were there waiting for you, to walk in you, but you stopped them; my works today are suspended because you didn't give me the space to operate in your hands; I have been silent because you didn't let me speak in your voice. See, I even keep my tears on my face, because you did not take them to use them, to wash yourselves, to be refreshed in my love, to take a bath for those who offend me; so, I still feel my face wet from the crying. My pains are without kisses today, they are not softened by those who love me, so I feel them all embittered. Therefore, take all from me, do not leave anything. Let my Being with all my acts lean on you - on all your acts. So I will call you my support and my refuge. I will put in you - on the shelves of my Will reigning in you - all the things I did and suffered while on earth. I will multiply them, increase them a hundredfold. I will make them rise continuously to new life, so that you may take for yourself whatever you want, giving myself to all, so that everybody may know me and love me.'

Further, you must know that, as the creature enters my Will to do her acts, she roll-calls all created things, the Saints as well as the Angels, so that each of them may be enclosed in that act. Oh! how beautiful it is to feel that - in that act - all love me, recognize me, adore me, and do the same thing. My Will calls everyone, It imposes Itself on all, and all remain happy and honored to be enclosed in that act done in the Divine Will - to love with new love, and with the love of all, the One Who loved them so much."

How in Heaven there are different roles: each Blessed will have a God all for himself. How Jesus loved us in all created things. Spontaneity of Jesus in the Good.

My poor mind is often invested by the ardor of love of the Divine Will. Its marvels are always surprising, one more beautiful than the other. Then my adorable Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, with a love that enraptured my little soul, told me: "My little daughter of my Will, the prodigies, the marvels, the enchanting scenes I make in one who lives in my Will are various and so beautiful and enchanting that nobody can imitate them. You must know that in Heaven there are innumerable tasks, but those prepared for the souls who will have lived more beautifully and distinctly than others will possess divine enchanting harmonies and scenes - joys always new, that will arise from the depth of my Will in which they lived. They will have in their power joys and happiness, always new. They will form them in their power - as many as they want - since my Fiat has the virtue of creating always new joys. These tasks will be the new enchantment of that Celestial residence.

Now I want to tell you of another surprise, an even more beautiful one: in Heaven each Blessed will have me inside of themselves - have me as his own Creator, King, Father, Glorifier; but he will also have Me outside of himself - really close to him - as if I would carry him in my arms. We will love together and delight together. I will not be a God for all, but a God for each one. Better still, he will keep Me bilocated inside and outside of himself; and I will possess him inside and outside of Myself. They will possess Me inside and outside, as if I was entirely for each and every one of them. With one God for all, happiness would not be full. Someone would be close - someone else far away. Some on the left, some on the right. Therefore, some could enjoy my caresses, some could not. Some would feel more loved and delighted by my close presence, someone else would not. But by being inside and outside of each and everyone, we will never lose sight of each other. We will enjoy love closely - not from far away - and the more we will have loved and known each other on earth, the more we will love each other in Heaven. Moreover, what I will give to those who lived in my Will on earth will be so great that all the Blessed will enjoy doubled happiness.

It is true that I have my Throne, from which seas of joys arise, widening the whole Celestial Fatherland, but my love is not satisfied if I don't bilocate Myself and descend in order to be one on one - single to single - with my beloved creature; so that we may love each other more and delight together. Also, how could I live far away from one who lives in my Will? If between us there is the inseparability of Will and Love - if one is the love with which we love each other, and one is the Will with which we operate - how could I possibly live even a step away from her? Furthermore, you must know that one who lives in our Will cannot be separated from anyone - even from Our created things, since as she does her act in It, she calls and embraces everyone in her act, imposing herself on all by doing what she does. Therefore, in one act done in my Will I receive all, even my own Creation, to love me and glorify me."

After this He added: "My daughter, I am like a King who has many Queens, and they love each other with such love that one cannot live without the other. This King forms many sumptuous palaces, puts music and the most delightful scenes in them, to make his queen happy, and himself together with her. Then I bilocate Myself for each one so that all can possess Me, being delighted by my possession. The King cannot bilocate himself to make his Queens happy and he has to content himself with being now with one, now with another. This makes their love unhappy and they feel tyrannized by a broken love, never completely enjoyed. And if I did not possess the virtue to give Myself to each one of them as if I was only for her, my love would make me unhappy, having to leave the creature without Me even for one instant. I am, instead, a King Who always courts His Queens, and they court Me. If this were not the case, the fullness of joy would be lacking in the Celestial residence."

Then I continued my round in the divine Fiat, and I paused on what Jesus did while on earth. My sweet Jesus added: "My daughter, it is hard for me to be silent with one who lives in my Will. My love always wants to say and reveal where it reaches and in how many ways it loves her. Now, you must know that while I was on earth, there was not one thing that I did without looking for my beloved creature - kissing her, squeezing her to My Heart, looking at her with Paternal tenderness. So, if I met with the Sun, I found my beloved creatures in its light, since, having created it for them, by right I could claim my lordship in its light, and nobody can claim to be lord of a good if he cannot look inside of it.

Therefore I found my creatures inside the Sun, and I kissed them. I hugged them and I squeezed them to My Heart and, keeping them also inside of me, I kissed them outside and inside of me, squeezing them so tightly as to render them part of my own Life. If I was in the wind, I ran to kiss her; if I drank some water, even in this I could find her; and oh!, with how much love I looked at them and kissed them. Even in the air I breathed I met them all, feeling their breath, and in every breath I buried them in kisses of love. Therefore, in every created thing, in the starry Sky, in the sea, in the plants, in the flowers - in everything - I met my beloved creatures, to redouble in them my love and make them feast, to hug them again and tell them: 'your unhappiness is over, because I have come on earth from Heaven to make you happy. I am the One Who has taken your unhappiness upon Myself - you may be certain. A God who loves you will be your fortune, your defense, your powerful help.'

The most beautiful characteristic of my love is spontaneity; to the extent that in the very suffering they gave me during the Passion, I formed those pains in myself first - loving them, covering them with kisses - then I passed them to the minds of the creatures so that they would inflict them upon My Humanity. There was no pain given to me by the creatures that was not wanted by me first. The creatures came in secondary order, so my pains were soaked by my love, covered with my ardent kisses, and they possessed the creative virtue of making rise souls rise to love me. The truth can be seen in spontaneity, a forced love cannot be called true. It loses freshness, beauty and purity; and oh!, how inconstant and unhappy in the sacrifices it renders creatures. While it seems that they love, they are unhappy and embittered, since this a love forced either by necessity or by people from whom they cannot be freed: forced love makes slaves out of the poor creatures. My love, instead, was free. It was wanted by Me, neither did I need anybody: I loved, I sacrificed Myself to the extent of giving my life, because I wanted it. Therefore, when I see in the soul a spontaneous love, I feel enraptured and I say: 'my love and yours hold each other's hands, so we can love each other with one love.'"

After this He added: "My daughter, one who lives in my Will is kept in my divine room. She possesses all our goods; strength and light are in her power. On the other hand, one who does my Will forms the way to arrive to enter It. There are dangers on the way, and she has to be exposed to the cold and the frost. She won't find water ready to drink, good food to feed herself or a bed in which to rest; one can say she is like a poor wayfarer who never arrives at her home. What a difference there is between one who lives in my Will and one who does my Will! But it is still necessary to form the way - living resigned - doing my Will in all circumstances of life in order to be able to live in my Will. Here she will find her divine room, the center of her rest, the exile changed into Fatherland."

Exchange of Life between the Divine Will and the human Victory of Jesus. There is no greater offense than subtracting oneself from the Divine Will. The speaking Creation. Divine heartbeat and breath. Necessity for God to speak to the creature.

I feel the need to give myself continuously to the Divine Will. I am like the little girl who looks for the lap of her Mother to take shelter in It, and stays there safe - all abandoned in Her arms. But as I was thinking of this, my beloved Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness told me: "My little daughter of my Will, you look for your shelter in me and I look for my shelter in you, to enjoy my creature and rest in her, so that her love may defend me from all the offenses of the creatures. You have to know that, each time the creature enters my Will to do her acts, I give her my divine Life, while she gives me her human life. Therefore she remains provisioned with a divine life for each act done in my Will, and I remain honored and glorified, surrounded by many human lives, since one act in my Will must be complete. I give all Myself, not keeping anything of my Supreme Being, and she gives Me all of her human being. What good does the creature not receive, then, by possessing many of my divine lives. As she keeps repeating her acts, so many of my Lives are added, and I give virtue to free her life to be able to say: 'so many lives I gave her, as many lives she gave me.'

I can say that I find all my satisfaction only when I see her giving me her life in every instant - giving her will. Seeing her giving me her human will is my greatest triumph and, taken by love, I sing my victory, victory that costs me my Life and a wait of around six thousand years, during which, with so many anxious bitter ardent sighs, I yearned for the return of the human will into mine. Having obtained it, I feel the need to rest and sing my victory. Therefore, there is no more beautiful joy that she can give me than living in my Will. And there is no greater pain she can give me than subtracting herself from It; I feel this offense coming in the Sun, in the wind, in Heaven - even in my womb: to see the great gift of the human will which I gave to the creature, and which was to serve for the exchange of love and life between me and her, being converted into a deadly weapon to wound me. What pain! Now, the soul who comes to live in my Will, makes such a harsh pain disappear. How then, could I not give all of Myself in her power, and give her what she wants?"

Then He added: "My love for who lives in my Fiat is such that, as the creature feels the need to breathe, eat, move, I feel the need to form one single life with her; since my Will, living in her, transforms her in my breath, my heartbeat, my motion, my food. See then, how much I need her permanent union with me and inside of me. Otherwise I would feel the breath, motion, heartbeat and food of my love missing from the whole of Creation. Oh! how bad I would feel. Since one who lives in my Will is inside our Supreme Being, she is the speaking, moving, palpitating Creation who, in the name of all created things, brings us the food of love which all should give us. We can say that Our love feeds all created things. Therefore we feel the need to receive the return of love - not to remain on an empty stomach - and only one who lives in our Will, who embraces all and loves us for all, can feed us with her love in return. How beautiful it is to see the creature picking up our love, spread through the whole Creation - even love which has not been taken because of human ingratitude. Then she brings it to us to give us the food of love in the name of everyone and everything, enchanting the whole Heaven; and We welcome her as the bearer of all our works, returning our love - in her we can repeat all our marvels."

Then, with more tender affection, He added: "My daughter, our love for one who lives in our divine Fiat is such that it is easier for a mother to separate herself from her daughter than for us to be away from this creature. We cannot do it. Our Will unites her to us and transforms her in us, making her want what we want, and do what we do. As soon as she enters It, my Will carries her everywhere, giving her a place in all created things, to keep her everywhere and always united, and to say: 'In how many ways do You love her?' It is impossible to be without her. In order to do it, we would have to separate ourselves from our Will, but we cannot do this either. Therefore, I give her her place in the starry Heaven. Oh! How beautiful it is to keep her with me in that blue vault, in the infinite extension of Heaven - no ending point can be seen. I tell her the story of our Eternal love which has no beginning, and can have no end, neither can it change at all. Since our love never ceases, we take the creature from all sides - from above, from below, from the right and from the left - to stud her with our love. Just as Heaven covers and hides the whole world under its star-dotted vault to keep it sheltered and covered, so our immutable love - beyond Heaven - keeps everyone covered and hidden in the Heaven of our love. We feel the need to tell the creature how much and in how many ways we love her, and, in order to be loved, she forms refreshment for our love. As she loves us - though she is small - she gives us a Heaven of love, and with her repeated acts of love, we feel as though studded by many stars which pour on us love love love.

See then, how necessary it is for our Heart to give her a place in every created thing; to tell her the distinct love story that each created thing contains. I give her the place in the Sun, and oh!, how many things I tell her about our Supreme Being - our inaccessible light - investing all with its ardent love; investing and then hiding, in every fiber of the heart - in every thought and word. With my light, my balm, I purify and embellish the creature, forming in her - with my light, brighter than the Sun - my life of love. And she feels my light. Through this light, she wants to enter into the most intimate hiding places of our Supreme Being, to love us and to be loved. How beautiful it is to find one who loves us. Our love finds its refuge, its rest, its expression, its return. Therefore, we give her a place everywhere, because in each created thing we have one of our love secrets to tell her. how many things we still have to say, and if the creature does not live in our Will, she won't understand us, forcing us to be silent.

Now you must know that, as the creature does her acts in my Will, many Suns arise, and since one act in my Will is so great that it cannot be without doing good to all, these rising Suns run in the middle of the peoples, bringing to some the kiss of light; to some strength; to some they put darkness to flight; to some they prepare the way; to some others they call to good with the voice of the source of light. An act in my Will just cannot be without producing great goods. As soon as the Sun rises at the horizon to become, with its light, light for every eye, it runs to mature the plant, give color to the flowers, purify the air - to give itself to all, almost renewing and strengthening the earth, forming its joy and feast. So, if it did not rise, the earth would wear mourning, bursting into tears. More than Sun is an act in my Will. Its light runs and benefits all, renewing and strengthening all in Its light, except those who would not want to receive it. And even if they did not want to receive it, they would be forced to receive the good of the light and of the Sun; forced to feel its heat by the empire of the light. Such is the empire of one act in my Fiat. It cannot be without operating prodigies of grace and immense goods. Therefore, one who lives in our Will does all. She embraces everyone and gives us everything. If we want love, she gives us love; if we want glory, she gives us glory; if we want to speak, we have one who listens; if we want to do great works, we have the one in whom to do them - who will give to us in return. This is why I want you always in our Will. Never leave It.”

August 12,1938

When the creature enters the Divine Will, Heaven lowers Itself and the earth rises to exchange the kiss of peace. The love of God in manifesting the truth. How everything becomes life. How all created things are members of Jesus. Varieties of love.

The Divine Will is always around me, wanting to invest my acts with Its light - to lay Its life in them. It seems to me that It is attentive to the extent of persecuting me with love and light, because It wants, in everything I do, that I ask for Its Life. Oh! how happy I am in feeling persecuted with love and light by the Supreme Fiat. Then my sweet Jesus, surprising me, said: “So you see, my daughter, in wanting that the creature live in my Will, my love reaches such an excessive point that I even persecute her with love and light. Love eclipses all evils, in such a way that, seeing only my Will, the creature abandons herself in It and makes Us do what We want. Love attracts her, delights her, so that she would let Us win. You must know that, as the creature enters our Will to form her act, Heaven lowers Itself while the earth rises. So they meet. What a happy encounter! Heaven, feeling transported to earth by the creative strength of the divine Fiat, kisses the earth - the human generations - and, at any cost, wants to give to them what it possesses; to content the Divine Volition which brought It on earth, because It wants to reign in all. As the earth is being raised to Heaven, the creatures feel an unknown strength, which leads to good; a Celestial air, which imposes itself on all, making them breathe a new life.

An act in my Will is almost incredible. These acts will form the new day. The human generations will feel as though being renewed through them, rejuvenated in good. They will form the disposition to dispose the human generations to receive their Life - to let It reign. These acts of the creature done in my Volition, will be the endowment, the potent preparation, the most effective means to obtain a good so great.” After this He added: “My daughter, Our love is almost unbelievable. When We have to manifest a truth regarding our Will, first We love it within Ourselves; We make it easier; We adapt it to the human intelligence, so that the creature can easily understand it and make it her own life. We provide it with our love, and then We make it known, as a sweetheart who wants to give himself to her - as life feeling the need to be formed in her. But not yet satisfied, We purify the human intelligence. We invest it with our light and We renew it, so that it may know Our truth, kiss It, enclose It within itself, and give It all the freedom to form Its life - remaining transformed in that Truth. So, each one of our truths brings our divine life into the creature as a lover that loves and wants to be loved. Our love is such that We adapt ourselves to the human conditions to facilitate this knowledge, since, if We know each other, it is easier to win the human will to Ourselves - it will have the interest in possessing its God. Without knowledge, the ways are closed, the communications broken, and we remain as the God far away from the creatures, even though we are inside and outside of them. And they remain far away from us. Nobody can possess a good without knowing it.

Therefore, We want to make known that everything becomes divine Life within one who lives in the Divine Will. In everything she does - thinking, speaking, working, walking, loving - my Fiat, possessing Its creative virtue, lays Its life down, and thinks, speaks, works, walks and loves; forming the [hoping] speaking Creation; using that creature to continue Its Creation, or to do even more beautiful things. So, Creation is not finished, but still continues in the souls who live in our will, and if the order, beauty and power of our works can be seen in the Creation, then the love, order and beauty of our creative virtue will be seen in the creature, repeating our divine Lives each time the creature gives us her acts to let us work. The creature is life. It operates differently than Creation. Therefore We feel an irresistible love to form our lives within her. Oh!, how We fling ourselves - how happy We are - how our love finds its rest and our Will Its completion, which is forming our life in her! The works and the steps of those who do not live in our Will are, instead, without life - like painted pictures which cannot receive any life. They can neither give life, nor can they produce any good: there cannot be life or good without my Will.”

Then, I was adding my acts in the Divine Will after having had Holy Communion, when my sweet Jesus told me: “How beautiful it is when I descend, as Sacrament, in the heart, and I find it in my Will. I find everything in it. I find my Mother and Queen and I feel that I receive again the glory - as if I were incarnating Myself again. I find all my works surrounding Me, honoring Me, loving Me; and since my Will circulates as blood and palpitates in all created things, they are united with Me; as if they were limbs originating from Me - remaining in Me. Therefore, everything I did on earth and all created things are like my arms, my feet, my heart, my mouth. They love Me and glorify Me in an infinite way. For the creature living in my Will, all that is mine is hers too, so she can give me my living Humanity to love Me, to keep Me separated and protected from all. She can give Me the love I had in creating the Sun. What speciality of love this light contains. It is filled with many different and innumerable effects of sweetness, colors and fragrances. In each effect there is a distinct love of mine, and you can see it in the varieties of sweetness; each one is different from the other. My love is insuperable. Not satisfied with letting man taste only one sweetness of its love - delighting him with one color, one single fragrance - it wanted to place many different sweetnesses; to drown and feed him with my love.

My primary food was my love; all other things came in secondary order. So the Sun, which does so much good to the earth, lays its light under man’s steps. It fills his eye with light; it invests him completely, following him everywhere. It is my love that runs within its light and, loving him, lets itself be tread upon by his steps. My love fills his eye with light, investing him completely, following him everywhere. That light contains my infinite extensions of love: my love that languishes, that wounds and enraptures; my love that burns, that sweetens everything, that gives life back to all; my love that takes the creature from every side, carrying her in its arms. Look my daughter, look at this light, and even you will not be able to count the many varieties of my love. If you will live in my

Will, the Sun will be yours - a part of you. You will be able to give me as many varieties of love for as many as I have given to you.

All created things are my members. Heaven and each star are distinct loves of mine toward the creature; the wind - a limb of mine - does nothing other than blow my distinct love. Now it blows to her the freshness of my love, now the caress of my love, now it blows to her with my impetuous love, now it brings her the refreshment of my love. Even the drops of water in the sea squeeze together to never cease to murmur the varieties of love with which I love the creatures. Even in the air they breathe, I send, with each breath, a distinct 'I love you'. Therefore, descending in the Sacrament, I bring created things with me as my own members, together with enchanting scenes of my love - so diverse and various - and I place them inside the creature like an army, to love her and to be loved. How hard and painful it is to love and not be loved. So, live always in my Will and It will present to you the many ways with which I loved you. In this way, you will love Me the way I want you to."

The feast of Assumption is the most beautiful, the most sublime feast. It is the feast of the Divine Will operating in the Heavenly Queen.

While my mind was swimming in the sea of the Divine Will, I stopped at the act in which my Mother and Queen was assumed into Heaven. How many wonders, how many enrapturing surprises of love. And my sweet Jesus, as if He felt the need to speak about His Celestial Mother, all festive told me: "My blessed daughter, today is the feast of Assumption. This is the most beautiful, the most sublime, the greatest feast, in which we remain glorified, loved and honored the most! Heaven and earth are invested with an unusual joy, never before felt. The Angels and the Saints feel as if invested with new joys and new happiness, and they all praise with new songs the Sovereign Queen who, in her empire, rules over all, giving joy to all!

Today is the feast of feasts - the unique one, the new one, which was never repeated again. Today, the day of the Assumption, celebrated for the first time the Divine Will operating in the Sovereign Queen and Lady; the marvels are enchanting in each of her smallest acts, even in her breathing, in her motion. Many of our divine lives can be seen flowing in her act as many Kings which, more than bright Suns, inundate - surround and embellish her, making her so beautiful as to form the enchantment of the Celestial Regions. Do you think it's nothing, that each one of her breaths, motions, works and pains were filled with many of our divine lives? This is exactly the great prodigy of my Will operating in the creature: to form a divine life for each time It could enter the motion and the acts of the creature. Then, since my Fiat possesses the virtue of bilocation and repetition - doing again and again without ceasing everything It does - so the Great Lady feels these divine lives multiplied within herself, which do nothing other than further extend her seas of love, beauty, power and infinite Wisdom! You must know that the divine lives she possesses are so great and so many that, upon entering Heaven, they crowded the whole Celestial Region and, being impossible to contain them, they filled the whole Creation as well. Therefore, there is no place where her seas of love and power do not flow, along with the many of Our Lives of which She is possessor and Queen.

We can say that she dominates Us and that We dominate her. By clothing herself with our immensity, power and love, she populated all our Attributes with her acts and with the many of our divine Lives which she had conquered! Therefore, from every place and everywhere, we feel ourselves being loved and glorified - inside and outside of ourselves, from within all created things, in the most remote hiding places - by this Celestial Creature and by those same divine lives which our Fiat formed in Her. Oh! Power of our Will, only You can do such prodigies as to make us loved and glorified as we deserve and want - to the extent of creating many of our lives in the one who lets You dominate. This is why She can give Her God to all, because She possesses Him. Even more, when She sees a creature disposed to receive our Will, without losing one of our Divine Lives, She has the virtue of reproducing, from within these divine Lives which She possesses, yet another of our Divine Lives to give to whomever she wants.

This Virgin Queen is a continuous prodigy. What She did on earth, She continues in Heaven; because, when the Divine Will operates, both in the creature and in ourselves, Its acts never end, and while remaining in It, they can be given to all. Does the Sun, perhaps, cease to give its light to the human generations because it has given too much of it? Not at all. Even if it has given much, it is always rich in its light, and does not lose a single drop of it. Therefore, the glory of this Queen is insuperable because She possesses our operating Will, which has the virtue of forming in the creature eternal and infinite acts. She loves us always and unceasingly with our lives which She possesses. She loves us with our own love. She loves us everywhere. Her love fills Heaven and earth and runs to pour itself inside our Divine womb. And we love her so much that we cannot live without loving her. While, in loving us, She loves all, making everyone love us. How could we resist and not give her anything She wants? It is our own Will that asks for what She wants, tying us with Its eternal bonds so that we can refuse her nothing. This is why the feast of the Assumption is the most beautiful one: it is the feast of my Will operating in this Great Lady, making her so rich and beautiful that the Heavens cannot contain her. Even the Angels remain speechless, and don't know how to describe what my Will does in the creature."

After this, while my mind remained stupefied in thinking about the great prodigies that the divine Fiat worked and continues to work in the Celestial Queen, my beloved Jesus added: "My daughter, her beauty is unreachable. It enchants, it charms, it conquers. Her love is such that She offers herself to all, loving all - leaving behind her seas of love. She can be called Queen of love, winner of love, because She loved much, and through love She won her God. You must know that, by doing his will, man broke the bonds with his Creator and with all created things. By the power of our Fiat, which She possessed, this Heavenly Queen tied her Creator to the creatures; tied all beings together - united them - put them back in order and with her love, gave new life to the human generations. Her love was so great as to cover and hide, inside its seas, weaknesses, evils, sins - the creatures themselves. Oh! If this Holy Virgin did not possess so much love, it would be difficult for us to look at the earth. Only her love makes us look at it, but we want to give our Will to reign in the midst of creatures because She wants it so. She wants to give to her children what She possesses, and by love She will win Us and her children."

Difference between the life that Jesus forms in the Sacramental Hosts and the life Jesus forms in one who lives in His Will.

I was always along the way of the Divine Will and, feeling worried, I said to myself: "How can it be that so many divine lives can be formed in us for as many acts that we do in It?" And my always adorable Jesus, in order to let me understand better, told me: "My daughter, everything is easy to Us because when We find one who gives her human will to live in Ours, We delight to form even in the motion, in the breathing, in the step, new lives which move, breathe and speak. The human will gives Us many veils in which We form many of our lives. This is the ultimate expression of our love, and We like it so much that, provided that the human will gives Us its little veil, We populate all its acts with the variety of our divine lives. And, then, my Eucharistic Life proves and confirms what I am telling you: aren't, perhaps, the accidents of the Bread like small veils in which I am consecrated, alive and real in body, blood, soul and Divinity? If there are one thousand Hosts, I form my life in each one of them. If there's one Host only, I form one life.

But what does the Host give to Me? Nothing. Not one 'I love you' - not a breath, not a heartbeat; not a single step to accompany. I am lonely and many times this loneliness oppresses Me, embitters me - and I burst into tears. How heavy it is for Me not having one to whom I can say a word. I am in the nightmare of a deep silence. What can the Host give to Me? The hiding place in which to hide Myself. The tiny little prison to make Me, I would almost say... to make Me unhappy. But since it is my Will that wants Me to remain in each Sacramental Host - and my Will never brings unhappiness, either to Us or to the creatures who live in It - It makes flow in my Sacramental Life Our celestial joys, which are inseparable from Us. This, from our side, but the Host never gives Me anything. It doesn't defend Me, it doesn't love Me. Now, if I form my lives in the Hosts that give Me nothing, how much more would I form them those who live in my Will.

The difference between my Sacramental lives and the many lives I form in one who lives in my Will is incalculable. It is greater than the difference between Heaven and earth. It is, primarily, that we are never alone, and having company is the greatest joy that delights both the divine and the human life. Now you must know that, as I form my Life in the thought of the creature who lives in my Will, I feel the company of the human intelligence, which courts Me and loves Me. It comprehends Me, placing its memory, intellect and will in my power. Since these three powers were created in Our image, I feel our eternal memory - which forgets nothing - given to Us for company. I feel the company of my Wisdom, which understands Me and also the company of the human will fused with Mine - loving Me with my eternal love. How could I not multiply, for each of her thoughts, as many of our lives. When We find her understanding and loving Us more, We can say that We find our reward, since the more lives We form, the more We let ourselves be understood. We redouble our love and she loves us more. If We form our life in her word, We find company in her word; and since our Fiat is her own, We also find all the prodigies it operated when our Fiat was pronounced. If We form our life in her breath we find her breath, which breathes together with ours and keeps company with our omnipotent breath which, in creating her, gave her life. If We form our life in her motion, oh!, We find her hands that hug Us, squeeze Us tightly and don't want to leave Us, ever again. If We form it in her steps, they follow Us everywhere.

What beautiful company is one who lives in our Will. There is no danger that she may leave Us alone - we are mutually inseparable. Therefore living in our Will is the prodigy of prodigies, in which We show off our many different lives; so We let her know who We are, what We can do, and We put the creature in order with us, as We created her. You must know that these, Our divine lives, bring with them seas of light and love, seas of Wisdom, beauty and goodness that invest the creature, letting her possess ever increasing light, never ceasing love, understanding Wisdom, ever growing beauty. This is why We love, so much, that the creature live in our Will: because We want to give; We want her to understand us; We want to crowd all the human acts with our divine lives. We don't want to be constrained - repressed in our Divine circle. We have the power to give, but can not. How painful this is. And until the creatures live in our Will, they will always be the little ignorant of our Supreme Being, incapable of learning even the vowels of how much we love them and of how much We can give to them. They will always be our children - dissimilar from Us, who perhaps do not even know Us - degenerate of their Father."

How an act in the Divine Will contains all and loves all. How everyone runs in this act. Every act done in God's Will is like acquiring a new day.

I continue to cross the sea of the Divine Will, in which it seems that all things are mine - light, sanctity, love - and I feel them assailing me from every side, to give themselves to me. And my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, told me: "My daughter, don't be surprised. As the creature enters my

Will, all created beings feel an irresistible force causing them to run toward one who is operating in my Will, because, in order to operate, my Will wants the courting of all of Its works - first, since It is inseparable from anything It has done; second, because in operating, everything and everyone has to take part in what It does, in order to be able to say, as a matter of fact, 'my act belongs to everyone, it rises to Heaven, delighting all the Celestial regions, then it goes down in the lowest depth of the earth and becomes step, work, word and heart of all.'

If I didn't centralize everything and everyone in my act, the strength of communication would be lacking; the strength that allows everyone to receive my act full of life - that with one act can give life to all, sustain and delight all, do good to all. Therefore when I operate, all things created by me run - enclose themselves in that act, to receive new life, beauty and happiness, and they all feel honored and glorified in my act. When the creature enters my Will and is about to operate - to love - nobody wants to be put aside, so they run; the Most Holy Trinity runs, the Virgin Queen runs, because we want the primacy in that act; and then everyone and everything runs, except those who, ungrateful, not knowing such a good, don't want to receive it. In one act in my Will there can be prodigies so great, that the creature is not able to say them all. In fact, you must know that she does everything that all other creatures should do. If she thinks in my Will, my Will circulates in every creature thought, while she, being in my Will, circulates together with It - giving me the honor, love, glory and adoration of every thought. The creatures don't know anything about it, but I, Who am aware of everything, receive the glory of all created minds. If she speaks in my Will, since mine is the voice of each word, I feel as if I were receiving in return the glory and love of every word. If she walks in my Fiat - the is step of every foot - she gives me the love and the glory of each step, and so on for all the other things.

But the creatures don't know anything about it. Through one living in my Will, I take the glory that they should give me. These are secrets between me and the one who lives in my Will. And there is even more. She gives me the glory and the love that the lost souls should give me. The communicative virtue of my Fiat reaches all, gives all to everyone, and receives all. One who does and gives all has the right to receive from all, but to do so the soul must live in our Volition - united with us, wanting what we want. My Will did this in my Humanity, feeling loved, glorified and satisfied for all in each single act I did. It did this in the Queen of Heaven, and if It hadn't found in her acts, love that loved It for all - glory and satisfaction for all - I, the Eternal Word, wouldn't have found the way to descend from Heaven to earth. Therefore one act in my Will can give me all, love me for all, and make me do the greatest excesses of love and works toward the creatures. And when, in my Will, I find her in the steps of all, loving me in their thoughts and words, my joy is such that, in my emphasis of love, I say to her: you are doing what I did. For this, I call you 'my echo, my love - little echo of my life.'"

Such was the spate of His love while saying this, that He kept silent. Then He added: "My daughter, blessed one, every act done in my Divine Will by the creature is like a day for her; a day full of happiness and of all goods. If she does ten, twenty acts, she acquires so many days. In these days she takes the sky as her own and, being still on earth, she takes the Sun, the wind, the air, the sea as her own. Her nature takes the most beautiful blossoms that never wither. Oh! What a beautiful appearance she will make once in our Celestial Fatherland. For as many acts done in my Will, she will possess as many days - each one with its own different Sun; its blue sky studded with stars; its murmuring sea; its whistling wind - whispering and blowing impetuous, dominating love. Nor will even the most beautiful blossoms be lacking - one different from the other, for as many acts as she has done in my Will. Nothing beautiful and good will be lacking to one who has lived in my Eternal Fiat."

Then I continued to wander in the acts of the Divine Will, and my poor mind got lost in the enchantment of Creation. How many wonderful surprises, how many secrets of love are contained in it - and the most beautiful work of the Creation, man. And my Jesus continued: "My daughter, I can call the Creation of beings and the Creation of man 'my two arms', because they were in the Divinity since eternity, and in delivering them I never detached them from me. I considered them as my limbs, in which I let flow the life, the motion, the strength, the creative and preserving virtue. The arm of the Creation of beings serves the arm of the Creation of man, but in that arm, I Myself had to serve man, and I still do it: now with light, now with wind, now with air to make him breathe, now with water to soothe his thirst, now with food to feed him - and even with earth, to let him enjoy the most beautiful blossoms and abundance of fruits. In this arm I put myself at man's service. My love wouldn't let me care about anything else. I ran to Him, through the created things, and carried Him, as if in my arms, so that all things could bring Him joy and Happiness. In this arm I find all things the way I delivered them. Nothing got lost, not even a drop of light. Nothing has changed, everything that was given is in its place of honor giving me the glory of my Eternal love, revealing me Who is the One who created them - my power, my inaccessible light, my unreachable beauty. Each created thing is a story of my Eternal Love and of how much I love the One for whom all things were created.

Now, from the Creation of beings I went to the Creation of man. How much love in creating him. Our Divine Being poured love and, in creating him, our love was flowing, investing every fiber of his heart, every tiny little piece of his bones. Our love laid in his nerves; we made it also flow in his blood; we invested his steps, motion, voice, heartbeat and each one of his love-thoughts. When our love molded him it filled him so much that in every created thing, even in his breath, he had to give us love, just as we loved him in everything. Then our love reached the excess of breathing over him to leave him our love breath. For completion and crowning we created our image in his soul, providing it with memory, intelligence and will, remaining in him as our bearer. Therefore man is united to us as limbs, and we are within him as if in our house. But, how much suffering we receive from him. Our love is not in force; our image is there, but it is not recognized; our house is full of enemies that offend us. We can say that man changed our destiny as well as his own. He turned upside down our designs for him, and he keeps causing pain to our arm, which continues to love him and to give him life.

My daughter, our love wants to reach the greatest excesses; it wants to save our arm, which is man, and put him back in order at any cost. We will be forced by our love to breathe over him again; to cast away his enemies and ours. We will cover him again with our love, letting the life of our Majesty, sanctity, power and wisdom enter into Him. Having our creature in this disorder that dishonors us so much...oh no! We will triumph in man, and the certain sign is that we are manifesting the wonders of our Will as well as how to live in It. If we didn't do so, our power would be altered, as if we were incapable of saving our work - our very arm. This cannot be. It would be as if we were not able to do what we want. Ah no...No! Our love and our Will will conquer and will triumph in everything."

The human will, cross of the Divine; the Divine, cross of the human. How in the Divine Will things change, dissimilarities disappear. How Jesus compensates for anything that may be lacking to one who lives in His Will.

I feel the life of the Divine Fiat inside my soul wanting to be my motion, my breath and heartbeat. It wants such a union with the human will that It can be opposed in nothing, otherwise It starts complaining, disappointed, and feeling as if crucified by the human will. Then my beloved one, repeating His short little visit, told me: "My blessed daughter, how much my Will suffers in the creature. It is sufficient to tell you that every time she does her will she crucifies mine. Therefore, the cross of my Will is the human will; but not with three nails, as I was crucified on the cross, rather, with a nail for each time that she opposes my Will. How many times my Will is not recognized; and, while It wants to do good, It is rejected with the nails of ingratitude. How excruciating is this crucifixion of my Will in the creature. How many times It feels as if being nailed by her breath, heartbeat and motion because, not being known as the life of that breath, heartbeat and motion, the human breath, heartbeat and motion become nails for It - preventing It from doing, in them, the good that It wants.

Oh! How my Will feels crucified within the human will. With Its divine motion, It wants to make the day arise inside the human motion, while the creature crucifies the divine motion, causing the night to come, putting light on the cross too. How sorrowed my light feels in being repressed - crucified - put in a state of incapacity by the human will; and this, to give it the life of its sanctity and strength; while the creature, by not accepting it, sticks into it the nail of sin - of her passions and weaknesses. Poor Will of Mine. In what a state of pain and continuous crucifixion It finds Itself in the human will, which just keeps putting our love on the cross - filling with nails all the goods we want to give her. On the other hand, one who lives in my Will, does not crucify my Will; rather, I can say that I become her cross - but this cross is very different. With my cross, my Will knows how to put nails of light, sanctity and love - to strengthen her with our own divine strength. These nails don't give sufferings, rather, they make her happy and beautiful with an enchanting beauty. They are the bearers of great conquests, and one who experiences them feels so happy that he prays to us and begs us to keep him always on the cross with our divine nails. From there, nobody can escape. If the two wills - the human and the divine - are not united, one will form the cross of the other. Further, our love and jealousy are such that we don't leave her free - not even a breath without our nail of light and love - to have her always with us and to say: 'she does what we do and wants what we want.'

You must know that as the creature enters our Will, everything is transformed: darkness is turned into light, weakness into fortitude, poverty into riches, passions into virtue. Her mutation is such that she is not the same as before; her state is no longer one of a most wicked slave, but of a noble Queen. Our divine Being loves her so much that It runs into her acts to do whatever she does, and since our motion is continuous, we move and love her - move and hug her. Our motion moves and kisses her, making her more beautiful and more the saint. In every motion we give from ourselves and, in the emphasis of our love we tell her about our Supreme Being, making known who we are and how much we love her. We identify ourselves in her and she in us. Our Will and her Will are one - to the extent that we feel her in our divine motion, and as she takes what is ours, she loves us with our love; she gives us our inaccessible light to glorify our sanctity - to praise us and say: 'Holy, Holy, Trice Holy are You. You enclose all, You are all.' How beautiful it is to see the human smallness inside of our Will, having in its power our Divine Being, to give it back to us, to love us and glorify us as we want and justly deserve. In our Will the parts become equal, dissimilarities disappear. Our Unity unites everything and everyone, making one the acts of all, to become the act of all."

In hearing this I could understand the sanctity, the beauty and the greatness of living in the Divine Will, and I was thinking to myself: it seems to me difficult to live in It; how can the creature reach this point? The human weaknesses, the circumstances of life, many times, are too painful; the unexpected encounters, the so many difficulties that one doesn't even know what to do - wouldn't all these things lead the creature astray from a life so holy that it would take a perfect attention not to? And my sweet Jesus, continuing His say with such a tenderness that I felt my heart exploding, added: "My little daughter of my Will, my interest and my continuous yearning for the creature to live in my Will is such that, once we've made the agreement, Myself and her, with a firm decision that she must live in my Fiat - this being My Will - I am the first one who makes the sacrifice to obtain the intent, so that she may live in It. I place Myself at her disposal. I give her all the graces, light, love and the very knowledge of my Will, so that she herself has to feel the need to live in It. When I want something, and she promptly accepts doing what I want, I take care of everything; and when she fails for weakness, for inconstancy or for negligence, not for will, I come to compensate, and I do what she was supposed to do, transferring to her what I did as if she had done it.

My daughter, living in my Will is life - not virtue - that I must form. And life needs me, and continuous acts - otherwise it would not be life. At the most it could be a work, which doesn't need either continuous acts or life. Therefore, I do not break the life because of involuntary indisposition or weakness, but I continue it; and it may be that in those same indispositions there is even my Will, allowing those weaknesses; in which case the will of the creature would be running into mine anyway. And then, among everything, I look at the agreement done together - the firm decision taken - against which there has been no other decision. Looking at this, I keep compensating her in anything that is missing. Even more, I redouble the graces. I surround her with new love - with new stratagems of love to make her more attentive, and I provoke in her heart an extreme need to live in my Will, and I pray her to hold It so tight as to always be able to live together with It.”

One act done in the Divine Will is everything. Jesus grows His life in those who live in It. Horrible state of God in those who live on human will. Every time a creature enters into Our Will we renew Our works.

I feel the sea of the Divine Will always murmuring inside and outside of me, and very often It forms Its waves - very very high ones - and inundates me so much that I feel It as being greater than my life. Oh! Divine Will, how much You love me; so much that You want to give Yourself always, without ceasing, to form Your life in my poor soul. Your love is such that it besieges me with light, love and sighs to obtain the purpose. Then, my always adorable Jesus, taking me by surprise told me: “My blessed daughter, our fulfilled Will encloses all the glory that the creature can give us - the love with which we have to love her and the love with which she must love us. Therefore, in one act of our fulfilled Will, we can say that we’ve done everything; we have given everything, even ourselves, and we have received everything. In fact, by living in It, we give all to the creature. She takes all, and can give us all. On the other hand, if she does not live in our Will, if our Will is not fulfilled, we can’t give everything. She will be incapable of receiving our love or of loving us as much as we want to be loved. We are not happy to give from Ourselves almost in tiny little pieces, as if we were poor. We don’t like to half-give our things. Being able to give and not to give is always a suffering for us, our love remains repressed and makes us delirious. This is why we want the soul to live in our Divine Volition: we want to give all, always, without ever ceasing. Our divine Being is never exhausted: the more we give the more we can give, and giving for us is relief and happiness; is expression of love; is communication of the life that we do. My love is so great that I remain in the soul to grow.

Now, having to grow Myself, I watch over her continuously so that what she does may serve to make known and grow my life within her. I use her acts and her love to form my limbs, my Heart, the food to feed myself, and the clothes to cover me and give me warmth. I remain always in the attitude of unifying her motion with mine - her breath with mine - in order to find her motion inside mine and her breath as if it were mine. I let nothing escape me, nothing of what she does, thinks, says, works or suffers, because it has to serve me and make my life grow. Therefore I am always in action, I never give myself any rest. Oh!, how glad I am - how happy I feel to be always busy in my work of making myself grow within her. I did not create the creature so that she would remain isolated - certainly not. She was my work so I had to do it in order to form a work worthy of myself. But if she doesn’t live in my Will I don’t find the raw material with which to form and grow my life. We live as if far away - as isolated; and loneliness saddens me; silence is heavy. If I am not able to do my work, I have fidgets of love, and I feel like a God made unhappy by His creatures. Therefore my daughter, be attentive, live always in my Will. Give me your acts. Let me work and don’t keep me within you as a God Who couldn’t and wouldn’t know how to do anything. Actually, I have to do the greatest work - growing and forming my Life, which will be so beautiful as to form the sweet enchantment of the whole Celestial Court.

On the other hand, in the creature who doesn’t live in our Will our state is horrible. Our life remains as if strangled, broken, divided by the human will, whose acts cannot serve to form and grow our life. Rather, they serve to break it in such a way that one foot is some place, one hand in another, one eye somewhere else. We feel pity for ourselves, being so shattered, since our Will is one; where it reigns, It forms one act out of many, to form one single life. The human will, instead, can only do fragmented acts with no virtue of uniting themselves. Rather, they break our Divine life into pieces within them. There isn't a scene more horrible, that would make even the stones cry, than seeing in the soul who does her will the harrowing way in which she reduces our Life within her; her shameful acts, degenerating from the origin of her creation and dissimilar from the Creator, form the knife that cuts our Divine Life into pieces. What a sorrow for us. How deformed and dishonored our creative work remains - how destroyed our scope for Creation. Ah! If we were capable of pain, the human will would embitter the ocean of our immense joys and happiness."

Then I was following all that the Divine Will did, both in the Creation and in the Redemption, and I found all in action as if everything wanted to give itself to me. My sweet Jesus added: "My daughter, everything that has been done by our Supreme Being is all in action, as if we were in the act of doing it for love of the creatures, since all our works were done for them. Now, the creature that enters our Divine Will finds all the other creatures. All want to give themselves to her, so she, feeling loved, makes them her own, loving them and loving us for all the gifts we give her. In return for each of our gifts she would give us her life in gratitude - in appreciation - and to thank me for all the things we gave her. So, she feels as if receiving the gift of the Sun, of the starry Heaven, of the sea and wind, of the whole Creation - and more, my birth, my tears, my works, my steps, my sufferings and the love with which I loved her and I still do. Oh! how happy she feels, and making all our works and my very life her own, she loves us in the Sun and in all other things, with that same love with which I created it. She loves me in my birth, in my tears, in my steps, in my pains - in everything. Oh! how she delights and glorifies us, and our joy is such that it gives us the opportunity to renew our works, as if we were creating them again. So, our love overflows from us, investing all with new love. Our power is redoubled to sustain all; our Wisdom puts all into order, while our creative work runs through the whole Creation and Redemption to say to the creature: 'everything is yours.'

Every single time you enter into our Will, recognizing these gifts and making them yours, you are giving us the opportunity and the glory as if we were repeating again all that we have done for love of the creatures. Our Will is the repeater of all our works. It repeats them - renews them always in every instant - each time the creature wants to receive them. And while they give themselves, they remain at their place. They give themselves still remaining. By giving themselves they lose nothing, rather, they are more glorified. Therefore be attentive to live always in our Will."

How Jesus feels His sufferings being repeated in ours. How He never moves in His works and in His love for us. Example of the flower for those who do not live in Divine Will.

I am in the sea of the Divine Volition among immense bitternesses and the most humiliating humiliations, like a poor condemned; and if it wasn't for Jesus, my support, strength and help, I don't know how I could live. Then my sweet Jesus, sharing my pains, was suffering together with me, and in the ardor of His pains and love told me: "My dear daughter, if you knew how much I suffer, if I let you see it, you would die of pain. I am forced to hide everything - all the torment and the rawness of the pain I feel - not to distress you even more. Know that they didn't condemn you, but Me, together with you. I Myself feel as though being condemned, since condemning good, is condemning Myself. You, however, unite in my Will our condemnation to the one I received when I was crucified and I will give you the merit of my condemnation and all the goods that It produces: It made me die, then It called to life my Resurrection, in which everyone was to find life and resurrection of all goods. With their sentence they believe they can kill what I said on my Divine Will, but I will allow such chastisements and sad events that I will make my truths rise again more beautifully - more majestic, in the midst of the peoples. Therefore, from your side and mine, let's move nothing. Let's keep doing what we have done, even if everybody should be against us.

This is my Divine way: for all evils creatures may do, I never move my works. I always preserve them with my creative power and virtue. For love of those who offend me, I always love them without ceasing. If we never move, our works are accomplished, remaining always beautiful, doing good to all; but if we moved, all things would go into ruin and no good would be accomplished. Therefore, in this too I want you with me - always still, never moving from inside my Will, and doing what you've done until now - attentive to listen to me, to be the narrator of my Will. My daughter, what is not enjoyed today, will be enjoyed tomorrow; what now seems darkness because it finds blind minds, will turn into Sun tomorrow for those who have eyes. How much good they will do. So, let's keep doing what we've done. Let's do what is needed from our side so that nothing may be missing of help, light, good and surprising truth to make my Will known and to make It reign. I will use every means of love, grace and chastisement. I will touch all sides of creatures in order to have my Will reign. When it will seem that the true good is about to die, then, it will rise again more beautiful and majestic."

But while He was saying this He showed me a sea of fire in which the whole world was about to be wrapped. I was shaken, and my adorable Jesus, pulling me towards Himself, told me: "My blessed daughter - courage, don't be afraid. Come into my Divine Will so that Its light may remove from you the sad sight of what is happening in the world, and as I talk to you about my Will, let us soothe the pains that, unfortunately, both of us are suffering. See, how beautiful it is to live in my Will. What I do, the soul does; as she hears my 'I love you', she soon repeats to me 'I love you', and I, feeling loved, transform her so much into Myself that in one voice we say, 'we love everyone, we do good to all, we give life to all.' If I bless, we bless together; we adore and glorify together; we run together to help anyone, and if they offend me we suffer together. Oh!, how happy I am in seeing that a creature never leaves me alone. How beautiful is the company of one who wants what I want, does what I do. The union makes happiness arise - heroism in doing good, tolerance in bearing. Even more, since she is a human creature, belonging to the human family - which does nothing other than send me nails, thorns and pains - not to sadden her, I abstain from sending their deserved chastisement, while finding in this creature my hiding place and my desired company. I know that she would be sad if I punished them as they deserve. Therefore, never leave me alone. Loneliness is one of the hardest and most intimate pains of my Heart. Not having one to whom to say a word both in sufferings and joys makes me so delirious of pain and love that, if you could experience it, you would die of pure pain.

This is exactly not living in my Will: leaving me alone. The human will takes the creature away from her Creator, and as she goes, peace leaves while anxiety take its place within her - tormenting her. Lack of strength debilitates her; beauty fades away; good dies while evil arises; passions keep her company. Poor creature without my Will, into what an abyss of miseries she throws herself. It happens as to the flower which, not being watered, feels as if it's losing its life. It becomes faded - bends on its own stem, and waits for death; and if the Sun enwraps it, finding it with no water, It burns it and dries it completely. Such is the soul without my Will. She is like a soul with no water. My very truths which are brighter than the Sun, not finding her watered by the life of my Will, burn her even more - blinding her, so she is incapable of understanding them in order to receive the good and the life they possess. She even reaches the excess of making war on good and against my very truths which bring life to the creatures. Therefore, I want you always in my Will so that neither of us suffer the hard pain of loneliness."

The sea as symbol of the Divine Will. How seas of joys were flowing close to the pains of Jesus. The power of innocent suffering. The manifested truth as a new Creation.

I am always in the sea of the Divine Will and my pains and bitterness are unspeakable. I let them flow into It, so that they may be invested by Its light and turn into light for me. Then my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, all goodness told me: "My blessed daughter, the sea gives room to all the things that dive into it. It gives room to the fish, keeping them submerged in its waters, giving them everything they need to survive. The fish are most fortunate and rich because they miss nothing, living always in the sea; but if they went out of the sea they would lose their lives. The sea receives anyone, taking all inside its waters. If the sailor wants to cross the sea to go to different regions, the water of the sea receives the ship, becomes its way, accompanying him, never leaving him alone until he reaches his destination. Everybody can find a place in the sea. Such is my Will: everyone can find a place in It, and with unspeakable love, It becomes life of all - the way to guide them, light to dissolve the darkness of life, strength to sustain them. It never leaves them alone. It wants to do together with them whatever they do. Oh! How saddened It becomes in seeing Its creature outside of Its sea, because It sees them so ugly, dirty and dissimilar as to be disgusting. Therefore the most fortunate ones are those who live in my Will. They are brought on the lap of Its waves and, provided that they live in it, It will take care of all that is needed for their good."

After this, I followed my Jesus in His pains, uniting mine to His and receiving their strength to sustain mine which kept me crushed. Then my dear Jesus added with unspeakable tenderness: "My blessed daughter, I suffered unheard-of pains; but close to these pains, seas of joys, of endless happiness were flowing. I could see the good they were going to produce. I could see, enclosed in them, the souls that were going to be saved; and since my pains were filled with love, they matured with their heat the most beautiful sanctities, the most difficult conversions, the most astonishing graces. In my pains I felt excruciating sufferings, which gave me the most ruthless and cruel death; but also seas of joys that sustained me and gave me life. If I were not sustained by the joys contained in my sufferings, the torment was so much I would have died at the first pain I suffered - I could not have prolonged my life. Now, your pains are not only similar to mine but I can say that they are mine. If you knew how much I suffer. I feel their rawness - their torment - embittering me to the depth of my Heart, but in these pains I also see seas of joy flowing, which will make my Will rise again more beautiful and majestic in the middle of the creatures. You don't know what an innocent pain suffered on my behalf means. It can form by its power seas of graces, light and love for the benefit of all. If it wasn't for these innocent pains which sustain my Justice, I would send to ruin the whole world. Therefore, don't lose heart my daughter, trust me and I will take care of everything, to defend the rights of my Will and to make It reign.

I can say that everything I said regarding my Will is like a new Creation - more beautiful, more various, more majestic than the Creation that everybody sees. Oh!, how this visible creation remains behind It. As it is impossible for men to destroy or suffocate the light of the Sun, to stop the impetuosity of the wind or the air that everybody breathes, or to make of everything a pile of ruins - in the same way, they cannot suffocate, much less, destroy what I have said. This is a new, speaking Creation, and each truth carries the seal of our divine life. So, in the truth I have manifested to you there are speaking Suns, speaking and overwhelming winds in my Will - to the extent of besieging the creature with the empire of its power. In these truths there exist my various beauties which will enrapture the creatures; the seas of love by which they will be continuously inundated and which will win all hearts to love me with their sweet murmuring. In these truths I placed all the possible imaginable goods: love which conquers, enraptures, sweetens and shakes. Nothing is missing to dominate the creature and to make my Will descend with decorum and majesty, together with the army of my truths - to make It reign among them. And the creature won't be given the chance to shut out this new Creation of mine. I will know how to guard It and defend It.

Moreover, my daughter, this new Creation costs me the work, not of six days, but of fifty years and more. How could I ever permit It to be repressed - not to have Its life, or to come to light? This would be as if I had not enough power, which cannot be. I will know how to protect them. Not single a word will be touched or destroyed - it costs me too much; and when things cost a lot, all the means, all the arts are used - even one's own life - in order to obtain the purpose. Therefore let me accomplish the job of this new Creation and do not worry about what they say or do. These are the usual human volubilities: at one wind's blow they see black, at another blow they take off the bandage and see white. I will know how to take over everyone and unleash the aggressive army of my truths to dominate the creature. It takes patience from my side and from your side; so, without moving, let's go forward."

How the Kingdom of the Divine Will is a Decree which must come on earth. How It has to sweep the earth. The Queen of Heaven prays and cries. The Divine Will is like the lymph for the plants.

I am always in the Divine Will, although in inexpressible bitternesses, as if they wanted to muddy Its sea; but this sea of the Fiat forms Its waves and, covering and hiding me inside of Itself, sweetens my bitterness - gives me back strength and makes me continue my way in Its Will. Its power is such as to reduce to nothing my bitterness, making rise again from within itself Its life full of sweetness, all beautiful and majestic; and I adore It, I thank It, I pray It never to leave me alone and abandoned. Then my sweet Jesus, repeating His little visit told me: "My good daughter, courage. If you lose heart you will lose the strength to live always in my Will. Don't worry about what they say and do. Our victory is in the fact that they cannot prevent us from doing what we want to do. So, I can talk to you about my Divine Will and you can listen; no power can obstruct this. All that I tell you about my Will is nothing other than the accomplishment of Our decree, established since eternity in the council of our Most Holy Trinity: our Will must have Its Kingdom on earth. Our decrees are infallible, nothing can prevent them from being fulfilled. Just as Creation and Redemption were Our decrees, so Our decree is the Kingdom of Our Will on earth! Therefore, in order to fulfill this decree I have to manifest the goods contained in It - Its qualities, Its beauties and marvels. Here is the necessity I had to talk to you so much: to accomplish this decree.

Daughter, I wanted to do this, by winning man through my love, but human perfidy does not allow me. Therefore I will use Justice. I will sweep the earth, I will take away all the harmful creatures who, like poisoned plants, poison the innocent plants. Once I have purified everything, My Truths will find the way to give to the survivors the life, the balm and the peace that They contain; and everybody will receive Them, giving them the kiss of peace, to the confusion of those who did not believe in Them and even condemned Them. My Truths will reign and I will have my Kingdom on earth: my Will be done on earth as It is in Heaven. Therefore, once again, let's not move in anything. Let's do our way and we will sing victory; they can do their way, in which they will find confusion and shame of themselves. It will happen to them as to the blind, who don't believe in the light of the Sun because they don't see it: they will remain in their blindness, while those who see it will enjoy and show off the goods of the light with complete happiness."

Jesus remained silent. My poor mind was troubled by the so many evils which invest and will invest the earth. In the meantime the Sovereign Queen made herself seen, with her eyes all red, as if bleeding for so much crying. What a heartbreak, in seeing my Heavenly Mother crying. Then, with her maternal tone, with inexpressible tenderness - crying - she told me: "Dearest daughter of mine, pray together with me. It breaks my heart to see the chastisements that will invest the whole humanity. The volubility of the Leaders - today they say something, tomorrow something else - will throw the peoples in a sea of pains, and of blood too. Poor children of mine! Pray my daughter, don't leave me alone in my suffering. May all happen for the triumph of the Divine Will."

Then I was following the Divine Will in Its acts, all abandoned in Its arms, when my sweet Jesus continued: "My daughter, as the creature enters our Will to make It her own, It makes Our Will her own, and we make her will Our own. In everything she does, loving, adoring, working, suffering and praying, our Will forms Its divine seed in her acts. Oh! how beautiful, fresh and saintly she grows.

Our Will is like the lymph for the plants. If there is lymph in the plants they grow beautifully - green, thick of leaf, producing mature, big, tasty fruits; but if the lymph begins to be missing, the poor plant loses the green - the leaves fall; she can't produce her nice fruits, so in the end it dries up. The lymph is like the soul of the plant, like the vital humors that sustain the plant and make it bloom. Such is the soul without my Will. It loses the principle, the life, the soul of the good; it loses the vegetation, the freshness, the strength; it becomes faded, moronic, weak and ends up losing the seed of good. If you knew how much I pity a soul who lives without my Will. I could call her 'the painful scene of the creation.' I, Who created all things with such beauty and harmony, am forced, because of human ingratitude, to see the most beautiful creatures I made, poor, weak, covered with wounds - to move to pity. And still, my Will is at everyone's disposal. It is not denied to anybody. Only those who reject It, who, ungrateful, do not want to know It, voluntarily deprive themselves of It. Great pain for Us."

The Creation as the first field of action of God. Fields of action: those who live in His Will. How God cannot refuse anything to one who lives in It.

I am always in the sea of the Supreme Fiat, and Its love is such that It cannot contain it, so It wants to show to Its creature new surprises of this love - how much it loved her and still does. If It finds a loving creature, It makes arise new love, to let her touch with her own hand Its unstoppable, always new and growing love. Then my always adorable Jesus, repeating His short little visit, all goodness told me: "My little daughter of my Divine Will, you must know that our first field of action was the Creation. This was a labor that we kept in our Divine womb since eternity. We loved man in every created thing that we were to deliver to daylight. It was only for Him, because we loved Him much, that we had decreed to create many things; to form for him the light of the day; the blue vault that was never to fade away; a flowered earth as pavement; and then, the greatest thing: the concentration of our love in each created thing which had to serve Him as our lap; to carry Him in our arms; to delight Him and give Him continuous life.

Do you know the reason for all these preparations; to the extent of making Us go out of Ourselves, as if into a field of action, to work for the love of who had to let Our Will reign? For such a great work we wanted our reward - our divine scope - which man and all created things had to keep as life and rule, feeding it with our Will. This field of action still lasts; our love still runs at incredible speed, because we are not subject to change; we are immutable, and what we do once, we do always. Still, even with such an extended field of action - so much work, so much love palpitating in every created thing and in every fiber of man - Our scope, Our Will reigning and dominating in the heart of man, has not yet been fulfilled. Could we ever form a field so extended, and still maintain it at work, without obtaining the purpose? This could never be. The fact that the Creation is still enduring is the certain sign that the Kingdom of my Will will have Its life and full triumph in the midst of the creatures. We do not know how to do useless things; rather, we first establish with highest Wisdom the good, utility and glory that we have to receive, and then we act. Now, I want to tell you of another surprise. As the creature enters our Will to let It reign, we put ourselves again in this field of action; we renew our work, and only for her do we centralize our new love in each created thing. Then, in the emphasis of our love, we say to her: 'see how much we love you. Only for you do we develop our field of action. Only for do you we repeat all our works.'

Be all ears and you will hear something: our new love notes tell you how we love you; how you are covered and hidden in our love. Oh!, the happiness, the joys that you give us; to the extent that we can repeat our field of action for the one who lives in our Will, and who does not want to know anything other than our Will. Now, the whole Creation as well as Ourselves, finding in her our Will, recognize her as our daughter. Since our Will gives her the right over all, the whole Creation remains centralized within her, and she within Us, so that she becomes inseparable from all created things. Our field of action finds here its reward, the return for our work.: this one creature, living in our Will, works together with us; she wants to do what we do and love us with equal love. Since it is one Will which animates us, there can be no dissimilarity or disparity. We no longer feel isolated inside the field of Creation - we have our company. This is our triumph, our victory, and the greatest good we can ever give to the creatures.

Furthermore, although the Creation surrounds her on the outside, we develop our field of action in the interior of her soul, creating in her the brightest Suns, the most beautiful stars, winds which blow continuous loves, seas of graces - divine and balsamic air. And she receives all, freeing us in our field of action; our true Creation, which was never opposed to anything we wanted to do, and in which all our works found their place. So, we can place all our most beautiful works within the soul who lives in our Will, and our Will prepares for us the space in which to place them. Therefore, our field of action never ends in those who live in our Fiat. Be attentive then, to receive what we want to make of you.”

After this He added with a love which I cannot express: “My daughter, the interest that most concerns us and our most assiduous attention is on the soul who lives in our Will. We are all eyes over her. It seems that we neither know how, nor can we do anything if we don’t extend our operating and creative virtue over her. Our love leads us to watch her to see what she wants to do. If she wants to love our creative virtue, we create our love in the depth of her soul; if she wants to know us, we create our knowledge; if she wants to be saint, our creative virtue creates sanctity. In sum, our creative virtue is ready to create any good she wants, so that she can feel in herself the nature and the life of that good. We neither can nor do we want to refuse anything to one who lives in our Will. It would be as though denying something to our own Will - denying it to Ourselves. It would be too hard not using our creative virtue for Ourselves. See then, the high, noble and sublime point at which one who is in our Will lives. Therefore, be attentive; do not care about anything except living in It, and you will feel our creative and operating virtue.”

One who lives abandoned in God finds in Him her Paternity, refuge and hiding place. The Fiat as support and Life of the whole Creation. How God winds up one who lives in It.

I am in the arms of the Divine Volition, although under the nightmare of the hardest sufferings, so as to move to pity the whole Heaven and make It run to my rescue - to give me strength in such a painful state. My Jesus help me, do not abandon me, I feel like succumbing. How hard my state is. As I was saying this my sweet Jesus, more tenderly than the most tender Mother, stretched His arms out to me and squeezed me, and uniting His tears to mine, all goodness told me: “Poor daughter of mine, your pains are Mine, and I suffer together with you. Therefore courage, abandon yourself in me and you will find the strength for you sufferings. The soul who abandons herself in me grows like a baby who is kept under the care of his Mommy, who swaddles him to let his members be strengthened, feeds him with her milk, holds him in her arms, kisses him, caresses him; and if he cries she mixes her tears with those of her baby. So, the mother is the life of her baby. Oh!, if the little one didn’t have his Mother, how badly he would grow without the one who feeds him with her milk; without clothing - without her warmth. He would grow sickly, weak and lonely, only a miracle can make him survive. Such is the soul who lives abandoned in my arms. She has her Jesus, who is more than a Mother for her. I feed her with the milk of my graces; I swaddle her with the light of my Will, so that she may be strengthened and confirmed in good; I keep her cuddled to my chest, so that she may feel only my love and the ardent beats of my Heart; I rock her in my arms. If she cries I cry with her, so that I feel my life as being more hers, while she grows together with me, and I do with her what I want. On the other hand, one who doesn't live abandoned in me lives as though isolated, without milk, with nobody to take care of her existence.

The soul who lives abandoned in me finds the refuge from her sufferings; the hiding place in which to hide so that nobody can touch her. If anybody wants to touch her, I will know how to defend her, because touching the one who loves me is even more than touching myself. I hide her in me, and I confound those who want to strike the one who loves me. I love the one who lives abandoned in me so much that I make of her the greatest portent, so as to astonish the whole of Heaven and to leave all confused those who believed they could strike her and leave her covered by shame and humiliation. Let's not add this to the many pains we already suffer, since it would be the most painful one: you, not living all abandoned in me, and I in you. My daughter, let them say and do, as long as they don't touch our union. Nobody can enter into our secrets, in the abysses of my love; nor can they stop me from doing what I want with my creatures. Let us live, one Will, and all things will be fine between you and me."

Then He added, with even more tender love: "My blessed daughter, my Fiat is the support of the whole Creation. Everything is placed upon It; there is nothing that is not animated by Its power. If it wasn't for my Fiat, all things, even the creatures, would be nothing other than many painted pictures or inanimate statues, incapable of generating, vegetating or reproducing any good. Poor Creation! If it wasn't for my Will..., and still, they don't want to recognize It. What great pain!, being the life of all and feeling suffocated in things created by Us because they do not know Us. What bitterness. If it wasn't for our love and if we were able to change, we would withdraw our Will from everyone and everything, and all would be reduced to nothing. But since we are immutable and we know with certainty that our Will will be known, wanted, loved, and that everyone will possess It more than their own life, We wait for It to be recognized - with invincible patience, a patience that only our Divinity can possess. All this, we do with judgment and our Highest Wisdom, since we do not do useless things. If we do, it is because we want our reward, which is receiving glory and honor from all our works, even from the most tiny little flower in the field. If this was not the case, we would be like a God who didn't know how to appreciate or to give the right value to our works. Therefore, it is Our Justice that Our Will be known as life of all, so that we fulfill the scope for which we made the whole Creation.

Now, you must know that as the creature wants to do our Will and enters It, she remains rehabilitated in It. She is rehabilitated in sanctity, in purity, in love; she rises again in the beauty and in the scope with which we created her, dissolving all the evils of the human will. She starts the life of good. As soon as my Will sees that the soul wants to live in It, It does like one does with the clock which is not working: by winding it, it starts ticking, showing the hours and the minutes, becoming the guide of man's days. In the same way, my Will, as she enters It, seeing her stopped in the good of the human will, gives her a divine winding, so that the whole being, human and spiritual, feels the new life and the virtue of this winding by which she feels invested. This divine winding runs in the mind, in the heartbeat, in everything; so that, with irresistible strength, she runs in all that is holy and good. This winding ticks the minutes and the eternal hours of the divine life in the soul. Oh! how she runs in all that is divine. We rehabilitate her in everything. We let her run everywhere in the immensity of our sea, to do and take the things she wants; and although she cannot embrace all our immensity, she still lives in our sea, feeding herself on it, acquiring more of our beauty, wearing the clothes of our Will. In our sea she finds rest, the chaste embraces of her Jesus, His reciprocal love, sharing with Him joys and pains, and growing always in the good. My Will becomes her life for her - her predominant passion. Our winding makes her run so much that she even forms her own little Divine Royal Palace within our sea, which will be populated by the Most Holy Trinity, Who delights in this fortunate creature, filling her always with new graces and gifts. Therefore, cherish in your heart to live in our Fiat, so that We may find in you the joys and the glory of the whole Creation - the scope for which We created it."

The effects of disturbance. The little ill one in the Divine Will. One who lives in the Divine Will forms the support for her Creator, so the Holy Trinity secures Its interests.

My poor being feels the extreme need to live in the Divine Will. The bitterness and the pains that invade me are such that I feel as if they wanted to tear out the divine Fiat from inside of me. I feel, more than ever, the desire to live in It. But with all the efforts I make to live abandoned in Its arms, I still cannot do without feeling embittered, stunned, disturbed by the many troubles and hard pains that surround me, so much that I cannot take it any more. My Jesus, Celestial Mother, help me. Can't you see that I am about to succumb? If you don't hold me in your arms, if you don't continue to inundate me with the waves of your Divine Volition, I tremble and fear. What will happen to me? Please, don't leave me! Don't abandon me to myself in such a hard state. But as I was thinking of this, my always adorable Jesus ran to sustain me in His arms, and all goodness told me: "My good daughter, do not fear, courage; I won't leave you. I cannot leave you. The chains of my love tie me to you and make us inseparable; but then, why do you fear to be leaving my Will? Just as to enter It, it took a firm resolute act of wanting to live in It, in the same way, to get out of It, it would take another firm and resolute act; and you didn't do this, neither will my daughter ever do it, will you?"

All I want is that you do not let yourself be surprised by any disturbance. It pales you, it makes you lose freshness, it debilitates your strength, it makes you lose the liveliness of the light of the Fiat; so my love remains repressed, attention loses its pace, and although you are in my Will, you stay there as if inside a house in which you don't bother doing your duties - to decorate it, put it in order and give it all the sumptuousness that befits it. So, being troubled like this in my Will, you don't pay attention to receiving my creative and operating act; you are as if idle. But, courage then; since your pains are because of me, we keep you in our Will as the little ill one. I am the first who suffers with you, since your pains are mine and I suffer more than you; I am like your nurse; I assist you, I make your bed out of my arms, and I place my pains around you to strengthen you. Our Mother and Queen runs to put you on her lap, to protect her little ill daughter. Since one who operated in my Will brought glory and joy to all Heaven, all the Angels and Saints run around our little infirm one to assist her and serve her needs, in our Will. But they cannot enter into strange things that do not belong to Us. Even the pains must be our pains, otherwise they can't find the way to enter them. Therefore, courage, all that I want is that you be at peace. How many times I too, under the press of hard pains, became infirm, and the Angels ran to sustain me. Even my Heavenly Father, in seeing me in excruciating pains, ran to me and took me in His arms to strengthen my groaning Humanity. And how many times my Mother fell ill in my Will, in seeing the sufferings of her Son - to the point of feeling as though dying - and I ran to sustain her, holding her to my Heart, not letting her succumb. All I want is courage and peace. Don't trouble yourself too much, and I'll take care of everything."

Then He added: "My daughter, you don't know yet all the good the creature receives by living in my Will, and the great glory she gives to her Creator. Every act she does in It is a leaning of God on the creature, leaning His power of love and of sanctity. The more acts she repeats the more we trust her and the more we can lean on what is ours, since our Will is there, giving capacity and strength to the creature to receive what we want to give. But if we don't find our Will and her acts repeated in It, we don't know where to lean; she doesn't have strength, capacity, or the space in which to receive our gifts and graces, so that I can trust her. Poor creature, without our Will. She, the true citadel, without doors and without sentries to defend it - exposed to all the dangers. If we want to give, it would be like exposing our gifts and our very life to uselessness and to the danger of receiving offenses and ingratitude, so that they make us turn gifts and graces into chastisements.

You have to know that when the creature does our Will, we settle our interests. We never operate to our disadvantage: first we secure the interests - our glory - and then we operate; otherwise it would be as if we didn't have heart for our sanctity, or as if we did not appreciate our gifts or what we do, or as if we didn't know ourselves - our power and our ability. Who would ever start an enterprise without first securing his interests? Nobody. It may happen that, by disgrace, his enterprise suffers some losses, but by having thought of securing his interests first, he won't have to leave his situation - he can maintain his status. But if he hadn't put his interests in a safe place, he could reduce himself to starvation. This is why we want the creature in our Will: because we want to secure our concerns - what we give of love, sanctity, goodness, and all the rest. Our Divine Will takes charge of having them returned to us in as many divine acts - we gave divine love, she gives us divine love back. Our Will transforms the creature into our sanctity and goodness, and makes her give us back holy and good acts. Therefore, even her breath, her motion and her steps are pure and holy. We feel in her acts their similarity with Ours, because they are rendered so by our Will. So when we receive from the creature what is ours, made divine by our Fiat, our interest is settled; our love celebrates, our glory triumphs, and we prepare new surprises of love, gifts, graces. When our interest is returned, we don't mind about anything. We abound. So much that the Heavens overflow."

How We redouble Our love to the creature who loves in Our Will. Astonishment of Heaven. How the creature acquires the right to judge.

My little walk in the Divine Will continues, even though it seems that I do it with difficulty, step after step. But my Jesus seems to be satisfied, as long as I don't deviate, getting out of His Fiat. I can say that I am really ill, because of the many painful incidents of my poor existence - this is why He is happy with the little I do. However, He never stops pushing me and attracting me, telling me new surprises about His Will, to make me restart my flight. So, visiting my little soul, He told me: "My blessed daughter of my Will, how I yearn for the soul to live in our divine Will. I am so pleased when she repeats her acts in It that I go on preparing new gifts, graces, love and knowledge, to make her know my Will more and more, and to make her appreciate and esteem the celestial residence in which she had the great honor to reside. Therefore, if she loves I redouble my love for her; and if she returns to love me I always come back with new love, to surprise her; so much so, that the creature feels inundated and, confused. She repeats: 'is it possible that a God loves me so much?' And as she says so, taken by the ardor of my love, she returns to love me and I, again, surprise her with my love. It is like a contest of love - the human smallness which harmonizes with the love of her Creator. And she doesn't love me only for herself. Her love is such that she loves me for everyone and everything. Then, what does my Fiat do?

By Its power and immensity, It puts wings on this love we gave to the creature, making it soar everywhere. We feel that she loves us in each step, motion, thought, word and heartbeat of all the creatures. She loves us in the sun, wind, air and sea; there is nothing in which she doesn't love us. Oh! how happy and glorified we feel that the creature loves us in all and everywhere. For this, not only do We love her, but We love all creatures with new love. At an act of love in my Will, such great prodigies happen that the Heavens compete to be spectators and enjoy the new surprises of our love. Our very Divinity waits with unspeakable joy for the creature to enter into our Will to love us - to be able to show off our love - to feel loved by all. We unleash our love, to become her life, and not only our love: as the creature goes repeating her acts in our Fiat, we unleash new power, goodness and wisdom, so that she will feel animated by new power, goodness and wisdom. All will take part in it, and We will have the joy of seeing the human creatures (generations) being invested by our new power, goodness and wisdom. What wouldn't we make of this creature who lives in our Will?

We even reach the extent of giving her the right to judge together with us, and if we see that she suffers because the sinner is under a rigorous judgment, to soothe her pain we mitigate our just chastisements. She makes us give the kiss of forgiveness, and to make her happy we say to her: 'poor daughter, you are right. You are Ours and belong also to them. You feel in you the bonds of the human family, therefore you would want that we forgive everybody. We'll do as much as we can to please you, unless he despises or refuses our forgiveness.' This creature in our Will is the new Esther wanting to rescue her peoples. Oh! how happy we are to keep her always with us in our Will because, through her, we feel more inclined to use mercy, to concede graces, to forgive the most obstinate sinners, and to abbreviate the pains of the purging souls. Poor daughter! She has a thought for everyone, and a pain similar to ours, seeing the human family swimming in our Will without recognizing It - living in the middle of enemies in the most wretched misery."

Then He added: "My daughter, you must know that as the creature recognizes our Will, she loves It, wanting to make her life in It. So she pours into her God, and God pours into her. With this pouring from both sides, God makes the creature His own, making her take part in all His acts, resting in her, feeding her, making her grow more and more in His acts - and the creature makes God her own, feeling Him everywhere, taking her sweet rest in the One she loves and Who forms her life. God is All for her. Further, as the creature does her act in our Fiat, we feel her bond with all created beings. In that act she wants to give us everyone and everything; it seems she makes all beings visit us, so all may recognize us, love us and fulfill their duties towards their Creator. She makes up for all, loves for everyone and everything. Nothing can miss in one act done in our Will, otherwise we cannot say it is our act. Our Will, for decorum and honor, offers to the creature all that she should give us and do to us; It offers all the other creatures and the whole of Creation, as if it was her right.

If we didn't find in our Will, in which the creature operates, all the glory, honor and the return we deserve for having given life to all, and for having created many things to maintain these lives, where could we find it? Our Will is diffused in all, It is love and support for all; and our greatest glory is that the creature who lives in our Will gives It the opportunity to make her do what each creature should do to give of glory and compensation for having been created. We knew that the creature was limited. Her littleness couldn't give us either complete love or complete glory; therefore, we exposed our divine Being - the power of our Will - in order to receive what was due to us. The creature living in our Will was to be a guarantee of love and glory from all, through her. Therefore, these are the rights we demand: that she live in It. We demand rights of Creation, of Redemption, rights of Power, justice, immensity, so that, at least, what she can't do by herself, she does united with our Will. Then we can say: 'the creature loves us - she glorifies us as we want and deserve.' Therefore, if you want to give us all, and love us for all, live always in my Will - so We'll find everything and our rights will be satisfied."

One act in the Divine Will encloses and embraces all. All that the creature has to do is in God. How the human acts find the Divine acts.

My poor mind feels transported by a Supreme force in the sea of the Divine Will, and no matter how I travel around in It I can never do it all. Its immensity is such that my littleness cannot see it or embrace it all, and no matter how long I walk, because of Its great immensity, I seem to have done only a few steps. So I remained amazed, and my sweet Jesus, surprising me with His short little visit, told me: "My good daughter, my immensity is unreachable. The creature can never embrace it all, and no matter how much we give her of ourselves, she is like 'little drops', compared to our immensity. It is sufficient to say that even one single act of our Will is so huge as to surpass all possible imaginable beings; It encloses and embraces everyone and everything. Therefore, when the creature offers her act to be invested by our Will, the glory we receive is so great that it occupies the whole Creation. The Creation, in fact, is without reason, while the act in which the creature lets Us operate, has the fullness of the human reason which, invested by the Divine reason, surpasses Heaven, Sun - and all else.

So, if the glory we receive is great, the love we receive in return is almost incredible, and the good that the creature receives is incalculable. As soon as she gives us her act and we make it ours, all things want to give themselves to her: the Sun with its track, the Heaven with its immensity, the wind with its power and empire. All things find a place in that act and want to donate themselves so that their God may be glorified with the fullness of the human reason which they do not possess.” Then Jesus was silent. And I was thinking to myself: how is it possible that just upon entering the Divine Will our acts acquire such a good? Then Jesus added: “My daughter, this happens in a simple and natural way, because our Divine Being is very, very simple - as well as our acts. Now, you must know that everything good the creature was supposed to do, has been done, formed and fed by our divine Volition; one can say that her acts existed, exist and will exist in It - they are as if lined up in order, each with its place in our Will. Even more, they are first formed in us and then, in time, we deliver them to light.

Now, upon entering our Will, the soul finds that which is already hers, and we want her to take it; so, the human acts find our divine acts, established by us for her. They fling themselves - they transform themselves - kissing and locking themselves inside our divine acts - possessing them already. So the human becomes divine. Since our divine act is great and immense, the human act, so small, feels as if it is dissolving in the divine - as if it is losing its life. But this is not true. The little life exists, the human reason is dissolved in Ours, locked in Ours, occupied by Ours, with great honor for itself and great glory for Us, Who gave Ourselves to the creature. Playing with the little atom of the human will we make such prodigies of love, glory and sanctity as to astonish the whole of Heaven and earth. We feel rewarded for having created the creature with the whole Creation.

You must know that everything the creature does in our Will remains written in our Fiat with indelible characters of light. These are acts that, with their infinite value, will have the power to give the creature her kingdom. Therefore we wait for these acts to be performed. They will return so much love and glory to us, and so many graces to the living creatures, as to even up the sides, between Creator and creature, and let our Will reign in the middle of the human family. One act in our Will is so great that We can do and give everything.”

After this He added: “My daughter, as the soul enters my Will, she finds all the truths that I manifested to her and that she has learned about my Will. When they were revealed to her she received the seed of each of them, so she feels their possession. Now, as she enters It, she feels those truths within herself but she also finds them in my Fiat. They are like many Queens who take her by the hand and bring her higher up in God - by letting themselves be more known, and by giving her new light and graces. My truths form the ascent through which to reach God, and God, seeing this creature rising toward His arms, feels so much love that He then descends into the depth of the creature to delight in His truths, and to strengthen and instruct her on how she has to live her life in those truths which she has learned. We can say that the soul and God form a Divine society, working together and loving with one love. Now, you must know that the acts done in my Will unite all times making one single time - there is no distance among them. They are so much centered within each other that, although innumerable, they form as one; so much so, that within my Will one loves and adores, uniting all times. They are found all together with the very acts that innocent Adam did when he loved and worked in the divine fields of our Fiat. All acts are incorporated with the acts of love of our Supreme Being, which have the power to center themselves in all - to take their place of honor everywhere. They can say: ‘ wherever my Will is, that is our place.’

These acts done in our Will are provided with divine value. Each one possesses a new happiness - a new joy - so that the creature can form in her own acts innumerable joys, content and endless happiness; she can form by herself a Paradise of delights and beatitudes in addition to the one that her Creator will give her. This is natural, because when my Will operates within Us as well as in the creature, It makes rise the fullness of Its joys and delights, investing all It does. Possessing by nature ever new seas of infinite joys, It cannot operate without generating new joys and delights. Therefore, all things done in my Volition, acquire by Its virtue the joys of the celestial creatures, the inseparability of all the goods. All times are mine and I make only one time out of them. What a joy in being able to say: "I myself formed my own Paradise, because the divine Fiat worked together with me."

How the truths on the Divine Will will form the regime, the law, the fierce army. The knowledge will open eyes for the possession of such a good. The seal of the Most Holy Trinity as a sign to know whether we live in the Divine will.

My flight in the divine Volition continues. I can't do without It, I would feel as if I myself were killing my own soul. Heaven is watching me, and how could I live without my life? Then, I was thinking to myself about the truths that Jesus told me about His Holy Divine Will, but like I wanted to raise doubts, not understanding well. So I said to myself: how is it possible that one can reach such a point by living in the Divine Volition? And my beloved Jesus, surprising me, all goodness said: "My blessed daughter, do not be surprised; my Will has the power to let the creature reach every place, as long as she remains with It. Now, you must know that Its kingdom will be formed and founded on the truths I have manifested. The more truths I manifest, the more sumptuous, beautiful, majestic and superabundant in goods and joys this kingdom will be. My truths will form the regime, the laws, the food, the fierce army, the defense and the very life of those who will live in It. Each of my truths will have its own distinct office: one will be the Master; one the most loving Father; one the most tender Mother who carries her daughter on her lap to protect her from every danger, rocking her in Her arms, feeding her with Her love, clothing her in light. In sum, every truth will be the bearer of a special good.

See how this kingdom of my Will will be; I have been talking so much about It. I feel sorry when you are not attentive enough to write everything, because you will cause an additional good to be missing, since creatures will enjoy according to their knowledge. Knowledge will reveal the life, the light and the good for them to possess. It is almost impossible to possess a good without knowing it. It would be as if they had no eyes to see, no intelligence to understand, no hands to work, no feet to walk, and no heart to love. On the other hand, the first thing knowledge does is to give them eyes, to prevent them from being like the poor blind. It lets them look, understand and desire the good and the life it wants to give them. Furthermore, the knowledge of my truths becomes, itself, the actor and spectator transmitting its own life to the creature.

Now, you must know that the acts done in my Will are inseparable, although distinct among themselves - distinct in their sanctity, in their beauty, in love and in wisdom. They will carry the seal of the Most Holy Trinity, for while the divine persons are distinct among each other, they remain inseparable: one is the Will, one the sanctity, one the beauty, and so forth. In the same way, these acts will be inseparable yet distinct, enclosing within themselves the seal of the Supreme Holy Trinity, One and Three, Three and One. Even more, these acts will possess It as their own life. They will be the greatest glory for Us, and the whole of Heaven, in seeing in them our divine Lives being multiplied for as many acts performed in our Will."

Then, I was thinking to myself: how can one know whether he is living in the Divine Will? My sweet Jesus added: "My daughter, it's easy to know it. You must know that, when my Fiat reigns in the soul, It keeps Its act in continuous operation. It cannot be present and not do something. It is life, and It must breathe, move, palpitate, make itself heard. It must have its primary operating act so the creature feels Its empire, and follows Its acts, almost continuously, in the Divine Will. Therefore, continuation is a sure sign that one lives in It. With this continuation, he feels the need of Divine breathing, motion and attitude. Therefore, if he stops his continuous acts he feels as though he is missing life, motion and everything else. Soon he restarts his continuous acts, because he knows that it would cost too much to do otherwise. It would cost him divine life, and one who has possessed It can hardly let It go.

Now, what is this action of the creature in the Divine Will? It is the sequence of my Life and of my Will in the creature, because only my Will has the virtue of being unceasing in Its continuous acts. Otherwise, if it could be said so, everyone and everything would remain as if paralyzed and with no life; but this cannot be. Now the creature does not possess by herself this virtue of operating continuously, but when united with my Will, she has the virtue, the strength, the will and the love to do it. How much she can change things. In fact, the creature who lets herself be carried and possessed by It can make such changes that she no longer recognizes herself, if she even retains a distant memory of her past life. There is also another sign. When my Will sees the soul being disposed, It first embalms her - her will, her pains - with an air of peace; then It forms Its Throne. Therefore, one who lives in my Will possesses a strength that is never extinguished; a love that does not love anybody, but truly loves all in God. To how many sacrifices she exposes herself for all - and for each one in particular. Poor daughter, she is the true martyr and victim of all. Oh!, how many times in seeing her suffering, I look at her with so much tenderness and compassion, and to cheer her up I say: 'My daughter, you received my same destiny. Poor daughter, courage; your Jesus loves you more.' And in feeling more loved by me, she smiles in the sufferings and abandons herself in my arms. My daughter, to experience, to possess what my Will can do, creatures need to be inside of It; otherwise they won't understand a thing."

The soul in-waiting for the Divine Will. The Divine Will forms the adaptable material for the works of God. The little Divine Field.

I feel the Divine Will inside and outside of me, surprising me whenever I'm about to do my little actions, or to say my little 'I love you' - to invest them with Its light and make them Its own. It has such an astonishing inimitable attention that it's almost incredible. If the creature is not attentive in giving It her little acts, oh!, how much It suffers. Oh! how much I too would like to be all attentive - to imitate It by letting nothing escape me, so that we can surprise each other. But as I was thinking of this, my sweet Jesus, visiting my little soul, all love told me: "My blessed daughter, the soul that wants to live in my Will lives in waiting for It; she waits for It when she loves, because she wants to love together with It. If she operates she awaits my Will, because It wants to be Actor and Audience. My Will is in continuous and anxious expectation of everything the creature does, in order to inhabit her - to be the Actor, to make her acts Its own.

Furthermore, you must know that as the creature enters my Will, she finds the sanctity of God investing her, Its beauty embellishing her, Its love transforming her in God. Its Purity makes her so limpid that she no longer recognizes herself; Its light makes her Godlike. Oh! how the power of my Will can change the human destiny. This is why It becomes spectator of the creature, wanting to do Its work, which has been prepared from all eternity and which has to be done for that creature. My Will does not want to be repressed in Its incessant motion, and It reaches the point of locking the creature within Its Eternal motion, to be able to receive and to give, and not to suffer in waiting for one to live in Its Will. It cannot bear not having the creature living closely together with It. If It does not feel the creature within Its divine motion and sanctity, Its love remains as if arrested and suffocated. Therefore, we keep our little divine Field within one who lives in our Will. Here we can do our job, while our Will provides us with the adaptable material to make the most beautiful works. In fact, when we want to work in the little field of the soul, we expect to find the material of our sanctity, since we would never put our holy hands in the human mud.

In order to do our most beautiful works, we want to find our purity, which attracts us; our beauty which enraptures us; our love, which imposes itself on us to make us work. Only our Will can provide these divine materials for our job. Everything is adaptable for us, so we can make such works as to astonish Heaven and earth. On the other hand, we are forced to do nothing where our Will is not present. We do not find our adaptable materials, and if there is any good, it is only an apparent good, stained by self-esteem, self-glorification and distorted intentions. We are averse to working in that creature, because we would put in danger our most beautiful works. We make certain first, and then we operate. You must know that the more acts the creature does in our Will, the more she enters into God; the more we extend that little field within our Divine womb, the more beautiful the works we can do, and the more we can give of ourselves.

Therefore, the creature is always under the increasing action of our Divine life. Our love for her is so great that we carry her in our arms, continuously repeating ‘we make you in our image and resemblance.’ We nurture her with our divine breath, with our sanctity, power and goodness; we look at her, finding our reflection, our wisdom, our enchanting beauty. How could we ever stay without this creature if we are tied together by our divine attributes - if she possesses us and continuously gives us in return what we gave her, in order to love and repay us? Beyond this, by living in our Will she received from us the virtue of producing life - not works. In fact, by giving her our sanctity, love, and everything else, we give her the generative virtue; she continuously generates life of sanctity, life of love, life of light, beauty, power and wisdom, offering it to us. She surrounds us and never stops returning to us - turning into life, all that we gave her. Oh! What a conception, what a feast and glory for us, in seeing so many lives returned to us, which love and glorify our sanctity; and seeing this done in our light, wisdom and beauty. Other creatures can give us, at the most, works of sanctity and of love, but not of life. Only one who lives in our Will can form many lives with her acts, because she has received from us the generative virtue - to be able to generate as many lives as she wants, and say: ‘life You gave me, life I give back to You.’

See, then, the great difference: life can speak and is not subject to end. It can generate. Works cannot speak, cannot generate, and they are subject to dispersion. Therefore, nobody can reach the one who lives in our Will, and the love she has for us. No matter how many great works they might do, they will always be like little drops of water before an ocean - the little light in front of the Sun. One single ‘I love you’ of a creature living in my Will is enough to leave behind all the love of all the creatures put together. This ‘I love you’, although small, runs, embraces and rises over all; it comes into our arms and hugs us; it gives us a thousand caresses, telling us many beautiful things about our love; it takes refuge in our womb, and we hear it always repeating: ‘I love you, I love you, I love you; life of my life - you generated me and I will love you forever.’ In anything these creatures should want to do, they do nothing less than form life. If they perform good and holy acts, by possessing the life of our Will, they generate the life of our beauty and the life of our sanctity; coming into our arms, they tell us the story of our beauty and sanctity, and oh!, how many beautiful things they tell us - with how much grace they narrate the extension of our goodness, and the height and greatness of our sanctity. They never stop repeating how good and holy we are, and throwing themselves into our divine womb, they penetrate into the most intimate hiding places to get to know, even more, how good and holy we are - so they keep singing to us again and again how good and holy we are. Oh!, how beautiful it is to hear the narration of our Divine history from a human will united with our own, whispering to her Who her Creator is.

In sum, if she wants to glorify us, she generates the life of our glory; if she admires our power, wisdom and beauty, she feels within herself the life of our Divine qualities; she narrates to us how powerful, wise and beautiful we are. She says: ‘life of my life, now that I’ve known you, I feel the need to talk about You and to narrate your Divine story.’ These lives are the greatest glory for us, our long and inseparable generation, always in motion, always speaking about our Supreme Being. No life waits for another: as one comes, another follows behind, and then another again - they never end. Our happiness is full - the purpose of creation fulfilled, which is having the company of the creature who know us. And while we delight in her and she is with us, we make her more and more like us. How could we not love the company of the one who belongs to us? And, even more, we love the company of the creature, because we are Life of her life.

This is why our pain was great when Adam, the first one of our Sons, descended from within our Will, to do his own will. Poor Adam. He lost the generative virtue to generate divine lives with his acts; at the most, he could make works, but not lives. When he was united with our Will, he possessed that divine virtue, so he could form with his acts as many lives as he wanted. It happened to him as to the sterile mother who cannot give life, or as to a person who possesses the most pure and bright golden thread and wants to do a work with it, but then throws away that golden thread: he pushes my Will as life away from himself - he has to use the thread of his own will, which is like an iron thread. Poor creature. He could no longer do golden works; works invested by the bright sun of my Will. He had to remain doing only works of iron, and if necessary, even works filthy with passions. The destiny of Adam was so reversed that he almost couldn't recognize himself. He went down into the abyss of miseries; the strength and the light were not in his power any more. Before he sinned, our image and resemblance were growing in all his acts. That was a task we assumed in the act of creating him, and we did want to maintain our task, keeping in force our creative word through his very acts. We wanted also to keep him always together with us, and in continuous communication with us. So, our pain was great, and if we, being all-seeing, had not seen how our Will was to reign again as life in the future centuries - like a little balm to our intense suffering - we would have reduced the whole of Creation to nothing, not knowing what to do with it when our Will no longer reigned. Creation was supposed to serve only the creatures, and we created all things for Ourselves and for the creatures. Therefore, pray that my Will may return as life. You, yourself, be Its victim."

The disposition calls the divine work. The Divine Will places a divine motion in one who lives in It. How the creature can give all to His Creator. Enchantment for the divine eyes. The Blessed and the pilgrim soul.

I am under the waves of the Divine Volition which always wants to give Itself to the creatures. But the creatures have to want this. The Divine Will does not want to be an intruder who drops in without the creature even knowing It. It wants to be created. It wants to give her Its kiss of love and then, triumphant and loaded with gifts enter into her and fill her with Its gifts. But as I was thinking of this, my Jesus, feeling the need to confide His secrets to His little one, told me: "My blessed daughter, my Will wants to give, but It wants to find the soul disposed. It is like the earth for the farmer: no matter how many seeds he may possess, if there were no earth on which he could throw those seeds, and if the earth had a mind and was not disposed to receive his seeds, the poor farmer would feel as if those seeds, meant to enrich the earth, were thrown back in his face and his eyes. Such is my Will: It wants to give, but if It doesn't find the soul disposed, It cannot find a place for Its gifts. With great pain, It would feel as if they were being thrown back in Its face; so if It wants to talk to her, It would find her deaf. Therefore, disposition prepares the soul, opening divine doors and providing the sense of hearing. But if the soul first hears what my Will wants to give, she is placed in communication so that she may love It and long for what she is about to receive. If she is not disposed we don't give anything, because we do not want to expose our gifts to uselessness.

On the other hand, disposition is like the earth which surrenders to the farmer - surrenders to anything he wants, letting him work, hoe and plow, to safely cover the seeds with which he fills it. In the same way, if our Supreme Being finds the disposition, We do our works. We prepare her, we participate in her, and with our creative hands we prepare the place for our gifts and form our most beautiful works. But if she is not disposed, with all our power we can do nothing, because her interior is cluttered up with stones, thorns, wicked passions; and since she is not disposed, she does not allow us to take them out. How many sanctities go up in smoke for lack of disposition. Further, if she is not disposed, she does not adapt herself to living in our Divine Will. On the contrary, it seems that It is just not for her. Its sanctity floors her; Its purity makes her feel ashamed; Its light blinds her. But if she is disposed, she flings herself into Its arms, and she lets us do whatever we want with her. She even remains there like a tiny little baby receiving our works with so much love as to feel enraptured. And what does our Will do? It makes flow in her Its divine motion, and with this divine motion she finds all our works in action; she kisses them, hugs them and invests them with her little love. She finds my conception and my birth in action, and with her love she wants to be conceived and reborn with me. And not do only I let her do this, but, finding one who is reborn together with me, I feel such a joy as to be repaid for having come upon earth.

But she doesn't stop here. The divine motion she possesses makes her run everywhere to find all that my Humanity - like a fierce army - did: my tears, my words, my prayers, my steps, my pains; she takes, she kisses, she adores - everything. There is nothing I did that she does not invest with her love. What does she do then? She makes everything her own, and, in a manner all childish and graceful, she locks all things up inside her womb. Then she rises high. She comes before our Divinity, places these things all around us, and with emphasis of love she says: 'adorable Majesty, how many beautiful things I am bringing to you. All are mine and I bring you all, because all love you, adore you, glorify you, and return to you the great love that you have for me and for all.'

This divine motion, which is our Will, places in the creature who lives in It, the new life It has just received. With this motion the creature has right over all. All that is Ours is hers, therefore she can give all. Oh! How many surprises she gives us. She always has something to give to us, and with this divine motion she has the ability to run everywhere: now she brings us the creation to love us as we loved her in all created things; now she brings us all that I did while on earth to tell Us 'I love you as you love me.' She never stops. It seems she can't be without giving us new love surprises in order to be able to say: 'I love you, I love always.' And we call her our joy and our perennial happiness, because there is no greater joy for us than the continuous love of the creature.

You must know that one act done in our Will is greater than a rising Sun, which invests the entire earth, the sea and the founts. Everything is invested by Its light; not even the most tiny little blade of grass is left out. Just so, each act done in my Will runs and searches, investing all. It forms the most shining silver mantle inside and outside the creature. Then, so greatly adorned, it brings the creature before our adorable Majesty, making our own Will pray to us with a voice of light, a voice of love speaking for all. Producing a sweet enchantment for the pupils of our divine eyes, it makes us see all the creatures clothed with our divine light; and We Ourselves exalt the power of our Fiat, which can hide human miseries by the power of Its light, turning them into light. There is nothing we can deny to that act, because it has the power to give us all and compensate for all."

In hearing this, I thought to myself: if a creature living in His Will, still on her journey on earth can do so much with one single act, how much more will the Blessed do in Heaven, since they have perennial life in It? And my sweet Jesus added: "My daughter, there is a great difference between the Blessed and the traveling soul. The Blessed have nothing to add, since their life, their acts and their will remain fixed within Us. They say: 'we accomplished our day, we cannot do more; at the most we can give new joys and new love.' But the pilgrim soul has not yet completed her day. If she wants to live in our Will she can make prodigies of grace and light for the whole world, and prodigies of love for her Creator. Therefore, all our attention is on the traveling soul, because her work is still in process and is not yet finished. If she is disposed, we can do works never done before, so beautiful as to astonish Heaven and earth. Our pain is great when we find the traveling soul not disposed to letting us perform our most beautiful works. How many of our works have been started and not finished, with others shattered at their peak moment. Only in our Will and for those who live in It, can we accomplish our works with their unreachable beauty, since our Will provides the adaptable materials to do anything we want. Outside of It, we cannot find sufficient light, nor a rising love, nor divine materials; we are forced to fold our arms, because we just can't move forward with any of those who don't live in our Will!

Furthermore, for the soul on her journey, we circulate the coin of merit. Our divine image is coined on each of her acts animated by our Will. These coins have infinite value, so whenever she wants, she has the money to pay me for anything she wants. Therefore, our concern and interest is for the souls on their journey, because this is the time for conquest, while there are no conquests in Heaven, but only joy and happiness.”

One who wanders in the Divine Volition, goes around Its works. She receives the endowment that God prepared for her, and forms her days. She becomes a messenger of peace between Heaven and earth. The bearer of divine generations.

I was doing my round in the acts of the Divine Volition - done for love of us, and it seemed to me that each act wanted to be recognized for all that it did; for how much it loved us and still loves us, since its love never ends. So, I was thinking to myself: what good do I do by always returning in the acts of the Divine Will? And my always adorable Jesus, surprising me, all goodness told me: “My blessed daughter, you must know that in all we have done in Creation, as well as in Redemption, we formed the dowry to provide the creature with our own goods and works. The soul who enters our Will comes to take possession of her endowment - to recognize it and to love it. As she wanders in our Will to get to know this most extensive dowry given to her by her Creator, she forms her day in time. She forms days for as many times as she wanders, walks, loves and knows. I gave her this great endowment, which she can receive and know in time, for this reason: to let her form her days which will crown her eternal day of an eternity which never ends. The more she wanders in our Will, the more days she forms, which will make her more rich and glorious in Heaven.

If the creature did not take the care of recognizing, possessing and loving this great endowment, she would be a poor unhappy one, living in miseries and forced into starvation, though owning many goods. It would happen as to the father who gives to his son his very large properties, but the son doesn't bother to get to know them, or to go there often enough to possess and enjoy the endowment he received from his father. With all these goods which he could possess, this son, not caring about them or recognizing them, goes from rich to poor. One can say that he declined from the nobility of his Father as if he was no longer his legitimate son.

What wouldn't the pain be for the poor father who, though being so rich, has to see his son like a poor ragamuffin begging others for bread? If he had the power, this son would make his own father die of pain. This is the state of our Supreme Being. All that we have created was supposed to be the endowment for the creature, to make her happy and rich, to let her know who we are, how much we have loved her and how much we have done for her. Therefore, those who don't wander around in our works do not recognize them or possess them, and they cannot gain the merit of their days within time. Isn't this a great pain for us? So, enter always into our works. The more you come, the more you will recognize them, love them, and possess them by right.

Furthermore, each act done in my Will is a messenger of peace which leaves the earth and goes into Heaven. It comes to bring peace between Heaven and earth. Every single word said in my Will carries the bond of peace, and one who comes to live in It receives, as the prime good, the bond of peace between herself and us. She feels as if embalmed by our divine peace. With this bond of peace, she feels within herself the virtue of becoming the peacemaker between Heaven and earth. Everything is peace within her: peaceful are the words, peaceful the glances, peaceful the movements. Oh!, how many times with one word she places peace between Us and the creature. One single glance from her - sweet and peaceful, wounds us and makes us turn chastisements into graces. So, her acts are nothing other than bonds of peace - the peaceful messengers which bring the kiss of peace of the creatures to God, and the kiss of God to the creatures. Further, the more the creature lives in our Will, the more she comes deeply into our divine family, acquiring our modes and receiving our secrets. She looks more like Us, we love each other more, and she puts us in the condition of giving her always new graces - new love surprises. We keep her in our home as a member of our family. She eats at our table and sleeps on our knees. We just cannot live without her. Our Will ties her so much to us, feeling her love and attraction, that we cannot be without her, nor she without us.”

After this, He added: “My daughter, our desire that the creatures live in our Will is so great, that we find ourselves in the condition of a poor mother who feels the need to give birth to her baby, but cannot. She does not know where to place him, or from whom she can find care, or who can take him. Poor mother, how much she suffers. Our Supreme Being is in this state. We feel the need to generate ourselves, but, where can we be placed? If our Will is not the life of the creature, there is no place for us. We have no one to whom we can give ourselves, no one who can feed us - not even the court that is needed for our adorable Majesty. Since our Most Holy Trinity is always in the act of generating, these births remain repressed within ourselves. We want to generate our Divine Trinity within creatures, but since they don’t live in our Will, there is no one to receive our divine generation. What a suffering, seeing Ourselves being rejected back into Ourselves; not being able to produce the great good that our eternal generation can form within the creatures.

Our Will embraces all, and as the soul forms her acts, she becomes the bearer of all. If she adores, she brings us the adoration of all; if she suffers, she encloses the reparation of all. One act in our Will must surpass, enclose and embrace everyone and everything, to the extent of becoming the bearer of our Supreme Being, since we never get out of our Will. So, one who lives in It can enclose us within each one of her acts, to bring us wherever she wants: to the creatures, to make ourselves known; to the whole Creation, to tell us how beautiful our works are; to Ourselves, to tell us: ‘see how much I love you, I even get to bring you Yourselves.’

We find ourselves in the same condition as the sphere of the Sun, which never goes out of the circle of its rays. Even if the rays descend to the bottom of the earth, investing all - even the most tiny plant, the sphere never moves from its light, from the high place where it is; but it still walks together with its rays, doing whatever they do. Such are We, the bearer of our Will; while our Will is our own bearer. We are one single Life, and whoever lives in It becomes the bearer of our Divine Being, while we become the bearers of the little human will. And we love it so much that it forms our victory and our most beautiful joy: to see our Will being accomplished within it.”

God sighs for souls to live in His Will. How it is established that He will form Divine Life for each created thing, and for each act the creature will do in His Will. How His sanctity and His love will remain formed in them.

The ocean of the Divine Will is always murmuring, forming Its huge waves to assault the creature, now with light, now with love, now with enchanting beauty, now with Its sighs; longing for a little place in the creatures, to be able to live in them. Its love is unspeakable. It would reach the excesses; It would use all Its stratagems of love, to have the freedom to live and make us live in Its Fiat! I remained surprised in seeing this, and my lovable Jesus told me: “Daughter of my Will, you do not know the extent Our love reaches, and what We will do to make the creature live in Our Will. This is the most beautiful point of creation, and if We did not do so, We could say that Our work is not accomplished, or that We have not done what We know how to do, and can do. We could say that we have not done anything of what is still left to do.

You must know that it has been established from eternity that We will form in Ourselves a life for each created thing and for each act the creature will do in our Will. Since our Being is Superior to all, it is right that It surpasses in Its lives the number of all created things, and all the acts of the human family. But if the creature does not live in Our Will we cannot do this. The divine material would be missing in order to form Our life in her acts - the place in which to put it would be missing. Forming Our lives without someone to receive them... what for? See then, how this is really the most beautiful, the most powerful and wisest act - it is about exposing the lives which We have already generated in Our womb. But we cannot deliver them, because Our Will does not reign. Do you think it is trivial that something is still missing in the work of Creation? It is the most interesting act, the culminating point, in which the Creation and all the acts will be wrapped, with a beauty so rare, with a blooming so great that the beauty that creatures have known of Us, and the glory that they gave Us in the past will all remain like little drops.

My daughter, oh! how much We long for it. How much Our delirious love is yearning and sighing for the creature to live in our Will. And since we know that she will be lacking many things for us in order to use her acts to form Our Life, We are available to work continuously to compensate for anything. In each of her acts We will give her Our love, sanctity, goodness and beauty, so that nothing can miss of what is needed to form Our life. We will generate and reproduce Ourselves, and - oh!, how much love, sanctity and goodness We will receive in return. How could We not sigh for the creatures to live in our Will - not only would We have the creatures, but also Our very Life generated in their acts. While enjoying one life, another one will be coming - and another, according to all the acts they will do. As soon as We see that the creature is about to do one act, We will position Ourselves, becoming actors and spectators of Our very Life. What joy! What happiness, my daughter, to be able to form Ourselves; to have someone who knows Us and loves Us; to possess Our royal palace within the creature!

Further, there is the great good that the creature will receive: her little sanctity will remain in Ours; her little love will remain in Our love; her goodness and beauty within Ours. In this way, if she does a holy act, she will have Our sanctity in her power; if she loves, she will love with Our love, and so forth. All her acts will rise from within Our acts. So, she will love Us always and We will feel always loved. She will grow more and more in sanctity, goodness and beauty, and with this, she will acquire ever new knowledge of the love of her Creator - she will feel it palpating in her acts. My Will will reveal to her ever new things about Our Divine Being, to make her appreciate more Our life which she possesses. The knowledge will make new love arise, by communicating more truths about Our beauty. It will not stop telling her new things, as though feeding her with what We are. The happy creature will feel as though caught in the net of Our love, invested by Our light and by the enchantment of Our beauty, and We will be so enraptured by her love that We will take refuge within her, to love and to release Our love. We will embellish her so much that We will let Ourselves be conquered by such a rare beauty. All other things are like little drops compared to the living of the creature in Our Will. Therefore, be attentive. If you live in my Will, you will give Me the greatest joy and will make Me happy.”

After this, I kept on thinking about the great good of living in the Divine Will, and my sweet Jesus added: “My daughter, this good is so great that I vividly feel Our life palpating in the creature; so much so, that We no longer need any words in order to make Ourselves understood. Our breath in hers is Word which invests the whole human being, turning it into Our Word. It speaks in the mind, in the works, in the steps - the virtue of Our creative word invests her in such a way as to be felt inside the most intimate fibers of her heart. I turn the creature into my very Word; my Word becomes her nature. Not doing what I say and want, would be as though going against herself. This cannot be.

For one who lives in my Will, I am the Word in the breathing, in the motion, in the intelligence, in the glance, in everything; to the extent that, while feeling fused and soaked inside my Word, not having heard the sound of my voice, she is surprised and says: ‘I feel as if my nature has changed into His word, and I do not know when He spoke to me.’ And I: ‘Don’t you know that I am Word in every instant? And although you are not listening, I speak, knowing that, when you enter the room of your soul, you will find it, and will take the gift of My Word.’ My words do not run away, but they remain and transform the human nature into themselves.

There is such a union and a transformation that, those who live in Our Will, and We, Ourselves, understand each other without talking - we speak without words. This the greatest gift that We can give to the creature: to speak with the breath, with the motion. She is so identified with Us, that We use the same manners with her which We use with Ourselves – even though Our Divine Being is all word and voice, when we do not want, We let no one hear Us. Therefore, be attentive and let my Will guide you in everything.”

How the Humanity of Our Lord served as a veil for His Divinity and for the prodigies of the Divine Volition. How all created things and the very creature are veils which hide the Divinity. The Immaculate Conception and the new birth of all.

My flight in the Divine Will continues. It seems to me that It can be found in all things, natural and spiritual, saying with unspeakable love: ‘I am here, let’s act together - do not do it by yourself. Without me you wouldn’t know how to do it the way I would. I would remain with the pain of having been put aside, while you would remain with the sorrow of not having in your acts the value of one single act of a Divine Will.’

While I was thinking of this, my sweet Jesus, repeating His short little visit, all goodness told me: “My blessed daughter, my Most Holy Humanity was the depository of my Divine Will. There was no act, little or great, even the breathing and the motion, that my Humanity, like a veil, did not hide completely in my divine Fiat. Even more, I would not have been capable of a breath or a movement if I did not enclose It within me. Therefore, my Humanity served as the veil in which to hide my Divinity as well as the great prodigy of the work of my Will in all my acts. Otherwise, no one could have come close to me. My Majesty and the shining light of my Divinity would have eclipsed him and, would just have floored him - all would have run away from me. Who would have dared to cause me the smallest pain? But I loved the creature and I came on earth not to show off my Divinity, but my love. So I wanted to hide myself inside the veil of my Humanity to get acquainted with man, to do what he did, reaching the point of letting him give me unheard-of pains and even death.

The soul that unites with my Humanity in all her acts and pains, by wanting to find my Will and make It her own, breaks the veil of my Humanity, finding in my acts the fruit, the life, the prodigies that my Humanity did within me, and receiving all that I did within me as her own life. My Humanity will serve to help and guide her, showing her how to live within It. In this way, I will still be on earth, continuing to be the veil hiding what my Will wants to do. But if creatures will look for me without my Will, they will find only my veil, not the life of my Will. They will not be able to produce the prodigies which It operated in the hiding place of my Humanity. It is always my Will which knows how to place inside the creature the greatest prodigies - the brightest Suns; wonders never before seen - as if inside each of my Humanities on earth. But, alas, I search them and I cannot find them because no one, in total firmness, is looking for my Will.”

Then dear Jesus kept silent. I remained thinking of what He had just said, and I could really see how everything Jesus had done and suffered became bearer of the Divine Volition. Then He continued: “My good daughter, it wasn’t only my Humanity which - though in a more special way - was hiding my Divinity and my Will; all created things and the very creatures are veils which hide our Divinity and our adorable Will. Even Heaven is a veil which hides our immense Divinity, our firmness and immutability; while the variety of stars hides the multiple effects that our immensity, firmness and immutability possess. Oh! If man could see our Divinity revealed under that blue vault without the veil of that blue which covers us and hides us, his littleness would remain crushed under our Majesty. He would walk trembling, feeling continuously upon him the gaze of a pure, holy, strong and powerful God. But since we love man, we veil ourselves, lending ourselves secretly to all that is needed.

The Sun is the veil which hides our shining Majesty - we must perform a miracle to restrain our uncreated light so as not to scare the creature. Veiled by this light created by us, we approach the creature, kissing her and warming her; we lay this veil of light even under her steps - on the right, on the left, under her head. We even fill her eye with light, and, who knows, maybe the frail pupil of her eye will recognize us; but no, in vain - she takes only the veil of light which hides us and we remain the unknown God in the middle of the creatures. What pain! The wind, too, is a veil which hides our empire; the air is a veil, hiding our life which continuously gives to the creatures; the sea is a veil, which hides our purity, our refreshments and divine freshness - its murmuring hides our continuous love, and when we see we are not listened to, we even storm in huge waves so as to be recognized and loved. For every good that man receives, our life is hidden inside, offering that good to him.

Our Divinity loves man so much that It even hides inside the earth, making it firm and stable under his steps, not allowing him to vacillate. Even in the singing bird, in the flowered fields, in the various sweetnesses of the fruits - Our joys, to make him taste the innocent delights of our Divine Being. And how much more could I tell you about the many prodigies of love by which we are veiled and hidden inside man? We veil ourselves in the breathing, in the heartbeat, in the motion, in the memory, in the intellect, in the will; we veil ourselves in the pupil of his eyes, in his word, in his love, and - oh!, how painful it is not to be recognized or loved. We can say that we live in him, we carry him and we let ourselves be carried by him. He could do nothing without us; but still, we live together without knowing each other. What pain! If only he knew us.

The life of man was supposed to be the first, the greatest prodigy of our love and omnipotence. We had only to offer him, from within its veils, our sanctity and our love, covering him with our beauty - making him enjoy our delights. But since he does not recognize us, he keeps us like the far away God - away from himself. If we are not recognized, we cannot give our goods to the blind. He is forced to live under the nightmare of his own miseries and passions. Poor man, who does not recognize us, either in the veils which hide us within him, or in the veils of each created thing; he just keeps running away from our life and from the scope for which he was created; so, many times, when we cannot tolerate his ingratitude, the very goods contained in our veils are turned into chastisement for him. Therefore, do recognize that you are nothing other than a veil hiding your Creator, in order for you to receive, and for us to administer, our Divine Life in all your acts. Recognize It in the veils of all created things, so that all may help you to receive a great so good.”

After this, I was doing my round in the acts of the Divine Volition. How many surprises in this Will, so Holy! And what is more is that It awaits the creature in order to keep her aware of all Its works, to let her know how much It loves her, and to give her what It does as gift. It fidgets to give without ceasing, and It is content with a little ‘I love you’ from the creature in return. Then I arrived at the Conception of my Mother and Queen: how many wonders. And my sweet Jesus continued: “My blessed daughter, today is the Feast of the Immaculate Conception. It is the most beautiful Feast, the greatest one for Us - for Heaven and for earth. In the act of creating this Celestial Creature from nothing, we made such prodigies and wonders that the Heavens and the earth remained completely filled. We called everyone - nobody was put aside, so that all could be reborn together with Her. It was the new birth of everyone and everything.

Our Divine Being overflowed so much that, in the act of her conception, we put at her disposal seas of love, of sanctity and light, with which she could love all, make saints of all, and give light to all. The Celestial Little One felt an innumerable population being reborn in her little Heart. And what did our Paternal goodness do? First, we donated her to ourselves, so that we could delight and court Her, and She could delight and court us; then, we donated Her to every creature. Oh! How much She loved us, and loved all - with such intensity and fullness that there is no point in which Her love does not arise. The whole Creation - the Sun, the wind, the sea, are filled with the love of this Holy Creature, because they too felt reborn with Her to new glory. They even had the great glory of possessing their Queen, to the extent that when She prays to us for the good of Her people with a love which we cannot resist, she says: ‘Adorable Majesty, remember that You offered me. I am yours and I am theirs too; so, by right, you must grant what I ask.’”

God does not give if the creature does not want to receive. Painful conditions when one doesn't live in the Divine Volition. The depository of the whole Creation. Divine food: love. Conditions of God when creatures don't live in the Divine Volition. How they degenerate from His image.

I am always in the arms of the Divine Volition which makes me aware of everything, telling me: ‘I have done everything for you, but I want you to recognize the excesses of my love.’ While my mind was wandering around, my always adorable Jesus, Who always wants to be the first narrator of the Fiat and of Its works, all goodness told me: “My blessed daughter, to make known all that we have done for the creatures is already for us the return for what we have done. But who can we let know? To the one who lives in our Will because our Will gives the capacity to understand us, the hearing to listen; It transforms the human will so that it wills what we want. We never give if the creature doesn't want to receive and doesn't know what we want to give.

See then, in what painful conditions they leave us by not living in our Will. They turn us into the mute God. We cannot make known how much we love them and how much they should love us; one can say that the communications between Heaven and earth remain severed. You must know that everything was created as a gift for the creatures. We made each created thing as the bearer of the gift and of the love which we placed inside that gift. Do you know why? Because the creature had nothing to give to us; and we loved her with great love and wanted her to have something to give us. If there's nothing to give, the correspondence ends, friendship is broken - love dies. So we provided the creature with many of our gifts, as if they were her own, so that she could have something to give us. Therefore we make of the one who lives in our Will the depository of the whole of Creation.

Oh! What a joy, what happiness for us, when we see her using our gifts to love us and say: ‘see how much I love you. I give you the Sun to love you, and I love you with the same love with which you loved me in the Sun; I give you the homage and the adoration of its light, the variety of its effects to love you - its continuous act of light, to spread myself everywhere and put my ‘I love you’ in everything touched by its light.’ Then, do you know what happens? We see the light of the Sun, all its effects, and all the places where that light penetrates, all studded with the ‘I love you’ - the adoration, the tributes of the creature. And there is even more: the Sun carries in triumph the love of the Creator and of the creature, so we feel united within It, with one single Will and one single heart; and if the creature feels she wants to love us more, bravely she says: ‘see how much I love you - but it's not enough, I want to love you more; so I enter into its inaccessible, immense, eternal light which never ends. From within that light I want to love you with your eternal love.’ You cannot comprehend our joy in seeing that she loves us not only in our gifts, but also in ourselves. Conquered by her love, we redouble the gift in return, and abandon ourselves to her to be loved - not only in the way in which we love our works, but in the way we love within ourselves. All this, to love her.

In this way she uses all created things to make for us new surprises of love in return for our gifts - to maintain the correspondence and to continuously say that she loves us. And we, who do not know how to receive without giving, redouble our gifts. But the greatest gift is when we see her carried in the arms of our Will. We feel so much attracted that we can't remain without speaking about our Supreme Being. Giving her an additional knowledge of what we are is the greatest gift we can give - it surpasses the whole Creation. To know our works is a gift, but making Our very Self known is giving our own life; it is admitting her to our secrets; it is the Creator trusting the creature.

To live in our Will and be loved is everything for us; more so, since the love for ourselves forms our continuous food. Because His Son loves, my Heavenly Father generates unceasingly, and by generating me, He forms the food with which we feed ourselves. I am His Son and I love with His same love - and the Holy Spirit proceeds; with this we form more food to feed Ourselves. If we created the Creation, it is because we love; and if we sustain it with our creative and preserving act, it is because we love. This love serves as our food. If we want the creature to know us in our works and in ourselves, it is because we want to be loved, and we use this love to feed ourselves. We never despise love - love is love, it is Ours. The hunger of our love is satisfied only by being loved. We want Heaven, earth and creatures to be nothing other than love for us. And if all is not love, pain enters, causing in us the delirium of loving without being loved.

Our Will is our Life, love is the food. See, the high, noble and sublime point at which we want the creature: we want to form in Her the life of our Will. It will convert all things - circumstances, crosses, even the air she breathes, into love; feeding her in order to say, 'the life of our Will is yours and ours; we eat the same food.' Through this, we see the creature growing in our image and resemblance. These are the true joys in our Creation - being able to say to our children: 'we look alike.' And what wouldn't the joy of the creature be, in saying: 'I look like my Heavenly Father.' This is why I want the creatures to live in my Will. I want my children to look like Me.

If these children do not come back in my Will, we find ourselves in the condition of a poor Father who is noble - so full of knowledge as to be able to give lessons to all, rich and filled with goodness and rare beauty. But his children don't look like him at all. They have degenerated from the nobility of their Father; they are so poor, moronic, ugly, and filthy as to be disgusting. The poor father feels dishonored by his children. He even looks at them and almost doesn't recognize them, seeing them blind, crippled and sick - they don't even recognize their father. These children are the pain of their own Father.

The same happens to Us. Those who don't live in our Will dishonor us and become our pain. How can they look like Us if our Will is not their own? Our Will feeds our children with our own food, which forms our sanctity in them as they eat it; they are embellished with our beauty, acquiring great knowledge of their Father. Our Fiat speaks through Its light and tells them many things about their Father, until they fall in love with Him to the extent that they just cannot be without Him. This makes them look like the Father. Daughter, without my Will there is no one who can feed It, understand It, form It, or grow It, as can children who look like us. Instead, they leave our house, and do not know what we do, what we are, how much we love them, or what they need to do to be like us; therefore, our image is far away from them. How can we ever look alike, if they do not know us, and if nobody talks to them about our Divine Being?"

The descent of the Word. How easy it is to make Jesus be born as long as we live in His Will. The Paradise that the Queen of Heaven made Jesus find on earth.

My poor mind continues its path in the Divine Will. Oh! how happy It feels in seeing that Its little newborn wanders in search of its acts, to know them, kiss them, adore them, make them her own, and say: 'how much You loved me.' I stopped at the descent of the Word upon earth, and I felt sorry in seeing Him all alone. My sweet Jesus, with unspeakable tenderness, surprising me, told me: "My dearest daughter, you're wrong. Loneliness is part of human ingratitude; but from the divine side, all our works accompanied me, never leaving me alone. Further, you must know that the Father and the Holy Spirit descended together with me, while I still remained in Heaven with them. They came down on earth within me, since we are inseparable. We cannot be separated, not even if we wished to be so - at the most we bilocate ourselves, so as to maintain our Throne in Heaven while forming our throne on earth. Being separated - never. At the most, the Word took the operative part, but always with the concourse of the Father and the Holy Spirit.

Furthermore, in the act of my descent from Heaven, everyone moved to be my court and render me the honors I deserve. The Sky courted me with all its stars, rendering me the honor of my immutability and of my everlasting love. The Sun courted me, paying me the honor of my eternal light - oh! how well it praised the variety of its effects. I can say that, as I found myself with its light and heat, in its mute language it told me: 'You are the light, and I honor you, I adore you, I love you with the same light with which you created me.' All surrounded me: the wind, the sea, the little bird - everyone and everything, to give me the love and the glory with which I had created them. And they praised my empire, my immensity, my infinite joys. All created things made me a feast, and if I cried they cried together with me, because my Will, residing in them, kept them aware of all that I was doing. Oh!, how honored they felt, in doing all that their Creator was doing. Then I received the courting of the Angels, who never left me alone. And since all times belong to me, I was also courted by all the many peoples, who were going to live in my Will. My Will was carrying them in Its arms, and I felt them beating in my Heart, in my blood and in my steps. In feeling invested by these people, loved by my own Will, I felt repaid for my descent from Heaven to earth.

This was my primary scope: to reorder the Kingdom of my Will in the midst of my children. I would never have created the world if I was not to have children who looked like me and lived in my own Will. My Will would find Itself in the same condition as a poor sterile mother who is not able to generate, and therefore form her own family. But my Will does have the power to generate and to form Its long generations - Its own family." Then I continued to think about the descent of the Divine Word, saying to myself: how could Jesus be born within our souls? And my Dear Baby said: "My daughter, to make me be born is the easiest thing - more so, since we do not know how to do difficult things. Our power facilitates everything. Provided that the creature lives in our Will, all is done. As soon as the soul wants to live in It, she has already formed the home for your Jesus; at the moment she wants to start doing her acts, she conceives me; as she does her act, she makes me be born. As she loves in my Will, so she clothes me with light, warming me from the great coldness of the creatures. Every time she gives me her will to take my own, I am amused - I have my toy to play with, and I sing my victory over the human will, feeling like the little Triumphant King.

See then, my daughter, how easy this is for your little Jesus, because when we find our Will in the creature, we can do anything. It provides us with all that is needed and all that we want, to form our Life and our most beautiful works. But without our Will, we remain hampered: now love is missing, now sanctity, now power, now purity, and all that it takes to make our Life rise again and to form it within the creatures. Therefore, all depends on the creatures, since, from our side, we place ourselves at their disposal.

Further, during my birth my Divine Mama made me a beautiful surprise with her acts, with her love - with the Life of my Will which she possessed. She formed my Paradise on earth. She did nothing other than braid the whole Creation with her love, laying seas of beauty - making me enjoy our divine beauties within which her beauty was shining. How beautiful my Mother was - how beautiful to find her in the whole of Creation; she made me enjoy her beauty and the beauty of her acts. She spread her sea of love to make me find her love - my Paradise of love - in all created things. I delighted and exulted in my Mama's seas of love. She made for me, in my Will, the most beautiful tunes and the most delightful concerts, so that her little Jesus would not miss the music of the Heavenly Fatherland. My Mother took care of everything, so that nothing would be lacking of the enjoyment of the Paradise I had left. She kept forming, in each one of her acts, new joys to make me happy. By just leaning on her Heart I could feel such harmonies and contents as to be enraptured. By living in my Will, my Dear Mother carried Paradise in her lap and let her Son enjoy it. All her acts did nothing less than make me happy and redouble my Paradise on earth.

Now, my daughter, let me tell you another surprise. One who lives in my Will is inseparable from me; she is born again each time together with me. Therefore, I am never alone. I make her be born again with me to divine life - to new love, to new sanctity and to new beauty. She is reborn in the knowledge of her Creator - reborn in each one of her acts. More than this, in every act she does, she calls me to be born again, forming a new Paradise for her Jesus; and I make her be born again with me, to make her happy. One of my greatest joys is to make those who live together with me happy. Therefore, be attentive to live in my Will if you want to make me happy - if you want me to find in your acts my Paradise on earth; and I will take care to make you enjoy the sea of my joy and happiness. We will make each other happy.”

The echo between Creator and creature. How one act in the Divine Will can be found everywhere. The King and the army. The Maternity of the Queen of Heaven.

Although my poor mind is under the nightmare of tormenting sufferings, to the extent of feeling as if I were dying, I do what I can to follow the acts of the Supreme Volition. I look for It, though with difficulty, as my refuge, to draw strength in this painful state in which I find myself. My beloved Jesus, feeling compassion for me, all tenderness told me: “Daughter of my Will, courage; don’t lose too much heart. Despondency makes you lose strength, and makes you feel as if the One Who lives in you and loves you so much, is far away from you. You must know that as the creature enters our Will to give her will and to take Ours, she starts our divine echo in It. As we hear this echo in our divine being, we say: ‘who has so much virtue as to produce the echo of her love, of her breathing and heartbeat in our Supreme Being? Ah! It is a creature who has recognized our Will and entered to live in It. Be welcome.’ We will make her hear our echo in return, so that we’ll breathe with one breath, love with one love, beat with one heartbeat; so we will feel the life of that creature within us. We will never feel lonely, and she too will feel our life in her - the company of her Creator who never leaves her alone.

You have to know that no act done in our Will ever ends; rather, it is continuously repeated, since my Will is everywhere. That act is repeated in Heaven, in created things and in all else. Therefore, one act in my Will surpasses everything, filling Heaven and earth, and giving us so much love and glory that all other works remain like many little drops before the ocean. We glorify ourselves through the creature who, covered by her Creator, operates together with Him. No matter how many beautiful things we may do outside of our Will, they will never please us, because they are not ours. They cannot be diffused everywhere - such love is so small that it barely covers the act it made, if it covers it at all. You must know that, although we love the creature very much, we cannot tolerate having her with us so indecent, filthy, without beauty, naked, and covered with miserable rags. It would not be worthy of our Majesty to have children who do not look like us, or who are not, somehow, well dressed with the clothes of our Fiat. It would happen as to the King whose army and subjects are covered with filth - disgusting just to look at: one is blind, one crippled, another deformed. Wouldn’t it be a dishonor for this King, to be surrounded by an army of pathetic wretches? Shouldn’t this king be condemned if he doesn’t bother to form an army worthy of Himself? Shouldn’t all remain in admiration not only at the sight of the Majesty of this King, but also at His ordered and beautiful army - the blooming of the young, and the way they are dressed? Would it not be an honor for the king to be surrounded by Ministers and an army pleasing to his sight?

Now, since we want to deal with the creature, one on one, we have disposed in our invincible love and infinite wisdom to give her our Will, so that she would be embellished with Its light - clothed with Its love, and sanctified with Its sanctity. See then, how necessary it is that our Will reign in the creature: only our Will has the power to purify and embellish, so as to form our Divine army. And we will feel honored to live with them, and they with us - they will be our children surrounding us, dressed with our divine clothes, and embellished with our image. Therefore, our Will purifies, sanctifies and embellishes first; then It admits them into our Will, to live together with us. Furthermore, as the creature enters our Will, our love is such that We shower her with our rain of love, and all run around her seeing that we love her so much. The Angels and the Saints run to her to love her; the very Creation joyfully exults in seeing our Will triumphant in that creature. They all pour love on her - and oh!, how beautiful she is, loved by all of us; and she feels so grateful for this love that she loves everyone in return.”

After this, I continued my round in the Divine Volition and I arrived at the point of the birth of little Jesus, who was shivering for the cold, and wept and cried bitterly, with his eyes all swallowed in tears. He looked at me, asking for help, and between sobs and sighs he told me: “My good daughter, the lack of love from the creatures makes my cry bitterly. As I see that I am not loved, I feel wounded and the pain is so great that I burst into tears. My love runs over each creature, chasing her; it hides her while I replace her life with my life of love. But creatures, ungrateful, don’t even say one ‘I love you’. How could I not cry? Therefore, love me and calm my tears.

Now, my daughter, listen to me and pay attention. I want to tell you a great surprise of our love, and nothing must escape you. I want you to know the extent of the Maternity of my Celestial Mother - what she did, how much it cost to her, and what she is still doing. You must know that the Great Queen was not my Mother only in conceiving me, delivering me to the light, feeding me with her milk, and offering me all the possible cares that I needed during my infancy; this was not enough, either to her Maternal love, or to my love as her Son. Her Maternal love was always running through my mind, and if sorrowful thoughts were troubling me, she laid her Maternity in each one of them, hiding them inside her love and kissing them. I could always feel my mind as if it was hidden under her maternal wings, which never left me alone; each one of my thoughts was kept by my loving Mother, who gave me all her Maternal attentions. Her Maternity was placed in each one of my breaths and heartbeats; and if my breath and heartbeats felt smothered by my love and suffering, she would run with her maternity to free me from my suffocating love and put balm on my pierced Heart. If she looked, spoke, worked and walked - she ran, as a Mother, to receive in her maternal love my glances, words, works and steps, investing them with her love and hiding them in her Heart. She would also make her maternal love flow in the food she prepared for me, so that while eating it, I could feel her loving maternity. How much more could I tell you of the expression of her maternity in my sufferings? There was not a pain, not a drop of the blood I shed that was not felt by my Mother. But after doing these things as my Mother, she would then take all my pains and my blood, and hide them inside her Maternal Heart to love them and continue her Maternity.

Who could say how much she loved me and how much I loved her? My love was such that in everything, I could not be without feeling her Maternity within me. I can say that She would run, never to leave me alone, not even in my breathing. And I called her. Her Maternity was for me a need, a relief, a support for my Life down here.

Now, my daughter, listen to another love surprise of your Jesus and of our Heavenly Mother. In all we did, love was never obstructed between us; the love of one ran into the love of the other to form one single life. But in wanting to do the same with creatures, how many obstructions, rejections, ingratitude do we find. You must know that as my inseparable Mother laid her Maternity inside and outside of my Humanity, so she was made and confirmed as Mother of every thought, every breath, every heartbeat and word of creatures, placing her Maternity in their works, in their steps and in all their sufferings. Her Maternity runs everywhere. If creatures are in danger of falling into sin, she covers them with her Maternity to prevent them from falling; and if they do, she leaves her Maternity as help and defense, to make them stand up again. Her Maternity runs and lays also on the souls who want to be good and holy, as if she found her Jesus in them. She becomes Mother of their intelligence, and guide of their words, covering and hiding them in her maternal love, in order to grow as many other Jesuses. Her Maternity shows on the beds of the dying. Using the rights of authority as Mother given to her by me, in such a tender tone that I cannot refuse her anything, she says: 'My Son, I am the Mother, and they are my children; I must save them. If you don't grant me this, my Maternity would be compromised.' And as she says this, she covers them with her love, hiding them with their Maternity to rescue them.

My love was such that I told her: 'Mother, I want you to be the Mother of all, and I want you to do for all creatures all that you have done for me, laying your Maternity in all their acts so that I will see them covered and hidden in your Maternal love.' My Mother accepted and remained confirmed, not only as the Mother of all, but also as the One who would invest each of their acts with her maternal love. This was one of the greatest graces I have given to the whole of human generations. But what pains does my Mother not receive? Creatures even reach the point of not wanting to recognize her Maternity - of denying it. Therefore the whole of Heaven prays and anxiously waits for the Divine Will to be known and to reign. Then, the Great Queen will do to the children of my Will what she did for her Jesus, and her Maternity will have life in her children.

I will give my own place in her Maternal Heart to those who live in my Will. She will raise them for me, guiding their steps and hiding them in her Maternity and sanctity. Her Maternal love and her sanctity will be impressed in all their acts; they will be her true children, being like me in everything. Oh! how I would love everyone to know that if they want to live in my Will, they have a Queen and a powerful Mother who will compensate for all they lack. She will raise them on her maternal lap, being with them in everything they do, molding their acts as her own; to the extent that they will be known as the children grown, kept and educated by the loving Maternity of my Mama. These will be the ones who will make Her happy, the ones who will be Her glory and honor."
